visible means of support. In his defence, he read before them his Μήγας Διακοσμος. They were so much charmed by it that they presented him with five hundred talents, and decreed that he should be buried at the public expense. His want of means was due to no incapacity for gaining a livelihood, but to his being engrossed in his studies. He had gained an acquaintance with the language of birds, and knew all secrets, like the wondrous women of Eastern story. He anticipated the recent wisdom of "weather forecasts" and "weather probabilities," and could tell when it would rain and when it would clear up. He might have made a brilliant speculator, for, on one occasion, foreseeing a disastrous season for olives, and that oil would bear a high price, he monopolized all the olives that could be procured (Pliny, Hist. Nat. xviii, 28). His only design, however, was to show that he could easily make money if he desired to do so. His poverty was deliberately accepted, and was welcome from his contempt of wealth. It was borne with joyous exhilaration; he was always seen with a smile on his face, and hence, was designated "the laughing philosopher." Later philosophers supposed that he laughed at the vanities of life, and the weaknesses of mankind: "Adeo nihil illi serium videbatur, quæ serio gerebantur" (Seneca, De Ira. ii, 10; De Tranquill. Animi. xxii). His long life passed away in the serene and sedulous prosecution of his speculative and physical investigations. It must have been diligently employed, if he composed the multitude of works which were generally accredited to him. Death came at last at his bidding, though it spared him till life became wearisome. He was represented as having starved himself to death:

"Sponte sua lito caput obvius obtulit ipso."

(Lucret. iii, 1052.)

He delayed his end for three days with the smell of bread or honey, at the request of his sister, the priestess of Ceres, who was unwilling that the festival in progress should be contaminated by death in the family.

II. Works.—A list of sixty treatises by Democritus is given by Diogenes Laërtius, on ethical, physical, mathematical, musical, technical, and miscellaneous topics. These were arranged by Thrasyllus in Tetralogies, as was done by him, also, in regard to the works of Plato. An attempt has been made by Mullaeh to restore this distribution. Such a proceeding must be purely conjectural, as data are absent for even probable conclusions. Of these manifold volumes, only three hundred and twenty genuine fragments have been saved. These are, for the most part, extremely brief; the longest of them being on the subject of agriculture. They are inadequate to enable us to judge directly of either the literary or philosophical merits of the author. The testimonies of the ancients must, therefore, pass unchallenged. It is strong evidence of his high capacity that he received the designation of πνιθαθλος from the Greeks, and was termed vir magnus imprimis, by Cicero. He was equally esteemed for his style, for his learning, and for his bold speculation. Plato proposed that his books should be burned, a proposal which may have sprung from jealousy, but arose more probably from thorough antipathy to his doctrines and apprehension of their pernicious effects. Many treatises were falsely ascribed to Democritus. From these may have been derived the forty-six spurious fragments gathered by Mullaeh.

III. Philosophy.—In the time and country of Democritus, philosophy still retained much of that indistinctness of character which had appertained to it when it signified nothing more than the earnest pursuit of knowledge. It was still thoroughly unsystematic. If logical inquiries had been already inaugurated, they had not yet assumed a fixed and coherent form.

The philosophy of Democritus may be divided into ethical and physical: the former embracing acute practical observations; the latter comprehending, as was the wont of early speculation, such theology as comported with his schemes—in both respects showing some connection with Parmenides and the Eleatics, though it might be erroneous to imagine any positive affiliation. The Eleatics had rendered philosophy too ideal and too impalpable. The Ionic school, in aiming at simplicity of doctrine, had fallen into narrow and arbitrary fancies. A more tangible speculation than the Eleatic, a more thorough and acceptable exposition than the Ionic, was in demand. This requirement Leucippus and his successor, Democritus, consciously or unconsciously, endeavored to supply. The intellectual current ran in the direction of the atomistic philosophy. As all the writings of Leucippus were early lost, and as his opinions are only known through their development by his illustrious follower, the consideration of his views will be implicated with the appreciation of the doctrines of Democritus.

The ethical philosophy of the laughing sage seems to have been of a purely practical cast, and to have been, in the main, the application of keen judgment to the ordinary conduct of life; thus approximating to the aphoristic wisdom of the early "Wise Men." Examples of such prudence are frequent, even in the scanty relics remaining, and have been compactly presented by Zeller: "Truth dwells in the bottom of a pit;" "Much learning is often mere folly" (Fr. 139-141); "The world is a stage, life a passage: you came, you saw, you departed;" "Fortune is an idol fashioned by the unwisdom of men" (Fr. 14). Here is the origin of the celebrated moral of Juvenal:

"Nos te,
Nos facimus, Fortinna, deam, colloquo locamus."

"Not the act only, but the disposition, should be regarded" (Fr. 109); "Good and evil grow from the same root. Evil does not proceed from the gods, but from the blindness and malice of men" (Fr. 12, 13). The urgency of habitual self-restraint (Fr. 75), and of contentment (Fr. 24, 27, 29), are associated with the characteristic aim of the ethics of Democritus, the attainment of eûthymia (Fr. 20), healthy tranquillity. This serene temper may be compared with the Peripatetic eûthymia, or with the modern pursuit of "happiness," which is just as vague, as unsatisfactory, and as unscientific as any of its predecessors. Such tranquillity, however, explains the designation of Democritus as ridens, and points towards the simple virtues of daily life. The ethical tone of Democritus is as innocent and pure as was his own conduct.

The physical philosophy of Democritus is the most characteristic, and has been the most influential and enduring branch of his speculations. It provides the mould for his psychological assumptions, and for his ethical conclusions. The negation of immaterial realities, or agnosticism in regard to them, necessitates a spectral phenomenalism and a dim universe. Democritus held that there was only one principle—the plenum or μειρόν, and the vacuum or κενόν:

"Omnis, ut est, igitur, per se Natura, duobus Consistit rebus: nam Corpora sunt et Inane."
(Lucr. i, 420, 421; see Sext. Empir. Adv. Math. vii, 135-139.)

The assertion of a vacuum was inevitable, as long as the existence, elasticity, and interpenetrability of gaseous fluids were unknown. The plenum was composed of an infinite number of atoms (ἀνίκηστα) moving freely in infinite space—for space, or the extension of the universe, was regarded as infinite:

"Nam medium nihil esse potest, ubi Inane locus quo Influit."
(Lucr. i, 1009; comp. Aristot. De Caelo, iii, 4.)

In this infinite space were contained an infinite number of worlds. The atoms were solid, impenetrable, homogeneous in quality, diverse in size and shape, though infinitesimal in magnitude (Aristot. Met. i, 4; Cicero, De Fin. i, vi, 17). They are eternal, immutable, and imperishable. Their origin is inscrutable, and beyond the domain of legitimate investigation (Aristot. Phys. vii, 1). The atoms possessed of themselves an incessant downward motion. The differences of size and shape produced contacts and combinations. The whole process of nature was a cycle of compositions, decompositions, and recompositions (Lucr. ii, 1000). Nothing was lost; nothing was gained. Omnia mutantur, nil interit. There are indications that Democritus attributed spontaneous motion, or a sort of rudimentary vitality, to atoms. The ceaseless and intricate movement of the atomic particles in space generated a gyrating motion of the incoherent mass—Δίνη—a whirl. This universal circumvolution probably suggested the vortices of Des Cartes (see Des Cartes), and furnishes a prelude to the modern nebular hypothesis. These eddies hurl the atoms with various collisions, winnow the subtle from the gross, and induce coherence in diversified conjunctions, whence arises, by further and modified concrescences, the endless multiplicity of things (Cicero, Acad. Qu. iv, 38). By this restless circulation all things have been produced, and all the vicissitudes of things. The rapidity of the orbicular motion kindles the stars, and lights up the heavenly bodies. Through the effects of this motion the earth is permeated by fiery action and quickening heat. The matters of which it is compounded originate from the dissimilar forms and magnitudes of the atoms, which are round in fire, and differ in size and shape in air, earth, and water.

The microcosm accords with the macrocosm. Man is of like constitution with his habitation. Of this inexplicable marvel of the universe neither definition nor determination is attempted. He, too, is a postulate. He is accepted for what he is, or is supposed to be. He is a compound of water and mud. His life, or soul, is a fine, diffused, and segregated fire; vital sparks of atomic, not of heavenly, flame. This is extinguished by death, and perishes with the body. All bodies are mortal, but all are renescent, in formis mutatis. This seems only a rude and tentative way of indicating the doctrine now generally received, of the permanence and transmutation of matter:

"Semper motus connectitur omnis, Et vetere exoritur semper novus ordine certo."

Knowledge itself is the result of physical agitation. It is of two kinds: that derived directly from the mind, and that obtained from the senses. It is not obvious with what meaning the term "mind" is employed, whether as intuitive, or as reflective, or as reproductive. The conceptions of Democritus were by no means definite on the subject. The same vagueness and fluidity attend all the tenets of Democritus not confined to purely physical topics. Perceptions are excited by effluxes—ἔδωλα—projected from the things perceived (Fr. 14, 40). Democritus, however, recognised sound as the vibratory motion of the air. Knowledge obtained through the senses—sensus tenebricosi (Cicero, Acad. IV, x, 81)—was deceptive, σκορὴ κρίσις. That from reason, γνώμη γνησίη, merited credence, if definite and clear. Nevertheless, there could be no true knowledge, ἔτι οὐδὲν ἴδμεν περὶ οὐθένος. How could it be otherwise with a system which made being and non-being equally existent, μη μᾶλλον τὸ δὲν ἢ τὸ μὴδὲν εἶναι.

With such principles, physical and psychological, no real theology was possible. Yet Democritus was unwilling, or unable, to sever himself entirely from the popular belief. He was thus involved in an inconsistency, perhaps inevitable, which is strangely illustrated by a corresponding incongruity in Comte's Positivism. He did not absolutely exclude divinity from the universe, but he reduced it to a vague and empty superstition, which was rather a vague rehabilitation of popular fantasies than a reputable development of philosophy. Cicero deemed it more accordant with the stupidity of his countrymen than with his own acumen. His gods were idols, fashioned out of the thinnest and subtlest atoms; and sometimes revealed themselves, especially in the dark. They were earthly ghosts! "The earth hath bubbles as the water hath; and these are of them." They were gigantic spectres, of human form, though far transcending human stature. Like goblins, fays, and peris, they were mortal; but their duration exceeded the span of human life. They had voices, and could utter sounds intelligible to men; and they foretold future events. Such divine personages could not be the object of any theology, and in no respect detracted from the materialism of the school. The theology was a pretence or a mockery.

IV. His Influence.—Democritus is entitled to be placed by the side of Aristotle and Plato, in regard to the effect produced on later ages by his speculations. This effect, if less immediate and less ennobling than the action of the Peripatetic and Academic systems, has been more lasting in its specific character. If less stimulant to the highest intellectual aspirations, it has the merit of having more effectually moulded the procedures of scientific research. The physical philosophy of Epicurus was entirely deduced from it, with such alterations as gave the pretence of originality, and not of mere revival. Still, it was fully absorbed into Epicureanism, and so obviously as to be incapable of being ignored. "What is in the physics of Epicurus which does not descend from Democritus?" asks Cicero (De Nat. Deor. I, xxv, 78; xliii, 120). "Democritus, formed by Leucippus, left his inheritance of folly to Epicurus;" observes Lactantius (Div. Inst. iii, 17; comp. De Ira Dei, x). Wherever Epicureanism spread, through Hellenic lands and through the empire of Rome, the doctrines of Democritus were accepted—the sancta Democriti Sententia (Lucret. iii, 872), though modified by the derivative school. Their influence was not limited to the ancient world. They reappeared with Gassendi in the 17th century. They were revived in partial and disguised form in the atomic theory of Dalton, and in the nebular hypothesis. They recur in more than their pristine vigor and exclusiveness in modern agnosticism, and in current physical schemes. The atomic speculations of Democritus are a rudimentary type of evolutionism, and of kindred dreams. It has already been stated that they furnished some of the notable suppositions of Des Cartes. They may be discerned in the System of Positive Philosophy. How thoroughly they are the progenitors, or, at least, the precursors of recent scientific devices, is manifested by the marvellous harmony of such opinions with the brilliant poem of Lucretius. This harmony is profoundly and instinctively felt. Its recognition is shown by the recent renewal of the earnest study of Lucretius; and by the numerous editions of his work, and the brilliant or recondite essays upon it, which have been welcomed in late years. For these reasons, the views of Democritus, and his place in the development of philosophy, cannot be safely disregarded in estimating either ancient or modern thought.

V. Literature.—Besides the historians of ancient philosophy, and especially Brücker, Ritter, and Zeller, the following special treatises may be advantageously consulted: Magnenus, Democritus Riviviscens (Paris, 1646); [in 1655, Peter Borel promised a treatise in 3 vols. fol., De Vita et Philosophia Democriti]; Bayle, Dict. Hist. et Crit. s. v.; Göling, Diss. de Democrito et ejus Philosophia (Upsala, 1703); Geffers, Quæstiones Democriteæ (Göttingen, 1829); Burchardt, Democrit. Phil. de Sensibus Fragm. (Minden, 1830); Fragm. der Moral des Abd. Democrits (ibid. 1834); Papencordt, De Atomorum Doctrina (Berlin, 1832); Hemisöth, Democriti de Anima Doctrina (Bonn, 1835); Müllach, Democriti Operum Fragmenta, etc. (Berlin, 1846), which alone is sufficient for all ordinary purposes; Johnson, Der Sensualismus des Demokrit. (Mauen, 1868); Müllach, Fragmenta Democriti, apud Fragmenta Philosophorum Græcorum, tom. i (Paris, 1875). (G. F. H.)

Democritus, Saint, lived at Sinnada, in Africa, and is commemorated July 31, with Secundus and Dionysius.

Demónax, the most distinguished of the later cynics, flourished in the 2d century of our æra. He probably lived in the time of Hadrian (A.D. 117–138), though the exact dates of his birth and death are unknown. Lucian, his only contemporary biographer, represents him as a wise and good man, and writes his history avowedly as an example for the imitation of the young of his own time. He was by birth a Cyprian, and removed to Athens, where he joined the cynic school, chiefly out of respect to the memory of Diogenes. He seems to have been free from the austerity and moroseness of the other members of his sect, but valued their indifference to outward circumstances. He was exceedingly popular at Athens, and was, no doubt, an amiable, good-humored man; but contributed nothing more to philosophy than his predecessors. He died when nearly a hundred years old, and was buried with great magnificence.

Dendrites, a name given to those Greek monks in the 12th century who passed their lives on high trees.

Dendrophōri. See COLLEGIUM DENDROPHORIUM.

Denis (St.), COUNCIL OF (Concilium ad Sanctum Dionysium). Held near Paris A.D. 768; a Frankish council of bishops and nobles, at which Pepin le Bref divided his kingdom between his sons Charlemagne and Carloman.

Denison, Edward, D.D., an English prelate, born in 1801, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and in 1826 elected to a fellowship at Merton College. He succeeded to the vicarage of St. Peter's-in-the-East, Oxford, and in March, 1837, to the see of Salisbury. He died at Portsmouth, March 6, 1864. In politics the bishop was a Whig, but he was constitutionally timid; and hence, while his administration was unexceptionable, it can hardly be characterized as energetic. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1854, p. 464.

Denison, Samuel D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, born in Boston in 1810, was ordained deacon in 1845; for eight years thereafter engaged in missionary work in Texas, and at Great Barrington, Mass.; in 1853 elected secretary and general agent of the Foreign Committee, continuing in office until 1864; recalled October, 1868, to December, 1870; again, March to May, 1873; and again, December, 1875, to November, 1876; and died at White Plains, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1880. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881.

Denne, Henry, an English Baptist minister, was born about 1600; educated at Cambridge University; took orders in the Church of England in 1630; and was ten years the parish minister at Pyrron, in Hertfordshire. In 1641 he preached the visitation sermon, in which he lashed some of the clergy for their vices; in 1643 he embraced Baptist views, was immersed in London, and began to preach at Bell Alley. He was imprisoned for preaching against infant baptism. Rev. Daniel Featly was in the same prison at the same time for opposing the Baptists. Being persecuted for his preaching, Denne entered the army, where he gained great reputation. In 1658 he had a two days' discussion with Dr. Gunning, on baptism, in St. Clement's Church, London. He defended himself with so much learning that one party said he was an Antinomian, the other party that he was an Arminian. He died about 1661. He published six works of a controversial character, between 1643 and 1658. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 440.

Denne, John, D.D., an English divine and antiquary, was born at Littlebourne, May 25, 1693. He studied in the free schools of Sandwich and Canterbury, and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he became fellow in April, 1716; was ordained deacon the same year, and priest Sept. 21, 1718; soon after was nominated by the college to the perpetual cure of St. Benedict's Church, in Cambridge; whence he was preferred, in 1721, to the rectory of Norton-Davy, in Northamptonshire; but this he exchanged, Sept. 30, 1723, for the vicarage of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, in London; in 1725 he was appointed preacher of Mr. Boyle's lecture, and continued so for three years. He was promoted to the archdeaconry of Rochester, July 22, 1728; in July, 1729, was instituted to the vicarage of St. Margaret's, Rochester; but this he resigned to take possession of the rectory of Lambeth, Nov. 27, 1731. He died Aug. 5, 1767. The following are some of his sermons: A Concilio ad Clerum (1745):—Articles of Inquiry for a Parochial Visitation (1732):—A Register of Benefactions to the Parish of Shoreditch (1745). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Denton, Richard, a Presbyterian minister, was born in the north of England. He was among the first of the Puritans who came to America. The records show that he settled in Weathersfield, Conn., about the middle of the 17th century; thence he went to Hempstead, L. I.; and subsequently served the Church in Jamaica. He has been called the father of the Presbyterian Church in America. (W. P. S.)

Denton, Thomas, an English clergyman, was born at Seberham, Cumberland, in 1724, and was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree, June 16, 1752. Soon after leaving college he became curate to the pastor at Netherby, at Arthuret, and Kirkandrews. He died at Ashted, in Surrey, June 27, 1777. He wrote two poems, Immortality (1755, 4to):—The House of Superstition (1762). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Denya, Saint. See DIONYSIUS.

Denzinger, HEINRICH JOSEPH DOMINICUS, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born Oct. 16, 1819, at Liege; ordained in 1844; and in 1848 appointed professor of exegesis at Würzburg. In 1854 he was called to the chair of dogmatics, and died June 19, 1888. He belonged to the ultramontanist party of the Church, and wrote, Kritik der Vorlesungen von Thiersch über Katholicismus und Protestantismus (Würzburg, 1847, 1848):—Ueber die Echtheit des bisherigen Textes der ignatianischen Briefe (1849):—Enchiridion Symbolorum et Definitionum, etc. (5th ed. 1874):—Die Lehre von der unbefleckten Empfängnis der sel. Jungfrau Maria (1854; 2d ed. 1855):—Vier Bücher von der religiösen Erkenntnis (1856, 2 vols.):—Ritus Orientalium, etc. (1863, 1864, 2 vols.). He was also consultant of the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide pro Rebus Orientalibus. (B. P.)

Deodand (Lat. Deo, "to God," dandus, "given"), a thing given or forfeited to God in consequence of its having caused the death of a human being. If a cart, for instance, should crush a man to death it would become a deodand, that is, to be distributed to the poor by the royal almoner, by way of expiation or atonement for the death which it has caused. See Exod. xxi, 28.

Deo Dicitus, a term applied to those engaged in religious service.

Deo Gratias (Thanks be to God), a response of the people in the liturgy; derived from the apostolic use of the phrase (1 Cor. xv, 57; 2 Cor. ii, 14). According to the Mozarabic rite the people said "Deo gratias" at the naming of the passage to be read as the "prophecy" in the liturgy. Bona speaks of it being used instead of "Amen," or "Laus tibi Christe," when the gospel was ended. Augustine notices it as a common mode of greeting among the monks, for which they were ridiculed by the Agonistici among the Donatists. It was sometimes used by way of acclamation on other occasions.

Depéry, JEAN-IRÉNÉE, a French prelate and bibliographer, was born at Chalex, near Gex, March 16, 1796. He was first professor of rhetoric at Chambéry, then vicar-general of the diocese of Belley, and afterwards bishop of Gap. He left several works on hagiology and similar subjects, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Deportatio is a term for carrying a bishop in a chair by his fellow-bishops, on his way to be enthroned. It was customary in the Gallican Church. A "chairing" of the bishop on the shoulders of certain persons of rank, the first time he entered his cathedral, was customary in several of the French churches in the middle ages.

Depositio (in Hagiology). In martyrologies the word is applied to the death-day of a saint. This meaning is given it by Maximus in the sermon De Depositione S. Eusebii, and strongly held by Papebroch in his Conatus Chronologico-Histor. ad Calal. Pontiff. Roman.

The word was doubtless used also to designate the day on which the relics were entombed.

Deprecatory. Littere Deprecatorie are "letters of request" given by presbyters who were unable to grant the formal "dimissory letters" of the bishops. See DIMISSORY LETTERS.

Deputatus. In the Greek Church those not ordained, but nominated, to the minor services of the Church were called: the Theori, those in charge of the sacred vestments; the Camisati, those attending to the vessels in the altar-service; and Deputati, those who, carrying lighted tapers, in the processions preceded the deacon who bore the book of the gospels or the oblations. They corresponded to the "taper-bearers" of the Latin Church. See ACOLYTI. When necessary, they cleared the way for the bishop through the crowded church.

Deputies, Dissenting. See DENOMINATIONS, THE THREE; and DISSENTERS.

Derling, JOHANN THEOPHIL, a German theologian, was born at Aschersleben, Feb. 14, 1697; visited a large part of Germany; became minister and inspector of the gymnasium at Halberstadt; and died July 21, 1771. His principal works are, De Consuetudine Preponendi Enigmata apud Veteres (Halle, 1720):—De Servis Litteratis (ibid.):—De More Inuendi Stigmata Velutissimo (ibid.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Derlington, JOHN DE, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born at Derlington (now Darlington), in the diocese of Durham, and was a Dominican friar. He was confessor to king Henry III; was promoted to the see of Dublin in September, 1279, and consecrated archbishop the following April. He died March 29, 1284. See D'ALTON, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 104.

De Ronde. See RONDE.

De Sanctis, LUIGI, a Protestant theologian, was born at Rome, Dec. 31, 1808, and when twenty-three years of age was ordained priest. He lived for some time at Viterbo and Genoa, where he greatly distinguished himself; and when he returned to Rome, he was appointed member Qualificatore della Suprema S. Inquisizione, and curate of the parish called Maddalena alla Rotonda. Being suspected by the inquisition of heterodoxy, an investigation was made concerning him. The reading of the Bible, however, brought about his final rupture with the Church, and, assisted by a Scotch minister, he left Rome, Sept. 10, 1847. Pope Pius IX, who was greatly attached to De Sanctis, had a letter written to him by cardinal Ferretti, inviting him to return. But it was in vain; "I swear before God, that in leaving Rome I had no other object in view than the salvation of my soul," such was his reply. At Malta he published, Il Cristiano Cattolico:—La Confessione, etc. In 1850 he went to Geneva, where he joined the Evangelical Church; and, when Italy was opened to the work of evangelization, he was appointed preacher by the Waldensian Church. A difference of opinion caused him to join the Plymouth Brethren at Turin, with whom he was connected for six years. The experience made in this connection led him back to the Church which was dear to him, and which appointed him professor of the Waldensian theological school at Florence, where he also edited L'Eco della Verità. He died Dec. 31, 1869. See Biografia di Luigi de Sanctis (Firenze, 1870); Comba, in Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Des Bois de Rochefort, ÉLÉONORE MARIE, a French prelate, was born at Paris in 1789; became doctor of the Sorbonne, vicar-general of La Rochelle, rector of St. André-des-Arts, at Paris, and finally constitutional bishop of Amiens. He also presided at the Assemblée Législative, and was one of the editors of the Annales de la Religion. He died in 1807, leaving, among other works, Lettres Pastorales et Mandements (Paris, 1800). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Descensus, a word applied to the vault beneath the altar, in which are placed the relics of the saints.

Desecration of churches and altars. This phrase denotes the pollution of a church or altar by the committing in it of homicide or other revolting crime, or by a removal of the relics deposited there at its consecration, so as to require "reconciliation" before service could be conducted there again.

Deseriz (or Dericius), JOSEPH INNOCENT, a Hungarian prelate, was born at Neitra in 1702. He taught belles-lettres, and afterwards theology, in the seminary of Raab; was called to Rome and made cardinal, employing his time in literary pursuits and embassies. He finally settled at Waitzen, in Hungary, where he continued his literary work until his death, in 1765, leaving several treatises on the ecclesiastical history of his native country, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Desert, Church of the, a title sometimes applied to persecuted bodies of Christians, especially the Huguenots; in allusion to the vision in Rev. xii, 6.

Desertion of the Clerical Life. To abandon a religious life, after having once been initiated into the sacred duties, was considered a crime worthy of excommunication or other severe punishment. The Council of Chalcedon (A. D. 451), the Council of Angers (A. D. 453), the first Council of Tours (A. D. 461), a Breton council (date unsettled, probably about A. D. 555), the Council of Frankfort (A. D. 794), all decreed against the offence. Under Justinian's code, a cleric guilty of deserting his service was punished by being made a curialis, i. e. one charged with the burdens of the state—a political beast of burden. In a letter of pope Zacharias (A. D. 741-752) to king Pepin of France, he threatens any deserter with an anathema unless he repent and return.

Desgallards (Lat. Gallarius), NICOLAS, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born in 1520. He became a citizen of Geneva in 1551, and pastor of a church in the neighborhood in 1553. He was sent to Paris in 1557, and founded a French church in London in 1560. He attended at the colloquy of Poissy with his friend Theodore de Beza, and presided at the synod of Paris, in 1565. In 1571 he was chosen by the queen of Navarre as her preacher. Calvin esteemed him very highly, and engaged him as secretary. Ancillon says that he worked with Beza on the history of the Reformed churches of France. Desgallards died about the year 1580, leaving, Pro Gul. Favello et Collegiis Ejus, etc. (Geneva, 1545):—Traité de la Cène (ibid. ed.):—Traité contre les Anabaptistes et les Libertins (ibid. 1549):—La Forme de Police Ecclesiastique Instituée à Londres en l'Eglise Française (1561):—De la Doctrine Essence de Jésus Christ, contre les Nouveaux Ariens (Lyons, 1566). Desgallards also translated a great many of Calvin's works into French. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Deshayes, JEAN BAPTISTE (called Le Romain), an eminent French painter, was born at Rouen in 1729, and studied under Colin de Vermont and Restout. In 1751 he drew the grand prize of the Academy. He went to Rome and remained three years, and on his return was admitted to the Royal Academy, in 1758. Among his chief productions are The Martyrdom of St. Andrew, and The Death of St. Benedict. He died at Paris, Feb. 10, 1765. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Desiderata, a name sometimes applied to the sacraments, as being desired by all Christians.

Desiderius. (1) Bishop of Vienne, martyr at Lyons; natal day, Feb. 11. According to Ado, he suffered martyrdom on May 23, and was translated Feb. 11. (2) Bishop of Ferrara; day of death, May 23. (3) The reader, martyr at Naples under Diocletian, with Januarius the bishop, and others; commemorated Sept. 19.

Desjardins (or van den Bogaerten), MARTIN, an eminent Dutch sculptor, was born at Breda, Holland, in 1640. He was received into the Academy of Paris at the age of thirty-one; and died in Paris in 1694. Among his numerous productions were six groups for the Church of the Mazarin College, representing the fathers of the Greek and Roman churches. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dealyons, JEAN, a French theologian, was born at Pontoise in 1615. He studied at Paris, entered the ministry, and was made doctor in the Sorbonne. On Sept. 11, 1638, he became dean of Senlis, and continued in office till his death, May 26, 1700. For a list of his numerous writings, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

De Sola, Abraham, a Jewish rabbi, son of the following, was born in London, England, Sept. 18, 1825. Having completed his academical as well as theological studies, he accepted in 1847 a call from the Portuguese Hebrew Congregation of Montreal, Canada. In 1848 he was appointed professor of Hebrew and Shemitic literature in McGill College, which also conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. He died at New York city, June 6, 1882. See Morais, Eminent Israelites of the Nineteenth Century, p. 53 sq. (B. P.)

De Sola, David Aaron. See SOLA, DAVID AARON.

Desplaces, LOUIS, an eminent French engraver, was born in Paris in 1682, and died in 1739. The following are his best prints: The Martyrdom of St. Peter; The Purification. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Despotice is the name applied by the Greeks to the greater festivals of the Church, generally reckoned as twelve in number.

Despuig (y Daneto), DON ANTONIO, a Spanish prelate, was born at Palma, on the island of Majorca, March 31, 1745, of a family allied to the ancient kings of Aragon. At the end of his studies he was provided with a canonicate, and appointed to travel in France, Germany, Holland, and England, to acquaint himself with the different cities where the general councils of the East had been held. He remained for a time at Rome in 1778, then visited Calabria, Sicily, Malta, Venice, and came back to Rome in 1785, with the title of an auditor of the rota for the kingdom of Aragon. Having been appointed bishop of Orihuela by Charles IV in 1791, he was transferred, in 1795, to the archbishopric of Valencia, and in 1796 to Seville. He afterwards fell into political complications abroad, but, returning to Spain in 1798, was made councillor of state, resigning the archbishopric of Seville and receiving in exchange several rich benefices. He took part in the Conclave of Venice in 1800, and was made cardinal by Pius VII. He also shared the captivity of that pontiff in France from 1809 to 1812, and died at the baths of Lucca, May 30, 1813. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Desaler, WOLFGANG CHRISTOPH, a German hymn-writer, was born at Nuremberg, Feb. 11, 1660, and died while head-master of the grammar-school of his native place, March 11, 1722. Of his many hymns we mention those which have been translated into English, as, Wie wohl ist mir, O Freund der Seele ("O Friend of souls, how well with me," in Lyra Germanica, i, 147):—Mia Jesu, den die Seraphinen ("My Jesus, if the Seraphim," ibid. ii, 78):—Ich lass dich nicht, Du mußt mein Jesus bleiben ("I leave thee not, thou art my Jesus ever," in The Breaking Crucible, by J. W. Alexander):—Frisch, frisch hindurch mein Grist ("Courage, my heart, press cheerly on," in Christum Singers of Germany, p. 277):—Oeffne mir die Perlenpforten ("How the pearly gates unfold," in Lyra Germanica, ii, 234). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 531 sq. (B. P.)

Destūr, in the old Persian religion, was the high-priest in every place inhabited by Parsees, who was lawgiver and judge throughout his whole district. He received one tenth of the income of the faithful.

Desubaa. See MAJAL, MATHIEU.

Desverges, MARIE JOSEPH ADOLPHE NOËL, a French Orientalist, was born at Paris in 1805, where he also pursued his Oriental studies. He was a member of the Asiatic Society, and corresponding member of the Academy of Inscriptions. He died at Nice, Jan. 2, 1867, leaving, Vie de Mohammed d'Aboufeda, in Arabic, with a French translation (1837):—Histoire de l'Afrique sous la Domination Musulmane (1841):—L'Etrurie et les Etrusques (1864, 2 vols.). For the Univers Pittoresque he prepared that part which treats of Abyssinia and Arabia. (B. P.)

Deti, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Florence in 1581. He was a kinsman to Clement VIII, who sent him to the gymnasium at Rome. Deti distinguished himself by his studies and learning, so that at the age of seventeen years he was made a cardinal. Some time after he was appointed dean of the sacred college. He died in 1630, leaving Relatio Facta in Consistorio Corum Urbino VIII, etc., which was printed in the collection of the Bollandists. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Deusdedit (originally Fritona), archbishop of Canterbury, was a West Saxon by birth. His education seems to have been good, but the place where he prosecuted his studies is unknown. He was consecrated March 26, 657, and gave entire satisfaction to the people of Canterbury. He died in 644. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 130 sq.

Deutinger, MARTIN, a Roman Catholic philosopher, was born in 1815 at Langenpreising, in Upper Bavaria. In 1837 he was ordained priest, in 1844 became teacher at Freising, and in 1846 professor of philosophy at Munich. In 1847 he was exiled to Dillingen, in 1852 was placed on the list of retired teachers; and died Sept. 8, 1864. He published, Verhältnisse der Kunst zum Christenthum (Freising, 1843):—Grundlinien einer positiven Philosophie (Regensburg, 1848–53, 7 vols.):—Bilder des Geistes in Kunst und Natur (ibid. 1849–51, 3 vols.):—Geist der christl. Uebersieferung (1850, 2 vols.):—Principien der neueren Philosophie und der christl. Wissenschaft (1857):—Das Reich Gottes nach des Apostels Johannes Lehre (Freiburg, 1862, 2 vols.):—Renan und das Wunder (Munich, 1864). (B. P.)

Deutsch, DAVID, a Jewish rabbi, who died at Sohrau, in Upper Silesia, July 31, 1873, is the author of, Der Prophet Habakuk, mit hebräischem Commentar und deutscher Uebersetzung (Breslau, 1837):—Rücksprache mit allen Gläubigen des rabbinischen Judenthums (ibid. 1842):—Zur Würdigung der Braunschweiger Rabbiner Versammlung (ibid. 1845):—Protestation gegen die Versammlung (ibid. 1846, in Hebrew and German). He also published a German translation of the polemical work, entitled Chizuk Emenah, of Abraham Troki (q. v.) (2d ed. 1875). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 207 sq. (B. P.)

Deutsch, Emanuel Oscar Menahem, a Jewish writer, nephew of the foregoing, was born at Neisse, in Silesia, Oct. 28, 1829. He studied at Berlin, and in 1855 was appointed assistant in the library of the British Museum, a position which he held until his death, which took place at Alexandria, in Egypt, May 12, 1873. He was a contributor to Chambers's Encyclopædia, Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature. Besides, he contributed to various periodicals, especially the Quarterly Review, for which he wrote an article entitled, What is the Talmud? (Oct. 1867), which attracted great attention, and was soon translated into other languages. See the article TALMUD in this Cyclopædia (vol. x, p. 172 sq.). Nineteen of his papers were published after the author's death, under the title Literary Remains (Lond. 1874, reprinted in New York). See Morais, Eminent Israelites of the Nineteenth Century, p. 57 sq. (B. P.)

Deutsch, Siegmund Hermann, a missionary among the Jews, was born of Jewish parentage in 1791, at Peiskretscham, in Upper Silesia. Besides a Talmudical, he also received a secular education, and at the age of twenty-one was enrolled among the students of the Breslau University, where he devoted himself entirely to mathematics and astronomy. To avoid a lengthened military service, he early volunteered for the Prussian army, and in a short time was made an artillery officer. The rising in Greece enkindled his youthful energy and ardor, and, with a few like-minded companions, he left for that country. In 1824 he came back to Berlin, and attended the sermons of the famous Gossner. Having publicly professed his faith in Christianity, he attended the lectures of the distinguished Neander. In 1828 he was appointed to labor among the Jews at Warsaw, and in 1830 was stationed at Breslau, where he also attended the theological lectures of the different professors. In 1833 he again returned to Warsaw, and remained till 1853, when this field had to be given up, in consequence of an imperial ukase. From Poland, Mr. Deutsch went to Nuremberg, to labor there among the Jews. He died Oct. 1, 1864. See The (Lond.) Jewish Herald, 1864; Delitzsch, Saat auf Hoffnung (Erlangen, 1864), II, iii, 33 sq. (B. P.)

Deutschmann, JOHANN, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Jüterbogk, Aug. 10, 1625. He studied and received his degrees at Wittenberg. In 1652 he was appointed assistant of the faculty of philosophy; in 1665 travelled through Germany, Denmark, and the Netherlands; in 1657 was appointed privat-docent; and in 1662 professor extraordinary. This theologian loved particularly to dispute, and had, says Jöcher, his head full of odd notions, especially on the identity of the religion of Adam with that of the Lutherans. He died Aug. 12, 1706, leaving an immense number of publications, of which the principal are, De Libris Scripturæ Apocryphis (Wittenberg, 1682):—De Petru ad Matt. xvi, 18:—Biblicum Abelia Theologia Compendium (ibid. 1709):—Panoplia Conversionis Augustinæ (ibid. eod.):—Analysis et Exegesis Compendii Iulieni (ibid. eod.):—Theologia Positiva Adami Protoplasti (ibid. eod.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Devas, the generic name for gods among the Hindûs. Throughout the Vedic period they were mere shapeless abstractions. It is true that human properties were frequently ascribed to them; it was even believed that gods are ultimately mortal, and can only purchase an exemption from the common lot by drinking of the potent amrita, or draught of immortality, that is, the soma (q. v.). But in the later period, when Brahminism had been introduced, the devas became more completely humanized, assumed a definite shape in the imagination of the worshipper, and exhibited all the ordinary signs of individuality. They were all regarded as inferior to the one Great Spirit, who is the primal source of being, and of whom the devas are no more than scintillations of majesty. They are worshipped, according to a Hindû writer, in order that men's minds may be composed, and led by degrees to the essential unity. The devas have their dwelling-place in Meru, the local heaven of the Hindûs. They are of different degrees of rank, some of them being superior, others inferior. Devas or Dewas are also the deities of the Buddhists, whether denoting the divine persons on the earth, or in the celestial regions above. There are numberless dwellings of the devas in the lokas or spheres above the earth. For an account of these see Hardy, Manual of Buddhism.

Devatas, gods worshipped by ordinary Hindûs, such as Rama, Krishna, Siva, Kali, and others.

De Veil, Carolus Maria, D.D., an English Baptist, was a Jew, born at Metz, Lorraine, and educated in Judaism; but, by comparing the Old with the New Test., became a Christian. His father tried to kill him with a sword, but he escaped, and became a canon-regular of the Augustines, at Melun, and professor of divinity in the University of Anjou, where he took his degree. In 1672 was published his Commentary on St. Mark and St. Luke, in defence of the Church of Rome. Being employed to write against the Huguenots, he was led to embrace Protestantism, fled to Holland, abjured popery in 1677, and finally went to England, where he was kindly received by several bishops, and admitted to holy orders in the English Church. He published a Commentary on Solomon's Song, and the Minor Prophets, which secured him high favor and patronage, and the bishop of London gave him free access to his library. There coming into contact with the leading Baptists, he joined their body, but thereby forfeited all his Church friends excepting Dr. Tillotson. He became pastor in Gracechurch Street, and brought much honor to the denomination. In 1684 was published his Literal Explanation of the Acts of the Apostles, in Latin, then translated it into English. De Veil afterwards practiced medicine for his maintenance; but the Baptists allowed him a yearly stipend till his death. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 205.

De Veil, Louis de Compaigne, an English theologian and author, of the same family as the foregoing, embraced the Romish religion in early life, but afterwards renounced it for the Protestant faith, left France, where he had been the king's interpreter of Oriental languages, and went to England in 1679, where he immediately joined the Established Church. He published several books exhibiting considerable learning, chiefly relating to Jewish literature. See Bogue and Bennett, History of Dissenters, 2d ed. i, 477.

Devil, IN ART. Representations of the devil as the final tormentor of men belong to mediæval rather than to primitive art. Probably the earliest existing representation of hell is in the mosaics of Torcello, as that painted by Methodius, even if its story be true, has perished. In early art the devil generally appears in the form of a serpent as the tempter of man in this world. Didron, however, in the Iconographie du Serpent, mentions a gnostic combination of human and serpentine form, with leonine head and face, derived from the ancient Egyptian symbol of a lion-headed serpent. The human, being predominant, appears an anticipation of the personified serpent of the middle ages.

The Gothic or mediæval representations seem to begin in Italy with the fiend in the Chase of Theodorich, which, till lately destroyed by gradual and wanton mischief, adorned the front of San Zenone in Verona.

Gnostic Representation of the Devil.

In the Laurentian MS. of Rabula (A.D. 587) there is an extraordinary representation of the daemons of Gadara, just delivered from their tormenting spirits, who are fluttering away in the form of little black humanities of mischievous expression:

Antique Representation of Expelled Dæmons.

Devil Worship. The ancient Hebrews are distinctly charged with this sin in Deut. xxxii, 17, "They sacrificed unto devils, not to God." In later times they spoke of all false gods as devils, in consequence of the hatred which they bore to all kinds of idolatry, and we find them calling the chief deity of the Phœnicians Beelzebub (q. v.), the prince of devils.

Among the aboriginal races of India, remnants of which are still to be found in what are called the Hill tribes, inhabiting the forests and mountain fastnesses, devil-worship has always been widely prevalent. The evil spirits among these people are propitiated by means of bloody sacrifices and frantic dances. This form of worship also prevails in one form or another in Ceylon, on the coast of Malabar, among the Ugrian races of Siberia, and the Hill tribes on the south-western frontier of China. Devil-worship is also charged against the Yezidees (q. v.). See SHAMANISM.

De Vinne, DANIEL, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of Roman Catholic parents, in Londonderry, Ireland, Feb. 1, 1798. Being led providentially into a Methodist watch-meeting, in Albany, N. Y., he was converted Jan. 2, 1810. He then began to study various branches of liberal learning, in which he soon became proficient, and engaged in teaching school in Brooklyn. In October, 1818, he went to New Orleans as a missionary, entered the Mississippi Conference in 1819, and was a member of the General Conference of 1824, at which time he was transferred to the New York Conference. Here he labored until his strength gave way, and he retired after forty years of active service. He died at Morrisania, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1883. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1888, p. 91; Memorial (N. Y. 1888).

Devoti, GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian, was born at Rome in July, 1744. At the age of twenty he was made professor of canon law in the college there, and published, the following year, a treatise called De Notissimis in Jure Legibus. He was made bishop of Anagni in 1789, and also of Carthage, in partibus infidelium; next secretary of briefs to the princes, and camerarius, and finally consulter to the Congregation of the Immunity. He accompanied Pius VII to France, at the consecration of the emperor Napoleon, and was subsequently connected with the prelates of the society of the Index. He died at Rome, Sept. 18, 1820. His principal work is entitled Institutiones Canonice (Rome, 1788; often reprinted). Devoti also undertook a Jus Canonicum Universum, of which only three volumes have been published (Rome, 1803, 1804, 1817). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dewales, the name given to temples in Ceylon in which Brahminical deities are worshipped. Entrance to them is forbidden to Europeans. "In the sanctum are the armlets or foot-rings of Pâtiné, or the weapons of the other deities, with a painted screen before them; but there are no images, or none that are permanently placed; in some of the ceremonies temporary images are made of rice, or of some other material equally perishable."—Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 201.

Dewa-lokas, the six celestial worlds which the Buddhists believe to be situated between the earth and the Brahma-lokas. In these worlds, where there are numberless mansions inhabited by the Devas (q. v.), perfect happiness is enjoyed. See Hardy, Eastern Monachism.

Dewar, DANIEL, LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Glen-Dochart, was educated at an Independent college in England; licensed by the presbytery of Mull in November, 1812; ordained missionary at Strontian, Sept. 24, 1813; elected minister at Greyfriars' Church, Aberdeen, July 13, 1814; admitted to the professorship of moral philosophy in King's College, June 4, 1817, which he held in conjunction with the living of Greyfriars; promoted to Tron Church, Glasgow, in 1819; made principal of the university and Marischal College, Aberdeen, and resigned his charge in November, 1832. He died at Over-Durdie, May 28, 1867, in his eightieth year. See Fasts Eccles. Scotice, ii, 12; iii, 476.

Dewey, ORVILLE, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born March 28, 1794. He graduated at Williams College in 1814; studied theology at Andover from 1816 to 1819, and soon after was Dr. Channing's assistant. In 1823 he became pastor of the Unitarian Church at New Bedford, Mass., and in 1835 came to the Second Unitarian Church at New York. Ill-health led him to resign his pastorate in 1848, and to retire to his farm in Sheffield, Mass. There he prepared two courses of lectures for the Lowell Institute in Boston. From 1858 to 1862 he was pastor of the new South Church in Boston. He died at Sheffield, March 21, 1882. Dr. Dewey published, Letters on Revivals:—Discourses on Human Nature:—The Two Great Commandments, in sermons (N. Y. 1876). (B. P.)

De Witt, Thomas, D.D., an eminent Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Kingston, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1791. He graduated from Union College in 1808; studied theology under Brodhead and Froeligh; also at New Brunswick Seminary in 1812, and was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in the same year; was pastor at Hopewell and New Hackensack from Nov. 24, 1812, to 1825; at Hopewell from 1825 to 1827; at New York from 1827 to 1874; was editor of the Christian Intelligencer from 1831 to 1843, and died May 18, 1874. Dr. De Witt took great interest in the various benevolent enterprises of his day, especially the Bible and Tract societies, and was greatly honored and revered by all classes of men and denominations of Christians. He was one of the vice-presidents of the Historical Society for thirty years, and president from 1870 to 1872. Dr. De Witt was a Christian minister of singular purity and simplicity. His numerous writings, chiefly on religious biography, history, and practice, are enumerated in Corwin's Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 239 sq.

De Witt, William R., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Rhinebeck, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1792. He was converted in 1810, and educated at Schenectady College and the Associate Reformed Seminary. In 1818 he accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Harrisburg, Pa., where he remained till his death, Dec. 23, 1867. Dr. De Witt was eminently a Christian preacher. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 196.

De Wolfe, CHARLES, D.D., an eminent Wesleyan minister, was born at Wolfville, N. S., May 30, 1815. He secured a liberal education; commenced the study of law in Halifax; was converted under Dr. Crawley; united with the Methodists strongly against the wish of his parents, and in 1837 left Halifax for England, having been recommended by the Nova Scotia district to the British Conference. He received his theological training at Hoxton, London; was ordained in City Road Chapel, Sept. 14, 1838; sailed for his native land, and ministered in Halifax, Windsor, Charlottetown, Petite Rivière, Shelburne, and Sackville. In 1861 he was appointed the first theological professor in the institution at Sackville, N. B. In 1863 he was chosen president of the Conference of Eastern British America. He at length became a supernumerary, took up his residence in his native village, and died there, June 9, 1875. Dr. De Wolfe was a typical gentleman—cultured, refined. He was a man of great catholicity and of large-hearted sympathy for the poor and the suffering. His preaching was intellectual, yet fervent, and a rich treat to all. See Minutes of the Nova Scotia Conference, 1875, p. 7.

Dews, in Persian Mythology. The Dews of the teachings of Zoroaster are not personifications of the good, but of the physical and moral evil, formed to combat with the beings of light created by Ormuzd. Thus Ahriman set over against the seven Amshaspands of Ormuzd the seven Erdzews. From these, the highest beings of the kingdom of darkness, downward, there is just as great a number of harmful dæmons as of good, friendly genii. The supreme Dews have creative powers; their names are Ahriman, Ashmoph, Eghetash, Boshasp, Astujat, Tarik, Tosius; also the following, Ander, Savel, Tarmad, and Zarez. Many others are mentioned in the poetical and moral works of the Persians. An exceptional class are the Peris—light, airy beings of extraordinary beauty, living in the upper regions on the perfume of the flowers. They are fallen spirits, but the way to paradise is open to them, as also to Ahriman, if they reform.

Dexter, Flavius Lucius, a Spanish theologian, the son of St. Pacian, bishop of Barcelona, lived about the year 400. He was appointed, at the age of thirty, præfect of the prætorium, by the emperor Honorius, but soon resigned this dignity and retired to his native country, where he was made governor of Toledo. He wrote a Chronicle, of which Jerome speaks. This chronicle was for a long time supposed to be lost, when the Jesuit Jerome de Higuera announced that he had discovered a MS. in the library of Fulda. This MS. was brought by Torialba to Calderon, who published it under the title Fragmentum Chronici F. L. Dextri, cum Chronico Marci Maximi, etc. (Saragossa, 1619; reprinted in Seville in 1627, in Lyons the same year, and by Nicholas Antonio in his Bibliotheca Hispanica Vetust). It is generally supposed, however, that the Chronicle published by Calderon was a manufacture of Higuera. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dexter, Henry V., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Wayne, Me., April 8, 1815. He graduated from Waterville College, now Colby University, in 1842, and from the Newton Theological Institution in 1845. He was ordained in Brookline, Mass., Sept. 7, the same year, and was pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Calais, Me., until 1854. His next pastorate was in Augusta, until 1860, and a second time in Calais. For two years (1870-72) he was at Kennebunkport, and then accepted a call to Baldwinville, Mass., where he died, July, 1884. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 332. (J. C. S.)

Deza, Diego, a Dominican and second grand-inquisitor of Spain, was born in 1444 at Toro, in Leon. In 1479 he succeeded Peter of Osma as professor of theology in the University of Salamanca; in 1494 was made bishop of Zamora; in 1496 bishop of Salamanca; in 1497 was elevated to the episcopal see of Jaen, which he occupied till 1500, when he was appointed bishop of Palencia. In 1505 he became archbishop of Seville, after having been previously appointed successor of Torquemada; and in 1523 was made archbishop of Toledo and primate of Spain. While on his way to Toledo he died, June 9, 1523, leaving Defensorium Thomæ Aquinatis (Seville, 1491; Paris, 1514). A complete edition of his works was published at Madrid in 1576. See Llorente, Histoire de l'Inquisition d'Espagne (Paris, 1818), i, 289 sq., 330 sq.; iv, 253 sq.; Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella (Lond. 1862), i, 359; ii, 291, 319; Hefele, Cardinal Ximenes (2d ed. Tübingen, 1851), 276 sq., 351 sq., 359; Rodrigo, Hist. Verdadera de la Inquisición (Madrid, 1877); ii, 116 sq., 205 sq., 235 sq., 245 sq.; Gams, Zur Geschichte der spanischen Inquisition (Regensburg, 1878), p. 56 sq.; Hundhausen, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Deza, Pedro, a Spanish prelate, was born at Seville, Feb. 24, 1520. He studied at Salamanca, where he obtained a chair as professor of law; afterwards became official of Compostella, auditor of Valladolid, archdeacon of Calatrava, member of the inquisition, and finally president of Grenada in 1569. He obtained the cardinal's hat in 1578, went to Rome two years later, and died there, Aug. 27, 1600. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dharma, the teachings of Gotama Buddha, or the system of truth among the Buddhists. It is one of the three gems or great treasures which they prize above all other objects. It consists of several portions, which, when collected together, were divided into two principal classes, called Suttani and Abhidhammāni. These are again divided into three collections, called, in the Singhalese, Winaya, or discipline; Sutra, or discourses; and Abhidharma, or pre-eminent truths. These collections are called Pitakas, one version of which consists of about four thousand five hundred leaves. These are bound up in various sizes to suit the convenience of those using them. The Dharma is literally worshipped, and the books are usually kept wrapped up with the utmost care in cloth. Whenever the Buddhist speaks of these sacred books he adds an epithet of honor. Sometimes they are placed upon a rude kind of altar by the road-side, that those who pass by may put money upon it in order to obtain merit. The Dharma is considered as perfect, having nothing superfluous and nothing wanting.—Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 167, 192. See BANA.

Diab, the law of retaliation among the Mohammedans, the nearest relative of a murdered person having the right to claim the price of blood from the murderer. The directions of the Koran on this subject are as follows: "Retaliation is commanded you in cases of murder—a freeman for a freeman, a slave for a slave, and a woman for a woman. But he who shall pardon a murderer shall obtain mercy from God; and when a man shall have pardoned a murderer, he shall no longer have it in his power to exact retaliation from him."

Diaconism (Gr. diá, through, and kainós, new), a name formerly given by the Greek Church to the week after Easter, as being the Renovation or first week of the festival of our Saviour's resurrection. On the fifth day of that week the patriarch of Constantinople, along with the bishops and principal clergy, were formerly accustomed to begin the day's services with a ceremony in the imperial palace in honor of the emperor.

Diaconia. (1) The name given to the places where food and alms were distributed to the poor by the deacons of the Church of Rome, consisting of a hall in which the distributing took place, and an oratory or chapel annexed. Over each diaconia a deacon presided, and the archdeacon superintended them all. The original diaconia has given place to another plan, where the hall is dispensed with, and the chapel has become a church; of these there are now fourteen, each assigned to a cardinal-deacon. (2) The word was also used, as by Gregory the Great (Ep. ad Joann. 24), for that part of the deacon's office which consisted in dispensing food and money to the poor. (3) The word was used for monastic almshouses in the earlier days of monachism.

Diaconica, certain short prayers in the liturgy recited by the deacons, called also εὐχαῖσται, as being prayers for peace.

Diaconostchina, a sect of Raskolniks (q. v.), or dissenters from the Russo-Greek Church. They derived their name from the διάκονος or deacon Alexander, their founder. He belonged to the Church at Vaska, but separated from it in 1706, in consequence of a dispute which had arisen relative to some ecclesiastical ceremonies.

Diadochus, bishop of Photia or Photice (Epirus), lived about 460. Photius says (Cod. 201) that he had read a book of this bishop, containing ten definitions and a hundred chapters. Although this book has not come down unto our time, yet we have a translation from the Greek into Latin, made by the Jesuit Turrien under this title, S. Diadochi Episcopi Photices, Capita Centum de Perfectione Spirituali, etc. (Florence, 1570; reprinted several times); but there is no evidence as to its authenticity. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diagoras or Melos, a Greek philosopher, was surnamed the Atheist, and lived in the time of Socrates and Aristophanes. He must have removed from his native island to Athens before the performance of the Clouds of Aristophanes, B.C. 423, for he is alluded to in that piece as one well known to the Athenians. He attacked the Eleusinian mysteries, and ridiculed the popular religion. He was a disciple of Democritus of Abdera. In 411 he was accused of impiety, but the real trouble was his politics. He left the city, fearing the result of a trial, and was condemned to death by the court. He died at Corinth. His works are lost.

Diana, Benedetto, an eminent Venetian painter, flourished in the latter part of the 15th and first part of the 16th century. He excelled in architectural pieces, and found considerable employment in the churches of his native city. Some of his pictures are much admired, particularly his altar-piece of St. Lucia, in the Church of the Apostoli.

Dianæus (or Dianius), bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, B.C. cir. 340-362, a saintly man, but of weak judgment and vacillating character.

Diaper-work (or Diapering), in Architecture, an ornament of flowers applied to a plain surface, whether carved or painted; if carved, the flowers are entirely sunk into the work below the general surface; they are usually square, and placed close to each other, but occasionally other forms are used, as in the choir-screen of Canterbury; this kind of decoration was first introduced in the Early English style, when it was sometimes applied to large spaces, as in Westminster Abbey and Chichester Cathedral; in the Decorated style it was also extensively employed. An example may be seen in the illustration of part of one of the Eleanor Crosses given under CANOPY. In the Perpendicular style diapering was used only as a painted ornament, and, as no attention has been paid to the preservation of such decorations, but few specimens remain. The origin of the name has been a source of dispute, but it is generally supposed to be taken from a kind of cloth worked in square patterns, which was then very commonly used. This cloth was called "Dyaper" i. e. D'Ypres, from the chief manufactory being at Ypres, in Belgium.

Diapsalma, a mode of singing sometimes adopted in the early Christian churches, in which the priests led the psalmody and the people sang responses.

Diarmaid (Lat. Dermotus), a very common name in Ireland, and borne by many of the saints: some of these are simply placed upon a day in the calendars, with or without their father's name and the place of dedication, while others have a few particulars preserved by history or tradition. Several of them are enumerated by Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Diatimus, bishop of Lymirus, in Lycia, who, with other of the Lycian prelates, wrote to Basil, (Epist. 403, 420) in 375, expressing their desire to separate themselves from the heterodox Asiatic bishops as well as to enter into communion with him.

Diaz, Diego Valentino, an eminent Spanish painter, lived at Valladolid, and executed many works for the churches and convents of that city. He founded the House of Mercy, or Hospital for Orphans, and died in 1660.

Diaz, Juan, a Spanish martyr, was born at Cuenca, in Castile. While a student at Paris, he became a convert to Protestantism, in 1540. In 1545 he left Paris for Geneva, with a recommendation to Calvin. From Geneva he went to Strasburg, where he was held in high esteem by Martin Bucer; at the latter's request, Diaz accompanied him to the diet of Ratisbon, December, 1545. Pietro Malvenda, who was present at Ratisbon, tried everything to bring Diaz back to the Church of Rome, but in vain. At last Malvenda succeeded in influencing Diaz's brother Alfonso to commit fratricide. Alfonso, who was an officer at the papal court, hastened from Rome, and perpetrated the foul deed at Neuburg-on-the-Danube, March 27, 1546. In Germany this fratricide produced general horror; but the emperor Charles V and the pope approved of it, and the murderer was not punished. He however committed suicide at Trent in 1551. Diaz wrote a confession of faith, Christianæ Religionis Summa, which was published at Neuburg in 1546, and put into the index by Pius IV in 1564. It was reprinted at Strasburg in 1692 and 1694, and Zurich in 1763. It was translated into French by Crespin, Confession de Foy, qui est un Sommaire de la Religion Chrétienne (1565; a Spanish translation was published in 1865):—Summa de la Religion Cristiana. In the epistolary part of Calvin's works are found several letters of Diaz, addressed to Calvin in 1545 and 1546. See Beza, lomes (Geneva, 1580); Bayle, Dict. Hist. ii. 812; Boehmer, Spanish Reformers of Two Centuries, from 1520 (Lond. 1874), p. 185-216; Picheral-Dardier, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Diblik, in Slavonic mythology, was a goddess of fire.

Mesha (q. v.). The following is Tristram's description of the locality (Land of Moab, p. 147):

"Dibon is a twin city, upon two adjacent knolls, the ruins covering not only the tops, but the sides, to their base, and surrounded by one common wall. Close under both knolls, on the west, runs a little wady, in which, after the late rains, we found a puddle of water here and there; and beyond the wady the even plain ceases, and the country becomes rocky and undulating. All the hills are limestone, and there is no trace of any basalt but what has been carried here by man. Still, there are many basaltic blocks, dressed, and often with lime on them, evidently used in masonry; and we found a few traces of carvings on other stones. The place is full of caverns, cisterns, vaulted underground storehouses, and rude semicircular arches, like the rest." (For plan of the ruins, see cut on following page.)

Dibrio. See DUBRICIUS.

Dikaiophylax (Gr. δικαιος, just, and φύλαξ, a keeper), an officer in the Greek Church who takes care of the Church's title and her charters.

Dicaeus, bishop of Tabia, in Galatia Prima (cir. A.D. 314-325).

Dicastillo, JUAN DE, a Spanish Jesuit, was born in 1585 at Naples; joined his order in 1600; was professor of theology and philosophy at Murcia, Toledo, and Vienne, and died in 1653 at Ingolstadt. He wrote, De Justitia et Jure, etc. (Antwerp, 1641):—De Incarnatione (ibid. 1642):—De Sacramentis (1646-52, 3 vols.):—De Juramento (1662). See Langhorst, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dice. The playing at dice or other games of chance has always been discountenanced by the Church. The Pædagogus of Clement forbids it. Apollonius denounces the Montanists for it, asking whether prophets play at dice. The Apostolical Canons forbid the practice, under pain of degradation or excommunication. The Council of Eliberis (A.D. 305) and the Trullan Council (at the close of the 7th century) both forbade it. Justinian denounced games of chance, and even the being present at them, affixing a penalty to the act by the clergy, of suspension and seclusion in a monastery for three years. The account Jerome gives of Synesius alleging his own propensity to gambling as a reason for not being made bishop, and the account of the accusation by certain nuns of the convent of St. Radegund at Poitiers against their abbess, for dicing, and other references of like character, show that the habit was nevertheless all too frequent in the Church.

Dicerium, a double wax taper used by the bishops of the Greek Church in the benediction of the book of the gospels lying on the holy table. The dicerium was held to typify the two natures of Christ, while the tricerium symbolized the Trinity.

Dichu, an Irish saint, son of Trichem, of Sabhall, the first disciple of St. Patrick, in Ulster, A.D. cir. 482. He is commemorated April 29.

Dick, Robert, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Rev. James Dick, minister in Glasgow, was proposed on trial for the ministry, July, 1746; licensed to preach Jan. 14, 1747; presented to the living at Lanark in September, 1748, and a settlement ordered by the Assembly, May 15, 1750. On presenting himself for ordination in September, he was refused admission to the Church, a mob having carried off the keys, and he was ordained in the Tron Church, Glasgow. Another mob prevented his entry into the church on Sunday, in October, and he preached at Lee, with the approval of the presbytery. In August, 1754, he was transferred to New Greyfriars' Church, Edinburgh; was translated to the Old Church, but changed to Trinity College Church, April 26, 1758; was appointed in May, 1760, a commissioner to visit the Highlands and select suitable places for missionaries under the royal bounty. He did not go, however, and died Aug. 24, 1782, aged sixty years. He was one of the most able and distinguished ministers of his day. He published two single Sermons (Edinb. 1758, 1762):—The State of the Cause (ibid. 1763). See Fasts Eccles. Scotticann., i, 88, 70; ii, 308.

Dickenson, E. W., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Salem, N. J., Jan. 28, 1810. He graduated from the Hamilton Institution in 1835; was ordained at Poughkeepsie in 1836, and continued as pastor there for forty years. His other pastorates were at Danvers, Mass., Burlington, N. J., Elmira, N. Y., Lewisburg, and Marcus Hook, Pa., in which place he resided fourteen years. He died Dec. 8, 1875. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 382. (J. C. S.)

Dickerson, James Stokes, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., July 6, 1825. He graduated from Madison University in 1848; soon after was associated with Dr. M. B. Anderson in the management of The New York Recorder, and was subsequently connected with The Chronicle. His pastorates were at Wilmington, Del., Pittsburgh, Pa., and South Boston, Mass. He died March 21, 1876, in Chicago, where he had gone to connect himself with The Standard. See Memoir (N. Y.). (J. C. S.)

Dickey, Ebenezer, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Oxford, Chester Co., Pa., March 12, 1772. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1792, was licensed by the First Associate Reformed Presbytery of Pennsylvania in 1794; in 1796 was settled over the united congregations of Oxford and Octorara, Pa. His connection with the last charge lasted only four years, and that with Oxford until his death, May 31, 1831. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 183.

Dickey, John Miller, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Oxford, Pa., Dec. 15, 1806. He prepared for college at Oxford and Milton; graduated from Dickinson College in 1824, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1827; was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery, Oct. 17, 1827, and ordained by the same, May 19, 1830. He preached the first year under a commission from the Board of Domestic Missions in the north-eastern counties of Pennsylvania, and then labored in Georgia and Florida. Having accepted a call to become pastor of the Church at New Castle, Del., he was ordained; next went to Oxford and Upper West Nottingham, Pa.; for fifteen years, while pastor, was also principal of the Oxford Female Seminary, and died March 21, 1878. Dr. Dickey was deeply interested in many philanthropic and educational institutions. See Necrolog. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 12.

Dickinson, Baxter, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Amherst, Mass., April 14, 1795. He united with the Congregational Church there in 1811; graduated from Yale College in 1817, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1821; was pastor of the Congregational Church in Longmeadow, from 1823 to 1829; of the Third Presbyterian Church in Newark, N. J., from 1829 to 1835; professor in Lane Theological Seminary from 1835 to 1839; in Auburn Theological Seminary from 1839 to 1847; in Andover Theological Seminary in 1848; secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, Boston, Mass., from 1850 to 1859; resided at Lake Forest, Ill., from 1859 to 1868, and thereafter in Brooklyn, N. Y., until his death, Dec. 7, 1875. Dr. Dickinson was one of the acknowledged leaders in the New-school Presbyterian Church, and was moderator of the assembly of that Church in Philadelphia, in 1839. He was a man of fine scholarship, a thorough teacher, and a preacher of unusual ability. See Presbyterian, Dec. 18, 1875; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 257.

Dickinson, Charles, an Irish prelate, was born in August, 1792, at Cork, Ireland. He graduated, in 1815, from Trinity College, Dublin, with distinction; in 1819 was appointed assistant chaplain of the Magdalen Asylum, and three years later at the Female Orphan House, where he continued for nine years; next became one of the archbishop of Dublin's chaplains; in July, 1833, was appointed to the parish of St. Ann's, Dublin; in 1840 was made bishop of Meath, and died July 12, 1842. See The Church of England Magazine, Aug. 1846, p. 107.

Dickinson, Moses, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Springfield, Mass., Dec. 12, 1695. He graduated from Yale College in 1717, and his first charge was Hopewell, N. J., where his labors were attended by extraordinary revivals, and his first appearance at the synod was in 1722. In 1727 he removed, as pastor, to Norwalk, Conn. On the death of his brother Jonathan, he completed the latter's second Vindication of the Sovereignty of Grace. Early in 1764 he sought an assistant in William Tennent, Jr., the son of the patriarch of Freehold, N. J., but during the closing years of his life, after Tennent's removal, he pursued his work alone. He died May 1, 1778. (W. P. S.)

Dickinson, Richard William, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in the city of New York, Nov. 21, 1804. He graduated from Yale College in 1823; studied two years thereafter in the theological seminary at Princeton, N. J.; was licensed to preach by the Second Presbytery of New York, March 5, 1828; ordained an evangelist Oct. 24 following; settled over the Presbyterian Church at Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 18, 1829; resigned in 1833 on account of injured voice; spent the following winter in Florida, and the next season in foreign travel, and then resumed preaching on his return to New York city, where he supplied the pulpit of the Market Street Dutch Church from 1834 to 1835. In 1836 he became pastor of the Bowery Presbyterian Church, but resigned the April following; was installed over the Canal Street Presbyterian Church, Oct. 22, 1839; resigned in 1844; in November, 1859, was invited to take charge of the Mount Washington Valley Church, and acted as its pastor for about thirteen years. He died at Fordham, Aug. 16, 1874. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1875; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 44.

Dickson, Charles, a Scotch clergyman, studied at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach Dec. 6, 1821; presented to the living at Wamphray in November, 1824; was ordained May 5, 1825, and died May 10, 1853. He published, The Case of Blind Bartimeus Considered and Illustrated:—Baptismal Regeneration Tested by the Scriptures, etc.:—An Account of the Pariah. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 666.

Dickson, Cyrus, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Erie County, Pa., Dec. 20, 1816. He graduated at Jefferson College, and was ordained, in 1839, pastor at Franklin. After remaining there several years, he received a call from Wheeling, W. Va., where he labored earnestly and successfully until he was called to Baltimore, in 1856, as pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, remaining there fourteen years. In 1870 he was elected secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, in which office he performed the great work of his life. In 1870, on the reunion of the Presbyterian Church, he was appointed permanent clerk of the General Assembly, which office he held at the time of his death, Sept. 11, 1881. See Baltimore Presbyterian, Sept. 16, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Dickson, the family name of several Scotch clergymen:

1. DAVID (1), A.M., was regent in Glasgow University; admitted assistant minister at Irvine, March 31, 1618; proposed for Edinburgh in October, 1620; deprived by the High Court of Commission, Jan. 10, 1622, and confined in Turriff for opposing the Articles of Perth, but permitted to return in July, 1623. In the discharge of his official duties he secured the esteem of the gentry, nobles, and parishioners. For employing two of his countrymen in 1637, who were under Irish Episcopal ban, he was again tried by the High Commission. The same year he refused to accept the service-book attempted to be obtruded. He was a member of the assembly in 1638, appointed chaplain to the Ayrshire regiment in 1639, and the same year was elected moderator of the General Assembly. He was translated to the professorship of divinity in Glasgow University, Jan. 30, 1640; admitted to the Cathedral Church, Glasgow, May 18, 1640, but attended only one meeting of session, and a commissioner was appointed, March 29, 1649, to appear against his translation to Edinburgh. He was appointed to the second charge at Edinburgh, April 12, 1650, and held the professorship of divinity in conjunction. He was elected, a second time, moderator of the General Assembly, July 21, 1652; deprived in October, and died in December, 1662, aged seventy-eight years. As a preacher, he was the most popular and powerful of his day, and his services at Irvine were crowned with wonderful success. He took a foremost part at the Glasgow Assembly in 1638, in the overthrow of episcopacy. When the Church divided into Resolutions and Protesters, he took part with the former. He published, A Treatise on the Promises (Dublin, 1630):—Explanation of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Aberdeen, 1635):—Expositio Analytica Omnium Apostolicarum Epistolarum (Glasgow, 1645):—True Christian Love, in verse (1649):—Exposition of the Gospel of Matthew (Lond. 1651):—Explanation of the Psalms (ibid. 1658-59, 3 vols.):—Therapeutica Sacra (Edinb. 1656; transl. ibid. 1664):—A Commentary on the Epistles (Lond. 1659):—Prælectiones in Confessionem Fidei (fol. transl.):—Truth's Victory over Error (Lond. 1658):—several pamphlets in the disputes with the doctors of Aberdeen (4to), and some in defence of the public resolutions. The Directory for Public Worship was drawn up by him, with the assistance of Alexander Henderson and David Calderwood, and The Sum of Saving Knowledge, by him, in conjunction with James Durham. He also published some minor poems: The Christian Sacrifice, and O Mother Dear, Jerusalem. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 27; ii, 8, 158.

2. DAVID (2), D.D., a native of Kilbucko, graduated at Edinburgh University, May 22, 1784; was licensed to preach, Aug. 16, 1744; presented to the living at Newlands in June, 1756, and ordained March 31, 1756; deposed March 2, 1763, but restored in June; suspended from the ministry, and finally deposed, April 22, 1767; contested his claim for stipend, and obtained decision in his favor in February, 1768. He died April 9, 1780, aged seventy years. He published A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Kinloch (Edinburgh, 1750):—A Letter to the Rev. John Adams (ibid. eod.). See Fasts Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 258.

3. DAVID (3), third son of the preceding, was educated at the parish school of West Linton, the grammar-school at Peebles, and the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. He was licensed to preach in August, 1775; appointed assistant and successor at Liberton, and ordained May 1, 1777; transferred to Bothkenmar, April 23, 1783; was brought forward as a candidate for St. Cuthbert's in 1785; accepted a call to Canongate Chapel of Ease, Oct. 1, 1796, as the first minister there; was transferred to Trinity College, Edinburgh, Feb. 27, 1799; promoted Nov. 30, 1801, to New North Church, and died Aug. 3, 1820, aged sixty-six years. He published four single Sermons (Edinburgh, 1779-1819):—Sermons Preached on Different Occasions (ibid. 1818):—Gospel Tidings:—An Account of Bothkenmar. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 88, 69, 91, 226; ii, 695.

4. DAVID (4), D.D., eldest son of the foregoing, was educated at the parish school of Bothkennar, and at Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in December, 1801; called in January, and ordained March 10, 1802, minister of the second charge, Kilmarnock; presented to St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, March 29, 1803, and died July 28, 1842, aged sixty-two years. He was indefatigable and zealous in promoting benevolent and missionary societies, and was secretary of the Scottish Missionary Society for many years. He published five single Sermons (Edinburgh, 1806-81):—Discourses Doctrinal and Practical (1837):—edited Memoir of Miss Fanny Woodbury (1826):—Sermons by the Rev. W. F. Ireland, D.D. (1829):—Lectures and Sermons by the Rev. George B. Brand (1841), and communicated several articles to the Edinburgh Cyclopædia, Christian Instructor, and other periodical works. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 127; ii, 177.

5. ROBERT, D.D., was licensed to preach Dec. 4, 1782; presented by the magistrates and kirk session to the living of the second charge, South Leith, in January, and ordained July 17, 1787; translated to the first charge, Sept. 29, 1790, and died Jan. 25, 1824, aged sixty-five years. His discourses were marked by Scriptural research, a vigorous understanding, a chaste, nervous style, and an energetic expression. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 102, 103, 108.

Dictinius, a Priscillianist, whose writings are condemned by Leo the Great (Epist. xv, 16), at length recanted, and was restored to the Church.

Dictionaries, BIBLICAL, THEOLOGICAL, AND ECCLESIASTICAL. We continue here our account of the leading works of this kind which have appeared since the article in volume II was printed.

New editions of the great cyclopædias of Herzog and Wetzler u. Welte are now in course of publication, continued since the death of the principal editors, the former by Plitt and Hauch, and the latter by Hergenwöthe and Kaulen. The works have been almost entirely rewritten and greatly improved, but they still retain the excellences and defects of the former edition as to contents and manner of treatment.

Meanwhile a very extensive work of a similar character, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, has been edited by F. Lichtenberger (Paris, 1877-82, 13 vols.), which is Protestant, slightly rationalistic and scholarly, but rather adapted to popular use than to profound or minute research.

Dr. Philip Schaff has prepared a condensed and modified translation of Herzog's work, with many fresh articles, under the title of Religious Encyclopædia (New York and Edinburgh, 1881-84, 8 vols.). Except in size, it partakes of the qualities, both excellent and otherwise, that characterize its great original. Notwithstanding the American additions, it still is strongly Germanic in its range and method. The Biblical portion of the work is comparatively scant, and the biographical relatively preponderant. As a natural consequence of its origin, the chief excellence lies in the historical department, although, of course, it has room for little more than an abstract from the copious stores of Herzog. It is to be regretted that the plan of the work does not include cuts, which so often aid in the illustration, especially of archaeological subjects. Nevertheless it is a valuable and convenient compendium of religious knowledge, and well adapted to the wants of such as cannot afford a more extensive work, yet desire something beyond the brief unscientific manuals heretofore current.

Dr. Joseph Schäfer, Handlexikon der Katholischen Theologie (Ratisbon; begun in 1880 and still in course of publication), is to be completed in four volumes. Its treatment of topics is fresh, its tone liberal, its arrangement good. It is altogether a very satisfactory work on Roman Catholic theology, for general use.

Dr. J. Hamburger, Real-Encyclopädie für Bibel und

Talmud (Strelitz, 1866-83. Division I, treating of Biblical topics, was completed in 1867; Division II, of Talmudical subjects, in 1883. A second and improved edition of Division I is to appear in the near future). This work, prepared by a Jewish rabbi of Germany, has a conceded value in the department of Jewish, and also of general, archæology, and has no serious competitor.

Dr. Daniel Schenkel, Bibel-Lexikon (Leipsic, 1868-75, 5 vols. 8vo, illustrated). This work is characterized by thoroughness and independence, and is designed to meet the demand for a Biblical and Theological Dictionary of small compass, and suited to the general Church-public of Protestant Germany. It is liberal or slightly rationalistic in its treatment of subjects, as might be expected in the work of its corps of collaborators.

Dr. Eduard C. A. Riehm, Handwörterbuch des Biblischen Alterthums (Bielefeld and Leipsic, 1875-84, 8vo, illustrated), is the work of a number of conservative German scholars, and forms an excellent manual, more like English Bible Dictionaries in its range and execution than any other.

H. Zeller, Biblisches Wörterbuch (2d and improved edition, Gotha, 1866). A useful manual, of limited compass.

Dr. F. X. Kraus, Real-Encyclopädie der Christlichen Alterthümer (Freiburg, 1880 sq., still incomplete). The scope of this work embraces the first six centuries of the Christian era. Its articles are copiously illustrated with wood-cuts, mostly taken from Martigny's Dictionnaire des Antiquités Chrétiennes. The work is, upon the whole, a valuable compilation. Its authors are of the Roman Catholic faith.

Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities (Lond. 1875-80, 2 vols.), and his Dictionary of Christian Biography (ibid. 1877 sq.; to be completed in four vols., of which three have already been issued), have been prepared, with the aid, in the former work, of Prof. Cheatham, and, in the latter, of Prof. Wace, on the same comprehensive and scholarly plan as his Dictionaries of Classical Antiquities and Biography; but they only come down to the time of Charlemagne.

Potter's Complete Bible Encyclopedia, edited by Rev. W. Blackwood, D.D., LL.D. (Phila. 1878 sq., 8 vols. 4to), includes many theological and biographical articles; and is intended for popular use. It is superbly, but not always appropriately, illustrated.

J. H. Blunt, Dictionary of Doctrinal and Historical Theology (Lond. 1872, imperial 8vo), and Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, etc. (ibid. 1874), are useful preparations from a High-Church point of view.

M. E. C. Wolcott, Sacred Archaeology (Lond. 1868, 8vo), contains interesting notices of ecclesiastical art and institutions, especially relating to the Anglican Church.

F. G. Lee, Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms (Lond. 1877, 8vo, illustrated), is chiefly occupied with description of sacred vestments and appurtenances, all from a High-Church standpoint.

Parker's Glossary of Terms used in Architecture (Lond. 1845, 4th ed. 3 vols. 8vo, copiously illustrated) is a very convenient and useful summary of details relating to architectural science, including churches particularly.

Didā, seventh abbas of the Benedictine convent of St. Peter, Lyons, in the time of bishop Fucualdus.

Dido, (1) the twenty-sixth bishop of Poitiers, cir. A.D. 673; (2) the thirty-second bishop of Noyent, in the 8th century; (3) the thirty-seventh bishop of Tours, A.D. 742-744.

Didymia, fourth abbas of the convent of Sante-Croix, at Poitiers, in the 6th century.

Didymus, a martyr at Alexandria, A.D. 304, and commemorated April 28, is said to have been a Christian teacher there, and to have been beheaded for aiding the escape of Theodora, a Christian girl, from a fate worse than death, on account of her faith.

Diecmann, JOHANN, a German philologist and theologian, was born at Stade, June 30, 1647. He studied at Giessen and Wittenberg, and was appointed president of the college in his native place, superintendent of the duchies of Bremen and Weser, and later professor of theology in the university of Kiel. He died at Kiel, July 4, 1720, leaving several dissertations, enumerated in the sixth volume of the Historia Bibliotheca Fabriciana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Diedo, GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian, born at Besenno in 1487, filled with distinction the highest functions in the Augustinian order, and died at Bologna in 1553, leaving, Catechismus de Arte Neapolitana (Rome, 1547):—Commentarii in Pauli Epistolam ad Timotheum (1553):—Expositiones in Epistolam Petri, Jacobi et Judæ, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diefenbach, MARTIN, a German theologian, born at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1661, devoted himself to the conversion of the Jews, and published on this very subject two volumes in German, with a Latin title Judeus Convertendus (Frankfort, 1696):—Judeus Conversus (1709). He died in 1709. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diego DE DEZA. See DEZA.

Diego DE YEPES, a Spanish prelate and historian, was born at Yepes, near Toledo, in 1531. He joined the order of the Hieronymites, and became successively bishop of Albarracín, confessor of the king, Philip II, and bishop of Tarragona. He died in 1614, leaving, Historia de la Persecucion de Inglaterra (Madrid, 1599):—Vida de la Madre Teresa de Jesus (ibid. eod.; Saragossa, 1606):—De la Muerte del Rey Felipe Segundo (Milan, 1607). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diego, Francisco Garcia, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, who had for some time directed the missionaries as præfect, was on April 27, 1840, appointed first bishop of California, residing at Santa Barbara, where he at once prepared to erect a Franciscan monastery and a theological seminary, as well as a cathedral and residence; but the income of the "Pious Fund" of California—created at the time of the Jesuit missions there (1642 sq.) by charitable benefactors—was withheld, as the Mexican government had appropriated the property in which it was invested. In 1844, however, he obtained a grant of thirty-five thousand acres of land, by means of which he established a college at Santa Inez mission. Diego died at Santa Barbara, April 30, 1846. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the United States, p. 693.

Diepenbeck, ABRAHAM VAN, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1607, and died at Antwerp in 1675. He seems first to have practiced painting on glass. Some of his efforts of this kind are still admired in Amsterdam, particularly the windows in the cathedral, on which he painted the works of mercy, and those of the Church of the Dominicans, which are embellished with representations from the life of St. Paul. Several pictures by this master were brought to the United States some years ago, and sold for enormous prices. One of these, the Mocking of Christ, was a most admirable performance. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diepenbroock, ANDREAS VAN, a Finnish theologian, was born at Riga, Nov. 2, 1624, studied at Marburg and Giessen, fulfilled various ecclesiastical functions, and died in his native place, April 4, 1698, leaving, De Ente et Potentia:—De Judio Contradictionis Formalis in Disciplinis Reilibus Exercitæ (1698). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dier (Dihenfyr, or Deiferus), a Welsh saint, died about A.D. 664, and is commemorated Nov. 21.

Dieringer, FRANZ XAVIER, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Rangendingen, in Hohenzollern, Aug. 22, 1811. In 1835 he was ordained priest, in 1840 was made professor of dogmatics at Speyer, in 1843 at Bonn, and in 1853 became a member of the chapter at Cologne. In 1856 he was spoken of as a candidate for the Paderborn bishopric, in 1864 for the Treves and in 1866 for the Cologne bishoprics; but his name was always erased from the list by the government as a "persona minus grata." When, in 1869, the perplexities of the Vatican council commenced, he belonged to those who regarded the declaration of the papal infallibility as non-opportune. When, finally, the infallibility of the pope was adopted by the council, he retired from his office, and died Sept. 8, 1876, at Veringendorf, in Hohenzollern, leaving, System der göttlichen Thaten des Christenthums (Mayence, 1842, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1857):—Kanzelvorträge an gebildete Katholiken (1844):—Leben des heiligen Karl Borromäus (Cologne, 1846):—Lehrbuch der Katholischen Dogmatik (Mayence, 1845; 5th ed. 1866):—Das Epistelbuch der Katholischen Kirche, theologisch erklärt (ibid. 1863, 3 vols.):—Laien-katechismus über Religion, Offenbarung und Kirche (ibid. 1855). (B. P.)

Dierkens, PETRUS, a Flemish theologian, was born at Ghent; entered the Dominican order in 1620, and taught both philosophy and theology at Louvain. He was, in succession, doctor of theology, school director, and vicar provincial of Lower Germany, and died Aug. 3, 1675, leaving, Exercitia Spiritualia (Ghent, 1659):—De Vita Contemplativa, etc. (ibid. 1663):—De Obligationibus Regula et Constitutionum (ibid. 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dies, used, like the English "day," to designate a festival: (1) Dies Adoratus, Good Friday. (2) Dies Ægyptiaci, certain "unlucky days" supposed to have been discovered by the ancient Egyptians from astrological calculations, and marked in the calendars, but their observance was forbidden. (3) Dies Boni, used to designate festivals. (4) Dies Consecrati, the four days at Christmas observed as festival days, on which no courts were to be held. (5) Dies Magnus Felicissimus used for Easter-day; Dies Magnus, also used for the Last day. (6) Dies Natalis, birthday. (7) Dies Neophytorum, the eight days of special observance, from Easter-day to its octave, during which the newly baptized wore white garments. (8) Dies Palmarum (or, In Ramis Palmarum), Palm Sunday. (9) Dies Sancti, the forty days of Lent. (10) Dies Scrutiniæ, the days on which candidates for baptism were examined, especially Wednesday in the fourth week of Lent. (11) Dies Solis, Dies Lunæ. See WEEK. (12) Dies Tinearum or Murium, certain days when ceremonies were performed to avert the ravages of moths or mice. (13) Dies Viridum, Thursday of holy week in some ancient German calendars; "Green Thursday" in modern German ones. See MAUNDAY THURSDAY. (14) Dies Votorum, a wedding-day among the Lombards.

Dies (or Dias), GASPAR, a Portuguese painter, sometimes called "the Portuguese Raphael," flourished about 1525, and was instructed in the school of Michael Angelo at Rome. On his return to Portugal he executed, by order of the king, a number of excellent pictures for the churches. In 1534 he painted his celebrated Descent of the Holy Spirit for the Church of the Misericordia. He died at Lisbon in 1571. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Diesbach, JOHANN, a German Jesuit, was born at Prague in 1729, became successively professor at Olmütz, Brunn, Prague, and Vienna, and died in 1792, leaving a few scientific and historical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diest, HEINRICH, a German theologian, was born at Altena, in Westphalia, in 1595. He studied at Dortmund, Siegen, and Basle, and continued his studies at Heidelberg; but was obliged to leave that city at the time of the religious disputes, and returned to Basle, to pass his examinations for the doctor's degree, in 1621. Until 1624 he lived at Leyden as a private teacher. He was appointed minister of the Gospel at Emmerich, and in 1629 professor of theology and Hebrew in the University of Harderwick. In 1641 he went to Deventer in the same capacity, and died there in 1678, leaving, among many other works, De Ratione Studii Theologici (Harderwick, 1634):—Oratio Inauguralis (Deventer, 1640):—Fundus Davidis (1646):—Pedum Davidis (1657). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Diestel, LUDWIG VON, a Protestant doctor and professor of theology in Germany, was born at Königsberg, Sept. 28, 1825. He studied at Berlin, Bonn, and at his native place. In 1851 he commenced his theological lectures at Bonn, and was, in 1858, appointed university-preacher and professor of theology. In 1862 he was called to Greifswalde, in 1867 to Jena, and, after Oehler's death, in 1872, to Tübingen, where he died, May 15, 1879. A few months before his death he had been ennobled. Besides his contributions to the Studien und Kritiken, Herzog's Real-Encyclopädie (1st ed.), and Schenkel's Bibel-Lexikon, he published, Der Segen Jakobs in Gen. xlix historisch erläutert (Braunschweig, 1858):—Geschichte des alten Testaments in der christlichen Kirche (Jena, 1868), a "magnum opus":—Die Sinfut und die Flutsugen des Altertums (1871; 2d ed. 1876). (B. P.)

Diēta, the ecclesiastical Cursus or daily office.

Dietelmair, JOHANN AUGUSTIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 2, 1717, at Nuremberg. He studied at Altdorf and Halle, was in 1742 afternoon-preacher at his native place, and in 1744 deacon there. In 1746 he was called to Altdorf as professor of theology. He opened his lectures with an address, De eo, quod Difficile est in Munere Doctoris Academici et Præcipue Theologi. In the same year he took the degree of doctor of theology. He died April 6, 1785. He wrote, Antiquitas Codicis Alexandrini Vindicata (Halle and Magdeburg, 1739):—De Religione Christiana Philosophia Nomine a Veteribus Compellata (Altdorf, 1740):—De Descensu Christi ad Inferos Literaria (Nuremberg, 1741, 1762):—De Serie Veterum Doctorum in Schola Alexandrina (Altdorf, 1746):—De ἀποκατάστασι πάντων Scripturaria et Finitica (ibid. 1746):—De Fragmento Clementis Romani, etc. (ibid. 1749). Dietenberger, JOHANN, a German Dominican and doctor of theology, who died in 1534, while canon and inquisitor-general of Mentz and Cologne, is the author of a German translation of the Bible, published at Mentz in 1534 (revised by C. Ulenberg, Cologne, 1630; and again by the theologians of Mentz, ibid. 1662). He also wrote, De Dicoitio (ibid. 1532):—De Votis Monasticis (1524):—De Apostasia:—De Præceptorum et Consiliorum Differentia:—In Defensionem Sacrificii Missæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Dietl, GEORG ALOYS, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 19, 1752, at Pressath, in the Upper Palatinate. In 1784 he was appointed pastor at Berg, near Landshut; in 1801 he was called to Landshut as professor, where he died, May 27, 1809, leaving, Predigten (Munich, 1786, 1802):—Homilien über die sonntäglichen Evangelien (ibid. 1789; 4th ed. 1829). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 139; Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner des 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts, p. 84 sq. (B. P.)

Dietlen, JOHANNES, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Sept. 13, 1790, at Leipheim, in Bavaria. In 1818 he was sub-rector of the Latin school at Schwabach; in 1824, pastor of Volksratshofen, near Memmin-

gen; in 1838, pastor primarius and dean at Wassertrüdingen; in 1842, he was called to Beiersdorf, and died Sept. 15, 1866, leaving, Geschichtliche Darstellung der Gründung der christlichen Kirche, etc. (Nuremberg, 1838):—Unser Glaube ist der Sieg, against Ronge, Ghilany, and others (Erlangen, 1849). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 280; Delitzsch, Saat auf Hoffnung (Erlangen, 1864), ii, 140 sq. (B. P.)

Dietpold (or Dietbold), THEOBALD, a German prelate, born in 1189, was bishop of Passau; made with Frederic Barbarossa the journey to the Holy Land; and died on his return home, leaving Epistola ad Tuganonomem. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dietrich of Apolda (or THURINGIA), a German Dominican, born at Apolda, near Jena, is the author of a Life of St. Elizabeth of Thuringia (printed in Canisius, Antiq. Lectiones, ed. Basnage, iv, 118; preface and supplement in Mencken, Script. Rerum Germ. x). He also wrote the Life of St. Dominic. See Hefele, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dietrich of Münster (or OSNABRÜCK), a famous German preacher and ascetical writer, was born about the year 1435, at Münster, in Westphalia, and died at Louvain, Dec. 11, 1515, leaving, De Passione Domini:—De Exercitatione Interiore:—Manuale Simplicium. But the book which is best known of his writings is his Christenpiegel, a catechism, containing also prayers and meditations, which was printed very often. See Der Katholik, 1860, i, 584 sq.; Nordhoff, Dietrich Cölde und sein Christenpiegel, in Pick's Monatschrift für rheinisch-westfälische Geschichtsforschung, 1875, i, 67 sq.; Evelt, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dietrich (or Dietricy), Christian Wilhelm Ernst, a German artist, was born at Weimar, in Saxony, Oct. 30, 1712, and studied under Alex. Thiele. He was sent by the king, with a pension, to Italy. He painted scriptural and historical subjects well, his chief pictures being Lot and his Daughters; Abraham Going to Sacrifice Isaac; The Nativity; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Taking Down from the Cross; St. Jerome Writing; Christ Appearing to Magdalene; The Flight into Egypt; The Circumcision. He also edited two editions of Gesenius's Manual Lexikon (5th and 7th eds. 1855-68). (B. P.)

Dietrichstein, FRANZ, prince of, a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born at Madrid, Aug. 22, 1570. After studying philosophy at Prague and theology at Rome, he became successively canon of Olmütz, camerarius of pope Clement VIII, and legate à latere at several marriage ceremonies of royal families. While president of the imperial council of state, he opposed the enforcement of the royal letters in Moravia, which were of a tolerant character; and after he had expelled Boeskey, a Hungarian rebel, he was himself driven away by the Moravian insurgents; but after Bohemia was pacified he brought back into the bosom of the Church of Rome the Protestants of Moravia, and instituted the order of the Piarists. Ferdinand II nominated him prince, in 1631, in return for the services which he had rendered both to the State and the Church. He died at Brünn, in Moravia, Sept. 19, 1636, leaving discourses on the saints, some statutes upon the reform of the clergy and the people, a treatise on controversy, and some poems, sacred and profane. His Life, written by Voigt, was published, with notes and a supplement, by Schwalbe (Leipsic, 1792). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

(B. P.)

Dietsch, JOHANN JACOB, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Aug. 7, 1808, at Rennweg, near Nuremberg. He studied theology and philology at Erlangen, and after having taught for ten years in different colleges, was appointed in 1842 third pastor of the Church of the Holy Ghost at Nuremberg, where he labored until his death, June 20, 1876. He took a great interest in the mission among Jews and heathen, and promoted the kingdom of Christ everywhere. (B. P.)

Dietsch, AUGUST, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died while professor of theology at Bonn, March 4, 1872, is the author of Adam und Christus, Rom. i. 12-21 (Bonn, 1871). (B. P.)

Diggers, a term of reproach applied to the Waldenses (q. v.), because they were subjected to such persecution that they were compelled to dig caverns in the earth in which to hold meetings for worship.

Digna, the name of two Christian martyrs: (1) The servant of St. Afre, with whose remains she was burned at Augsburg while attempting to convey them away; commemorated Aug. 5. (2) A virgin of Tabana, executed at Cordova in 853, along with St. Felix, by the Moors; commemorated June 14.

Dignitary, a term used in England to denote one who holds cathedral or other preferments to which jurisdiction is annexed.

Dignitas, a classical term, gradually applied to offices, was purely secular at first. In the process of time, when ecclesiastics were appointed to secular offices, the people began to speak of "dignities" in the Church. First applied to the lower ranks, the term was finally used for all Church officials, i. e. pope, cardinal, patriarch, archbishop, metropolitan, bishop, etc. According to Ducange, in ecclesiastical parlance, "when a benefice included the administration of ecclesiastical affairs with jurisdiction, it was called a dignity."

Dike, Daniel and Jeremiah. See DRX.

Dilapidations, in English law, is the name given to the waste committed by the incumbent of an ecclesiastical living. By the general law a tenant for life has no power to cut down timber, destroy buildings, etc. (voluntary waste), or to let buildings fall into disrepair (permissive waste). See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.) s. v.

Dillard, RYLAND THOMPSON, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Caroline County, Va., in November, 1797. He was educated at Port Royal, served in the war of 1812, removed to Kentucky, studied law, and practiced for a time in Winchester; was ordained in 1824, and for forty-seven years served as pastor of the Church at East Hickman, and for more than thirty years of this period had the pastoral charge of the Church at Druid's Forks. He was superintendent of public instruction for Kentucky in 1842-48. His death occurred Nov. 26, 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 334. (J. C. S.)

Diller, JACOB W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Lancaster, Pa., in 1810. He was ordained deacon in 1834 and presbyter in 1835.

With the exception of four years as rector of St. Stephen's Church in Middlebury, Vt., his entire ministry was spent in St. Luke's, Brooklyn. He was lost in the burning of the steamer Seawanhaka, off Randall's Island, N. Y., June 28, 1880, aged seventy years. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881.

Dillingham, FRANCIS, an English divine, was born at Dean, Bedfordshire; became a fellow in Christ College, Cambridge; was an excellent linguist and subtle disputant; was chosen in 1607 one of the translators of the Bible, being on the 1 Chron.-Eccles. committee; was richly benefited at Wilken, Bedfordshire, and died there. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 170; Anderson, Annals of the English Bible (ed. Prime), p. 406.

Dima (Dimma, or Dioma, dimin. Dimmog, Lat. Dimanus, Dimaus, etc), the name of several Irish saints (commemorated respectively on March 9, May 12, June 27, July 19), besides the bishop of Condeire (Connor), about A.D. 640, commemorated Jan. 6.

Diman, JEREMIAH LEWIS, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Bristol, R. I., May 1, 1831. He studied under Rev. James N. Sikes, of Bristol; graduated from Brown University in 1851; and, after spending two years in Germany, entered Andover Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1856. On Dec. 9 of the latter year he was ordained over the First Church in Fall River, Mass.; in 1860 he became pastor of Harvard Church, Brookline; and from 1864 until the close of his life, Feb. 3, 1881, he was professor of history and political economy in Brown University. From 1873 he was a corresponding member of the Massachusetts Historical Society. Among his published addresses is The Historic Basis of Belief, one of the Boston lectures (1870):—Historical Address at the 200th Anniversary in Bristol, R. I. (1880):—The Theistic Argument as Affected by Recent Theories (1881). He edited the third and fifth volumes of the Narragansett Club publications, containing "John Cotton's answer to Roger Williams" and "John Fox digg'd out of his Burrowes." A posthumous volume, entitled Orations and Essays, with Selected Parish Sermons, was published in 1881. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 28.

Dimesses, an order of nuns, consisting of young maids and widows, founded in the state of Venice in the 16th century by Dejanata Valmarana, the wife of a civilian of Verona. Rules for their observance were laid down by a Franciscan named Anthony Paganì, in 1584. Their habit was either black or brown woollen, as the wearer might choose.

Diminutos, a name used to denote those persons whose confessions before the inquisition (q. v.) were defective and imperfect. There were three kinds of diminutos, who were condemned to die: 1. Those who, having accused themselves after being imprisoned, or, at least, before sentence of condemnation had passed upon them, had consequently time to examine themselves and make a complete declaration. 2. Those who did not confess till after sentence of condemnation had passed upon them. 3. Those who did not confess until they were given up to the confessors. These were never afterwards put to the torture, and could only be delivered from death by naming all their accomplices without a single exception.

Dimmick, LUTHER FRASEUR, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Shaftesbury, Vt., Nov. 15, 1790. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1816, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1819; was ordained pastor of the Church in Newburyport, Mass., the same year; and died suddenly, May 16, 1860. He was remarkable for his gentleness and sympathy; was a sound preacher and able scholar, and his long pastorate was very successful. He published a Historical Discourse. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 370.

Dimocrītēs (so called from dis, twice, and moipa, a part, because they only recognised two thirds of the nature of Christ, the human soul and body, denying the divine nature), another name for the APOLLINARIANS (q. v.), who were subdivided into various sects, as Vatalians, Synusiasts, Polemians, Valentinians, etc.

Dimpna (or Dympna), a virgin martyr of Ireland, probably in the 7th century, commemorated May 15.

Din (Arab. practice) is the second of the two parts into which Islamism is divided, faith and practice. The din, or practice, consists of, 1, prayers and purifications; 2, alms; 3, fasting; and, 4, pilgrimage to Mecca.

Dindorf, GOTTLIEB IMMANUEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 10, 1755, at Rotta, near Wittenberg. He studied at Leipsic, philosophy, theology, and ancient languages; was in 1786 professor of philosophy, in 1791 professor of Hebrew and cognate languages, and died Dec. 19, 1812, leaving, Mazima Versionum Difficulus in Linguarum Dissimilitudine Sita Est (Leipsic, 1783);—In Epistolam Syriacam Simeonis Beth-Arsamensis de Barsauma, etc. (ibid. 1788);—Quomodo Nomen קורח Salomoni Tribuatur? (ibid. 1791); Recitationes in Evangelium Johannis (ibid. 1796);—Novum Lexicon Lingue Hebraico-Chaldaice, etc. (1801-4). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 381 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 248, 250, 267; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 209; Steinschneider, Bibliog. Handbuch, s. v. (the latter two call him erroneously Theophilus Immanuel). (B. P.)

Dinet, GASPARD, bishop of Mâcon, who lived about 1617, wrote Ordonnances Synodales de Mascon (Lyons, 1602). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dingolzinga, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Dingolzingense), held at Dingolzing, on the river Isar, in Bavaria, A.D. 772, under Tassilo, duke of Bavaria, passed thirteen canons upon discipline and reformation of manners.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Dini, PIETRO, an Italian prelate, was born at Florence about 1570. He studied belles-lettres, and, while young, was made member of the Academy de la Crusca. In 1621 he succeeded cardinal Bondini, his uncle, in the archiepiscopal see of Fermo, and died in 1625. His fine library, which was particularly rich in Italian MSS. of the 13th and 14th centuries, has now passed over to the Bibliotheca Magliabechiana. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dinoth (Lat. Dinōthus), a Welsh saint, was abbot of Bangor between A.D. 500 and 542. He was originally a North British chieftain, and founded a monastery, the remains of which still exist in Flintshire.

Dinwiddie, JAMES LEWIS, D.D., an Associate Reformed minister, was born in Adams County, Pa., Feb. 23, 1798. He graduated from Washington College in 1816, and took a theological course in 1817 and 1818. Being a popular preacher, he received many calls from vacant congregations; but accepted one from Mercer, Pa., and labored there fourteen years. In 1834 he took charge of a Presbyterian congregation in Philadelphia. After continuing in this connection about seven years, he returned to his mother Church, and was again received as a member of the Presbytery of Monongahela in 1841. Shortly after this he was installed pastor of the Second Associate Reformed Church of Pittsburgh. In 1842 he was elected to the professorship of Biblical literature and sacred criticism in the theological seminary of the Reformed Church at Allegheny, and died in 1849. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iv, 154.

Dio, in Slavonic mythology, were birds of misfortune, the Harpies of the Slavs.

Diocesan Synods were ecclesiastical conventions which the patriarchs of the ancient Christian Church had the privilege of summoning whenever occasion required. They consisted of the metropolitans and all the provincial bishops.

Diocles, a martyr at Histrias (Istria), commemorated May 24.

Diodati, ALEXANDRE ALEXÉZÉ EDOUARD, pastor and professor at Geneva, was born in 1789. He belonged to one of those Protestant families which settled at Geneva. In 1811 he entered upon the duties of the sacred ministry, and was actively engaged therein at several stations till the year 1839, when he was appointed professor of ethics. In the following year he was given the chair of apologetics and pastoral theology, which he retained till his death in 1860. Of his many writings we mention, his French translation of Chalmers's Sermons (Paris, 1825);—De l'Enseignement Primaire: le Père Girard (in Bibl. Univ. July and August, 1830);—Essai sur le Christianisme, Envisagé dans ses Rapports avec la Perfectibilité de l'Être Moral (Geneva and Paris, 1830);—Discours Religieux (ed. by M. Coulin, Paris, 1861);—Méditations sur des Textes de l'Épître aux Ephésiens (ibid. 1863). See Viguier, in Le Chrétien Évangélique (1860, p. 353); Naville, in Bibliothèque Universelle (Feb. 1861); Coulin, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Diodōrus. (1) A presbyter and martyr at Rome under Valerian (A.D. 251); commemorated Dec. 1 (or Jan. 17 or Oct. 25). (2) A martyr at Perga, in Pamphylia; commemorated April 22 (or Feb. 26). (3) Bishop of Tyre, A.D. 381, whose inquiry of Epiphanius of Salamis led the latter to compose his treatise on the gems in the high-priest's breastplate.

Diodōtus, a saint of Africa; commemorated with Anesius, March 31.

Diogēnēs, the most noted of the Cynics, was born about 412 B.C. He was the son of Icesias, a money-changer of Sinope, in Pontus. One account states that they were detected in adulterating coin, and that father and son were compelled to leave their native city. But according to another account, Icesias died in prison, and Diogenes fled to Athens with a single attendant, whom, upon his arrival, he dismissed with the remark, "If Manes could live without Diogenes, why not Diogenes without him?" Thereupon he discarded all superfluities of dress and utensils, retaining only a wooden bowl, his cloak, and his wallet. The first of these, however, was also relinquished, on seeing a boy drink from the hollow of his hand. He now went to Cynosarges, the seat of the famous Antisthenes, where he cheerfully endured all the abuse heaped upon him by his master and fellow-disciples. Thus introduced to the favorable consideration of the Cynics, and willing to endure any hardship for the sake of wisdom, he soon outstripped his master in learning and extravagance of life. The story that he took up his abode in a cask belonging to the temple of Cybele does not rest upon unquestioned evidence. But that he was accustomed to inure himself to the vicissitudes of the weather by rolling himself in the hot sand in summer, and embracing statues covered with snow in winter, are facts resting on the best of authority. At Athens he was held in great esteem. He ridiculed and despised all intellectual pursuits which did not directly and obviously tend to some immediate and practical good. He abused literary men for reading about the evils of Ulysses, and neglecting their own; musicians for stringing the lyre harmoniously while they left their minds discordant; men of science for troubling themselves about the moon and stars while they neglected what lay immediately before them; orators for learning to say what was right, but not to practice it. His numerous witty apothegms are handed down by Diogenes Laërtius, and generally display that unwise contempt for the common opinions and pursuits of men which is so unlikely to reform them.

Diogenes was making a voyage to Ægina, when the ship was taken by pirates, and he carried to Crete and sold as a slave. When interrogated as to his trade, he answered that he understood no trade but "to govern men," and begged to be sold to a man "that wanted a master." Such a purchaser was found in the person of Xenias of Corinth, over whom he acquired great influence, receiving from him his freedom, and being appointed to take charge of the education of his children. He remained in the house of Xenias during the remainder of his life. He is believed to have died in 323 B.C. It was during his residence at Corinth that the celebrated meeting between him and Alexander the Great is said to have taken place. The king is reported to have begun the conversation by saying, "I am Alexander the Great;" to which the philosopher replied, "And I am Diogenes the Cynic." The king then inquired whether he could do anything to oblige him. But the only request Diogenes had to make was that Alexander should stand from between him and the sun. The king is said to have admired the Cynic so much that he said, "If I were not Alexander, I should wish to be Diogenes." He appears never to have returned to Athens. The mode of his death is unknown, although various stories have been repeated concerning it. His own desire was that his body should be thrown to the beasts of the field, but Xenias gave him an honorable interment. At Corinth there was a pillar erected to his memory, on which rested a dog of Parian marble. He has been charged with indecencies of various kinds, which have cast a stain upon his memory; but there is no certain foundation for much that has been said, and the conduct of the later Cynics was such as to reflect discredit on the very name. The Cynics answered arguments by facts. When some one was arguing in support of the Eleatic doctrine of the impossibility of motion, Diogenes rose and walked. See Smith, Dict. of Greek and Rom. Biog. and Myth. s. v.; Encyclop. Britannica, 9th ed. s. v.; Ueberweg, Hist. of Philos. i, 94.

Diogenes. (1) A saint in Macedonia, commemorated April 6. (2) A presbyter of Alexandria in the 4th century, said to have been personally maltreated by Basil of Ancyra. (3) A liberal friend of Chrysostom in his exile, A.D. 404. (4) A bishop of Seleucobelus, in Syria, who attended the council at Ephesus, A.D. 431. (5) A digamist bishop ordained by Alexander of Antioch. (6) A bishop of Cyzicus (A.D. 449-451), present at the councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon.

Diogenianus, third bishop of Alby, A.D. cir. 407; one of the most notable prelates of his age.

Diogenus, the name of two saints: (1) Bishop of Geneva, lived, according to some, about the end of the 3d century, while others maintain that he was present at the Council of Aquileia in 381. (2) Bishop of Grenoble, succeeded St. Dominus about the end of the 4th century.

Diomedes, a Christian physician of Tarsus, martyred at Nicæa, A.D. 288, and commemorated June 9 or Aug. 16.

Dionysia. (1) Virgin martyr at Lampsacus, A.D. 250, together with Peter, Andrew, and Paul; commemorated May 15. (2) Martyr in Africa in the 5th century, with seven others; commemorated Dec. 6.

Dionysius. (1) Martyr in Lower Armenia with Amelianus and Sebastian; commemorated Feb. 8. (2) Martyr; commemorated with Ammonius, Feb. 14. (3) Martyr at Aquileia, with Hilarius, Tatian, Felix, and Largus; commemorated March 16. (4) Saint, uncle of Paterius; commemorated May 12. (5) Bishop and confessor under Constantius; deposition at Milan, May 25. (6) Martyr at Sinnada, with Democritus and Secundus; commemorated July 31. (7) Saint, of Phry-gia; commemorated Sept. 20. (8) Bishop of Paris, martyr with Rusticus and Eleutherius, probably in A.D. 272; commemorated Oct. 9. (9) Pope, under Claudius II; deposition at Rome, Dec. 26 or 27. (10) Martyr, with Petrus and Lampsacensis; commemorated May 18. (11) One of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus; commemorated Oct. 22. (12) Sixth bishop of Vienne, in France, thought to have been martyred A.D. 193; commemorated May 9. (13) Three young men of the same name, martyred at Tripoli, March 24, A.D. 304. (14) A disciple of Quadratus, and a martyr at Corinth, probably under Diocletian. (15) Two of this name martyred together at Casarea, under Diocletian. (16) Fifteenth bishop of Mentz for twenty-six years, in the beginning of the 4th century. (17) Saint, bishop of Milan after Protasius, A.D. 346. (18) Bishop of Lydda, present at the Council of Constantinople, A.D. 381. (19) Eleventh bishop of Tours, a native of Burgundy, seems to have died about A.D. 518. (20) Bishop of Ascalon, who attended the third synod of Jerusalem, A.D. 536. (21) Bishop of Seleucia Pieria in the middle of the 6th century.

Diopetus, first bishop of Orleans, about the middle of the 4th century.

Diōra (Diera, or Deora), thirteenth bishop of Rochester, cir. A.D. 775-781.

Dios, a hermit under Theodosius the Great; commemorated July 19.

Dioscorides, one of the three boy-martyrs of Rome. See CRESCENS.

Dioscōrus. (1) Martyr under Numerian; commemorated Feb. 25. (2) The Reader, martyr in Egypt; commemorated May 18. (3) Martyr under Decius at Alexandria, with Heron, Arsenius, and Isidorus, commemorated Dec. 14.

Diotallei, FRANCESCO, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Rimini in 1579. He studied at Rome, was appointed bishop of San Angelo di Lombardi at Naples, and then sent to Poland as nuncio, where he remained seven years. He died on his journey home to Rome in 1620, leaving De Concensu Dei ad Actus Liberos Voluntatis (Lyons, 1611), and a treatise De Usuria, which is in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dipavali, a Hindû festival in honor of Vishnu (q. v.). It was instituted to commemorate an exploit of the god when in the form of Krishna (q. v.). A certain Ratjanja had taken captive sixteen thousand virgins, but Krishna slew him and set them at liberty. In this celebration the Hindû holds a festival during the day, and the houses are illuminated at night.

Dippers, a name sometimes given to the Dunkers (q. v.), or German Baptists, on account of their mode of baptism.

Diptych (τὰ δίπτυχα) contained especially the names of bishops, whether living or dead. The primary custom would seem to be, that they were read after the oblation of the bread and wine, and before the consecration. (1) Sometimes they were read by the deacon. (2) In some churches it would appear that the subdeacon recited the names on the diptychs behind the altar. (3) Frequently the priest himself repeated the names. (4) A curious plan is that mentioned by Fulcuin, where the subdeacon whispered the names to the priest. (5) We find even that in some cases the tablets were merely laid upon the altar, with the names of the offerers and benefactors, of whom the priest made general mention.

In the church of Ravenna, a chasuble was made to serve the purpose of a diptych.

The name of diptych was also given to registers in which were entered, as occasion required, the names of newly baptized persons, as then first becoming members of the Christian family.

Of all extant specimens, the one which is usually called the "Diptych of Rambona, in Picenum," is the most ancient and extraordinary. It contains a medallion of the First Person of the Trinity above, with the sun and moon below on the right and left of the cross, personified as figures bearing torches. There are two titles, EGO SUM IHS NAZARENUS, in rude Roman letters, with a smaller label, REX JUDEORUM, over the cross. The nimbus is cruciform, the waistcloth reaches almost to the knees, the navel is strangely formed into an eye. The Virgin and St. John stand under the arms of the cross. But the distinguishing detail is the addition of the Roman wolf and twins below the cross, with the words ROMULUS ET REMULUS A LUPA NUTRITI. This wonderful ivory is now in the Vatican Museum (see Murray's Hand-book), and is in the most ancient style of what may be called dark-age Byzantine art, when all instruction and perception of beauty are departed, but so vigorous a sense of the reality of the fact remains as to render the work highly impressive.

Ordinary Diptych.

Diptych of Rambona.

Díraídh (or Deoraid), two Irish saints: (1) Of Eadardruim (now Drum, in Athlone, County Roscommon), commemorated Jan. 13, seems to have lived about the close of the 5th century. (2) Bishop of Ferns, succeeded Maldogar, A.D. 677, and died in 690. He is commemorated July 27.

Dirdan, a Welsh saint of the 5th century.

Directâneus, any psalm, hymn, or canticle said in the service of the Church in monotone.

Dirnberger, FRANZ, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Bamberg in 1809. From 1834 to 1845 he was professor at Regensburg; from 1845 to 1854 director of the Georgianum and professor of pastoral theology at Munich; and thereafter at Eichstätt, until his death, Feb. 25, 1875. (B. P.)

Dirúk, an Armenian theologian, was the son of Moses Koun, of the city of Zarishat, in the province of Vanant, and was born about the end of the 4th century. He was one of the eminent writers and scholars of the school founded by Mesrob. He entered into sacred orders, and gained a great reputation by his works and his zeal for patriotic religion, having deeply studied the Syriac, Greek, and Latin languages. He died about the year 460, leaving a number of works, among which may be cited a life of the patriarch Sahak, homilies, and also his works on the Holy Scriptures. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dírying, a Welsh saint of the 6th century.

Disciplina Arcani, a term of post-Reformation controversy, is applied to designate a number of modes of procedure in teaching the Christian faith, akin to one another in kind, although differing considerably in character; which prevailed from about the middle of the 2d century until the natural course of circumstances rendered any system which involved secrecy or reserve impossible. So far as these were defensible, they arose out of the principles (1) of imparting knowledge of the truth by degrees, and in methods adapted to the capacity of the recipients; and (2) of cutting off occasion of profaneness or of more hardened unbelief by not proclaiming the truths and mysteries of the faith indiscriminately, or in plain words, or at once, to unbelievers. The deeper Christian doctrines were withheld from those out of the Church, and the mass of those within. The secrets of the initiations into the churchly orders were likewise diligently kept from the laity. This was the foundation of that to which the word was afterwards applied. See ARCANI.

Discoferræ, a name for the sisters who bring the dishes to the table at the convents of the nuns.

Discommunicants, those who neglect to partake of the holy communion, a habit early and constantly condemned by the Christian Church.

Disibode. See DYSIBOD.

Disk, WINGED, with pendant crowned uræi, carrying the cross of life, was an emblem placed over the doorways to the Egyptian temples, and is supposed to represent the progress of the sun in the heavens from east to west. As a form of the solar deity it was a symbol of the god Horus likewise, and was regarded by the Egyptians as the protecting or benevolent spirit, the Agathodæmon of the Greeks. Its analogue was in some respects the Ferohir of the Assyrians, and perhaps the Spirit of the Sun of the Cabalists.

Dis Manibus (to the gods the Manes). The letters D. M. are sometimes found inscribed in the catacombs. Boldetti, together with others of the earlier school of antiquaries, claimed that they stood for "Deo Maximo;" but De Rossi has doubtless advanced the more correct theory, i. e. that they stand for "Dis Manibus" (dedicated to the deified shades of the departed), which was a heathen motto, but was inscribed upon the Christian tombstones, and shows how slowly people relax the customs of their ancestors.

Disney, John (1), a learned English divine, was born at Lincoln in 1677, and was educated at a grammar-school and at Middle Temple. After acting as a magistrate for twenty years, he was ordained a minister of the Established Church in 1719, and the same year was presented with the vicarage of Croft and the rectory of Kirby-super-Baine, both in his native county. In 1722 he was instituted to the vicarage of St. Mary, in Nottingham, where he remained until his death, Feb. 3, 1729-30. His principles of religion were orthodox in regard to points of doctrine and articles of faith; in respect to the principles of others, they were truly catholic. The following are a few of his numerous publications: Primitia Sacrae (Lond. 1701, 1703):—A Sermon Preached in the Parish Church of St. Botolph's, Aldgate, London, Nov. 22, 1719:—and six other occasional Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Disney, John (2), D.D., an English Unitarian minister, was born in 1746, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge. After taking orders he was presented to the vicarage of Swinderby, Lincolnshire, and appointed chaplain to bishop Law. In 1782 he resigned his preferments in the Episcopal Church, and, removing to London, became first assistant and afterwards sole minister of the Unitarian chapel in Essex Street. He resigned in 1804, and died Dec. 26, 1816. Dr. Disney published, Memoirs of Dr. Sykes (1785, 8vo):—of Dr. Jartin (1792, 8vo):—of T. H. Hollis (1780, 2 vols. 4to; new ed. 1808, 4to):—Sermons (1793-1816, 4 vols. 8vo). See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1816, p. 225; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 488.

Disputatio, a discussion on Scripture, enjoined by some monastic rules.

Disputations, a name sometimes given to sermons, in the ancient Church, from the controversial character which they often necessarily assumed.

Dissen, HEINRICH VOX, an ascetic writer, was born Oct. 18, 1413. He studied at Cologne, and received holy orders at Osnabrück. He soon joined the Carthusians of Cologne, and died there, Nov. 26, 1484, leaving, Sermones Dominicales (4 vols.):—Postilla in Evangelia (2 vols.):—Expositiones in Evangelia Dominicalia:—Psalterium de S. Trinitate, etc.:—De Praesentatione B. Mariae Virg.:—De Laude Ordinis Carthusianorum:—Expositio Super Librum Apocalypsis S. Joannis:—Expositio in Symbolum S. Athanasii et Orationem Dominicam. Ditrich, JOHANN SAMUEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 15, 1721, at Berlin; studied at Frankfurt and Halle, and was in 1748 appointed third preacher at St. Mary's. In 1751 he became second preacher, and on the death of his father succeeded him as primarius. In 1770 he was appointed member of the superior consistory, and died Jan. 14, 1797, leaving, Cogitationes Philosophicae de Precibus Continuis (Frankfort, 1742):—Kurzer Entwurf der christl. Lehre (Berlin, 1754), besides a number of sermons and ascetical discourses. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 334 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Li. ii, 96, 226, 289, 295, 339. (B. P.)

Dittenberger, THEOPHOR WILHELM, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born April 30, 1807, at Theningen, in the Breisgau; studied at Heidelberg and Halle, and was in 1831 pastor at Baden. In 1832 he was privat-docent at Heidelberg, and in 1836 professor and university-preacher there. In 1852 he was called to Weimar, where he died, May 1, 1871. He published, Ueber Predigerseminarien (Heidelberg, 1835), which effected the establishment of a theological seminary at

Heidelberg:—Conspectus Introductionis in Theologiam Homileticam (ibid. 1836). Besides a great many sermons, which he published from time to time, he edited the Zeitschrift für deutsch-protestantische Kirchen-Versammlung. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 284 sq. (B. P.)

Dittrich, JOSEPH, bishop of Corycus and apostolical vicar of Saxony, was born at Marschen, in Bohemia, April 25, 1794. He received holy orders at Leiternitz in 1818; in 1824 went to Leipzig as director of the Catholic schools there; three years later took charge of the schools at Dresden; in 1831 was appointed court-preacher; in 1845 was made cathedral dean of Budissin or Bautzen, and in 1846 apostolical vicar of Saxony. The same year he was raised to the episcopal see, and died Oct. 5, 1858. See Forwerk, Geschichte der Katholischen Hofkirche zu Dresden (Dresden, 1851); Hefele, in Wetzter u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Diucholl (Dicholl, Duchoil, etc.), the name of several Irish saints: (1) Son of Neman, commemorated Dec. 25. (2) Of Cluain-bræin (near Louth), commemorated May 1. (3) Derg, son of Nessian, of Inisfaithlennu (now Ireland's Eye, off Howth, County Dublin), in the 6th or 7th century; commemorated March 15.

Diuma (or Dwina), first bishop of the Mercians, was a Scot (or Irishman), consecrated A.D. 655, and died shortly afterwards.

Dius. (1) The thirty-first bishop of Jerusalem, A.D. 190, succeeding Narcissus, and followed by Germanus. (2) A monk of Antioch, cir. A.D. 413; commemorated July 19. (3) Saint, of Caesarea, commemorated July 12. (4) Martyr under Maximianus at Alexandria, with Peter, bishop of Alexandria, Faustus the Presbyter, and Ammonius; commemorated Nov. 26.

Dius Fidius (Medi-fidi), a god of the Sabines, adopted by the Romans, and regarded as the god of integrity or good faith; hence he was frequently sworn by. He was said to be the son of Jupiter, and was often confounded with Hercules.

Divitiānus, bishop of Soissons about the beginning of the 4th century, is said to have been the grandson of St. Sinicius, and is commemorated as a saint on Oct. 5.

Divolé (or Divoley), PIERRE, a French theologian, was born at Auxerre at the beginning of the 16th century; became doctor in theology at Paris; entered the order of the preaching brothers, among whom he achieved great distinction; and died in 1568, leaving, for posthumous publication, Instructions et Sermons pour tous les Jours de Carême, etc. (Paris, 1576):—Deux Sermons de la Sainte Messe et Cérémonies d'Iceile (ibid. 1581). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dixon, James, D.D., an eminent minister of the British Wesleyan Connection, was born at Donington Castle, Leicestershire, Oct. 28, 1788. He became an earnest Methodist at the age of twenty; studied theology four years; was received into the ministry in 1812; served as a missionary at Gibraltar, in 1829; and discharged with unvarying vigor a ministry of over half a century in England. He was elected president of the Conference in 1841, and representative to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1848. Being smitten with incurable blindness in 1856, he became a supernumerary in 1863, and died at Bradford, Yorkshire, Eng. (where he took up his residence), Dec. 28, 1871. Dr. Dixon had one of the most powerful and accomplished minds that ever graced the British Conference. In the meridian of his life his preaching was a fine example of the philosophical style; his sermons elaborated with care, dealing with great principles and logical sequences, expatiating upon the harmonies of the Gospel economy, and invested with an air of grandeur and an imposing mental attitude, and full of thought. Later in life there was a rich and sweet simplicity in his ministrations. With Watson and other lights of the Conference, he advocated the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, and some of his speeches on this subject were high examples of a burning logic and eloquence. He was a most bitter opponent of Romanism, and used the influence of his powerful voice and pen in opposing its advances as well as the granting of constitutional privileges to its adherents. He took deep interest in public affairs, and had strong political views (he was a Tory). He was one of the defenders of Dr. Bunting during the "Warren" discussions. His powerful and sanctified mind, noble character, frank, genial, sincere, and serene piety, shining from out of the darkness of his deep affliction, made him to be venerated and loved throughout the whole Connection. Dr. Dixon published Methodism in its Origin, Economy, and Present Position (Lond. 1843; N. Y. 1853), besides a large number of sermons, lectures, and biographical sketches, for which see Osborn, Wesleyan Bibliography, s. v. His own life has been written by his son, Rev. R. W. Dixon (Lond. 1874).

Dixon, Joseph, D.D., Roman Catholic primate of Ireland, was for some years a professor in Maynooth College, and in 1852 was appointed to the see of Armagh, where he died, April 29, 1866. He was greatly beloved by his people, and highly respected by Protestants of all denominations. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1866, p. 592.

Długosz (Lat. Longinus), JOHN, the historian of Poland, was born at Brzezica in 1415, studied at Noy-Korczyn and the University of Cracow, and was designated for the archbishopric of Lemberg, but died May 29, 1840, before consecration to the high office. He wrote, Historia Poloniæ Libri XIII ab Antiquissimis Temporibus Usque ad Annum 1480:—Episcopatus Smogorziensis et Piziniensis, quæ Ruri Wratislaviensis, Ecclesiæ Historiæ et Acto (ed. Lipf, Breslau, 1847):—Vita Episcoporum Posnaniensium (Brunsborg, 1604). A new edition of Długosz's works was published by Przedziecki (Cracow, 1863). See Stemmer, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Doak, Archibald Alexander, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington County, Tenn., July 13, 1815. He graduated from Washington College, Tenn., in 1833, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835; was ordained by the Holston Presbytery in 1839; in 1841 became professor in Washington College; and in 1856 professor of ancient languages in East Tennessee University. His health declined in 1861, and he retired to private life in Clarksville, where he died, May 26, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 429.

Doak, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in August, 1749, of Irish extraction. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1775; was licensed to preach by the Hanover Presbytery, Oct. 31, 1777; in 1785 established Martin Academy (which in 1795 became Washington College), and continued to act as its president until 1818. He died Dec. 12, 1830. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 394.

Doban, a Scottish saint, commemorated April 12, seems to have been one of St. Boniface's companions in Germany, and eventually bishop of Treves, cir. A.D. 751.

Dobbins, ROBERT, a Methodist Protestant minister, was born in Pennsylvania, April 20, 1768. He was converted in youth, and early began evangelistic labors among his neighbors, especially the poor. His early ministerial service was in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1829 he seceded and took an active part in the organization of the Methodist Protestant Church, and in 1830 entered its itinerancy. The circuits which he served were Port William, Highland, Washington, Rehoboth (now Lynchburg), Xenia, and Springfield, all in Ohio. He died Jan. 13, 1860. Mr. Dobbins was endowed with a vigorous mind and constitution. His meek, earnest spirit commanded great respect. He once represented his county (Greene) for two years in the Ohio Legislature. See Bassett, Hist. of the M. P. Church, p. 338; Caddy, Life and Times of Robert Dobbins (Cincinnati, 1868).

Dobbs, C. E. W., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Portsmouth, Va., Aug. 12, 1840. He learned the printer's trade, and became editorially connected with the press of Norfolk and Portsmouth. In 1859 he united with the church at Greensborough, N. C., and the year following entered the theological seminary at Greenville, S. C. (since removed to Louisville, Ky.). Having completed his studies, he preached for a few years in the Court Street and Fourth Street churches in Portsmouth. In 1866 he removed to Kentucky, and for several years preached for churches in Madison County; became pastor of the church in Bowling Green, remaining there six years, and then went to Dayton. His last settlement was in Madison, Ind. For a considerable time he was secretary of the Southern Baptist Convention, and of the General Association of Kentucky. He died July, 1884. Dr. Dobbs wrote much for the periodical press, and published one or two small books. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 338. (J. C. S.)

Dobda (or Dubhda), an Irish saint, commemorated April 15, seems to have been bishop of Chiem-see, in Upper Bavaria, cir. A.D. 748, and assistant of St. Virgilius as bishop of Salzburg, cir. A.D. 756.

Dobie, JAMES, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed in Northumberland; received by the Presbytery of Kelso; presented to the living at Mid-Caldar in January, and ordained July 27, 1778; transferred to Linlithgow, May 31, 1792; and died November 10, 1826, aged eighty years. He published a Sermon Preached after the Death of Lord President Blair and Viscount Melville (Edinburgh, 1811):—An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 162, 176.

Dobria, GEORG, a Greek prelate, was born April 16, 1812, at Antignano, in Istria. In 1837 he received holy orders; in 1842 was made doctor of theology at Vienna; shortly afterwards was called as chaplain and catechist to Trieste, where in 1849 he was appointed rector and professor at the Episcopal seminary. In 1854 he was made dean, in 1857 raised to the bishopric of Trieste and Capo d'Istria, and died Jan. 13, 1882. (B. P.)

Doo (Lat. Docuus), JEAN, a French prelate, was a Benedictine monk of the abbey of Saint-Denis, near Paris, also doctor of theology and canonical law, as well as an excellent preacher. He was elevated to the dignity of a grand-prior of Saint-Denis, and in 1557 was placed in the episcopal see of Laon. He died in 1560, leaving De Aeterna Filii Dei Generatione (Paris, 1554):—Homiliae per Annum (Antwerp, 1640). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Docampo, GONSALVO, a Spanish prelate and native of Madrid, lived for a long time in Italy and was the favorite of Clement VIII; became canon of Seville, archdeacon of Niebla, bishop of Cadiz, and finally archbishop of Lima, Peru, in 1628. He died in 1626, leaving Del Gobierno del Peru:—Una Carta Pastoral a Todas las Curas de Almas de su Arzobispado. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doctor audientium (teacher of the hearers), the instructor of the audientes (q. v.), or lowest order of catechumens in the early Church. They were simply catechists.

Doctors, CHRIST in Conference with. The subject is represented in a fresco of the first cubiculum of the Callistine catacomb. Our Lord is on a lofty seat in the midst, with hand upraised in the act of speaking; the doctors on his right and left, with some expression of wonder on their countenances. The only sarcophagus besides that of Junius Bassus, which indisputably contains this subject, is said by Martigny to be in San Ambrogio, at Milan. In this representation Christ is placed in a stall or edicule above the surrounding figures, which are seated, while two palms stand by him, one on either side. He holds in his hand a book or scroll, which is partly unrolled, while the doctors have closed theirs. In Allegranza, tav. i, a mosaic from San Aquilino of Milan represents the Lord's elevated seat on a rock, with the divine lamb below, referring to Rev. v, "able to open the book." On his right and left are Joseph and Mary in the attitude of adoration. Perret gives a copy of a very skilful painting from the catacombs, which places two doctors on the Lord's right hand, who are expressing attention and wonder, and Joseph and Mary on the other, with looks of patient waiting for him. The fine diptych of the 6th century at the cathedral of Milan, and that of Murano, also represent our Lord sitting, with the doctors standing before him. His appearance here is more mature than the Gospels warrant. Below his feet is a figure, supposed to represent Uranus, or the firmament of the heavens (Psa. xviii, 9).

Doctrina DUODECİM APOSTOLÖRUM. See TEACHING OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

Doctrinaires is the common name of two religious associations which originated, independently of each other, in Italy and France. In Italy the movement began under pope Pius IV, and the association was established by Marcus de Sedis-Cusani, who associated with himself some persons for the purpose of instructing the people, more especially the children, in the catechism.

Priest of the Christian Doctrine in Italy.

Pope Gregory XIII approved of this society, called Padri della Dottrina Christiana. In France the association of the Pères de la Doctrine Chrétienne was founded by Cesar de Bus, priest and canon of Cavaillon, in 1592, and was confirmed by pope Clement VIII. See Helyot, Histoire des Ordres Monastiques (Paris, 1714-19), iv, 232-252; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Docus. See CADOC.

Dod, Albert Baldwin, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Mendham, N. J., March 24, 1805. He graduated at Princeton College in 1822; spent about four years teaching near Fredericksburg, Va.; was licensed to preach in the spring of 1828 by the Presbytery of New York; and in 1830 appointed to the mathematical professorship in the college of Princeton, where he labored till his death, Nov. 20, 1845. Professor Dod published several articles in the Biblical Repertory, one of which, on "Transcendentalism," attracted great attention, and was printed in a separate pamphlet. He was a man of very great ability as a writer and debater, and was very popular as a professor among his pupils. His sermons dealt with principles and strove to convince the understanding and rule the convictions. See Index to Princeton Rev. 1825-1868.

Dod, John, an English divine, was born at Shotledge, Cheshire, in 1547; was bred in Jesus College, Cambridge; by nature a witty, by industry a learned, by grace a godly, divine; successively minister of Haulwell, in Oxford, Fenny Compton, in Warwick, Canons Ashby and Fawsley, in Northamptonshire, though for a time silenced in each of them, and died, after a holy life in troublesome times, in 1645. When his mouth was shut by the authorities he instructed as much as before by his holy demeanor and pious discourse. His chief production was an Exposition of the Ten Commandments (Lond. 1606), whence he is often styled the Decalogist. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 278; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Dod, William Armstrong, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, appears in the ministry in 1859, residing at that time in Princeton, N. J., and became rector of Trinity Church in that place. This office he held until 1866, but he continued to reside in Princeton until his death, Dec. 3, 1872, aged fifty-six years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 138.

Dodd, Charles (or Richard Tootle), a Roman Catholic clergyman, resided at Harvington, in Worcestershire, England, and died there about 1745. His most celebrated work is a Church History of England (Brussels, 1737-42, 3 vols. fol.), several editions of which have appeared. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dodge, Orrin, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., in 1803. He was baptized by Bishop Griswold, and received his early religious training in the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1815 he removed to central New York, attending school and working on a farm. From the age of seventeen to twenty-six he taught school; for three years was in a public position in West Troy, and then for several years in active mercantile business. Being converted in 1831, he was licensed in 1833, and ordained at Sand Lake, in May, 1834, remaining there three years. His other pastorates were Maysville, nine years, West Troy, two years, and Ballston, two years. In 1848 he was appointed secretary for missions for the New York Baptist Convention, and, about a year after, agent for collecting funds for the American Baptist Missionary Union, in which position, through a long term, he exhibited rare executive abilities. For five years he was laid aside from his labors by paralysis, and died at the residence of his daughter, in the city of New York, May 17, 1884. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 340. (J. C. S.)

Dodge, William Earl, an eminent philanthropic elder in the Presbyterian Church, was born at Hartford, Conn., Sept. 4, 1805. He came to New York in 1818 and entered a dry-goods store as an errand boy and clerk, and, after remaining nine years, set up business for himself in the same line; but in 1833 entered into partnership with his father-in-law, Anson G. Phelps, and continued in the same business until his death, Feb. 9, 1883. Mr. Dodge was supposed to have left a fortune of upwards of five million dollars. He was either a president or director of many companies and societies. President Lincoln appointed him on the famous Indian Commission. He was a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, of the Peace Commission of 1861, and of the Loyal League Commission, delegate to the World's Christian Alliance, and president for three terms of the Chamber of Commerce. He resigned the presidency of the Republican Union because of its deriving part of its revenue from the sale of liquor, and of a railroad company because of its violation of the Sabbath. Few have done more for the cause of temperance than Mr. Dodge. He was actively engaged in every benevolent enterprise, and gave upwards of one hundred thousand dollars a year to benevolent objects. (W. P. S.)

Dodo. (1) Abbot of St. Genulfus in Bourges, died cir. A.D. 850. (2) Called also Odo, abbot of St. Martial at Limousin, about the middle of the 9th century. (3) The twenty-first bishop of Toul, at the beginning of the 8th century.

Dodolinus (called also Dolinus, Laudolenus, and even Boholinus), a French saint, bishop of Vienne about the middle of the 7th century, is commemorated on April 1.

Dodwell, William, D.D., an English clergyman, born at Shottesbrook, in Berkshire, June 17, 1709, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1732. He was rector of Shottesbrook and vicar of Bucklebury and of White-Waltham; became a canon of the cathedral church at Salisbury, and was promoted to the archdeaconry of Berks by Bishop Thomas. He died Oct. 21, 1786. The following are some of his publications: Two Sermons on the Eternity of Future Punishment; — Visitation Sermon on the Desirableness of the Christian Faith (Oxford, 1744); — Two Sermons on Rational Faith (ibid. 1745); — Dissertation on Jephthah's Vow (London, 1745); — Sermon on St. Paul's Wish (Oxford, 1752), and many other single sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dogfan, a Welsh saint, slain in the 5th century by the pagan Saxons, is commemorated July 13.

Doggett, David Seth, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Lancaster County, Va., June 26, 1810. He was educated at the University of Virginia, and intended to follow the legal profession, but after his conversion gave it up for the ministry; on leaving college taught school a year in Orange County, Va., and in 1829 entered the Virginia Conference. That year he was sent to Roanoke Circuit, N. C.; in 1830 to Mattamuskeet Circuit, in the same state; in 1831 to Petersburg, Va.; in 1832 to Lynchburg; in 1834 to Trinity Station, Richmond; in 1835 to Petersburg; in 1836 to Norfolk; in 1838 to Lynchburg; in 1839 to Charlottesville, acting meanwhile as chaplain to the University of Virginia; and in 1840 was chaplain to Randolph-Macon College, and pastor of the town in which the college was then located. From 1841 to 1846 he was professor of mental and moral philosophy in the same institution. In 1847 he was again sent to Lynchburg; in 1849 to Washington Street Station, Petersburg; in 1851 to Richmond; in 1853 to Granby Street Station, Norfolk; in 1855 edited the Review; in 1856 went to Washington, D. C.; in 1858 was presiding elder of the Richmond District; in 1862 served Broad Street Station, and in 1864 Centenary Church. In 1865 he was associate editor with Rev. John E. Edwards, D.D., of the Episcopal Methodist, in Richmond; and in April, 1867, was elected to the Episcopacy. He continued to reside in the same city, and executed the duties of his high office with great zeal, devotedness, and success until his death, Oct. 27, 1880. It is thought he hastened his decease by overtaxing himself responding to extra calls in the summer of 1880. See The Quarterly Review of the M. E. Church South, Jan. 1881, p. 109; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Dogura (or Jumboo) Version of the Scriptures. This dialect is spoken in the mountainous or northern districts of Labore, and east of the river Chenab and of Cashmere. A version of the New Testament in Dogura was undertaken in Serampore in 1814, and left the press in 1826. (B. P.)

Dohn, JOHANN ALBERT BERNHARD, a distinguished Orientalist of Germany, was born in 1805 at Scheuerfeld, near Coburg. He studied theology at Halle and Leipzig, but afterwards turned his attention exclusively to the languages of the East. In 1826 he was appointed professor of Sanscrit in the University of Kharkov, in Russia. Six years later he was called to the chair of Asiatic history and geography in the Oriental Institute at St. Petersburg, which he resigned in 1843 to become senior librarian of the imperial public library. He died in 1881. He published in 1846 Das Asiatische Museum der Kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, and in 1852 Catalogue des Manuscrits et Xylographes Orientaux. His last undertaking was an elaborate work on the migration of the ancient Huns in Taberistan. (B. P.)

Dolben, John (1), D.D., an English clergyman and archbishop of York, born at Stanwick, in Northamptonshire, March 20, 1625, was educated at Westminster school, being admitted a king's scholar in 1636, and in 1640 elected to Christ Church, Oxford. He was ordained about 1652; in 1660 presented to the rectory of Newington-cum-Britwell, in Oxfordshire, in the gift of the archbishop of Canterbury; in 1662 appointed archdeacon of London, and presented to the vicarage of St. Giles Cripplegate, but resigned both in a short time to take the deanery of Westminster. In 1666 he was consecrated bishop of Rochester, and allowed to hold the deanery of Westminster in commendam; translated to the see of York in 1683, and became an ecclesiastical governor of that place. He died April 11, 1686. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dolben, Sir John (2), D.D., an English clergyman, was made prebendary of Durham, April 2, 1718. He published a sermon, Concio ad Clerum, on Heb. xii, 1 (1726). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dolcino, leader of the Apostolici (q. v.), was born in the diocese of Novara. He was the son of a priest, joined the Apostolici in 1291, and became their leader in 1300, after the death of Segarelle. On behalf of his sect he wrote three works, of which the third is entirely lost, but of the first two there are some extracts in the Addamentum ad Historiam Dulcini. The first was written in 1300, at Dalmatia, and is addressed to the scattered members of the sect as well as to all Christians. He distinguishes four stages, status, in the development of the divine life on earth. The first begins with the patriarchs, the second with Christ and his apostles, the third with pope Silvester and the emperor Constantine the Great, and the fourth with Segarelle and himself. Each stage was good in itself, but degeneration called forth a new one, for the better. The fourth stage was to last to the end of the world. Dolcino also made some predictions, which proved a failure, yet in spite of this the people did not lose confidence in him. There are, indeed, in his works both true religious enthusiasm and a sharp sense of the corruption of the Church; but both are blurred by the whims of a sensuous and ill-regulated imagination. Dante (Inferno, xxviii, 55 sq.) puts him on the same level with Mohammed. See Historia Dulcini and Addamentum, in Muratori, Script. Rerum Ital. ix, 425 sq.; Mosheim, Geschichte des Apostelordens, in his Ketzergeschichte (Helmstädt, 1748), p. 193 sq.; Schlosser, Abälard und Dulcin (Gotha, 1807); Baggolini, Dolcino e i Pataveri (Novara, 1838); Krone, Fra Dolcino und die Pataveri (Leipzig, 1844); Döllinger, Der Weissagungsglaube und das Prophetenthum in der christlichen Zeit, in Riehl's Histor. Taschenbuch, 1871; Schmidt, in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Dolera, CLEMENTE, a Genoese prelate and theologian, was born at Moneglia in 1501. He was a Franciscan, and became general of his order. In 1557 Paul IV made him cardinal, with the title of Sainte-Marie de Ara Celi, and bishop of Foligno. He died at Rome, Jan. 6, 1568, leaving, Compendium Catholicarum Institutionum (Rome, 1562);—De Symboli Apostolorum;—De Sacramentis;—De Præceptis Divinis;—De Peccatis et Eorum Differentiis;—De Consiliis Evangelicis;—De Calibatu Sacerdotum;—De Ecumenico Concilio, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dolichianus (or Dulichianus), twenty-ninth bishop of Jerusalem, about the last quarter of the 2d century.

Dolium, a convenient generic term for the various representations of casks and large vessels which occur frequently in early Christian art, and have symbolic meaning very generally attributed to them. As they are usually found on tombs, they are taken as empty, representing the body when the soul has fled from it. The close juncture of the staves in some of the casks has been thought to indicate Christian unity.

Casks. (From the Catacombs.)

Dollendorp, JOHANN (or HEINRICH VON), a German theologian, was a professed monk of the convent of the Carmelites of Cologne and doctor of the University of Paris. He taught in that capital in 1339, became provincial of his order for Germany in 1351, and gained great reputation both as a theologian and as a preacher. He died at Cologne in 1375, leaving, Super Sententias;—Sermones de Tempore;—Sermones de Sanctis, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doller, JOHANN LORENZ, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 3, 1750, at Bretten. In 1768 he joined the order of Jesuits at Mayence, and in 1772 was appointed professor at Heidelberg. In 1779

he resigned on account of feeble health, and died Jan. 30, 1820. He published, Zeugnisse aller Jahrhunderte (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1816):—Luther's Katholisches Monument (ibid. 1817). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 339 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Lit. i, 405, 465. (B. P.)

Dolphin, in Christian Art. The dolphin has been used from an early date in several senses, representing either the Lord himself, the individual Christian, or abstract qualities, such as those of swiftness, brilliancy, conjugal affection, etc.

The Dolphin as an Emblem.

Dolz (Lat. Dolscius), PAUL, a German theologian and Græcist, was born at Plauen, in 1526. He studied at the University of Wittenberg. Melancthon, who was his instructor, took him into his friendship, and helped him to obtain a place at the gymnasium of Halle. Dolscius attached himself closely to the cause and the doctrines of the famous reformer. He also studied medicine, and wrote Greek with facility. The city of Halle appointed him burgomaster, and later inspector of the churches, schools, and salt-works. He died there, March 9, 1589. His principal works are, Confessio Fidei Exhibita Augusta Græce Reddita (Basle, 1559):—Psalmi Davidici Græcis Versibus Elegiacis Redditi (ibid. 1555). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dom, a title of respect given to the Benedictines and canons, being the abbreviation of dominus, which was the Latin for the mediæval seur (sieur), and sir of the Reformation, and was applied to non-graduate priests. The A.B. of Cambridge is now designated "dominus," but the A.M., as at Oxford, is "dominus magister," and the D.D. "dominus doctor."

Domenec, MICHAEL, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was a native of Spain. He joined the American mission of Lazarists while studying for the priesthood, was ordained at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for many years served as pastor at Germantown, Pa. On Dec. 6, 1860, he was consecrated bishop of Pittsburgh, as successor to Dr. O'Connor, resigned. On Jan. 11, 1876, his diocese being divided, the new see of Allegheny was created, to which Domenec was translated. His health soon after failing, he went to Europe, and after visiting Rome, resigned his see, and died at Tarragona, Spain, Feb. 5, 1878, aged sixty-five years. As a bishop Domenec was esteemed for his energy, charity, self-devotion, and zeal. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 302.

Domenichi (or de Domenico), an Italian prelate and theologian, was born in Venice in 1416. He taught logic at Padua, theology at Bologna and Rome, and was appointed bishop of Torcello in 1448. Paul II transferred him to the see of Brescia, and Sixtus IV appointed him governor of Rome. Domenichi died at Brescia in 1478, leaving, De Reformationibus Romanæ Curie (Brescia, 1495):—De Sanguine Christi (Venice, 1557):—De Dignitate Episcopali (Rome, 1757). He also published an edition of the Moralia of Gregory the Great (ibid. 1475). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Domenichino. See ZAMPIERI, DOMENICO.

Domestic ("belonging to the house or household") has several ecclesiastical senses: (1) Domestici are all who belong to the "household of faith." (2) In the East, the principal dignity in a church choir after the "chief singer." There was one on each side of the choir, to lead the singers in antiphonal chanting. (3) Domesticius Ostiorum ("of the doors"), the chief doorkeeper at Constantinople. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Domingo DE JESUS MARIA, a Spanish theologian, was born at Calatayud (Old Castile), May 16, 1559. He taught first among the Carmelites of the ancient observance, and afterwards took the habit of the barefooted Carmelites. Being called to Rome about 1590, he was raised to the highest offices of his order, and was engaged by the pope in various important embassies. Besides Greek and Latin, Domingo knew nearly all living languages. He died at Vienna, Feb. 16, 1630, leaving, Sententia Spiritualis (Paris, 1628):—Argumenta Psalmorum Divini (Rome, eod.):—Alia Argumenta Psalmorum (ibid.):—La Concordia Espiritual (Bruxelles, 1626; translated into French under the title, De la Théologie Mystique):—De la Protection de la Vierge (Paris, 1645):—Directoire pour Bien Mourir:—Vie du Frère Alexis de Saint-Bernard, Polonois, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Bonif. Müller, Leben und Werke d. Dominicus a Jesu Maria (Vienna, 1878).

Dominic, Saint (surnamed Loricatus, from the iron coat of mail which he constantly wore next to his skin), a famous Italian hermit, who died at Fonte Vellano (Umbria), Oct. 14, 1660, had passed through all the clerical degrees and then devoted himself to a life of solitary penance and extreme austerity, inflicting lashes upon himself daily, and hourly reciting certain Psalms.

Dominio OF FLANDERS, a theologian, went to Italy when very young; entered the order of the Dominicans, and taught theology at Bologna, where he died in 1500. He wrote several books on scholastic philosophy, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic OF THE HOLY TRINITY, a French theologian, was born at Nevers, Aug. 4, 1616. He belonged to a nobleman's family, and in 1634 joined the Carmelites in Paris. He was sent to Rome to teach; then went to Malta as inquisitor, but came back to Rome again. In 1656 he was made general of his order, and pope Clement X appointed him qualifier of the holy office. He died at Rome, April 7, 1687, leaving, De Anno Jubilæi (Rome, 1650):—Bibliotheca Theologica, etc. (ibid. 1665-76, 7 vols.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic OF JERUSALEM, a converted rabbi, was born in 1550. He was made doctor at Safet, in Galilee, where he lectured on the Talmud, and became physician to the sultan. In 1600 he was converted to Christianity at Rome, where he taught Hebrew. He translated the New Test. into Hebrew. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominic OF ST. GEMINIAN, a famous canonist of the 15th century, was a native of San Geminiano, in Florence. After completing his studies, he became in 1407 vicar-general to the bishop of Modena, took part in 1409 in the synod of Pisa, and was for many years professor at Bologna, where he died. He wrote, Commentarius Proprius Diligentissime Catigatus in Decretum (edited by P. Albignac, Venice, 1504):—Commentarius in Sextum (Venice, 1558, 1579):—Consilii et Responsa (Leyden, 1533; Venice, 1550). Comp. Schulte, Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des canonischen Rechts, ii, 295 (Stuttgart, 1877); Streber, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dominic OF ST. THOMAS, a Portuguese theologian, was born at Lisbon, and lived about the year 1674. He belonged to the Dominican order, and became successively prior, royal preacher, doctor, and professor of theology. He wrote Summa Theologiae (Lisbon, 1690), containing a long statement of the nature and origin of the inquisition. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominica, the Lord's day, not the Sabbath. See SUNDAY.

Dominica, a matron saint, commemorated Jan. 8.

Dominica GAUDII (the Lord's day of joy), a name given by some of the ancient Christian writers to Easter Sunday. The Roman emperors were accustomed on that day, as a token of joy, to grant a release to all prisoners except those guilty of great crimes.

Dominican. We add the following particulars from Walcott, Sac. Archæol. s. v.:

"The rule, a modification of that of St. Austin, was strict abstinence from flesh; fasts of seven months' duration, from Holy Cross Day to Easter, and on all Fridays; maintenance wholly by the alms of the faithful; the use of woollen clothes only; and at first a mere white tunic and capar, without a cowl. In time this rigor was abated, and they wore a white serge tunic, a black cappa or cloak, and a hood for the head; and their simple, undecorated chapels became magnificent churches, rich in every ornament of architecture, color, and carving. From their devotion to the Blessed Virgin, they called themselves at first, until the pope forbade it, Brothers of the Virgin Mary; and they always had a Madonna and crucifix in their cells. There was a general chapter held annually. The superior was called master of the order, and the greater officers, priors and superiors. The order was instituted for preaching at home and for missions to the heathen; it has produced one thousand four hundred and fifty-eight cardinals. It used to take mere children and enroll them before the conventional age of probation. They held that the Virgin was conceived in original sin, consecrated Saturdays to her honor, and were, in scholastic theology, stout Thomists. Their preaching-cross remains at Hereford, their refectory at Canterbury, the nave of the church and other buildings may be seen at Norwich, and part of their convent at Lynn, Beverley, and Gloucester. There were three divisions of the order—the preaching friars, who occupied a convent; cloistered nuns; and the militia of Jesus Christ, who engaged in actual war on heretics; they afterwards admitted brethren and sisters of the Penitence of St. Dominic, who were approved in 1860 by Innocent VI. Bishop Pecock says they evaded their rule, which forbade them to touch money, by counting with a stick. The early Dominican churches were plain, without images, carvings, or pictures, and provided with only one bell. The use of the organ was not common.

Dominican Monk of Convers.

Dominican Nun, with Cape.

Women were not allowed to sit in the choir-aisles, and large high screens parted off the friars from the congregation, for whose use, at the elevation of the host, windows were opened in these partitions. The lay brothers sat apart. Occasionally their churches, as at Venice and Pistoia, were cruciform, but usually terminated in a square end; the naves of Perugia and Spoleto are aisled, but sometimes they had narrow recesses, as at Ghent, or lateral chantries for altars; or, as at Pisa, Silgo, Brecon, Kilmallock, Gloucester, and Roocommon, a single aisle for the accommodation of the congregation at sermons; lateral chapels were added at a later date. Apical choirs occur at Monza, Milan, Toulouse, Antwerp, Oberweel; and at Paris, Agen, and Toulouse the church was double, consisting simply of two aisles of equal length. At Louvain and Norwich the nave has aisles of the usual size. The choirs had no aisles. The chapter-houses at Toulouse was apsidal, and had three aisles. This order prays more than any other for the dead, the friars chanting the 'De Profundis' every time they pass through the cloister."

Dominici, GIOVANNI, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Florence about 1356, entered the Dominican order, and became a famous teacher of theology and canon law; also distinguished himself as a preacher; went on an embassy to Rome in 1406; was made bishop of Ragusa in 1407, and cardinal in 1408 (which preferments led to a violent controversy), and died at Buda in 1419, leaving several minor productions, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dominicus (1), Saint, bishop of Cambrai, cir. A.D. 540; (2) bishop of Carthage in the time of Gregory the Great; (3) bishop of Civita Vecchia, A.D. 601; (4) the eleventh bishop of Carpentras, A.D. 640-645; (5) the fifth bishop of Amiens, A.D. 721; (6) seventh bishop of Sion (Sedunum), A.D. 516.

Dominus, third bishop of Geneva in the first half of the 5th century.

Domnus (or Domnus, in later Gallican documents), equivalent to "saint," the same as the mar of the Chalcæan Christians, was at first a title of the abbot, afterwards of his sub-officials, and in the Middle Ages of monks generally. It has been applied to saints, bishops, and to the pope.

Domio, a martyr, was bishop of Salona, in Dalmatia, and is commemorated April 11.

Domitianus, (1) abbot of Lyons; deposition July 1; (2) martyr at Philadelphia, in Arabia; commemorated Aug. 1; (3) deacon and martyr at Ancyra, in Galatia, with Eutyches; commemorated Dec. 28; (4) saint, abbot of Rambach-de-Joux, in the diocese of Lyons, in the 4th or 5th century; commemorated July 1; (5) seventh bishop of Geneva, about A.D. 470; (6) seventh bishop of Cologne, A.D. 535; (7) twelfth bishop of Angers, cir. A.D. 557-568; (8) saint, bishop of Maestricht in the middle of the 6th century, of whom some legendary miracles are told, is commemorated May 7; (9) metropolitan bishop of Ancyra, one of the Accephali, wrote to pope Vigilius On the Origenian Controversy, A.D. 554 (see Migne, lxxvii, 532, 627); (10) bishop of Melitene and metropolitan of Armenia, cir. A.D. 564, was a well-read scholar, and an eminent saint. He was a relative of the emperor (Maurice), and one of his principal officers. After he had become a widower he consecrated himself to the service of God, and was raised to the see of Melitene, a city of Armenia. In 589 Maurice sent him to Chosroes II, king of Persia, who was dethroned by his subjects. Domitianus assisted the defeated monarch with his counsels, and did not neglect anything to convert him, but without success, so that finally he wrote about him to pope Gregory. Domitianus came back to Constantinople, where Maurice kept him near, as his adviser and minister, assigning him even the guardianship of his children, but the prelate died before the emperor, in 602. The body of Domitianus was transferred to Melitene, and as Theophylact says, "God attested his holiness by various miracles." He is commemorated Jan. 10.

Domitilla, a virgin martyr at Terracina, in Campania, under Domitian and Trajan; commemorated May 7 (or 12).

Domitius, (1) martyr in Syria, commemorated July 5; (2) martyr in Phrygia, under Julian, commemorated Aug. 7; (3) saint, a confessor and ecclesiastic near Amiens, before the middle of the 8th century; he resigned his office, and lived the rest of his days as a hermit. His relics were transferred in 1279 to the Cathedral of Amiens. He is commemorated Oct. 23.

Dommerich, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 25, 1728, at Bluckeburg. He studied at Halle; for some time acted as tutor in the orphanage there; in 1747 was appointed morning preacher at his native place, but in the following year accepted a call to Helmstädt; in 1749 became rector at Wolfenbüttel, and in 1759 professor of metaphysics at Helmstädt, where he died, May 28, 1767. He wrote, Méditationes Philosophicæ et Theologicæ (Lemgo, 1744):—Commentatio Theologica (Helmstädt, 1748):—De Fædere Baptismali (ibid. 1749):—Theologisches Compendium (Halle, 1759):—Gedanken über den Skepticismus (Braunschweig, 1767). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 841 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Domnina (or Domnia), Saint, was of a noble family of Antioch. Having become a widow, she professed Christianity with her two daughters, Bernice and Prosdoce, and on the outbreak of the persecution by Diocletian, the three retired to Edessa. They were seized and ordered to Antioch; but on reaching a river near Hierapolis, they took each other by the hand, precipitated themselves into the water, and were drowned. Their bodies were taken from the river and brought to Antioch, where Chrysostom testifies that they were in his time. They are commemorated April 14.

Domninus, (1) martyr at Thessalonica, under Galerius, commemorated March 30; (2) martyr at Caesarea, with several others, under Maximin, Nov. 5, 307; commemorated Oct. 9; (3) saint, bishop of Digne, in Gaul, in the beginning of the 8d century; commemorated Feb. 18; (4) bishop of Marcionopolis, in Moesia Inferior, cir. A.D. 360; (5) sometimes called saint, bishop of Grenoble at the Council of Aquileia; (6) saint, twenty-second bishop of Vienne, in France, about the middle of the 6th century.

Domnölus (or Domus), (1) Saint (otherwise called Andelain), a confessor of Auxerre, is commemorated Oct. 21; (2) saint (otherwise called Anolet, Dumpeolet, Tomnolein, etc.), is said to have been a prince of Limosin, where his body was originally buried in the Church of St. Gregory, near the monastery of St. Andrew, but was taken outside the city in 1534; commemorated July 1; (3) saint, tenth bishop of Le Mans, appointed by Clothaire, A.D. 559, and died Dec. 1, 581, after a life of great virtue; (4) saint, twenty-ninth archbishop of Vienne, France, in the beginning of the 7th century; noted for redeeming Christian captives; commemorated June 16; (5) twelfth bishop of Macon, France, cir. A.D. 732-743.

Domnölus, bishop of Marseilles in the 7th century

Domnus is the name of three ancient bishops of Antioch: (1) son of Demetrianus, appointed by the Council of Antioch, A.D. 269, without the voice of the clergy or people, and was installed in office three years later by a decree of the emperor. He held the see only a few years; (2) nephew of John of Antioch, on whose death in 441 he was elected bishop, and attained great popularity. He was afterwards involved in the Athanasian controversy, and after many vicissitudes was finally expelled from the see, and retired to the laura of St. Euthymius of Palestine, A.D. 452; (3) a Thracian, appointed by Justinian in 546, and occupied the see fourteen years.

Domnus is also the name of (1) one of the forty-three solitaries who lived in the 4th century, at Raithu, in the caverns of Sinai, and were attacked about A.D. 373, by the Blemmyes; Domnus died of his wounds, and is commemorated Jan. 14; (2) bishop of Apamea, present at the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451; (3) bishop of Elne (Helena) before A.D. 568; a man of great sanctity; (4) bishop of Messana (also called Donus) in the 7th century; (5) pope. See DOXUS; (6) forty-first bishop of Avignon, died about A.D. 743.

Domo (or Dromo), twenty-ninth abbot of Chartres, in the 7th century.

Donadeus, twelfth bishop of Gap, present at the synod of Narbonne in A.D. 788.

Donald (Lat. Donerwaldus), a Scotch saint, commemorated with his nine daughters, July 15.

Donatâ, of Scillita, a martyr at Carthage, with eleven others, commemorated July 17.

Donatianus, (1) Saint, a martyr at Nantes, with his brother Rogantius, cir. A.D. 299; commemorated May 24; (2) bishop and confessor in Africa, under Hunnericus, commemorated Sept. 6; (3) bishop of Claudii Forum at the Council of Rome, A.D. 313; (4) saint, a bishop and confessor of Châlons-sur-Saône, cir. A.D. 246, commemorated Aug. 7; (5) saint, a bishop of Rheims (commonly called St. Donas), A.D. 360-390, a Roman by birth, commemorated Oct. 14; (6) bishop of Telepte, in Africa, presided at the council there, A.D. 418.

Donatilla, a virgin martyr, in Africa, with Maxima and Secunda, under Gallienus, commemorated July 30.

Donato, LUIGI, an Italian theologian, was born in Venice, became bishop of Bergamo, and died in 1484, leaving, among other works, Commentaries on the Master of Sentences; also Sermons, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Donatus. (1) Martyr at Rome with Aquilinus and three others; commemorated Feb. 4. (2) Martyr at Concordia with Secundianus, Romulus, and eighty-six others; commemorated Feb. 17. (3) Martyr at Carthage; commemorated March 1. (4) Martyr in Africa, with Epiphanius the bishop, and others; commemorated April 7 (or 6). (5) Martyr at Caesarea, in Cappadocia, with Polyeuctus and Victorius; commemorated May 21. (6) Bishop and martyr at Areium, in Tuscany, under Julian; commemorated Aug. 7. (7) The presbyter and anchorite in a district on Mount Jura, in Belgic Gaul; commemorated Aug. 19. (8) Martyr at Antioch, with Restitutus, Valerianus, Fructuosa, and twelve others; commemorated Aug. 23. (9) Martyr at Capua, with Quintus and Arcontius; commemorated Sept. 5. (10) Martyr with Hermogenes and twenty-two others; commemorated Dec. 12. (11) Bishop of Euxæa, in Vetus Epirus, cir. A.D. 387. (12) Bishop of Tysedlis, in Numidia, in the 4th century. (13) Donatist bishop of Bagaia, in the 4th century. (14) Bishop of Nicopolis, in Vetus Epirus, cir. A.D. 425-433. (15) Twenty-fifth bishop of Avignon, in the middle of the 5th century. (16) One of the four bishops from Africa at the Council of Rome, A.D. 487. (17) Bishop of Besançon, born in 592 or 594, and died in 651; commemorated Aug. 7. (18) The name of two Irish saints (probably Lat. for Donagh); one, bishop of Lupia (now Leece, near Naples), in the 7th century; the other, bishop of Fiesole, in Tuscany; both commemorated Oct. 22. (19) Patriarch of Grado, A.D. 717-730. See also DUNAN; DUNCHAIDH.

Dondi (Dall' Orologio), FRANCESCO SCIPIONE, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born in January, 1756. He studied at the college of Modena; in 1807 was called to the bishopric of Padua; and died Oct. 6, 1829, leaving many archaeological works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Donelson, PARK SHATTUCK, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Colerain, Mass., April 17, 1825. He was converted in 1835; accepted the call to the ministry in 1842; graduated from the Michigan University in 1849, and spent the next two years in the theological school at Auburn, N. Y. He joined the Michigan Conference in 1851, and served two years as professor of ancient languages in Albion College. The next two years he was pastor at Lansing, when he was elected president of the Ohio Wesleyan Female College, at Delaware, O., and in that capacity served seventeen years. The last ten years of his life were spent in the pastorate, in the Central Ohio Conference. He was twice a delegate to the General Conference, and a delegate to the First Ecumenical Conference (London, 1881). He died in Dexter, Mich., May 6, 1882. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 327; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 287.

Doni (d'Attichi), LOUIS, a French prelate and writer, of Italian extraction, was born in 1596; entered the order of the Minorites in 1616, was made co-rector of their house in Paris, later provincial of Burgundy, bishop of Riez in 1628, and died at Autun, July 2, 1664, leaving a number of works, chiefly historical and biographical, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Donin, Ludwig, an ascetic writer, was born in 1810 at Tiefenbach, in Lower Austria. In 1838 he was made priest; and from 1835 to his death, Aug. 20, 1876, he discharged his pastoral duties at St. Stephen's, in Vienna. See Kaulen, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Donjon (Donjum, or Duissan), GÉOFFROI DE, a noted French crusader, was elected tenth grand-master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1191, and the same year distinguished himself in the battles at Arsuf and Ramleh. See TEMPLARS.

Donnan, the name of several Scotch saints: (1) Abbot of Egg, massacred A.D. 627; commemorated April 17. (2) Priest of Inis-aingin, in Loch Rilh, about the middle of the 6th century; commemorated Jan. 7 (also April 29 and Aug. 10). (3) Deacon with his brother St. Ciaran, at Cluain; commemorated Aug. 11.

Donnell, Robert, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Guilford County, N. C., in April, 1784. In 1806 he was given authority to preach, and in 1809 penetrated into northern Alabama and organized several congregations in that new country. In October, 1811, he was ordained. Previous to 1817 he labored chiefly as an itinerant minister; after that date he settled first in Madison County, Ala., where he resided about two years, and then settled ten miles from Athens, Limestone Co. Although at this time engaged in agricultural pursuits, he still was laboriously employed as a minister. The General Assembly of 1831 appointed him one of five missionaries to western Pennsylvania. About 1830 he began to labor in Nashville, and, as a result, Cumberland Presbyterianism was introduced into that city. For the purpose of organizing a congregation, he went to Memphis in 1845, and labored there several months. Shortly after, he succeeded the Rev. George Donnell as pastor of the congregation at Lebanon, Tenn., and remained until February, 1849, when he removed to Athens, Ala., where he died, May 24, 1855. Mr. Donnell published, in the latter part of his life, a small volume entitled Thoughts. When the first General Assembly met, in 1829, at Princeton, Ky., he preached the opening sermon; and in 1837 he was moderator of that body. For a considerable time he was regarded as the leader of the southern portion of the Church. See Beard, Biographical Sketches (1st ser.), p. 101.

Donnolo, Sabbathai, an Italian Hebrew writer, was born at Oria, near Otranto, in 913. At the time when Oria was plundered by the Mohammedans of the Fatimite kingdom, he was taken captive with his parents. While the latter were taken to Palermo and Africa, Donnolo was redeemed at Trani. Destitute of all means for support, he paved his own way by studying medicine and astrology, in which branches he soon became famous. Though a practitioner of medicine—for he was physician to the Byzantine viceroy Eupraxios—he owes his reputation to his erudite works on astronomy. He wrote, Sefer Tachkemoni (סֵפֶר תַּחֲכֶמוֹנִי), a commentary on the Boraita of Samuel of Nehardea, in which he embodies what he had personally learned in the East about the zodiac and the constellations, and the horoscopes of astrology, as well as what he had read in the writings of Greek, Arabian, and Indian astronomers:—Zophnath Paaneach (צֹפְנָת פַּאנֵאךְ), an astronomical commentary on the book Jezirah, the introductory portion of which is printed in Geiger's Melo Chofnayim (Berlin, 1840):—Sefer Hammazaloth (סֵפֶר הַמַּזְלֹת), an astrognosy. Donortius, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Aberdeen about 1016. He died in 1098. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 102.

Donoso, Josef, an eminent Spanish painter, was born at Consuegra in 1628, and studied in the school of Juan Carreno for six years. He executed a large number of works for the churches and public edifices of Madrid, among which are those in the Convent de la Victoire, viz., The Canonization of St. Peter of Alcantara; six large pictures from the life of St. Benedict; The Conception; The Last Supper. He died in 1686. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Donus (or Domnus) I, seventy-ninth pope, was born at Rome, and was made pontiff Nov. 1, 676. In 677 he obtained from Constantine Pogonatus the revocation of the edict which exempted the archbishopric of Ravenna from the jurisdiction of the holy see. Reparatus, who was then archbishop, had the prudence to submit, and thus to make an end to the schism of Ravenna. Donus restored the Basilica of St. Paul, and adorned the atrium of the Church of St. Peter, which was called the Paradise. Some Church historians give Donus I the title saint. He died April 11, 678. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Donus (or Domnus) II, according to some, the one hundred and thirty-seventh pope, was elected pontiff in 974, after the expulsion of Benedict VI, and by influence of the counts of Tusculum. His pontificate, however, is very obscure. He is set down as having died Dec. 19, 975. See POPES.

Doolittle, Justus, a Presbyterian missionary, was born in Rutland, N. Y., June 23, 1824. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1846, and from Auburn Theological Seminary in 1849; was ordained at Auburn the same year, and served as missionary in Foochow, Tientsin, and Shanghai, until 1869, and in 1872 and 1873. Thereafter he resided at Clinton, N. Y., until his death, June 15, 1880. He is the author of Social Life of the Chinese (1865, 2 vols.):—Vocabulary and Hand-book of Chinese Language (1873). See Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 277. (B. P.)

Doors of Churches. The principal outer doors of a church seem to have been in ancient times at the west, if the church was so built that the altar was at the east end, or, at any rate, in the end facing the altar. In a basilican church of three aisles there were for the most part three western doors. In Constantine's great "Church of the Saviour," at Jerusalem, the three doors faced the east. The great Church of St. Sophia, at Constantinople, had nine doors between the narthex and the nave. As these were covered with silver, not only were they called the "Silver Doors," but the same term came to designate the corresponding doors of other churches, although not so decorated. The great western doors of the nave were called the "Royal Gates;" and when the church had a narthex, the western doors of this were also called "Royal Gates." The "Beautiful Gates" were supposed by Goar to be the gates which separate chorus and trapeza; by Ducange, those which separate nave from narthex; and by Neale, the outer gates of the narthex. The "Angelic Gate" was one which allowed a person to enter the trapeza so as to draw near the choir.

Dora, Sister. See PATTISON, DOROTHY WYNDLOW.

Dorbene (surnamed the Tall), an Irish saint, commemorated Oct. 28, was abbot of Iona, and died in 718.

Doré, PIERRE (Lat. Petrus Auratus), a French theologian, born at Orleans about 1500, joined the Dominicans at Blois in 1514, was admitted into the Sorbonne in 1532, became prior of his monastery in 1543, and directed for a long time the college at Châlons-sur-Marne. He was court-preacher, and acquired great celebrity by his violent denunciations of the Protestants. He died at Paris, May 19, 1559, leaving many writings with odd titles and contents. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doremus, Mrs. SARAH PLATT (née Haines), a noted philanthropic member of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New York city, Aug. 3, 1802. She was manager and director of more benevolent and religious institutions than any other woman in the country, if not in the world. In 1828 she set on foot a mission for the suffering Greeks. She was the patron of the City Prison Association, and of many institutions for the relief of women and children, as well as of the city Bible and Tract Societies. To her Dr. Sims went with his noble idea of a hospital for women, which she took hold of and carried through. Her house was a model of a Christian home, and it was a hospitable resort for missionaries on their way to distant fields, or returning with broken health, not only of her own Church, but of every other. Early, while yet it was dark, she might have been seen on her way to market to procure food for the asylums under her motherly care. The crown of her work was the organization of the Women's Missionary Society, out of which has grown similar associations all over the land, auxiliary to the Board of Foreign Missions, and from which go contributions to China, India, Japan, and Africa. When others in the hot season sought the seaside for rest and recreation, she stood by her post and labored night and day for her widely extended charge. She died at her residence in New York, Jan. 29, 1877. (W. P. S.)

Doren, WILLIAM HOWARD VAN, a Presbyterian clergyman, was born in Orange County, N. Y., March 2, 1810. He was a graduate of Columbia College and of the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa. In 1836 he was licensed to preach by the Louisville Presbytery, and shortly afterwards spent two years in missionary work. In 1839 he accepted a call to the Reformed Church in East Brooklyn, L. I., of which he was pastor eleven years. He also took charge of a mission church in New York city, now known as the Thirty-fourth Street Church, and afterwards of the Second Church at St. Louis. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, and in 1878 to Indianapolis, Ind., where he died, Sept. 8, 1882. He is the author of A Suggestive Commentary on Luke, with Critical and Homiletical Notes (N. Y. 1868, 2 vols.):—A Suggestive Commentary on St. John (Lond. 1879, 2 vols.):—A Suggestive Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (1870, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Doria, a martyr, with Chrysanthus, under Numerian, commemorated March 19.

Doria, Giovanni Pamfili, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome, Nov. 11, 1751. He was made archbishop at the age of twenty, and was sent on an embassy to Madrid, and afterwards as nuncio to France. On his return to Rome he was made cardinal, with the title of Sainte-Marie. In April, 1798, when the French entered Rome, he was arrested, but was soon released, and retired to his family at Genoa. He was eventually appointed financial intendant to the papal court. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doria, Sinibaldo, an Italian prelate, was born at Genoa, Oct. 21, 1664. After enjoying successively various offices at Rome, he was called to the archbishopric of Patras, Dec. 11, 1711; to that of Benevento, May 21, 1731; was declared cardinal on Sept. 24 following, and died at Benevento, Dec. 4, 1733. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorigny, Louis, an eminent French painter and engraver, was born at Paris in 1654. He went to Rome, and after remaining there four years, executed the grand altar-piece for the Feuillants at Foligno. He afterwards visited Venice, where he remained ten years. The work which does him most honor is the cupola of the cathedral at Trent. He died at Verona in 1742. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorigny, Nicolas, a celebrated engraver, was born at Paris in 1657, and studied in Italy twenty years. In 1711 he went to England to do some fine work. He returned to Paris in 1724, where he died in 1746. The following are some of his most capital prints: St. Peter Walking on the Sea; The Virgin and Infant, with St. Charles Borromeo, and St. Liborius; The Adoration of the Magi; The Birth of the Virgin; The Trinity; St. Francis Kneeling before the Virgin and Infant; St. Peter and St. John Healing the Lame Man at the Gate of the Temple. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorland (or Dorlant), PIERRE, a Belgian theologian, was born at Diest (Brabant), took the habit of the Carthusian friars at the monastery of Zelhem, became prior of that house, and died Aug. 25, 1507. He wrote many works on practical piety, for the principal of which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

D'Orléans (de la Mothe), LOUIS FRANÇOIS GABRIEL, a French prelate, was born at Carpentras, Jan. 15, 1683, of an ancient family of Vicenza, called Aureliani. He pursued his studies with the Jesuits, and became successively canon of Carpentras, grand vicar of Arles, administrator of the diocese of Senes, and finally bishop of Amiens in 1733, an office which he filled with great ability. He died there, July 10, 1774, leaving Lettres Spirituelles (Paris, 1777). Abbé Dargnies has published his Mémoires (Mechlin, 1785). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dorman, THOMAS, a Roman Catholic writer of the 16th century, was born at Amersham, Buckinghamshire, England. He was educated at Berkhamstead School (Protestant, founded by Dr. Incent), Hertfordshire; afterwards became a Romanist, fled to the Continent during the Protestant ascendancy, and there wrote a book Against Alexander Nowell, the English Calvinist:—A Proof of Certain Articles in Religion Denied by M. Jewell (Antwerp, 1564, 4to):—Disproof of Mr. Alex. Nowell's Reproof (ibid. 1565, 4to):—A Request to Mr. Jewell, etc. (Lond. 1567, 8vo). See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 211; Wood, Athen. Oxon.

Dormans, JEAN DE, cardinal-chancellor and guardian of the seals under the kings John II and Charles V, was born at Dormans (Champagne). He founded at Paris, May 16, 1370, the college called De Beauvais, from the name of his diocese, and died in that city, Nov. 7, 1373. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dormitory. It was the primitive custom for all the monks of a monastery to sleep in one large dormitory. Not until the 14th century was the custom introduced of using separate sleeping-cells. By the rule of Benedict all were to sleep in one room, if possible, with the abbot in their midst, or in larger monasteries ten or twenty, together with a dean. Only the aged, the infirm, and the excommunicated were excepted from this arrangement. Each monk was to have a separate bed. They were to sleep clothed and girded. The room was kept under lock and key until morning. In the first fervor of monastic zeal it was a common practice to sleep on the bare ground—afterwards on mats. A fire was kept burning in the room all night. The sleeping-room for stranger monks was usually close to the great dormitory and the chapel. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antig. s. v.

Dorner, ISAAC AUGUST, one of the most prominent evangelical theologians of Germany, was born in the village of Neuhausen-ob-Eck, in Württemberg, June 20, 1809, being the son of a Lutheran clergyman. He was educated at Tübingen, acted as pastor in his native place, and subsequently travelled in Holland and England. He became successively professor of theology in the universities of Tübingen (1838), Kiel (1839), Königsberg (1840), Bonn (1847), Göttingen (1853), and in 1857 at Berlin, where he died, July 12, 1884. He was a councillor of the upper consistory, a distinguished contributor to Herzog's Encyclopädie, and co-editor of the Jahrbücher für Deutsche Theologie. The first great work of Dr. Dorner, and that which at once gave him celebrity, was his Entwicklungsgeschichte von der Person Christi (Stuttgart, 1839, 1846; Berlin, 1854, 4 vols. 8vo), translated by D. W. Simon in Clark's "Foreign Theological Library," and entitled History of the Development of the Person of Christ (Edinburgh, 1859, 5 vols. 8vo). In its first form it was a single volume of moderate size. Subsequently he made it by far the most learned and extensive discussion of the theme which has ever been undertaken. It is critical as well as historical. A vast amount of collateral matter, of great importance to the theological student, is incidentally interwoven in its chapters. In this work, as everywhere, Dorner shows himself in cordial sympathy with evangelical truth, yet bound to no traditional formulas in which that truth has been set forth in times past. The book is a fine example of the mingling of intellectual freedom with due reverence, and of the spirit of science with genuine devoutness. The Geschichte der Protestantischen Theologie (Leipzig, 1867), translated as History of Protestant Theology (Edinburgh, 1871-72, 2 vols.), referring particularly to Germany, is a work of more popular interest than the treatise just referred to. It surveys the Reformation, in its sources and phenomena, and in its consequences, on the doctrinal side. In the earlier chapters is to be found a profound as well as discriminating exposition of the cardinal truth of justification by faith, in its relation to the authority of the Scriptures. What is meant by "Christian consciousness," and what rights pertain to it, are instructively noticed. A volume less known than either of those noticed above is the Collection of Essays, which embrace some of the most valuable of the briefer contributions of Dorner to theological literature. The extended paper, in which he treats of the Attributes of God, is a masterly handling of this topic. But the crowning work of his life was the System of Christian Theology, which called forth the praise and admiration of all enlightened and unprejudiced judges. When, in 1873, the Evangelical Alliance met in New York, Dorner was one of the European delegates. He combined profound learning, critical penetration, and power of generalization with an earnest Christian spirit. He was thoroughly trained in the ancient and modern schools of philosophy, and gave evidence, on his first appearance before the public, of his ability to defeat the pantheistic Hegelians with their own weapons, and thus to do most important service to German theology. This service he faithfully rendered, and lifted up theology to the rank of a science, pointed out the path of reconciliation between knowledge and faith, and raised up a body of defenders and expounders of Christianity against the philosophical and critical infidelity on the continent of Europe. Besides the works mentioned above, Prof. Dorner published a number of treatises mentioned in Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 289 sq. (B.P.)

Doróna. "Indus et Doróna" are commemorated as saints Dec. 19.

Dorothea, a virgin martyr with Theophilus at Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, under Diocletian; commemorated Feb. 6.

Dorotheanisses is the name of the members of a society formed for the care of neglected girls. In order to protect such girls against immoral influences and to get them used to work, a society of Christian young ladies and women was formed at Rome in 1830. St. Dorothea was chosen as the patroness of the society, and the rules and regulations of the same were printed at Rome in 1836. Pope Gregory XVI sanctioned, in 1841, the movement, which soon made rapid progress in Lombardy and Venice. As the sisters had not only to take care of these neglected girls, but also to educate them, pope Pius IX confirmed them in 1860 as the Teaching-sisters of St. Dorothea. See Kaulen, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dorotheus. (1) Martyr with Castor at Tarsus, in Cilicia; commemorated March 28. (2) Martyr with Gorgonius at Nicomedia, under Diocletian; commemorated Sept. 9. There are two other saints of the same name commemorated on this day—one, an anchorite of Thebes, in Egypt, cir. A.D. 395; the other, a founder of a monastery at Trebizond, in the 11th century, over which he is said to have presided many years; but there appears to be some confusion in the name, perhaps by an identification with one or more of the four archimandrites of Palestine who are reported under this name. (3) First abbot of Lyons, in France, in the 3d century. (4) A deacon of Antioch, A.D. 372. (5) A presbyter sent by Basil to seek help from the Roman bishops, A.D. 373. (6) An Arian bishop (also called Theodorus) of Antioch during the Melitian schism, A.D. 376. (7) Abbot of a nunnery in Athribia (Egypt), cir. A.D. 431. (8) A monk of Alexandria, banished by the emperor Anastasius, cir. A.D. 502, for writing a book in favor of the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon. (9) Bishop of Thessalonica, A.D. 515-20. (10) A monk (also called Droctoreus) of great virtue, appointed abbot of St. Vincent (France) A.D. 559.

Dorr, BENJAMIN, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal divine, was born at Salisbury, Mass., March 22, 1796, and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1817, after which he studied law and then theology. He was ordained deacon in 1820 and presbyter in 1823. He was rector of the united churches of Lansingburg and Waterford, N. Y., from 1820 to 1829; rector of Trinity Church, Utica, until 1835; and general agent for the domestic committee of the Board of Missions until 1837, when he became rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia. He died Sept. 18, 1869. His publications include, History of the Pocket Prayer-book (written by itself);—Churchman's Manual;—Prophecies and Types;—Invitation to the Holy Communion;—Travels in the East, and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dorrance, JOHN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Kingston, Pa., Feb. 28, 1800. He graduated from New Jersey College in 1823, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1826; was licensed by the Mississippi Presbytery the same year; was pastor at Baton Rouge, La., till 1830; then at Wysox, Pa.; July 8, 1833, was called to Wilkesbarre, and died there, April 18, 1861. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 44.

Dorrellites, a religious sect, followers of one Dorrell, who disseminated his doctrines at Leyden, Mass., about the close of the last century. He pretended to be a prophet sent to supersede the Christian dispensation and to introduce a new one, of which he was to be the head. The creed of this sect, according to the statement of Dorrell, was as follows: "Jesus Christ, as to substance, is a spirit, and is God. He took a body, died, and never rose from the dead. None of the human race will ever rise from their graves. The resurrection spoken of in Scripture is only one from sin to spiritual life, which consists in perfect obedience to God. Written revelation is a type of the substance of the true revelation which God makes to those whom he raises from spiritual death. The substance is God revealed in the soul. Those who have it are perfect, are incapable of sinning, and have nothing to do with the Bible. Neither prayer nor any other worship is necessary. There is no law but that of nature. There is no future judgment. God has no forethought, no knowledge, of what passes in the dark world, which is hell, nor any knowledge of what has taken place or will take place in this world."

Dorsal (or Dossal) (Lat. dorsum, and Fr. dos, "the back"). (1) The binder part of a stall. (2) The hanging behind the choir stalls, or an altar, and rendered tapeçium. It is made of satin or damask, and should have a representation of the Crucifixion embroidered on it; or, if there be a crucifix on the altar, Dositheus. (1) Bishop of Seleucia Pieria, transferred to Tarsus, A.D. 415. (2) An obscure hermit near Jerusalem, in the 6th century, according to some later martyrologies, and commemorated Feb. 23.

Dothan. The latest description of this interesting site is by Lieut. Conder (Tent-work in Palestine, i, 107):

"By noon we reached Dothan, the scene of Joseph's betrayal by his brethren, and halted under a spreading fig-tree beside a long cactus hedge. Just north of us was the well called Bir-el-Hüfreh ('Well of the Pit'), and east of us a second, with a water-trough, thus accounting for the name Dothan, 'two wells.' Above the wells on the north rises the shapeless mound where the town once stood, and on the west spread the dark-brown plain of 'Arrâbeh, across which runs the main Egyptian road—the road by which the armies of Thothmes and Necho came up from the sea-coast, and by which the Midianitish merchants went down with their captive. The cattle stood by the well, huddling in the shade, waiting to be watered, and rude cowherds and goatherds gathered around us in groups, which were, no doubt, not far different in dress or language from Joseph's brethren four thousand years ago."

there should be depicted one of the joyful mysteries. At St. Alban's, at the close of the 11th century, it was wrought with the martyrdom of the saint; and two others, in the 12th century, represented the Prodigal Son and the Traveller who Fell among Thieves. Some heraldic tapestries were in use behind the stalls of Exeter. Possibly dorsals were the origin of the linen pattern on panelling.

Dorsten, JOHANN VON, an Augustinian theologian of the 15th century, was professor of theology and philosophy at Erfurt, where he died in 1481. Of his many writings, only the Tractatus sive Collatio Synodalis de Statutis Ecclesiarum (Erfurt, 1489), and Determinatio de Cruore Miraculoso Jesu Christi (Leipsic, 1510), were published. A list of his works is given in Ossinger, Biblioth. August. p. 299. See also Hartzheim, Bibl. Col. p. 167; Fabr.-Mansi, iii, 359; Kaalen, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Doubdain, JEAN, a French traveller, was canon of St. Denis in France. In 1651 he sailed from Marseilles for Jaffa, and arrived at Jerusalem, March 30, 1652. He thereafter visited Bethlehem, Jericho, Mt. Carmel, Haifa or Caiphas, Galilee, Nazareth, Canaan, Mt. Tabor, Acre, and Sidon, thence home, by way of Genoa, through Italy, and back to St. Denis, Nov. 22, 1652. He wrote an account of his travels under the title, Le Voyage de la Terre Sainte (Paris, 1661, 1662, and 1666). Doubdain died about the year 1670. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Douffest (or Duffeit), GERHARD, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Liege, Aug. 16, 1594. He studied in the school of Rubens, at Antwerp, and afterwards went to Italy. There is an admirable picture by this artist, representing the Elevation of the Cross, at Liege. He died in 1660. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Gênerale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dougal, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Dunblane about 1390. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 176.

Dougherty, JAMES, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Park, near Lairmount, County Londonderry, Ireland, April 9, 1796. In 1819 he came to South Hero, Vt. After studying with Rev. Asa Lyon, and in St. Albans Academy, he entered the University of Vermont, graduating in 1830. He subsequently studied theology, and was ordained Jan. 18, 1832, as an evangelist, and for some time served in the employ of the Colonial Missionary Society, performing duty also as teacher in Frost Village and Shefford, Quebec. After preaching a year, he was installed pastor at Milton, Vt., Sept. 28, 1836, and served until July 5, 1848. About this time, for one year, he was agent for the Foreign Evangelical Society. From 1849 to 1851 he preached in Fairfax, Vt. From November, 1857, to March, 1867, he was pastor in Johnson, where he resided subsequently without charge, until his death, June 10, 1878. For some time he served as superintendent of schools in Milton and Johnson, and was also trustee of the Bakersfield and Johnson academies. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 41.

Douglas, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was minister at Elgin about seventeen years, and promoted to the see of Moray in 1606. He died at Elgin, in May, 1623. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 152.

Douglas, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was a Carmelite friar, afterwards chaplain to the earl of Argyle, and finally the first Protestant bishop of the see of St. Andrews. He became rector of the University of St. Andrews, Nov. 30, 1570. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 39.

Douglas, John (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of George Douglas of Parkhead, graduated at Edinburgh University in February, 1602; became chaplain of the North British Regiment in the Low Countries; was ordained in Stirling Kirk in February, 1606; admitted to the living of the second charge at St. Andrews in 1621; transferred to Craik in 1625; was a member of the commission for the maintenance of Church discipline, Oct. 21, 1634, and died before Oct. 22, 1635, aged about fifty-four years. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 394, 417.

Douglas, Robert (1), a Scotch prelate, was born in 1626, and received his education at King's College, Aberdeen. He began preaching about 1650, at Laurencekirk, in the Mearns; then ministered at Bothwell, Renfrew, and Hamilton, from which place he was made dean of Glasgow; soon after elected to the bishopric of Brechin, and consecrated to that office in 1682. In 1684 he was translated to the see of Dunblane, where he continued until deprived by the revolution. He died at Dundee, Sept. 22, 1716. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 168, 183.

Douglas, Robert (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of John Douglas, minister of Jedburgh, was licensed to preach Sept. 5, 1769; presented to the living at Galsburgh in March, and ordained in July, 1770. He died Nov. 15, 1820, aged seventy-three years. He was assiduous in promoting the manufactures and the interest of his parishioners, by his advice and pecuniary assistance. He published Observations on the Nature of Oaks, and the Danger of Multiplying Them (1788);—General View of the Agriculture of Roxburgh and Selkirk (Edinburgh, 1798);—An Account of the Parish. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticae, i, 551.

Douvre, THOMAS DE, an English prelate of French descent, was born at Bayeux in 1027. He was treasurer of the cathedral of that city when William the Conqueror conferred upon him, in 1070, the archbishopric of York. He reconstructed the cathedral of that city, and composed a treatise on Chants, which was accepted by several churches. In order to settle the quarrel between the sees of York and Canterbury, which had arisen on the subject of the pre-eminence, he joined with his adversary, Lanfranc, in arbitration before the pope. The affair came back before William, who decided in favor of Canterbury, in 1072. Douvre died in 1100.

There was another THOMAS DOUVRE, archbishop of York from 1109 to 1114, who is said to have been a relative of the foregoing.

Dove, in Christian Art. As a symbol of the believer, the dove of course has chief reference to two texts of Scripture, belonging to different yet harmonious trains of thought. One is Matt. x, 16, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves;" the other, Psa. lv, 6, "O that I had wings like a dove, then would I flee away and be at rest." The passages in Cant. i, 15; ii, 14; v, 2; vi, 9, refer to the Church, and therefore may be taken as referring simply to all faithful souls.

The dove with the olive evidently refers to the flood.

Noah's Dove. (From the Catacombs.)

As an emblem of the Third Person of the Trinity, the carved or painted figure of the dove appeared from a very early period in all baptisteries (see Luke, iii, 22).

Baptismal Dove. (From the Catacomb of Pontianus, 7th Century.)

For the eucharistic dove, see COLUMBA.

Dove, THOMAS, D.D., an English prelate, was born in London, and bred a "lanquam" (a fellow's fellow) in Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He afterwards became an eminent preacher, "and his sermons," says Fuller, "substantial in themselves, were advantaged by his comely person and graceful elocution." Queen Elizabeth was much pleased with him, and in 1589 preferred him dean of Norwich, advancing him in 1600 to the bishopric of Peterborough. He died in 1630. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 359; Church Hist. of England, bk. xl, an. 1630, par. 17.

Dow, ANTHONY, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, eldest son of Rev. David Dow, of Dron, was born Nov. 4, 1762; licensed to preach Nov. 30, 1785; called to the living at Kilspindie in August, 1788, and ordained Feb. 12, 1789; appointed presbytery clerk Sept. 18, 1799, which he resigned in 1811; was transferred to Kirkpatrick-Irongray in 1818, and died July 17, 1834. He published An Account of Kilspindie. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 594; ii, 644, 645.

Dowling, JOHN, a Baptist minister, was born at Pevensey, England, May 12, 1807. When sixteen years of age he became a Christian, and joined the Eagle Street Church, London. For eight years (1825-32) he was engaged in teaching, and became the author of three school-books. At the end of this period he removed with his wife and children to the United States, and in 1832 was ordained in Catskill, N. Y.; but a short time afterwards was called to the pastorate of the Second Baptist Church in Newport, R. I., and subsequently to the Pine Street, now the Central Baptist Church, Providence. He next preached for a Church in New York, holding its meetings in Masonic Hall. In 1844 he became pastor of the Berean Church in the same city, where he continued for several years, and then preached to a Church meeting in Hope Chapel, on Broadway, which has since become the Calvary Baptist Church on Twenty-third Street. For about four years (1852-56) he was pastor of the Sansom Street Church in Philadelphia. In 1856 he returned to the Berean Church, New York. For a time he preached for the Second Baptist Church in Newark, N. J., and subsequently supplied the pulpit of the South Baptist Church in New York. He died July 4, 1878. Dr. Dowling's occasional published sermons and discourses were well received, and one of them, The Value of Illustration, had a wide circulation. His principal work was his History of Romanism (New York, 1845), which passed through many editions. Besides these works, Dr. Dowling wrote and compiled, A Vindication of the Baptists (8vo):—An Exposition of the Prophecies Supposed by William Miller to Predict the Second Coming of Christ (1840, 18mo):—A Defence of the Protestant Scriptures, etc. (1843):—Judson's Offering (18mo):—Conference Hymn-book:—Baptist Noel's Work on Baptism:—Works of Lorenzo Dow:—Conybeare Middleton:—Memoir of Jacob Thomas:—Translation from the French of Dr. Cotes. See Williams, Memorial Discourses; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, i, 516, 517. (J. C. S.)

Downes, Henry, D.D., an Irish prelate, became bishop of Killala in 1716; was translated to Elphin in 1720, to Meath in 1724, and to Derry in 1726. He published Sermons (1697-1725). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downes, Robert, an Irish prelate, was bishop of Leighlin and Ferns. He published a Sermon (1750). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downham, John, younger son of William Downham, bishop of Chester, was born in Chester; graduated at Cambridge; became a preacher in London in the church behind the Exchange, and died, very aged, about 1644. He wrote The Christian Warfare, and numerous other works, for which see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downham, William, an English prelate, was archdeacon of Brecknock in 1559, became bishop of Chester in 1561, and died Dec. 3, 1577. See Le Neve, Fasti Eccles. Anglicanæ, iii, 258.

Downing, CALYBUTE, an English divine, was born in 1606, and in 1623 became a commoner of Oriel College, Oxford. After entering into orders he held the vicarage of Hackney, near London, with the parsonage of Hickford, in Buckinghamshire. He joined the parliamentary party, became a great promoter of their designs, and in a sermon preached before the artillery company, Sept. 1, 1640, delivered this doctrine: "That for the defence of religion and reformation of the Church, it was lawful to take up arms against the king." After this he became chaplain to lord Roberts's regiment, and in 1643 was one of the assembly of divines. He died in 1644. His writings are scarce. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Downman, HUGH, an English clergyman, physician, and poet, was born at Newton House, in the village of Newton St. Cyres, Devonshire, in 1740, and educated at the grammar-school of Exeter, and Balliol College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1762, but had little attachment to the Church. He turned his attention to the study of medicine, and wrote a number of poems, which indicate some share of poetical taste. He died at Exeter, Sept. 23, 1809. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Doxarians (or Aposchists), a sect spoken of by John of Damascus as disregarding the ecclesiastical ceremonies of the times; probably meaning the Paulicians (q. v.).

Doxology. The exact periods of the origin of the liturgical doxologies are unknown, owing to the scantiness of early Christian literature. But it may be safely conjectured that, in their earliest forms, they came into use soon after the circulation of the Gospel narratives. The "Gloria in Excelsis" is unquestionably of Eastern origin. Liturgical speculators have ingeniously discovered a reference to its existence in very early writers. It has frequently been assumed that it was, in fact, "the hymn" which Christians sang on all solemn occasions, including such as are referred to in Acts xvi, 25; 1 Cor. xiv, 26; and Col. iii, 16. The origin and history of the "Gloria Patri," or lesser doxology, is even more obscure than that of the "Gloria in Excelsis," and in its present shape it is the result of the Arian controversies concerning the nature of Christ.

Doyen, GABRIEL FRANÇOIS, an eminent French painter, was born at Paris in 1726, and at the age of twenty gained the grand prize of the Royal Academy. In 1748 he went to Rome, and there studied the works of the great masters. He afterwards visited Venice, Bologna, and Parma, and after his return to Paris, in 1753, he executed his celebrated picture, representing A Group of Persons Attacked by the Plague, for the Church of St. Roch, and painted the chapel of St. Gregory-aux-Invalides. He died at St. Petersburg, June 5, 1806. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Doyle, MARY, a philanthropist of the Society of Friends, eldest daughter of Edward Doyle, of Ferns, Ireland, was compelled early in life to earn her own livelihood. In 1796 she and her sister Anne, with their small savings, opened a shop in Ballymore, Ireland. They prospered until the rebellion of 1798, when the military plundered them of their provisions and outlaws robbed them of their money. After the rebellion their business prospered again. Mary was skilful in medical knowledge, and devoted herself to the relief of the poor. Anne died in 1822. Her sister continued to devote herself to works of charity, and died April 6, 1834, aged seventy-one years. See The Friend, viii, 167.

Dozy, REINHART, a famous Dutch Orientalist, was born at Leyden, Feb. 21, 1820. From 1850 to 1883 he was professor at the university of his native city, and was known as one of the best Arabic scholars. He died April 29, 1883. In 1845 he published Dictionnaire Détaillé des Noms et des Vêtements chez les Arabes (Amsterdam), for which he received a prize from the Netherlands Institute of Sciences. Of his other works, we mention Scriptorum Arabum Loci de Abbadiis (Leyden, 1846-63, 3 vols.):—Commentaire Historique sur le Poème d'Ibn-Abdoun (ibid. 1848):—Histoire des Musulmans d'Espagne (ibid. 1861, 1881, 4 vols.; Germ. transl.

in 2 vols. 1874):—Catalogus Codicum Orientalium Bibliotheca Lugduno-Batava (ibid. 1851, 2 vols.):—Notices sur Quelques Manuscrits Arabes (ibid. 1847-51). His last work is his Supplément aux Dictionnaires Arabes (1877-81, 2 vols.), one of the most important in the department of Arabic lexicography. (B. P.)

Drach, David Paul, a Jewish convert to Christianity, was born at Strasburg in 1791. In 1808 he acted as rabbi, and was for some time member of the Jewish central consistory at Paris. In 1823 he joined the Church of Rome with his four children, and in 1827 went to Rome, where he was appointed librarian at the Propaganda, and died there in 1865. He published, Lettres d'un Rabbini Converti aux Israélites (Rome, 1833; transl. into German by Z. Baumbach, under the title Katholicismus und der Judentum, Frankenthal, 1841):—Du Divorce dans la Synagogue (Rome, 1840):—Harmonie Entre l'Eglise et la Synagogue (Paris, 1844, 2 vols.). He also assisted in the publication of the fifth edition of the Bible de Venise (ibid. 1748, 14 vols.; 1827-33, 5th ed. 27 vols.):—Le Livre Yushar, Traduit (ibid. 1858). (B. P.)

Draconarius denotes the bearer of the military standard, on which a dragon was represented. When Constantine placed the Christian symbol on the military ensigns instead of the dragon, the name outlived the change, and the standard-bearer was still called draconarius. Sometimes we find the ancient symbol joined to the new, the dragon being placed beneath the cross. In the Christianized empire this name came to signify the official who carried a standard or banner in ecclesiastical processions. The name was sometimes also given to the cross-bearer.

Dracontia were dragon-temples found in Asia Minor, Epirus, North Africa, Gaul, and Britain. They were formed of immense stones, set upright in rows. They had probably a reference to the Deluge, and destructive agents under the form of monster serpents.

Drake, Benjamin M., D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born of devout parents in Robeson County, N. C., Sept. 11, 1800. He was converted in 1818; in 1820 joined the Tennessee Conference; in 1821 was transferred to the Mississippi Conference; became president of Elizabeth Female Academy in 1828, which position he held four years, and then resumed his place in the regular Conference work. In 1854 he was elected president of Centenary College, and died in 1860. Dr. Drake's whole life was an illustration of the saving power of grace. He was meek and dignified, cheerful and firm, able, energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 227; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Drake, Cyrus Bryant, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Weybridge, Vt., Aug. 18, 1812. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1834, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1837. His only pastorate was in the Church at Royalton, Vt., of which he was ordained pastor Oct. 12, 1837, and died in office. In 1846 a bronchial affection induced him to resign, but the resignation was not accepted, although he spent ten months as secretary of the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society. Twice he was unable to preach, during 1857-59 and 1862-71, but his people refused to part with him. In 1852 he was elected moderator of the General Convention, and was its corresponding secretary during 1856 and 1857. He served his native state as a member of the Constitutional Convention, and in 1870 was elected to the Legislature. His death occurred April 21, 1878. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 42.

Drake, Samuel, D.D., an English clergyman, published Sermons, etc. (1670-1724), and a new edition of Parker's De Antiquitate Britannica Ecclesia (1729). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dramas, Christian. There is little evidence that sacred dramas were ever acted till after the time of Charlemagne. A pictorial and dramatic representation of the facts of the Nativity is implied in many of the descriptions shortly after this time. See MYSTERIES.

Drane, Robert Brent, D.D., an Episcopal minister, was born in what is now the District of Columbia (then Maryland), Jan. 9, 1797. He fitted for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; graduated at Harvard College in 1824; had charge, for a few years, of a classical school in Salem, Mass.; and was settled as a minister in Hagerstown, Md., several years. In 1836 he became rector of St. James's Church, in Wilmington, N. C., and continued in office until 1843, when he took charge of a small college near Louisville, Ky. Subsequently he returned to his old parish in Wilmington, where he continued in office till his death, Oct. 16, 1862. See Necrology of Harvard College, p. 472. (J. C. S.)

Drant, Thomas, an English divine and poet of the 16th century, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of bachelor of divinity in 1569. In the same year he was admitted to a prebend in the cathedral of Chichester, June 27; July 2, to one in St. Paul's; and, March 9 following, was installed archdeacon of Lewes. He probably died in 1578. He translated Ecclesiastes into Latin hexameters (1572, 4to), and published some Latin poetry, printed at Paris. He also published some Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Draper, Bourne Hall, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Cumnor, near Oxford, England, in 1778. He studied in the school connected with Christ Church College, Oxford; became an apprentice to the Clarendon Press; joined the Baptist Church; pursued a course of theological study at the Bristol College; in 1804 was ordained pastor of the Church at Chipping Norton, Oxfordshire, where he remained about five years; removed as pastor to Cosely, Staffordshire; accepted a call to the Church in Southampton in 1820, and died there Oct. 12, 1843. In 1816 Dr. Draper wrote the hymn

"Ye Christian heroes, go proclaim Salvation in Immanuel's name."

See National Baptist, March 3, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Draper, Daniel James, a prominent Methodist minister of Australia, was born at Wickham, Hampshire, Aug. 28, 1810. He was converted in early life; received into the British Conference in 1834; appointed to Australia in 1835; labored in New South Wales, Adelaide, Victoria, etc.; filled important offices; was made president of the Australasian Conference in 1859; visited his native land, as representative to the British Conference, in 1864, and, upon his return voyage to Australia, perished, by the foundering of the steamship London, in the Bay of Biscay, January 11, 1866. See Symons, Life of D. J. Draper (Lond. 1870); Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 41; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 235, 282.

Draucius, fourth bishop of Therouanne, in France; died probably cir. A.D. 667.

Draupner, in Norse mythology, was a golden ring, sent by Baldur from the infernal regions to his father Odin. It had been made by the dwarf Sindri, and possessed the miraculous attribute that every ninth night eight equally large gold rings dropped from it.

Drausin (or Drosin; Lat. Drausius or Drautius), Saint, bishop of Soissons, was born in Soissonnais about 606. He was the son of Leudomar and of Rachilda, who placed him under the guidance of St. Anasarius, bishop of Soissons, who admitted him among the number of clerks in 649. He became archdeacon of Soissons in 652, and replaced in the episcopal see bishop Bartholin, who was accused of simony. In 657 Dausin built the abbey of St. Pierre de Rotonde, near Compiègne. He died in 667, and is commemorated March 5.

Dreams in Christian History. The attempt to foretell the future by the interpretation of ordinary dreams was not condemned by the early Church; rather it was acknowledged that dreams might be made the vehicle of divine revelation. But some of the old heathen practices by which men sought to acquire supernatural knowledge in dreams, such as sleeping in an idol's temple wrapped in the skin of a sacrifice, or under the boughs of a sacred tree, were distinctly condemned.

Drechaler, JOHANN GABRIEL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, born at Wolkenstein, in Saxony, taught philosophy at Halle, and died Oct. 20, 1677, leaving, Manuductio ad Poesin Hebraicam:—Compendium Chronologico-historicum:—also De Lurris Natalitius Christianorum (Leipsic, 1683), under the anagram of Chressulder. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dreisbach, JOHN, a prominent minister of the Evangelical Association, was born in Northumberland County, Pa., June 5, 1789; received on trial by the conference in 1807; in 1814 appointed the first presiding elder of that body; located in 1821; in 1828 and 1829 was a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives; in 1851 removed to Ohio; in 1854 became editor of the Evangelical Messenger at Cleveland; resigned in 1857, and died Aug. 20, 1871. Mr. Driesbach was regularly a delegate to the General Conference, and in 1816 prepared The Spiritual Psalter, for a long time the standard hymn-book of his denomination. See Albright and his Collaborers, p. 277.

Drelincourt, Henri, the brother of Laurent, was born at Paris about 1680. He was first advocate and afterwards minister at Gien, and then at Fontainebleau. He died in 1683, leaving a collection of Sermons. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drelincourt, Laurent, son of Charles (q. v.), was born at Paris in 1625. After having completed his studies at Saumur, he was called to the Reformed Church at La Rochelle. He was ordained in 1651 by his father, and fully justified by the sanctity of his life and his Christian humility the confidence which the people of La Rochelle had placed in him. In 1660 he was obliged to leave that place in consequence of an edict which prohibited Protestant families, who had not already resided there before the year 1628, to live there. He accepted a call to Niort, where he died, June 2, 1680, leaving, Le Saint Ministère de l'Évangile (1651):—Sermon sur les Noces de Cana (1657):—La Salutation Lever du Soleil de Justice (1665):—Les Étoiles de l'Église et les Chandeliers Mystiques (1677):—Sonnets Chrétiens (often reprinted). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Dresde, FRIEDRICH WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Naumburg, March 4, 1740; studied at Leipsic; was in 1772 appointed professor of Oriental languages at Wittenberg, and in 1778 professor of theology there; and died March 10, 1805, leaving, De Immortalitate Animæ, Patriarchis non Ignorantibus (Leipsic, 1764):—De Anno Judaico (ibid. 1766):—Votum Jephthæ (ibid. 1767):—Triga Commentationum Acad. Critic. (ibid. 1773):—In Diversitatem Lectionis Codicis Hebræi, etc. (ibid. 1776):—In Castiganda Lectione Massoretica (ibid. 1778):—Elementa Sermonis Ebraici (ibid. 1779, 1790):—De Usu Pentateuchi Samaritanæ (ibid. 1783):—Le Libro Faderis (1790-92, 7 parts):—De Veva עֵוֶה (ibid. 1798, 1794):—De Notione Spiritus S. in Codice Hebraico (ibid. 1797). Dress, CHRISTIAN. In the primitive days Christians probably took little thought for raiment. They generally wore the ordinary dress of their station and country. A strong feeling was prevalent against luxury, display, and immodesty in apparel. Nevertheless, even in the 1st century, "gay clothing" was found in Christian assemblies. Tertullian likens those who adorn themselves with costly articles to the woman "arrayed in purple and scarlet color" spoken of in the Apocalypse. The pope also, in several councils, declared against extravagant dressing. Pope Zacharias decreed (A.D. 743) that bishops, priests, and deacons should not use secular dress, but only the sacerdotal tunic; and that when they walked out, whether in city or country—unless on a long journey—they should wear some kind of upper garment or wrapper. The second Council of Nice, in the year 787, condemns bishops and clerics who distinguish themselves by the richness and brilliant colors of their dress. So Tarasius, patriarch of Constantinople, bade his clergy abstain from golden girdles, and from garments bright with silk and purple, prescribing girdles of goats' hair, and tunics decent but not gorgeous. The Council of Aix (A.D. 816) inveighs against personal ornament and splendor of dress in the clergy, and exhorts them to be neither splendid nor slovenly.

Dresser, CHARLES, D.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Pomfret, Conn., Feb. 24, 1800. He graduated from Brown University in 1823; spent some time in Virginia, as tutor in private families; studied theology under bishop Meade, by whom he was ordained; removed to Springfield, Ill., as rector there; subsequently was employed by bishop Chase in the business department of Jubilee College, in which institution he was, for a time, a professor; and died there March 25, 1865. (J. C. S.)

Dreux, PHILIPPE DE, bishop of Beauvais, went twice to the Holy Land (1178 and 1190) to fight the infidels, and on his second visit remained a captive at Bagdad for some time. After his return he turned his arms against the English, fell into their hands in 1197, and was put by king Richard into a close prison. Pope Celestine III interposed with the king of England for his deliverance, but Richard declined, in a humorous reply. The bishop being finally set free, turned his arms, in 1210, against the Albigenses, and in 1214 he appeared on the field of Bouvines as one of the heroes of the day. He died in his diocese in 1217. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drevet, Pierre, an eminent French engraver, was born at Lyons in 1663, and after having studied under Germain Audran in his native city, went to Paris to complete his preparation. The following are his best prints: Abraham's Sacrifice; The Annunciation; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Crucifixion. He died at Paris in 1738. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Drevet, Pierre Imbreh, was born at Paris in 1697. He is claimed by his countrymen to have been one of the greatest engravers of any age or country. He died at Paris in 1739. The following are some of his best works: Adam and Eve after their Transgression; Rebekah Receiving Abraham's Presents; The Holy Family; The Entry of Christ into Jerusalem; The Resurrection; The Presentation in the Temple; Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drew, DANIEL, for many years a noted capitalist and railroad director in New York, and mentioned here for his acts of Christian munificence, was born at Carmel, Putnam Co., N. Y., July 29, 1797. When fifteen years old he enlisted as a substitute in the state militia, and with the bounty money as a capital, became a cattle-drover. In 1829 he opened a cattle yard in New York; in 1834 went into the steamboat business; became a stock-broker and banker in 1844. In middle life Mr. Drew united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he ever after remained an humble and faithful member. In 1866 he founded Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J., by a gift of $500,000, paying over to its trustees in all not far from $750,000. He gave $250,000 for the founding of the Drew Seminary for Young Ladies, at Carmel. He also built a fine church at his native place, and another at Brewsters; in addition, he freely gave to many other benefactions. Mr. Drew was remarkably bold and successful in his enterprises, but, to use his own words, he "got caught at last," and in 1876 was a poor man. He died Sept. 18, 1879, regretting chiefly his inability to carry out his benevolent enterprises. See Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism; Christian Advocate (N. Y.), 1879, p. 616.

Dreyer, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 22, 1610, at Stettin. He studied at Jena, Wittenberg, Rostock, and Königsberg. In the latter place he was also appointed professor of theology and first court-preacher, and died there, Aug. 3, 1688. Of his many writings we name, De Principiis Fidei Christiane:—De Corpore et Sanguine Christi in S. Eucharistia Præsentæ:—De Justificatione et Certitudine Gratiæ ex Job ix., 20, 21:—De Primatu Romani Pontificis:—De Igne Purgatorio, quem Rediit Romana Ecclesia. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 496. (B. P.)

Drisius, SAMUEL, of Leyden, was pastor of the Holland Church in London until, in 1652, he was called and removed to the Reformed (Dutch) Church in New York city, where he ministered until his death in 1682. Once in every month he preached to the Waldenses on Staten Island. He was the colleague of the elder Megapolensis for twelve years, and is said, like him, to have been very intolerant towards those who dissented from his religious views. At their instance governor Stuyvesant issued a proclamation against conventicles, under which fines and imprisonment were inflicted upon those who disobeyed the order. The Dutch West India Company, however, soon rebuked and rectified these unwarranted proceedings. Mr. Drisius was an accomplished scholar and linguist. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 74; De Witt, Hist. Discourses, p. 35, 36, 69. (W. J. R. T.)

Droctigallius, fifteenth bishop of Soissons, towards the end of the 6th century.

Droctoaldus, Saint, fourteenth bishop of Auxerre, died in November, cir. A.D. 532.

Droctoveus, the abbot, was a disciple of Germanus, the bishop; his decease at Paris is commemorated March 10.

Drogon (1), a French prelate, said to have been the natural son of Charlemagne, became in 820 abbot of Luxeuil, where, under his direction, science and art flourished. In 829 he was made bishop of Metz. He was drowned in a river while fishing, in 855 or 857. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drogon (2) (or Drocon), a French prelate, was made bishop of Beauvais in 1030. In 1035 he founded the convent of St. Symphorien-les-Beauvais. The king of France, Henry I, in one of his diplomas qualifies him as a "vir divinæ religioni totus mancipatus." He died at Beauvais, April 21, 1047. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Drogon (3), a French cardinal and theologian, was born in Champagne, entered the Benedictine order, became prior of St. Nicolas of Rheims, and in 1128 was elected abbot of St. Jean de Laon. Pope Innocent II called him to Rome in 1130, and made him bishop of Ostia and cardinal. He died in 1138, leaving several treatises printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum (Paris, 1644), i, 565. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Droma, in Norse mythology, was the second strong chain which the Asas had made to bind the wolf Fenris. He allowed himself to be bound with it, but when he shook himself it flew in pieces.

Dromic, a term applied to Oriental churches of the apsidal or basilican form, from their similarity to a race-course. The original St. Sophia, at Constantinople, was of this style.

Drops, FESTIVAL OF THE, a ceremony observed by the Copts on June 12, annually, because on that day the drops of dew fall which are believed to lead to the rise of the Nile. As soon as this dew has fallen, the water begins to be corrupt, and assumes a greenish color, which increases more and more till the river appears as a lake covered over with moss. This lasts from twenty to forty days. As soon as the green color is gone, the river becomes red and very muddy. The Copts called the drops of dew the benediction of heaven, and believed that the Almighty sent down Michael the archangel to infuse these sacred drops into the Nile that it might begin to rise, and at length irrigate and fertilize their country. See NILE; NILUS.

Drosia, a virgin, probably of Antioch, in Syria, burned for her faith (as mentioned by Chrysostom, ii, 688), and commemorated Sept. 22.

Drostan (Throstan, Drustan, or Dunstan), a Scotch saint, commemorated Dec. 14, is said to have been of royal blood, and abbot of Holywood, and afterwards of Glenesk, in Forfarshire, about the end of the 6th century.

Droste-Hülshoff, CLEMENT AUGUST, Baron von, a professor of canon law, was born at Colsfeld, in February, 1793. He studied theology and philosophy at Münster, where Hermes was his teacher. From 1814 to 1817 he was professor at the Münster Gymnasium. When called to Berlin by the government, he betook himself to the study of canon law, resigned his position at Münster, and commenced his lectures at Bonn in 1822. He died at Wiesbaden, Aug. 13, 1832. He published, Lehrbuch des Naturrechts und der Philosophie (Bonn, 1823; 2d ed. 1831):—Ueber das Naturrecht als eine Quelle des Kirchenrechts (ibid. 1822):—Religions-philosophische Abhandlungen (ibid. 1824):—Grundsätze des gemeinen Kirchenrechts der Katholiken und Evangelischen in Deutschland (Münster, 1828-33, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Drottes (or Drotner, also Diar) were the heathen Teutonic priests in ancient Germany and Britain. Their office was confined to certain families, and was hereditary in its transmission; but they appear to have been far inferior both in wealth and power to the Druids. They enjoyed peculiar privileges in virtue of their sacred calling; being exempted from war, prohibited from appearing in arms, and even from mounting a horse. The Teutonic pagans had also an order of priestesses, who served in the temples of their female deities; and Friga (q. v.) was attended by kings' daughters, and ladies of the highest rank of nobility. Some of these consecrated females were consulted as infallible oracles, and held in the greatest veneration, as if they themselves were divinities.

Drouais, JEAN GERMAIN, a distinguished French painter, was born in Paris, Nov. 25, 1763, and instructed by his father. He gained the grand prize of the Royal Academy by his admirable picture of The Canaanitish Woman at the Feet of Christ. He died at Rome, Feb. 13, 1788. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Druotegangus. (1) Third abbot of Gorze, in the diocese of Metz, died A.D. 769. (2) Eighth abbot of Jumièges, in Normandy, A.D. 753.

Druigen, an Irish saint, commemorated March 6, was a sister of St. Brigida (q. v.).

Drum, SACRED, an instrument of magical incantation formerly in use among the native Laplanders. It was made of the body or trunk of a pine or hollow birch, which could be found only in particular spots, and every part of which, both trunk and branches, had the remarkable peculiarity of being inflected from the right to the left. The drum was constructed of one entire piece of wood, hollowed out in the middle. The upper part, which was flat, was covered with skin, and the lower part, which was convex, was so constructed that after they made two long openings in it the wood between served as a handle. The rims, which kept the skin tight in a kind of circular form, were not exactly round, but rather oval. Upon the skin thus stretched on the head of the drum, the Laplanders painted various figures in red, which seemed to be of somewhat hieroglyphical character. There were added to this copper rings of various patterns, to be used in incantations. The hammer with which the drum was beaten was made from the horn of a reindeer.

Drumm, John H., M.D., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1827; graduated from the New York Medical College in 1852; was ordained deacon in 1857, and presbyter in 1863; in 1857 officiated in Brookville, Ind.; in 1859, was rector of St. James's Church, Dundaff, Pa.; in 1862, of St. James's Church in Bristol; in 1875, of St. Mark's Church, New Britain, Conn.; in 1877 he was in San Saba, Tex., but returned in the following year to Bristol, Pa., where he died, March 5, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

Drummond, E. A. H., D.D., an English divine, who was born in 1758 and died in 1830, published, Sermons (1792):—Catechetical Questions Prior to Confirmation (Lond. 1813). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Drummond, George, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, descended from the family of Hawthornden, was licensed to preach in July, 1761; presented to the living at Dunbarton in August, 1765; ordained May 1, 1766; and died Feb. 14, 1819, aged eighty-one years. He was a man of high respectability, deep erudition, and eminent worth. He published An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 370.

Drummond, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, third son of Rev. James Drummond of Deanstown, was probably born at Fowlia, Perthshire, in 1619; graduated at St. Andrews' University in 1645; was appointed to the living at Auchterarder about 1650; transferred to Muthill in 1656; promoted to the bishopric of Brechin in 1684, retaining the parish of Muthill in conjunction, which he resigned in 1686. He had a pension from James II of one hundred pounds sterling, in December, 1685; signed an address to the king in November, 1688, just before his majesty's abdication, and preached for the last time in the cathedral, April 14, 1689, three days after episcopacy had been abolished. When deprived, he resided for four years in Slain's Castle, with John, earl of Errol, and died in 1695. He was a good and pious man, diligent in his office, read the Scriptures daily in the original; and while his chief and patron, the earl of Perth, was zealous to promote popery, he was as strenuously and determinedly opposed to popery as any one in the kingdom. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 747, 780; iii, 891; Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 169.

Drummond, William Hamilton, D.D., a scholar, poet, and divine, died in Dublin, Ireland, Oct. 16, 1865, aged eighty-seven years. He was the author of poems on the Battle of Trafalgar, the Giant's Causeway, etc.; and prepared also a translation of Lucretius. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1865, p. 675.

Drunkennes. Denunciations of this vice are contained both in the Old and New Test. St. Paul expressly includes drunkards among those who shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven. This vice became peculiarly shameful at Rome about the time of the Christian æra. The surrounding nations, too, were drunkards. Drunken habits were to afford a presumption against a person accused before the Church courts. Still, the vice flourished among the Christians. Jerome warns the priests never to smell of wine. Revellings and drunkenness were deemed allowable in commemorating the martyrs. The first distinct Church enactment against drunkenness appears in the canons of the Council of Tours. The West, however, seems to have been the chief home of gluttony and drunkenness. A canon of the Council of Autun, A.D. 670, enacted that no gluttonous or drunken priest should touch the sacrament or say the mass under pain of losing his dignity. The Council of Berkhamstead enacted that if a priest be so drunk that he cannot fulfil his office he should be deposed by the bishop. In regard to drunkenness in the Church in Britain, Boniface says: "It is also said in your parishes drunkenness is a too common evil, so that not only do the bishops not forbid it, but themselves, drinking too much, become intoxicated, and compel others to do so, offering them larger beakers." In the Carlovingian period civil penalties or disabilities began to be inflicted for drunkenness. See TEMPERANCE.

Drury, Asa, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born July 26, 1802. He graduated from Yale College in 1829, and for two years following was rector of the Hopkins Grammar-school at New Haven; was ordained as an evangelist in the Baptist ministry, Sept. 14, 1834; was professor of languages in Denison University, Granville, O., and held the office one year, 1836; for three years (1836-39) was professor of Greek in Cincinnati College; the year following a professor in what is now Colby University, Waterville, Me.; then returned to Cincinnati College; after a time became principal of the classical school connected with the Baptist Theological Institute at Covington, Ky., and at the same time professor of ecclesiastical history and Greek literature; for several years was principal of the high-school, and superintendent of schools in Covington; and spent the last four years of his life in St. Anthony, Minn. where he was pastor of a Baptist Church. He died March 18, 1870. (J. C. S.)

Drusus, a martyr at Antioch with Zosimus and Theodorus; commemorated Dec. 14.

Druys (Lat. Drusus), John, a Belgian canon, was born at Cumpitch, near Tirlemont, in 1568. He studied at St. Trond, at Namur, and at Louvain; joined the order of Premonstrants at the abbey of du Parc, near Louvain, May 29, 1588; taught theology there; in 1604 became deputy for the states of Brabant, and the following year vicar of the circarii of Brabant and Friesland. He was charged by archduke Albert with several missions in connection with ecclesiastical discipline; appointed circarius in Spain in 1630; and finally was counsellor of the state. He died at Brussels, March 25, 1634, leaving, Visitatio Almae Universitatis Lovaniensis (Louvain, 1617):—Ezhortatio ad Candidi Ordinis Pramonstratensis Religiosos (ibid. 1621):—Statuta Candidi et Canonici Ordinis Pramonstratensis Renovata, etc. (ibid. 1628). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Druzicki, Caspar, a Jesuit, was born in 1589 at Sieradz, in Poland, and died at Posen in 1662. He wrote De Variis Passionis Christi Meditandi Modis (Lublin, 1652):—Fasciculus Exercitationum, etc. (Cracow, 1662):—Tribunal Conscientiæ, etc. (ibid. 1672):—In Dominicas Totius anni Considerationes (1679):—Lapis Lydius, etc. (1699); a German translation was published in 1739; a more recent one is that by Ratte, 1884). A complete edition of his works was issued at Ingolstadt in 1782, 2 vols. fol., under the title Venerabilis P. Gasparis Druzicki Opera Omnia. See Encyclop. Koscielna, iv, 855; Lüdke, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dryads (from δρύς, an oak), female deities of an inferior rank, who presided over woods. They were much more fortunate than the Hamadryads, having the liberty of walking about, and even surviving the destruction of the trees over which they presided. They also had the liberty of marrying. The poets frequently confound the Dryads, Hamadryads, and Naiads.

Dryander, HERMANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 22, 1809, at Halle, where he also pursued his theological studies. In 1834 he was appointed deacon at the church "Unsere Lieben Frauen" there, in 1876 first preacher, and died as superintendent and member of consistory, Feb. 15, 1880. See Zum Gedächtniss Dr. Hermann Ludwig Dryander's (Halle, 1880). (B. P.)

Duala Version of the Scriptures. In this language, which is spoken in the Cameroons district, West Africa, some portions of the Old and New Test. has been translated by the Rev. A. Saker, of the Baptist Missionary Society. The grammar has been treated by Saker in Grammatical Elements of the Duala Language (1855). (B. P.)

Dubbs, JOSEPH S., D.D., a German Reformed minister, was born at Upper Milford, Lehigh Co., Pa., Oct. 16, 1796. His early education was received at a Quaker school, and, after studying theology four years under Rev. F. L. Herman, D.D., he was licensed to preach in 1822. He received the charge of Windsor and Weiss churches, Berks County, in June, the same year, and was ordained in 1823. In 1824 the Eppler's Church, and in 1826 the Hains Church, were added to his charge, of which he remained pastor until 1831. From this period until 1861 he was pastor of the Allentown, Egypt, Union, and Jordan churches. That year he resigned the charge of the Allentown Church, which had increased to twelve hundred members, continuing to preach to the remaining three until 1866, when he retired from active labor, and removed to Allentown, where he died, April 14, 1877. He was conscientious in the discharge of duty, and acquired an unusual degree of popularity. Dr. Dubbs was a frequent correspondent of the German periodicals of his Church, and the author of several popular German hymns. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 239.

Du Bec, PHILIPPE, a French prelate, was born in 1524. He was appointed bishop of Vannes in 1559, and six years later passed to the diocese of Nantes. He was one of those prelates who held the place of ecclesiastical peers at the coronation of Henry IV in 1569. The same year he was called to the archbishopric of Rheims, and in the year following he received the title of commander of the order of the Holy Ghost. But the bulls were not forwarded before the end of three years, on account of the differences of Henry IV with the court of Rome. Du Bec died in 1605. He left a collection of Sermons, and a French translation of the Treatise of the Widows of St. Ambrose (Paris, 1590). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dubhan is the name of two Irish saints: (1) A priest, about the middle of the 7th century, commemorated Nov. 11. (2) A pilgrim in the County Wexford, commemorated Feb. 11.

Dubhdalethe is the name of three abbots of Armagh, in Ireland, one in the 8th century, and two in the 10th and 11th; also of an abbot of Kilskeery, County Meath, who died A.D. 750.

Dubhthach (or Duach) is the name of three Irish saints: (1) A bishop of Armagh, A.D. 497-513; commemorated Feb. 5. (2) A companion of Moling (q. v.), commemorated Oct. 7. (3) Priest of king Leogaire, converted by St. Patrick, A.D. 433.

Dubois, Benjamin, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, descended from the French Huguenots who settled on Staten Island to escape the persecutions of Louis XIV, was born in 1789. He studied theology under Rev. J. H. Goetschius, was licensed by the American Classis in 1764, and for sixty-three years was pastor of the united Reformed Dutch churches of Freehold and Middletown, in Monmouth Co., N. J. During the Revolutionary war he was foremost among the defenders of liberty, and often preached to his people upon their duty during the struggle. He died in 1827. See Marcellus, Hist. Discourse; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 75. (W. J. R. T.)

Dubois, Gérard, a French Church historian, was born at Orleans in 1629. He became a member of the congregation of the Oratory in 1650, and taught rhetoric there several years. He wrote the concluding volume of the Ecclesiastical History of Le Cointe, including a life of the latter (1683). He was commissioned by Harlay, archbishop of Paris, to undertake a History of the Church of Paris, the first volume of which (1690) carries it down to 1108. Du Bois died at Paris, July 1, 1696, leaving the second volume unfinished. It was completed by fathers La Ripe and Desmolets (1710), and brings the history down to 1864. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dubois, Gualterus, a distinguished minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Streefkerk, in Holland, in 1666, and graduated from the University of Leyden in 1697, when he was licensed to preach the Gospel. His father, Rev. Peter Dubois, was a very eminent minister of the Church of Holland, settled in Amsterdam, the one hundredth in succession from the Reformation. The son came to America, when twenty-eight years old, as the colleague of dominie Selyns in the Dutch Church of New York, where he ministered fifty-one years with great acceptance and ability. He was a man of noble presence, of amiable spirit, and dignified bearing; a diligent student and expounder of God's Word, whole books of the Bible being left among the subjects of his pulpit instructions, in his elaborate and beautiful manuscripts; also a strong advocate of the independence of the Reformed Church in America from foreign control, especially in the matter of ministerial education and ordination, although he died before this question reached its crisis in the disruption of the Church. His death, which followed a brief illness, in his eightieth year, called forth universal expressions of public grief and respect for his character and services. He was regarded more as "a bishop among the Dutch churches than as the pastor of a single organization." See De Witt, Memorial; Smith, Hist. of New York; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.; Taylor, Annals. (W. J. R. T.)

Dubois, Jean (1), a reputable French sculptor, was born at Dijon in 1626. Among other excellent works, he executed the statues of St. Stephen and St. Medard, and the tomb of Pierre Odebert, in the cathedral of Dijon; the grand altar and the Assumption of the Virgin, in the Church of Notre Dame. The statue of the Virgin is considered his masterpiece. He died Nov. 29, 1694. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dubois, Jean (2) (Joannes à Bosco, otherwise Olivarius), a French preacher, was born about the middle of the 16th century. After living for some time as a Celestine monk, he obtained permission of the pope to become a soldier, and in that capacity acquitted himself so well as to obtain the favor of king Henry III, who styled him "the emperor of monks." When peace was restored, he quitted the profession of arms and returned to his cloister. He was a favorite preacher, and was selected by Henry IV to be one of his ordinary chaplains; and so highly esteemed by cardinal Scraphin Olivier that he adopted him, gave him his name and arms, and obtained for him the Cistercian abbey of Beaulieu, in Argonne. He was a strenuous opponent of the Jesuits, and on June 6, 1610 (Trinity Sunday), declaimed against them, and especially against the books of Mariana and Bécán, in the Church of St. Eustachius. For this, when he went to Rome, as agent extraordinary for Louis XIII, he was, Nov. 11, 1611, thrown into prison, where he died, after fifteen years' confinement, Aug. 28, 1626. He wrote, among other works, Floriacensis Bibliotheca Benedictina, etc. (Lyons, 1605, 8vo). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dubois, Jean Antoine, a French missionary, one of the directors of the seminary of foreign missions, member of the Asiatic societies of Paris and London, and of the Literary Society of Madras, was born in 1765 at St. Remèze (Ardèche). About 1791 he went to Mysore to preach Christianity, his principal residence being at Pettah, near Seringapatam. After thirty-two years of sojourn in India, he returned to Europe with the strong conviction that in the actual state of affairs the conversion of the Hindûs was impossible. This opinion, which he advanced in his Letters on the State of Christianity in India (Lond. 1823), became in England the object of very lively attacks. He died at Paris, Feb. 7, 1848. For the list of Dubois' other writings, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dubois, John, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in Paris, France, Aug. 24, 1764, and ordained in 1787. He came to America in 1791; labored in Maryland and Virginia; founded Mount St. Mary's College and Seminary, Baltimore, Md., in 1807; succeeded John Connolly as bishop of New York in 1826, and died in that city, Dec. 20, 1842. He was highly revered in his own denomination. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 70, 104, 897 sq.

Dubric (or Dyfrig), archbishop of Caerleon, distinguished in the story of king Alfred of England as famous for sanctity, was the grandson of Brychan, king of Brecknockshire, and appears to have been the first bishop of Llandaff, about A.D. 470, and to have died in 522. His bones were transferred in 1120 to the new cathedral on the island of Enlli or Bardsey, where they had been originally interred. His death is commemorated Nov. 4, and his translation May 29.

Duchaet, Henry William, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, entered upon public life as a physician in New York city; but about 1824 he was ordained, and after having filled several other important positions, in 1833 accepted the rectorship of St. Stephen's parish, Philadelphia, where he died Dec. 13, 1865, aged sixty-eight years. For many years he was a leading member of the standing committee of the diocese, and was associated with most of its religious societies. By his agency a great charity was inaugurated, the Burd Asylum for Orphans; and he had planned an asylum for disabled clergymen, having already taken the preliminary steps for its establishment, when his sudden death frustrated his design. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1866, p. 126.

Ducks, in early Christian art. These birds occur repeatedly in the base-reliefs of the Duomo at Ravenna, on the great piers at the east end, and at the same place in the Church of San Giovanni Evangelista. The reason for their use is unknown, but has been supposed to be either on account of the bright colors or because domesticated in the monasteries.

Ducroix, Gabriel Marie, a French historian, dean at Auxerre and afterwards at Orleans, was born at the latter place, June 27, 1743, and died there Aug. 24, 1790. He is known as the author of Les Siècles Chrétiens (Paris, 1775, 9 vols.; German translation by Fischer, Vienna and Landshut, 1781-90):—Pensées et Réflexions (Paris, 1765, 2 vols.). See Hefele, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dudd, eleventh bishop of Winchester, between 781 and 785.

Dudley, John, an English clergyman, became a prebendary of Lincoln in 1724, was installed archdeacon of Bedford, June 11, 1731, and died about 1745. He published a few single Sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dudley, William, an English prelate of the 15th century, son of John Dudley, the eighth baron of Dudley, Staffordshire, was educated at University College, Oxford, thence preferred dean of Windsor, and afterwards for six years bishop of Durham. He died in London in 1483, and was buried in Westminster. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 131.

Dudung, Claudius Antony, a Swiss prelate, was appointed to the bishopric of Lausanne in 1716, and died June 16, 1745, leaving Status seu Epoca Ecclesie Aventicensis (1724). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duff, Alexander, D.D., a Scotch clergyman and missionary, was born at Pitlochrie, Perthshire, April 25, 1806. He was carefully educated in the Established Church of Scotland; graduated from the University of St. Andrews, was ordained Aug. 12, 1829, and the same year sailed for India with his wife. The vessel was wrecked on the voyage, and on arriving at Calcutta he was advised by the English residents not to begin operations until an imposing church structure should be reared. Nevertheless, he rented a small house in that city, and commenced a school for the instruction of the natives. In 1832 three Brahmins were baptized, an event which produced a profound impression upon all classes. In 1834 Dr. Duff's health gave way, and he returned home for recuperation. He attended the General Assembly of the Scottish Church, and delivered a powerful address in behalf of the great cause in which he was engaged. He returned to India in 1840, and entered a larger and much more suitable building for school purposes, which had been erected in his absence. When the disruption of the Scotch Church took place in 1843, Dr. Duff cast in his lot with the Free Church, though by this act he forfeited the use of all the mission property. He leased a building and continued his labors, the number of his pupils having increased to eight hundred. A church was erected which cost $50,000. Contemplating a visit to his native land in 1853, Dr. Duff made an extensive tour throughout India, that he might by personal observation make himself acquainted with the condition and wants of the people, and lay them before the churches at home. Before his embarkation, the people raised $25,000, and in addition to this $50,000 were subscribed in Great Britain for the erection of buildings for educational and missionary purposes. In 1854 he visited the United States and Canada. Wherever he preached, vast crowds were assembled to listen to his thrilling descriptions of the land of his work and adoption. After his return home he was elected moderator of the General Assembly. His health being feeble, he visited the Mediterranean shores, made a trip to Palestine, and returned to India considerably improved. He was appointed by a member of the British cabinet to draft a constitution for the India University, and was chosen dean of the faculty, and also elected a member of the syndicate. During all this time his own college in Calcutta progressed rapidly. In 1865 there were on the rolls more than eighteen hundred and seventy-four students. Other schools in different places under his supervision contained upwards of three thousand pupils. In consequence of failing health he was obliged to return again to Scotland, not without the same tokens of respect and esteem. He was elected professor of evangelical theology in the new college of the Free Church, Edinburgh, and here his last labors were performed. He died at Sidmouth, Devonshire, England, Feb. 12, 1878. See his Life, by Dr. G. Smith (Edinburgh, 1880). (W. P. S.)

Duff, David, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated at the University of St. Andrews in 1802; was licensed to preach May 5, 1805; presented to the living at Moulin the same year, and ordained Feb. 21, 1806; promoted to Kenmore, March 29, 1831; and was in 1869 Father of the Church, being then about ninety years old. See Fasts Eccles. Scotticane, ii, 812, 824.

Duff, John, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in March, 1793; presented by the earl of Mansfield in February, 1796, to the living at Kinfauns; ordained Jan. 19, 1797, and died March 8, 1816, aged forty-eight years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 646.

Duff, Robert, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of the Rev. William Duff of Kinedar, graduated at King's College, Aberdeen, March 29, 1756; was licensed to preach in October, 1762; presented to the living at Kinedar in succession to his father, and ordained Sept. 18, 1765. He died, having been more than seven years Father of the Synod, Oct. 31, 1825, aged eighty six years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 663.

Duffield, George, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born at Strasburg, Lancaster Co., Pa., July 4, 1794, and educated at the University of Pennsylvania. He was for many years pastor of Presbyterian churches in Philadelphia, New York, and Detroit, and was an active leader of the New School movement. He died at Detroit, Mich., June 23, 1868. His publications include Spiritual Life:—Dissertation on the Prophecies:—Millenarianism Defended:—Claims of Episcopal Bishops Examined, and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Du Fossé, Pierre Thomas, a French writer, was born at Rouen in 1634. He was educated at Port Royal des Champs, and the impressions which he received there attached him more and more to his teachers, so that no persecution could prevail upon him to change his views. He was associated with Tillemont, Lemaître, Arnaud, D'Andilly, and others. When imprisoned in 1666 in the Bastille, he found there De Sacy, who was a great comfort to him. He died in 1698, leaving Vie de Barthelemy des Martyrs (Paris, 1663):—Vie de Thomas de Cantorbéry (1674):—Étude sur Tertullien et Origène (1675):—Vie des Saints, comprising only the months of January and February:—also commentaries on Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Ruth, Psalms, and the Gospels. His Mémoires were published at Utrecht in 1739. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Duguesnay, Alfred, a French Roman Catholic prelate, born at Rouen in 1814, was for many years pastor of the Church of St. Laurent, in Paris, made bishop of Limoges in 1871, and died Sept. 15, 1884.

Duhlhajja, the last of the four sacred months of the Mohammedans, the month in which the pilgrimage to Mecca is performed.

Dullech (or Doulach), an Irish saint of Clochar, near Dublin, commemorated Nov. 17.

Duinsech, an Irish virgin of Loch-Cuan, in Ulster, commemorated Aug. 6.

Duitsch, Christian Solomon, a Protestant minister, was born of Jewish parentage at Temesvar, in Hungary, in 1734. According to the fashion of that time, his education was entirely Talmudical. In 1760 he received the degree of "morenu" or rabbinical doctor; and being the son-in-law of a wealthy Jew, he had everything that an ambitious Jew could desire. He devoted the whole of his time to the study of the Talmud and the Midrashim, but many a passage treating of the Messiah, repentance, and conversion led him to a diligent examination of Christianity. Without entering upon the history of his inner struggles, which is given in his interesting De wonderlijke Leidinge Gods and Het Verooly van de wonderlijke Leidinge Gods (Amsterdam, 1767-69; new ed. Nijkerk, 1870), we will state that on June 25, 1767, he was openly baptized at Amsterdam. Duitsch now betook himself to the study of theology, and having been duly prepared, entered the Utrecht University, where he attended the theological lectures for six years. On April 16, 1776, he passed his examination; and a year later, April 14, 1777, was elected pastor at Mydrecht, where he died, Nov. 15, 1797. He wrote, Israëls Verlossing en cenvige Behoudenis (Amsterdam, 1769-88). See First, in Delitzsch's Saat auf Hoffnung, 1875, p. 3 sq. (B. P.)

Duke, Richard, an English divine and poet, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow about 1682. Having been ordained, he was presented to the rectory of Blaby, in Leicestershire; in 1687 made a prebendary of Gloucester; and in 1688 chosen a proctor in convocation for that Church, and was chaplain to queen Anne. In 1710 he was presented to the living of Witney, in Oxfordshire. He died Feb. 10 of the same year. He published three Sermons in his lifetime, the first, on The Imitation of Christ, preached before the queen in 1703; the other two were preached in 1704. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dula, a martyr at Nicomedia, commemorated March 25.

Du Lau, Jean Marie, a French prelate and theologian, born Oct. 30, 1738, was general agent of the clergy, and became archbishop of Arles in 1775. Having opposed the French Revolution, he was arrested, after Aug. 10, and imprisoned in the convent of the Carmelites, in Rue de Vaugirard, where he was assassinated, Sept. 2, 1792. He wrote, Adresse au Roi (Paris, 1792):—Recueil de Mandements et Lettres Pastorales (Arles, 1795). His complete works were published by Jacques Constant (ibid. 1817). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dulcidius (also Dulcius, Doux, or Doucis). (1) Saint, third bishop of Agen, in the province of Bordeaux, probably in the 5th century, is commemorated Oct. 17; (2) eighteenth bishop of Anicium (le Puy en Velay), A.D. 705; (3) tenth bishop of Toul, between A.D. 532 and 539; (4) a Spanish prelate of the 9th century, was a priest at Toledo, when he was sent, in 883, by Alfonso III of Castile, to Abub-Ali, the chief of the Saracens, and on his return was raised to the see of Toledo. Joseph Pellicer published, as a work of Dulcidius, an old chronicle written in Latin (Barcelona, 1663). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dülcken, Anton, a Carthusian monk and ascetic writer, was born at Cologne about 1560, and died as prior of the Carthusians at Freiburg, Oct. 1, 1623. His works are mostly translations of ascetical writings, originally written in Italian, Spanish, and French. See Hartzheim, Bibliotheca Coloniensis, p. 20; Petreji, Bibliotheca Carthus. p. 10; Kessel, in Wetzer u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Dulianists, a sect of Arians, so called from using the word δοῦλος to describe the relation of the Son to the Father.

Dulkaada, one of the four sacred months of the Mohammedans. This month is sacred as being devoted to preparation for the pilgrimage to Mecca.

Dullaphel, an Arabian legendary prophet, said to have existed before Christ, and to have restored twenty thousand persons to life at one time.

Dumbness. The Apostolical Canons excommunicate any cleric who mocks the deaf, dumb, or blind. These three classes are excluded from the episcopate, not as defiled, but that the proceedings of the Church should not be hindered. The capacity of the dumb to receive the sacraments or accept a penance was the subject of some controversy. A whole work of Fulgentius is devoted to the question of the validity of the baptism of an Ethiop catechumen after the loss of his voice, and he concluded that it was entitled to the same validity as that of an infant. This view prevailed in the Church. Among other canonical authorities, the first Council of Orange, A.D. 441, enacted that a person suddenly losing his voice might be baptized or accept a penance, if his previous will thereto could be proved by the witness of others, or his actual will by his nod. So the second

Council of Arles (A.D. 452) to the same effect as regards baptism. According to one of Ulpian's Fragmenta, the dumb could not be a witness nor make a testament. By a constitution of Justinian, A.D. 531, deaf mutes were declared incapable of making a will or codicil, or conferring a freedom, unless the infirmity should not be congenital, and they should have learned to write before it occurred, in which case they could exercise these rights by writing under their own hand. The dumb were in all cases allowed to do so by such writing. It was, however, held by the old law that the dumb, as well as the deaf and blind, could lawfully contract marriage, and become subject to dotal obligations. Deaf mutes were held excused from civil honors, but not from civic charges. But the dumb might lawfully decline a guardianship or curatorship.

Dumont, A. H., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York in 1798. He was educated at Columbia College, and studied theology in the seminary at New Brunswick, N. J. His first pastorate was near Albany, N. Y., in 1841 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Morristown, N. J.; in 1845 he removed to Newport, R. I., where he devoted himself to the interests of education, and perfected the public-school system which Newport to this day enjoys. He died July 5, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 100.

Dun (Lat. Dunnus), eleventh bishop of Rochester, A.D. 741.

Dunan (Lat. Donatus), an Irish prelate, was bishop of Dublin, and by the aid of Sitric, the king, built the Cathedral of the Holy Trinity, afterwards called Christ Church, in that city, in 1038. He died May 6, 1074. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 26.

Dunbar, Columba, a Scotch prelate, was dean of the Church of Dunbar about 1411. He was promoted to the see of Moray in 1429, and died in 1435, while on his return from the Council of Basle. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 143.

Dunbar, Gavin (1), a Scotch prelate, was dean of Moray in 1488, and continued there till March 18, 1503, when he was made archdeacon, and lord-register of St. Andrews, which offices he filled fifteen years, and then became bishop of Aberdeen, in 1518. He died March 9, 1532. It is said that this bishop was the first to advise Hector Boece to write his history of Scotland. He built a bridge over the river Dee, consisting of seven arches, and endowed a hospital for twelve poor men, with a preceptor, in 1531. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 119.

Dunbar, Gavin (2), a Scotch prelate, was early preferred to the priory of Whitehern, in Galloway, and at the same time became instructor to the young king James V. He was made bishop of Glasgow Dec. 22, 1524; in 1526 one of the privy council, and Aug. 21, 1528, lord chancellor, continuing in this last office until 1543. Having then some leisure time, he built the stately gate-house at his episcopal palace in Glasgow. He died April 30, 1547. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 266.

Dunbar, William (1), a Scotch poet and monk, was born at Salton, East Lothian, about 1465, and educated at the University of St. Andrews. He afterwards became a Franciscan, and travelled in Scotland, England, and France, as a preacher. He was for some time in the diplomatic service of James IV, and resided at his court as a pensioner. He died in 1530. His poetry began to be made known to the public about the beginning of the last century. His principal allegorical poems are, The Thistle and the Rose;—The Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins through Hell;—and The Golden Terge. Critics speak in the highest praise of his poetry, some of them placing him in the very front rank of Scottish poets.

See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.

Dunbar, William (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was tutor in the family of M'Neill; licensed to preach in 1804; presented to the living at Applegarth, and ordained May 7, 1807; nominated moderator of the Assembly in 1839, but declined the honor, and died Jan. 6, 1861, aged eighty-one years. He published, in the Naturalist's Library, "The Natural History of Bees" (Edinb. 1840);—and An Account of the Parish of Applegarth. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 644.

Duncan, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunkeld in 1351, and also in 1354. He probably died in that see in 1363. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 84.

Duncan, Alexander, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, brother of David, minister at Stow, was licensed to preach Jan. 7, 1735; called to the living at Traquair, and ordained assistant and successor, Sept. 12, 1738; transferred to Smalholm, Oct. 26, 1743; and died Sept. 29, 1795, aged eighty-six years. He published, A Preservative against the Principles of Infidelity (Edinb. 1774);—The Devout Communicant's Assistant (Berwick, 1792);—The Evidence of the Resurrection of Jesus, a sermon (Edinb. 1783);—The History of the Revolution of 1688 (ibid. 1790);—Miscellaneous Essays (1799);—An Account of the Parish of Smalholm. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 257, 532.

Duncan, Andrew, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Patrick, minister at Tibbermore; was licensed to preach in July, 1778; presented to the living at Auchterarder, and ordained Sept. 6, 1781; elected Presbytery clerk in November, 1784, which office he held to Jan. 3, 1792; transferred to Ratho Feb. 1, 1803; elected principal clerk to the General Assembly May 21, 1807; elected moderator to the General Assembly in May, 1824, and died July 29, 1827, aged seventy-one years. He published, The Benefits of Christianity, a sermon (Edinb. 1806);—An Account of Auchterarder. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 141; ii, 748.

Duncan, Daniel, D.D., an English clergyman, wrote Collects upon the Principal Articles of the Christian Faith, according to the Order of the Catechism of the Church of England (1754);—and other religious tracts. He died in 1761. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. xii, 447; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, a. v.

Duncan, Henry, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, third son of Rev. George Duncan, was educated first at home, then at an academy at Dumfries, and completed his studies successively at the universities of St. Andrews, Glasgow, and Edinburgh, at the last of which he was associated with Henry Brougham, Horner, and Petty (Marquis of Lansdowne). He was licensed to preach in August, 1798; presented to the living at Ruthwell in May, and ordained Sept. 19, 1799; was elected moderator of the General Assembly in May, 1839; joined the Free Secession, and signed the deed of demission, May 24, 1843; and died Feb. 19, 1846, aged seventy-one years. He superintended the education of many young gentlemen in the manse, with that of his own family; formed an auxiliary Bible society in Dumfries in 1810; and founded a parish savings bank. Among his numerous publications are, A Pamphlet on the Socinian Controversy (Liverpool, 1791);—three separate Sermons;—six separate Letters on popular passing events;—An Essay on the Nature and Advantages of Parish Banks (1815);—The Young South Country Weaver;—William Douglas (Edinb. 1826, 3 vols.);—An account of the Runic Monument at Ruthwell Manse (1833);—Sacred Philosophy of the Seasons (Edinb. 1835, 4 vols.). He originated and wrote for the Edinburgh Christian Instructor; likewise the Dumfries and Galloway Courier, and edited it for seven years, being the principal proprietor thereof. He also edited, for a time, the Dumfries Journal. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 626, 627.

Duncan, John (1), D.D., an English clergyman, son of Dr. Daniel Duncan, was born in 1720, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford. In 1745 and 1746 he was chaplain to the king's regiment, and was present at various battles in Scotland. In 1768 he was presented to the college living of South Warnborough, Hants, which he held forty-five years. He died at Bath, Dec. 28, 1808. His publications include an Essay on Happiness, a poem:—Address to the Rational Advocates of the Church of England; and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. xii, 447; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Duncan, John (2), LL.D., a Scotch Presbyterian, preached successively at Maidstone, in Kent; at Tadley, Hampshire; and at Wimborne, in Dorset. He removed to London about 1790, and was chosen minister at the Peter Street Church, Soho, where he remained some years in the present century. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 37.

Duncan, John (3), LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, was ordained, April 28, 1836, the first minister of the Church extension parish of Milton, presbytery of Glasgow; resigned his parish work in October, 1840; was set apart as missionary to the Jews, May 16, 1841; joined the Free Secession in 1843, and was appointed professor of Oriental languages in the college at Edinburgh the same year. He died Feb. 26, 1870. Dr. Duncan published a Lecture on the Jews, and Letters in the Home and Foreign Missionary Record. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 45; Life, by David Brown (Edinburgh, 1872).

Duncan, John (4), D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Scotland, Oct. 14, 1812. He was converted at the age of fourteen, while attending an academy at Huntley, and became a member of an Independent Church in his native place. He came to the United States in early manhood, and joined a Baptist church in Troy, N. Y. The Church in Stillwater licensed him to preach, Sept. 29, 1838, and he was ordained in Cohoes, May 22, 1839. He had two or three pastorates in the state of New York, and then in Lowell, Mass., for several years. In 1854 he was called to the First Church in Camden, N. J., and next to South Boston, his ministry here being between five and six years. His other pastorates were in West Cambridge and Fall River, Mass.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Essex, Conn.; and Mansfield, Mass. April 5, 1883, his health suddenly gave way, and he died July 28, 1884. See The Watchman, Aug. 14, 1884. (J. C. S.)

Duncan, Robert (1), a Scotch clergyman, was born at Edinburgh in February, 1699; graduated from Edinburgh University in June, 1718; after studying theology, went to the Continent as a tutor to the brother of the earl of Rothes, and pursued the study of divinity and law at the University of Groningen, where he ruptured a blood-vessel internally, but, recovering, was promised advancement to remain. He preferred to return to Scotland, and was licensed at Edinburgh, in October, 1726. During his preaching at St. Cuthbert's Church, in Edinburgh, he strained his voice, from which cause his complaint returned; after resting, he was called to the living at Tillicoultry in October, 1727, and ordained Jan. 25, 1728. He died May 18, 1729. He prepared for publication An Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Edinburgh, 1731). See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 740.

Duncan, Robert (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach March 27, 1776; presented to the living at Dundonald in April, and ordained Sept. 11, 1783; and died April 14, 1815. He published, Infidelity the Growing Evil of the Times, a sermon (Ayr, 1794):—An Account of the Parish of Dundonald. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 113.

Duncan, William Cecil, a Baptist minister, was born in the city of New York, Jan. 24, 1824; graduated from Columbia College in 1844, and from the theological department of Madison University in 1846; became editor of the Southwestern Baptist Chronicle at New Orleans, and pastor of the First Baptist Church there. In 1851 he became professor of ancient languages in the University of Louisiana, and in 1853 pastor of the Coliseum Baptist Church in the same city. He died there, May 1, 1864. Among his published writings are a work on baptism and a translation of Von Rhoden's John the Baptist. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. iv, 366; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 849. (J. C. S.)

Duncker, Hans Gottfried Ludwig, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, Aug. 17, 1810. He studied at Göttingen and Berlin. In 1836 he commenced his academical lectures at Göttingen; was, in 1843, professor extraordinarius, and in 1854, ordinarius; and died, doctor of theology and member of consistory, Nov. 7, 1875. He is the author of, Historia Doctrinæ de Ratione, Quæ Inter Peccatum Originale et Actuale Intercedit (Göttingen, 1837):—Des heiligen Irenæus Christologie (ibid. 1843):—Zur Geschichte der christl. Logoslehre (ibid. 1848). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 299. (B. P.)

Duncombe, John, an English clergyman, was born in 1730, and educated at Benet College, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow in 1750; and, in 1753, ordained at Kew chapel, and appointed to the curacy of Sundridge, in Kent, after which he became assistant preacher at St. Anne's, Soho. In 1757 he was presented to the united livings of St. Andrew and St. Mary Bredman, in Canterbury, where he settled, and in 1766 became one of the six preachers in the cathedral. He died in 1785. His publications in both prose and poetry are very numerous. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dundemore, Stephen de, a Scotch prelate, was the descendant of an ancient family in Fifeshire, and is by some called Dundee. He was chancellor of the see of Glasgow, and afterwards, in 1817, elected bishop; but, being an enemy to the English interest, king Edward II would not consent to his appointment. He was never consecrated, but is said to have died on his way to Rome. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 242.

Dundumore, Thomas de, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Ross in 1309, and, together with the other bishops, recognized the title of king Robert Bruce to the crown of Scotland in the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 187.

Dunkan, John, a Scotch prelate, was elected bishop of the Isles, May 21, and consecrated Nov. 25, 1375. He died in 1380. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 304.

Dunkarton, Robert, a reputable English mezzotint engraver, was born about 1744. He executed a large number of plates in London, among which are the following: Lot and his Daughters; Christ and the Disciples at Emmaus; and four subjects from the life of Joseph. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dunkel, Johann Gottlob Wilhelm, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Köthen, Sept. 28, 1720. He studied at Halle, and received the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1739. In 1744 he was pastor at Diebzig, near Köthen, and in 1748 at Wulfen and Dronen, in the county of Anhalt-Köthen. He died Sept. 8, 1759, leaving, Historisch-kritische Nachrichten von verstorbenen Gelehrten (Köthen, 1758-60, 3 vols.):—Theod. Dassovii de Vacca Rufa Opusculum (Leipsic, 1758). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 847 sq. (B. P.)

Dunlap, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Chester County, Pa., in 1744; educated at New Jersey College; licensed to preach by the Donegal

Presbytery in 1776; in 1808 called to the presidency of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa.; in 1812 resigned on account of increasing infirmities, and died Nov. 12, 1818. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 422.

Dunlap, William, an eminent American painter, was born at Perth Amboy in 1766. He commenced painting portraits in crayons at the age of sixteen. The next year he spent some time near Princeton, N. J., then the headquarters of Washington. Here he saw the general often, and painted his portrait and that of his wife. He resided three years in London, and returned to America in 1787. In 1821 he began the picture of Christ Rejected, at New York. He afterwards painted the Bearing of the Cross and the Calvary, which was considered his best production, and gained him considerable reputation. Mr. Dunlap wrote a History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts in the United States (1834, 2 vols. 8vo), and a History of the Stage in the United States (2 vols. 8vo). He died in 1835. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Dunlop, William, an English clergyman, was born in Glasgow in 1692. In 1712 he went to Utrecht, where he spent two years, and in 1716 was promoted to be regius professor of divinity and church history. He often preached in the churches at Edinburgh. He died there in 1720. His works are Sermons (2 vols. 12mo), and an Essay on Confession of Faith. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dunn, Robinson Potter, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newport, R. I., May 31, 1825. He graduated from Brown University in 1844, with the honors of his class, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1848. He was licensed the same year, and began preaching in the First Presbyterian Church, Camden, N. J. In 1851 he was called to the chair of rhetoric and English literature in Brown University. He died at Newport, R. I., Aug. 28, 1867. Dr. Dunn was a frequent contributor to the Princeton Review and Bibliotheca Sacra; and translated and edited one volume of Lange's Commentary on the Old Test. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 84.

Dunn, Samuel, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mevagissey, Cornwall, England, Feb. 18, 1798. He was converted at fourteen years of age, licensed in 1817, and in 1819 joined the Conference at Bristol. In 1822 he went as missionary to the Shetland Isles, in response to an appeal from Adam Clarke. After an eminently successful missionary work, he returned and served the following circuits: Newcastle-on-Tyne, Rochdale, Manchester, Sheffield, Lancaster, Edinburgh, Camborne, Dudley, Halifax, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham. In 1849 he was expelled, with two others, as the result of the "Fly-sheet Controversy," which event had no bearing upon his moral character, but was the occasion of one of the largest secessions from English Wesleyanism. A fine church was built for him at Camborne, which he served from 1850 to 1861. In 1862 he became pastor of a church in Sheffield, where he remained until 1864. In 1865 he came to America and preached in pulpits that were opened to him. He joined the New York East Conference in 1867, and became supernumerary the same year, in which relation he continued until his death, Jan. 24, 1882. His life was one of great usefulness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 76.

Dunster, Charles, an English clergyman, was rector of Petworth, Sussex. He published some works on literary criticism, and Observations on Luke's Gospel (1805):—On Matthew's Gospel (1806); and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dupanloup, Felix Antoine Philibert, a French prelate, was born at St. Félix (old department of Mont Blanc), Jan. 3, 1802. He studied at Paris, was ordained priest, and acquired the reputation of a good preacher and catechist. In 1841 he was appointed professor of sacred eloquence in the theological faculty of Paris, and attracted to the Sorbonne large audiences. Archbishop Affre appointed him grand vicar, and he also held several court offices. He was appointed bishop of Orleans in 1849, and died Oct. 11, 1878. Dupanloup was an earnest advocate of education, morality, and piety, occupying in these regards the high position of conservative progress. On the establishment of the Roman republic he wrote a pamphlet upon the temporal sovereignty of the pope. In 1850 he published the first volume of a work entitled De l'Éducation, which has been greatly admired. In 1854 he took the place of Tissoit in the Académie Française. On the occasion of the re-erection of the statue of Joan of Arc at Orleans he delivered an eloquent panegyric on that heroine. His writings are enumerated in Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Vapereau, Dict. des Contemporains, s. v.; and were published collectively as Œuvres Choies (Paris, 1873-75, 7 vols.).

Duperron, Jacques Davy, a French prelate, nephew of another of the same name, was grand chaplain to Henrietta, queen of England, and bishop of Angoulême and of Evreux. He died Feb. 9, 1649. He published the controversial works of his uncle.

Dupont, Jacques Marie Antoine Célestin, a French prelate, was born at Iglesias, Sardinia, Feb. 2, 1792, of a French family settled there. He studied first at Villa Franca, next in the seminary at Nice, and finally in that of St. Irenæus, at Lyons, where he was ordained priest in 1814; became private secretary to cardinal Colonna d'Istria, devoted himself to the study of the law, and was received as doctor in utroque at the University of Turin, April 10, 1815. In 1821 he was appointed canon of Sens, in 1822 one of the vicars-general of the same diocese, in 1823 bishop in partibus of Samosata, and bishop of St. Dié, May 9, 1830; was raised to the metropolitan see of Avignon, May 1, 1839; in 1841 he was transferred to the bishopric of Bourges, made cardinal in 1847, and died May 27, 1859. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duport, James, D.D., son of the following, a learned Græcist, was born in 1606; educated at Westminster school and Trinity College; became professor of Greek at Cambridge in 1632; prebend in Lincoln Cathedral in 1641; dean of Peterborough in 1664; master of Magdalen College, Cambridge, in 1668; rector of Aston-Flamville and Burbach about 1672, and died July 17, 1679, leaving numerous classical works on ancient literature, for which see Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Duport, John, D.D., an English divine, was born at Sheepshead, Leicestershire. He was fellow, then master, of Jesus College, Cambridge, once proctor (1590) and three times vice-chancellor of that university (1590 sq.), and prebendary of Ely (1609). He died in 1617. He was one of the translators of the king James version of the Bible.

Duprat, Antoine, a French prelate, was born at Issoire, Auvergne, Jan. 17, 1463; educated first in a Benedictine abbey, and finally under the direction of archbishop Boyer, who was his relative; was soon raised to civil office, including the presidency of Parliament, and eventually became chancellor under Francis I. He was ordained priest in 1516, soon after made archbishop of Sens, later cardinal, and died July 8, 1535. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duprat, Guillaume, a French prelate, son of the preceding, was born in 1507; became bishop of Clermont in 1528, and distinguished himself among the French members of the Council of Trent. He died in his castle of Beauregard in 1560. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Dupre, John, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1758, and died in 1885. He published Sermons (1782-87, 2 vols.) :—Discourses (1815, 2 vols.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dupreau (Lat. Prætorius), GABRIEL, a French theologian, was born at Marcoussis in 1511. He taught theology at the College of Navarre, and distinguished himself by the zeal with which he opposed the doctrines of Luther and Calvin. He died at Péronne, April 19, 1588, leaving, Du Devoir d'un Capitaine, translated from the Latin of Claude Cotereau (Poitiers, 1547) :—De la Puissance et Sapience de Dieu, etc., translated from the Greek (Paris, 1557) :—Des Fauz Prophètes (ibid. 1564) :—La Synagogue de l'Antechrist (ibid. eod.) :—and especially De Sectis Hæreticorum (ibid. 1569), with others, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Du Puis, MATTHIAS, a French missionary, was born in Picardy; took the habit of a Dominican at Paris, March 23, 1641, and was sent in 1644 into the mission fields of America. He remained at Guadaloupe until 1650, when he returned to France, and lived successively at Caen, Langres, and Orleans, at which last place he died, about 1655, leaving a work on his mission (Caen, 1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Du Puy, HUGUES, a French crusader, went to Palestine in 1096 with his wife (the sister of Éverard de Poisieu) and three sons. He was one of the chief captains of the Christian army. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Du Puy, RAYMOND, nephew of the preceding, second grand-master of the Knights of Malta, was born in Dauphiny about 1080. He entered the Hospital of St. John at Jerusalem, and after having attended on the poor and the sick pilgrims there for more than twenty years, was elected president about 1121. Du Puy organized the Knights of Malta into a military body, designed to defend the holy places against the infidels. Then his order was divided into three classes, of which the first comprised all noblemen, the second the priests and chaplains, and the third, under the name of servant brothers, private persons. He gave them, at the same time, rules, which were confirmed by the pope in 1127. He contributed very strongly to the taking of Ascalon in 1154, and defeated with his chevaliers the sultan at the battle of Nouredin. He died in 1160, from the effect of the wounds which he received in this latter engagement. He has been placed among the number of the saints of the order of Malta. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duquesne (d'Icard), ARNAUD BERNARD, a French theologian, was born at Paris in 1732; became doctor in the Sorbonne, vicar-general of Soissons, and treasurer of the Bastille, and died in his native city in 1791, leaving, Retraite Spirituelle (Paris, 1772) :—L'Évangile Médié (ibid. 1773) :—L'Année Apostolique (ibid. 1791) :—Les Grandeurs de Marie (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duquesnoy, FRANCIS (called the Fleming), a respectable sculptor, was born at Brussels in 1594, and went to Italy while young for instruction in the art. His statue of St. Susanna, for the Church of the Madonna at Loretto, has been highly extolled. For the basilica of St. Peter's he executed a colossal statue of St. Andrew, which is one of the finest productions of modern art. He died at Leghorn in 1646. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Duran. See PROFITAT.

Durand, a French Benedictine, was born about 1012 at Neubourg, in the diocese of Évreux. He was the nephew of Gérard, abbot of St. Vandrille, and while young adopted the rule of St. Bernard at Rouen, where he studied philosophy, music, and theology, so that he became well known among the prelates of Normandy for his learning. William the Bastard sent him to take charge of the abbey of St. Martin of Troarn, in 1059, where he distinguished himself for the maintenance of ecclesiastical discipline. He had a very fine and strong voice, and composed many chants and anthems. Durand died about 1089, in his own abbey, leaving only a dogmatic treatise entitled Du Corps et du Sang de Jésus Christ (preceded by about nine hundred hexameter verses, and printed in the Bibliotheca Maxima Patrum, xviii), besides two brief epitaphs. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Durand (de Maillane), PIERRE TOUSSAINT, a famous French jurist, was born at St. Remy, in Provence, in 1729, and died at Aix in 1814. He defended the rights of the Gallican Church against the pretensions of the Roman see, and published Dictionnaire de Droit Canonique (Avignon, 1761, and since) :—Institutes du Droit Canonique (translated from the Latin of Lancelot, Lyons, 1770, 3 vols.) :—Les Libertés de l'Église Gallicane (ibid. 1771, 5 vols.). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Durant, HENRY, LL.D., a Congregational minister and teacher, was born at Acton, Mass., June 18, 1802; studied at Phillips Academy, Andover, and graduated from Yale College in 1827; for two years thereafter was principal of the Garrison Forrest Academy, in Baltimore Co., Md.; and in 1829 became tutor in Yale College. While in this position he pursued the course of study in the theological seminary, and graduated in 1833. Dec. 25 of that year he was ordained pastor of the Byfield Church (Newbury), and was dismissed therefrom in 1849. Meanwhile, in 1847 and until 1851, he was principal of Dummer Academy, in Byfield. In April, 1853, he went to California, and in June following opened the school in Oakland, and was its principal until it became the College of California in 1854. It was merged in the University of California in 1869. Up to that date Dr. Durant had been professor of ancient languages. From 1870 to 1872 he was president of the university, but, at the latter date, illness compelled him to resign. He died in Oakland, Jan. 22, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 423.

Durant, JOHN, an English nonconformist divine, was born in 1620, and ejected in 1662. He published, Salvation of the Saints (1653) :—Six Sermons (1655) :—Spiritual Seamen (eod.) :—Comfort and Counsel (1658); and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Durbin, JOHN PRICE, D.D., an eminent Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., in 1800. He was converted in his eighteenth year; served some time as local preacher; but, because of his vehement style of delivery, his health gave out, and obliged him to resort to conversational preaching in the cabins of his neighbors. In 1820 he entered the Ohio Conference, and was appointed to Greenville Circuit; and now, on the saddle, he began his search for knowledge, struggling through various books, including the English, Latin, and Greek grammars, until 1822, when he was stationed on a circuit twelve miles from Oxford, the seat of the Miami University, which institution he immediately attended. In 1825 he entered the Cincinnati College, where he completed his course, and received the degree of A.M. After being seven years in the ministry, he was elected professor of languages in Angusta College, Ky., which position he held two years. His health then failing, he was appointed agent for the college, and in its behalf visited the Eastern cities. His eloquence made him famous, and soon his name was sufficient to call together thousands. In 1832 he was elected to the editorship of the Christian Advocate, in New York; in 1834 was transferred to the New York Conference, and elected president of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pa.; in 1836 was transferred to the Philadelphia Conference, of which he remained a member during life. In 1842 and 1843 he travelled in Europe and the East, and published, as the result, four volumes of Observations. In 1844 he was a delegate to the General Conference, where he took an active part, and exhibited great ability in the contest concerning slavery. Having vacated his office in Dickinson College, he, in 1850, was appointed as missionary secretary, and, under his control, Methodist Episcopal missions were extended into China, India, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Bulgaria, Italy, and South America; and the Church entered upon a new era of princely giving. He died Oct. 18, 1876. Besides the above books of travel, Dr. Durbin edited the American edition of Wood's Mosaic History of the Creation, with Notes (8vo); and contributed largely to various periodicals. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 33; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Dûre, GEORG VAN DER (better known as Georgius Aportanus), the reformer of East Frisia, was born at Zwolle, and died at Emden in 1526. He was the first who openly opposed the Catholic Church at Emden in 1519, and preached against her from the same pulpit in which the doctrine of Rome was defended. Dûre's influence caused all priests to be expelled from the Roman Catholic churches, and Emden became the nucleus from which Protestant missionaries were sent to the Netherlands. Durel (or Durell), JOHN, D.D., a learned English divine, was born at St. Helier's, in the isle of Jersey, in 1625, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, and at Saumur, France. He was minister at St. Malo, but came to England, and was very instrumental in establishing the new Episcopal French Church in London, in which he officiated for some years. In April, 1663, he was made prebendary in the cathedral of Salisbury, and, Feb. 11 following, succeeded to the canonry of Windsor. July 1, 1668, he was installed into the fourth prebend of Durham, and in 1677 was given the deanery of Windsor. He had also the living of Witney, in Oxfordshire, conferred upon him. He died June 8, 1688. His works are numerous. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dûren, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Duriense), held at Dûren, near Aix-la-Chapelle. 1. In A.D. 748, under Pepin, who called a synod for the restoration of churches, and for the relief of the poor. 2. In A.D. 761, a national council under Pepin. 3. In A.D. 775, under Charlemagne. 4. In A.D. 779, under Charlemagne. The council, composed of bishops, nobles, and abbots, passed twenty-four capitula upon discipline, one of which enforces payment of tithes.

Durfee, CALVIN, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Pittsfield, Mass., Oct. 6, 1797. He studied at Lenox Academy; graduated at Williams College in 1825; studied theology with Dr. Woodbridge of Hadley; was ordained in Hunter, N. Y., April 21, 1828, and served that church until August, 1835. From March 2, 1836, until July 15, 1851, he was pastor in South Dedham (now Norwood), Mass.; from 1851 to 1855, acting pastor in Brooklyn, O.; from 1855 to 1858, financial agent of Williams College; from 1854 to 1856, a trustee of Western Reserve College; from 1860 to 1865, acting pastor in South Williamstown, and continued to reside at Williamstown until his death, Nov. 20, 1879. He was also a member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society. Besides publishing various discourses and other pamphlets, he issued a History of Williams College (1860);—Williams' Obituary Record, fourteen pamphlets (1866-79);—Biographical Annals of Williams College (1871). See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 17.

Dûrga, one of the principal forms in which the consort of Siva (q. v.), the Hindû god, is represented. She is possessed of great power, being endowed with the distinctive attributes of all the gods. She is generally represented with ten arms, each of which is supplied with a warlike weapon. She obtained the name of Dûrga in the following manner: In remote ages, a giant named Durga, having performed austerities of extraordinary merit in honor of Brahma, obtained his blessing, and with it great power. He conquered the three worlds; dethroned all the gods except the Trimurti; banished them from the heavens to the forests, and compelled them to worship him. Religion was abolished, and the Brahmins forsook the reading of the Vedas. The gods, in their distress, applied to Siva for assistance, and he prevailed upon Parvâti, his wife, to attempt the destruction of the giant. She undertook the task. Durga set out to meet her with a great army, while she prepared to receive his attack with a thousand arms. A great conflict ensued, in which the giant and all his forces were destroyed. The gods immediately ascended their hitherto vacant thrones, and, in return for so signal a deliverance, immortalized the victory by transferring to the conquering goddess the name of Dûrga. She is extensively and enthusiastically worshipped throughout Eastern India. The wealthy natives have images of Dûrga in their houses, made of gold, silver, brass, copper, crystal, stone, or mixed metal, which are daily adored. Her ten-armed figure is approached with the utmost reverence. On either side images of her two sons are usually placed, and around her are commonly represented a multitude of demigoddesses, the companions of Dûrga in her wars. She is regarded as the patroness of thieves and robbers, who hold her in great veneration. For this reason the Dakvits or bandits of Bengal are scrupulous in their devotions to her, and before setting out on their marauding excursions dedicate to her a portion of the spoils to be taken. See KALI; PARVATI.

DÛRGA PÛJAH, an annual festival celebrated among the natives of eastern India, in honor of the goddess Dûrga (q. v.). It lasts fifteen days, twelve of which are devoted to preparation and three to worship. For these occasions multitudes of images are prepared, of a composition of wood, hay, clay, or other light and cheap material. They vary from a few inches to fifteen or twenty feet in height, but are usually of the size of a human body. The first part of the ceremony consists in the consecration of the idols, at the completion of which the spirit of Durga is supposed to enter the image. Then the worship of the goddess commences with great energy and intense devotion. Every conceivable ceremony, gyration, carousal, dance, and sacrifice is performed for three days and three nights. On the morning of the fourth day the idols are unconsecrated, and the goddess dismissed from her earthly habitation. The owners now carry these images forth to the banks of the Ganges, where, after various rites and ceremonies, the carriers suddenly make an assault upon them, violently break them in pieces, and cast their broken fragments into the depths of the river. See HINDUISM.

Durie, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, was made abbot of Melrose about Sept. 24, 1527, and became bishop of Galloway in 1541. He probably died in September, 1558. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 278.

Durinn, in Norse mythology, was one of the most famous and oldest dwarfs, whom Odin endowed with human form and powers of mind. He and Mödsognir were excellent workmen in metals.

Duriotorus, sixth bishop of Rennes, about the middle of the 7th century.

Dursch, Johann Georg Martin, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1801. Having acted as professor of the gymnasium at Ehingen-on-the-Danube for fourteen years, he was in 1842 preacher at Wurmelingen, and in 1850 at Rottweil, where he died, Feb. 22, 1881. He published, Geschichte der christl. Religion und Kirche (Ehingen, 1834):—Das Verhältniss der Schule zu Kirche und Staat (Ulm, 1838):—Aesthetik (Stuttgart, 1839):—Allgemeiner Commentar über die Psalmen (Carlsruhe, 1842):—Symbolik der christlichen Religion (Tübingen, 1858, 2 vols.):—Der Symbolische Charakter der christlichen Religion und Kunst (Schaffhausen, 1860). Dutch Version of the Scriptures. Dutch (sometimes styled "Low Dutch," to distinguish it from "High Dutch," or German) is the language spoken by all classes in Holland. It is also used to a great extent in South Africa, more or less in Java, the Moluccas and the other Dutch colonies, and among the Dutch colonists in the United States. The first Dutch version was probably the one published at Delft in 1477, under the title De Bybel dat nire Testament. 2 Delle . . . vol overgheset ut den Latine in Duytsche (fol.). There is no doubt that this edition was followed by others, for in the edict published Oct. 14, 1529, at the command of Charles V, three editions of the New Test. are mentioned, which were condemned. In 1528 there was published by W. Vorstmann, at Antwerp, De Bibel Tgeheele oude ende nieuwe Testament met grooter naerichtheyt na dem Latijnschen text gecorrigeret. This is said to have been the second of the editions of the Bible condemned by Charles V, because they were designed for Catholics. In 1535 H. Petersen published, at Antwerp, Dry bibel Tgeheele oude ende Nieuwe Testament, met groter naerichtheyt ghecorrigeert. In 1560 N. Bieskens van Diest published Der Bibel inhoudende dat oude ende Nieuwe Testament, and in 1563 L. Kindern published another edition, in which 1 John v, 7, is wanting. This edition is remarkable as having been printed op de Noordsee. In 1565 was published at Emden, in folio, Biblia dat is de gantsche Heylighe Schrift grondelick ende trouwelick verduyschet, met verklaringhe duysterer woorden, reden en spreucken, ende verscherden lectien. This is a translation of Luther's version, known under the name of Uylenspiegel-Bijbel, or Deux-des-Bijbel, according to the glosses in Eccles. xix, 5 and Neh. iii, 5. In 1571 was published Biblia dat is de gantsche Heylighe Schrift, grondelick ende trouwelick verduyschet. Met verklaringhe duysterer woorden, reden en spreucken, ende verscherden Lectien die in andere lofsike oversettinghen ghevondem, ende hier aen de Cunt toe gheset

syn. This edition is very rare, having been printed at Ghent under the Spanish sway. In the same year the necessity of procuring an improved version was publicly discussed, but it was not until the famous Synod of Dort, in 1618-19, that actual preparations were made for immediate commencement of the work. For the translation of the Old Test. were chosen John Bogerman (1576-1637), first professor of theology at Franeker, a very learned and able man, but odious to the Remonstrants for his translation of Beza's severe treatise, De la Punition des Hérétiques, his polemical work against Grotius, and his arbitrary bearing as president of the great synod; Willem Baudart, pastor at Zutphen; Gerson Bucer, author of De Gubernatione Ecclesie, which drew upon him the hatred of James I. For the translation of the New Test. and Apocrypha were chosen Jacobus Rolandus, minister at Amsterdam; Hermanus Faulkelius (1569-1621), minister at Middelburg, and Petrus Cornelli, minister at Enkhuysen. As substitutes for the Old Test. company were chosen Antonius Thysius, professor at Harderwyk, afterwards at Leyden; Jacobus Rolandus and H. Faulkelius, as above named. Those for the New Test. were Festius Hommius, minister at Leyden; Antonius Walæus, professor at Leyden, and Jadocus Hoingius, rector of the academy at Harderwyk. Besides the translators, there were appointed revisers on the nomination of the delegates from the different provinces. These were—

A. FOR THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Gelderland.—Antonius Thysius.

South Holland.—Johannes Polyander, professor at Leyden.

North Holland.—Petrus Plancius, eminent for his scientific attainments.

Zeeland.—Jadocus Larens, minister at Flushing.

Friesland.—Sibrandus Lubbertus, professor at Franeker, famous for his skill in controversy against Bellarmine, Socinus, Grotius, and others.

Overijssel.—Jacobus Revius, rector of a college at Leyden.

Groningen.—Francis Gomar (1503-1641), professor of theology.

B. FOR THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Gelderland.—Sebastian Damman, minister at Zutphen.

South Holland.—Festus Hommius.

North Holland.—Goerinus Geldorpis.

Zeeland.—Antonius Walæus.

Friesland.—Bernardus Fullenius, minister at Leeuwarden.

Overijssel.—Johannes Langins, but he removing from the province the next year, Kaspar Sibelius of Deventer was put in his place.

Groningen.—Ubbø Emmlus, professor at Groningen.

A petition was presented to the states-general, requesting them to undertake the expense of the work. The translators of the Old Test. commenced their work at Leyden in 1626, and completed it in 1632; those of the New Test. commenced in 1628, and completed in 1634. Each book was printed as soon as finished, and a copy was sent to each of the revisers. The revision of the Old Test. was begun in 1633, and completed in 1634. The revisers of the New Test. commenced their undertaking in the latter year. None of the translators long survived the completion of the work. The first edition of this version was published at Leyden, by Paulus Aertsz van Ravensheyn, in 1637, under the title Biblia dat is . . . des ouden en des nieuwen Testaments. Nu eerst door Last der Hoogh-Mog Heeren Staten General . . . en volgens het Beslyt van de Synode Nationael, gehouden tot Dordrecht, inde Jaeren 1618 ende 1619. Without giving the titles, we will only mention that meanwhile at least six other editions were published. That the version published in 1637 was repeatedly issued is a matter of course. When the first edition was published the Remonstrants were opposed to the translation; but when they had carefully examined it, they were so struck with its faithfulness and accuracy that they adopted the Old Test. as their own. After the lapse of more than forty years, a version of the New Test. was executed expressly for their use by Christian Hartsoeker, an Arminian minister at Rotterdam, and was published at Amsterdam, by Hendrick en Dirk, in 1680, under the title Het Nieuwe Testament of verbondt Uit het Grieksch op nieuws vertaelt door Christian Hartsoeker Bedinaer de H. Evang. in de remonstrantsche gemeente tot Rotterdam. Met byvoeging van eenige Korte aenteekeningen. This version, although professedly a new translation from the Greek, chiefly followed that of the synod. For a long time the Lutherans and Mennonites used the translation of Nicolaus Bieskens, first published in 1560; but in 1648 M. A. Viszcher prepared Biblia, Dat is de gantsche H. Schrifture verootende alle de Boecken des Ouden ende des Nieuwen Testaments. Van nieuws uyt D. M. Luthers Hoog-Duytsche Bibel in onse Nederlandsche tale getrouwelyck over-geset, tot dienst van de Christelycke Gemeenten donveranderde Augsburgische Confessie in dese Nederlande (Gedruct t'Amsterdam by Rieuwert Dircksz van Baardt). The title-page is followed by an engraving, representing Martin Luther holding in his hand the Augsburg Confession. Below the engraving the following lines are printed in Latin and Dutch:

"Roma orbem domnit, Romam sibi Papa subegit,
Viribus illa sola, fraudibus iste sule.
Quanto iste major Lutherus, major et illa,
Istum illamque uno qui domuit calama."

This Bible, also called Viszcher's Bible, was henceforth used by the Lutherans, and contains, besides all the prefaces, Luther's marginal readings.

In 1717 a New Test. was published at Amsterdam, the printing having been done at the expense of Peter I of Russia; in 1721 another edition was published, also at the expense of the emperor, in five volumes. The Dutch translation is printed on one column, the other having been left blank, because the emperor intended to have the Russian version printed on it.

In 1825 a new translation, in the modern style and orthography, by the learned Prof. Van der Palm, of Leyden, was published; and though not adopted in churches, it is greatly esteemed and extensively used.

A revised edition of the established version was published in 1834; the orthography introduced was that according to the system of Prof. Siegenbeek, which had received the sanction of the government. This system has, however, fallen into disrepute, and was not adopted in subsequent editions. Within a recent period the Netherlands Bible Society appointed a commission to modernize the orthography of the Bible, and the alterations which were introduced, both in spelling and in some points of grammar, were considerable. All the editions printed now by that society are with these alterations.

The British and Foreign Bible Society also issued several editions of the authorized Dutch version. The first edition, consisting of five thousand copies of the New Test., appeared in 1809, and other editions of the entire Bible followed since. The total number of copies issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society up to March 31, 1884, amounted to 1,823,338, besides five thousand copies of the New Test. with English. The Netherlands Bible Society has distributed, since its formation in 1815, altogether 1,530,844 copies. (B. P.)

Duthac, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Ross, and was of a noble family. He probably died in 1249, and is commemorated as a saint March 8. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 186.

Dutherius, third bishop of Nicæa, in France, is said to have been slain by the Vandals A.D. 483 or 493.

Duthracht. (1) A female Irish saint, commemorated Oct. 25, is variously called also Durach and Druchna. (2) An Irish saint, commemorated May 16, is said to have been abbot of Liathdruim.

Duttenhofer, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 3, 1742, at Nürtingen, in Württemberg. He studied at Tübingen and Leipsic; was in 1771 deacon at Beilstein; in 1777, pastor at Grunau; and, in 1780, fourth preacher at St. Nicolaus, in Heilbronn; in 1800, was made senior of the ministry, and in 1806 the Helmsbüttel University honored him with the theological doctorate. He died March 17, 1814, leaving, Untersuchungen über Pietismus (Halle, 1787);—Predigten (Heilbronn, 1792);—Geschichte der Religionschwärmerien (ibid. 1796–99, 3 vols.; 2d ed. 1802);—Versuch über den letzten Grundsatz der christlichen Sittenlehre (Tübingen, 1801);—Betrachtungen über die Geschichte des Christenthums (Heilbronn, 1813). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 849 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 385, 484, 486, 732; ii, 98, 208. (B. P.)

Duval, André, a French theologian, was born at Pontoise, Jan. 15, 1564, and died at Paris, Sept. 9, 1638. He enjoyed the favor of cardinal Du Perron, and through his influence he was called to the theological chair in Paris. For some time he was also superior-general of the Carmelites of France, and dean of the theological faculty at Paris. He wrote, De Potestate Ecclesie (Paris, 1612);—De Romani Pontificis Potestate (ibid. 1614);—De Summi Pontificis Auctoritate (1622). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Duval (de Dampierre), Charles Antoine Henri, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Hans in 1746, and became, by marriage, lord of Dampierre-le-Château. He exercised the functions successively of grand-vicar, canon, and archbishop of Paris until 1791; but, as he would not take the constitutional oath, he was incarcerated until 1794. Eight years after, he was nominated by the first consul to the bishopric of Clermont, and, in 1811, was called to the national council at Paris, in which he took part with the majority who resisted the will of the emperor. In 1814 Louis XVIII appointed him member of the commission of affairs of the Church of France; in 1828 he signed the memoir against the ordinances of June. His Christian charity had won him the affections and the respect of his flock. He died in 1833. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duval, Jean, a French prelate and Orientalist, was born at Clamecy (Nivernais) in 1697. Having finished his studies, he entered, in 1615, the order of the barefooted Carmelites, adopting the name of Bernard de Sainte-Thérèse, afterwards went to the East as a missionary, and was appointed bishop of Bagdad in 1658. He died at Paris, April 10, 1669, leaving some very important works on the Oriental languages, which have remained in MS. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Duvoisin, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French prelate, was born at Langres, Oct. 16, 1744. Being vicar-general of the bishop of Laon, he refused to take the oath of allegiance to the civil authority, and emigrated to Brunswick. In 1802 he returned to France, was made bishop of Nantes, and enjoyed the confidence of the imperial family to a high degree. Duvoisin died July 9, 1813, leaving, among other works, Dissertation Critique sur la Vision de Constantin (1774);—Autorité des Livres de Moïse (1788);—Démonstration Évangélique, with an Essai sur la Tolérance. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Duzak, a place, according to the ancient Persian system of religion, where Ahriman, the devils, and the souls of the wicked are thoroughly cleansed and purified by fire, after which they are restored to the divine favor.

Dvalin, in Norse mythology, was a dwarf who possessed a knowledge of the art of making swords for battle.

Dwight, HARRISON GRAY OTIS, D.D., a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, was born at Conway, Mass., Nov. 22, 1803. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1825 and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1828, and in 1830 sailed for the East. After spending two years exploring the field, he settled as missionary at Constantinople in 1832, and there remained nearly thirty years, preaching, superintending schools, and editing a religious paper. He also published a very popular book entitled Christianity Brought Home from the East. He was killed by a railroad accident in Vermont, Jan. 25, 1862. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1862, p. 662.

Dwija (twice born), an appellation given to a Hindû Brahmin after his investiture with the sacred cord. See CORD, INVESTITURE WITH THE.

Dwynwen, a Welsh saint, patroness of lovers, appears to have lived in the 5th century, and is commemorated Jan. 25.

Dwywan is the Noah of the British islands. He and his wife Dwywach are the progenitors of the new-born human race. The sea, Llyon, broke from its bounds and flooded the world. The two, Dwywan and his wife, saved themselves in a sailless, but well-constructed, vessel, made by God himself, and took on board a male and a female of every kind of animal. The ship drifted to Britain, from which country the whole world was again peopled.

Dyava, in Hindû mythology, is the goddess of air; every Brahmin offers her daily a little butter and a few hairs from the forehead of a holy cow.

Dyce, ALEXANDER, oldest son of a general in the East India Company's service, was born in George Street, Edinburgh, June 30, 1797, and received his bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1819. Between 1822 and 1825 he served two curacies, and died May 9, 1869. His publications were chiefly in the line of literary criticism. Besides editions of Greene, Webster, Shirley, Middleton, Skelton, Beaumont and Fletcher, Marlowe, Peele, Bentley, Collins, Pope, Akenside, Beattie, and others, he published a new and complete edition of the Works of William Shakespeare (1853-58, 6 vols. 8vo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyer, George, an English Baptist minister and antiquary, was born in London, March 15, 1755, and educated at Cambridge. He preached at Oxford for some years, and then removed to London in 1792. He died March 2, 1841, leaving, An Inquiry into the Nature of Subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles (1790):—Poems and Critical Essays on Poetry (1802, 2 vols.):—History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, etc. (1814), and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyer, Mary, one of the martyrs among New England Friends, was born in Rhode Island. During a visit to England she joined the Friends, and was recognised as a minister in that denomination. Returning to America she began to preach in Boston, from which place she was expelled in 1657, and subsequently, in 1658, from New Haven. In visiting four Friends imprisoned in Boston she was thrown into jail, in 1659, but was soon discharged, and returned to her home. Soon, however, she came again to Boston, was arrested, cast into prison, tried, and condemned to death a second time. At the gallows she was reprieved. In March, 1660, she once more visited Boston, was arrested, tried, condemned, and hanged April 1 following. See History of Friends in America, vol. i, chap. xi. (J. C. S.)

Dyer, William, an English Nonconformist divine, who late in life became a Quaker, was born about 1636, ejected in 1662, and died in 1696. He published Sermons, etc. (1663-83). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyfnan, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was the son of Brychan, and is commemorated April 23.

Dyfnog, a Welsh saint of the 7th century, is commemorated Feb. 13.

Dyke, Daniel (1), an English Baptist, born at Epping, Essex, about 1617, took his degree at Cambridge University, and soon became known for his great learning and useful preaching, thereby securing a valuable living at Great Hadham. In 1653 he was made one of Oliver Cromwell's chaplains, but refused Church preferment at the Restoration in 1660, and preferred persecution with the Dissenters. In 1668 he was chosen joint pastor with William Kiffin, at Devonshire Square, and continued a faithful laborer there until his death, in 1688. His modesty prevented him from printing anything, but he joined others in writing three controversial tracts, and he edited a volume of Sermons by his father. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 433-435.

Dyke, Daniel (2), an English Puritan divine, was educated at Cambridge. He was minister at Coggeshall, Essex, and at one time settled at St. Albans. He was suspended in 1388, and died in 1614. His writings (some of them posthumously published) include Self-Deceiving (1614):—Repentance (1631):—Six Evangelical Histories (1617). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dyke, Jeremiah, an English Puritan divine, father of Daniel (1), was minister at Epping, Essex, in 1609, and died in 1620. He wrote various sermons and theological treatises (1619-40), and the Worthy Communicant (1642). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dymond, JONATHAN, a noted English moralist, was born at Exeter in 1796, and became a member of the Society of Friends. He was a linendraper. In 1823 he published An Inquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity. He died May 6, 1828. In 1829 his Essay on the Principles of Morality and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind was published (2 vols. 8vo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Dynāmis (power), in the system of Basilides, as described by Irenæus (i, 24), is named, together with Sophia (wisdom), as following Nous (mind), Logos (reason), and Phronesis (thought) in the series of emanations from the unborn Father.

Dynamius. (1) Bishop of Angoulême, A.D. 450. (2) Third bishop of Béziers, about the middle of the 15th century. (3) Thirteenth bishop of Avignon, A.D. 605-627. (4) Thirty-fifth bishop of Avignon for twenty-three years, in the early part of the 7th century.

Lyothelites (δυοθελιται), a name given to those orthodox Christians in the 7th century who held that there were two wills in Christ, a divine and a human, in opposition to the Monothelites (q. v.). The sixth œcumenical council (i. e. the third Œcumenical Council of Constantinople), called by the emperor Constantine Pogonatus in A.D. 680, asserted the doctrine of two wills in Christ in the following terms: "Two wills and two natural modes of operation united with each other, without opposition or change, so that no antagonism can be found to exist between them, but a constant subjection of the human will to the divine." The champions of monothelism were anathematized, as well as the patriarchs of Constantinople and the pontiff Honorius. The monothelite doctrine was placed in the ascendancy in 711, but two years later Anastasius II ascended the throne and established dyothelism, whereupon the monothelites fled the country.

Dyscolius, sixth bishop of Rheims, about A.D. 846.

Dysen, in Norse mythology, are feminine protecting spirits in general. The name has a threefold signification: (1) it is often identical with the Walkires; (2) it is used of goddesses of destiny, good or evil; (3) it has reference specially to Freya, who was thus honored by calling her the goddess, and sacrifice was made to her in the middle of winter by the Dyssablott, so called from this service.

Dysibod (Dialbod, or Disen), an Irish prelate, was born in Ireland, and was ordained a priest at the age of thirty. He was some time afterwards made bishop, some say of Dublin. When he had governed his see ten years he was compelled to resign it, in 675. He then left Ireland, and travelled into Germany, going from place to place preaching the Gospel, for ten years. At last he arrived at a high, woody mountain, where he settled. He drew many of the order of St. Benedict to him, and founded a monastery on this mountain, which was called Mount Disibod, since changed into Disenberg. He died there, July 8, in the eighty-first year of his age. His life was written by the abbess Hildegard. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 20.

Dyzēmas. (1) Dimes, decima, tithe-day. (2) The name of the penitent thief in the apocryphal gospel. His fellow is called Gesmas or Gestas, and the soldier Longinus, from his spear (lonche).

E.

Eaba, abbot of Malmesbury, in the 8th century.

Eadbald (Lat. Edboldus), 12th bishop of London, A.D. 796.

Eadbert (i. e. Albert or Adalbert). (1) Bishop of Lindisfarne, A.D. 688; died May 6 (his day of commemoration), A.D. 698. (2) Ninth bishop of London (sometimes called Filbrith), cir. A.D. 772-788. (3) Abbot of Reculver (called also Heahbert), A.D. 747. (4) Abbot of Mercia, A.D. 747. (5) Abbot of Sherborn, A.D. 808. (6) First bishop of the South Saxons, A.D. 711. (7) Fifth bishop of the Middle Angles at Leicester, A.D. 764-787.

Eadburga (i. e. Ethelburga). (1) Daughter of Aldwulf, king of the East Angles, was abbess of Repton, in the 7th century. (2) Wilow of Wulfshere, king of Mercia, was second abbess of St. Peter's, Gloucester, A.D. 710-735.

Eadfrid (i. e. Alfred). See EADFRITH.

Eadgar (i. e. Edgar). (1) Third bishop of Lindisfarne, cir. A.D. 706-731. (2) Tenth bishop of London, A.D. 787-793.

Eadhed, a priest of Oswy, king of Northumbria; ordained by Deusdedit in 664, consecrated bishop of Lindsey in 678, and transferred to Ripon soon afterwards.

Eadie, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished divine of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland, was born at Alva, Stirlingshire, May 9, 1810. He graduated from the University of Glasgow, studied at the Divinity Hall of the Secession Church (United Presbyterian), and in 1835 was ordained pastor of the Cambridge Street Church, Glasgow, in which he speedily attained great eminence and usefulness. He was regarded as the leading representative of the denomination to which he belonged and of the city which has always been its stronghold. As a preacher he was distinguished for his hard common-sense and occasional flashes of happy illustration, for his masculine piety, deep earnestness, and breadth of sympathy, both intellectual and emotional. He was frequently called to other important charges, but was too strongly attached to Glasgow to leave. In 1836 he removed with his congregation to a new and beautiful church at Lansdowne Crescent, where his influence continued unabated until his death, June 3, 1876. Dr. Eadie bore the reputation of extensive and profound scholarship, and in 1843 was appointed by the Church to the chair of hermeneutics and the evidences of natural and revealed religion in Divinity Hall. As a critic he was acute and painstaking, as an interpreter eminently fair-minded. In the pulpit, as in the professor's chair, his strength lay in the tact with which he selected the soundest results of Biblical criticism, whether his own or that of others, and presented them in a clear and connected form with a constant view of their practical bearing. If this last fact gave a non-academic aspect to some of his lectures, it rendered them not less interesting and probably not less useful to his auditors. Being engaged in two distinct offices, either of which were sufficient to claim all his energies, he nevertheless found time for an amount of work in a third sphere, of which the same thing may be said.

Most of his works were connected with Biblical criticism and interpretation, some of them being designed for popular use and others being more strictly scientific. To the former class belong his contributions to the Eiblical Cyclopaedia of Kitto and Fairbairn, his edition of Cruden's Concordance, Oriental History, and his discourses. The Life of Dr. Kitto obtained a deserved popularity, also his Dictionary of the Bible for the Young, Lectures on the Bible to the Young, etc. His last work, the History of the English Bible (1876, 2 vols.), will probably be the most enduring memorial of his ability as an author. He is the author of valuable expositions on the Greek text of Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Thessalonians. See his Life, by Brown (Lond. 1878). (W. P. S.)

Eadred (or Heardred), bishop of Hexham, consecrated Oct. 29, 797, died in 800.

Eadric, second abbot of St. Albans, A.D. 796.

Eadsige, archbishop of Canterbury, of whose parentage and birthplace nothing seems to be known. The earliest mention of him presents him as one of the chaplains of Canute; he was then a secular, and, of course, in priest's orders. He was consecrated bishop of St. Martin's in 1085; was translated to the see of Canterbury in 1088, and repaired to Rome for the pallium. On his return home, in 1043, he was called upon to officiate at the coronation of Edward the Confessor—the memorable event of his life. He died in 1050. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, i, 489 sq.

Eadulf (or Aldwulf, Lat. Adulphus). (1) Eighth bishop of Lindsey, A.D. 796-886. (2) Fifteenth bishop of Lichfield, cir. A.D. 803-816.

Eagle, IN CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM. St. Gregory considered this bird to typify the contemplative life; other fathers regarded it as an emblem of resurrection (Ps. ciii, 5). It is the symbol of St. John the Evangelist, as it soars up to heaven and the sun; and he dwells in his Gospel and the Revelations specially on the divine discourses and the celestial glory of the Sun of Righteousness. It also represented the regeneration of the neophyte; the resurrection of the Saviour (says St. Ambrose); and renewing of the soul on earth, as glory hereafter will renew body and soul; the power of grace when it is portrayed drinking at a chalice, or in combat with a serpent, the type of evil.

Christian Inscription on a Tomb, with Eagles.

EAGLE, AS AN ARCHITECTURAL TERM, is used to designate a brazen or wooden lectern, the upper portion of which represents an eagle with outstretched wings, on the back of which is a book-rest. Many ancient examples of such lecterns remain in collegiate and cathedral churches, and a great number of new specimens have been made for use after the old models. See LECTERN.

Eagleton, WILLIAM, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Maryville, Tenn., March 25, 1796. He was educated in Maryville College, and studied theology in the South-western Theological Seminary, at the same place. In 1827 he was licensed by the Union Presbytery, and soon after was elected professor in Maryville College. In 1829 he accepted a call to the Church in Murfreesborough, where he remained till his death, March 29, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 431.

Eames, JAMES HENRY, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Dedham, Mass., Nov. 29, 1814. The first two years of his college course were spent at King College, Bristol, Tenn., and the last two at Brown University, where he graduated in 1839. He pursued his theological studies with Rev. John Bristed, of Bristol, R. I., was ordained deacon in December, 1841, and presbyter in 1842; was rector of Ascension Church, in Wakefield, for about four years, when he took charge of St. Stephen's Church in Providence, remaining there until 1850, and then engaged in missionary labor in Rhode Island; became rector of St. Paul's Church, Concord, N. H., in 1858, and held that position until his death, which occurred in the harbor of Hamilton, Bermuda, Dec. 10, 1877. For many years Dr. Eames was chaplain to the asylum for the insane, and performed a large amount of missionary work in New Hampshire. Three times he travelled in Europe, and spent part of several winters in Bermuda. (J. C. S.)

Eanbald (or Enbald). (1) The pupil and successor of Albert in the archiepiscopal see of York, A.D. 782. He was very vigorous in the administration of his diocese, and died at a monastery called Etlea (or Edete), Aug. 10, 796. (2) Called also Heimbald, succeeded the foregoing as archbishop of York, and his history is given with considerable detail by Alcuin. He appears to have died A.D. 812.

Eanbert, bishop of Hexham, cir. A.D. 800-806.

Eanfrith, fifth bishop of Elmham, A.D. 786.

Eanswitha (or Enswida), a British saint, commemorated Aug. 31, was the daughter of Eadba, king of Kent, and lived a virgin, in a nunnery founded by her, at Folkestone, where she died, some say in 640, others in 673.

Eardulf (Lat. Ardalphus). (1) Bishop of East Anglia (Dunwich) in 747. (2) Twelfth bishop of Rochester, cir. A.D. 762.

Earle, Jabez, D.D., an English Independent minister, was born about 1676, and educated among the Dissenters. He was assistant to the Rev. Thomas Reynolds, at the Weigh-House, London, in 1699; and in 1707 removed to Hanover Street, where he ministered more than sixty years, and died in 1768, leaving a number of Sermons and theological treatises, etc. (1706-35; new ed. 1816, 8vo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 169; ii, 6, 492, 508, 530.

Earle (or Earles), John, an English prelate, was born at York in 1601, and entered Merton College, Oxford, in 1620. He became chaplain and tutor to prince Charles, and chancellor of the cathedral of Salisbury. On the Restoration he was made dean of Westminster, and consecrated bishop of Worcester in 1662. In September, 1664, he was transferred to the see of Salisbury. He died Nov. 17, 1665, leaving Microcosmography (Lond.

1628, 8vo; 6th ed. 1630, 12mo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Earlom, RICHARD, a pre-eminent English engraver, was born in London in 1742, and was the pupil of Cipriani. He died in 1822. The following are some of his principal plates: The Holy Family; Mary Magdalene Washing the Feet of Christ; David and Bathsheba; The Repose; The Virgin and Infant; The Infant Jesus Sleeping; The Presentation in the Temple; The Virgin and Infant with St. John. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Early, JOHN, D.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Bedford County, Va., Jan. 1, 1786, of Baptist parents. He was converted in 1804; licensed to preach in 1806; and in 1807 entered the Virginia Conference, wherein he continued laboriously and faithfully till 1815, when the growing necessities of his family obliged him to locate and engage in secular business. In 1821 he re-entered the effective ranks, and labored with marvellous success until 1846, when he connected himself with the Church South, and devoted his energies to establishing and operating the Southern Book Concern. In 1854 he was elected to the episcopacy; in 1866 was granted a superannuated relation, and died in Lynchburg, Nov. 5, 1878. Bishop Early was full of the missionary spirit, and everywhere awakened missionary zeal; was one of the chief founders of Randolph-Macon College; was a man of great energy and devotedness, and held a high position in the esteem of the Church. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1878, p. 914; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Ears, TOUCHING OF. In holy communion it seems to have been the custom to touch the organs of sense with the moisture left on the lips after receiving the cup.

Earulfus, abbot and confessor, commemorated Dec. 29.

East, PRAYER TOWARDS THE. See BOWING; ORIENTATION.

Eastburn, MANTON, D.D., LL.D., a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in England, Feb. 9, 1801, being brother of James W., the poet. His parents came to America when he was a boy. He graduated from Columbia College, New York, in 1817, and in due time thereafter from the General Theological Seminary in the same city. He was ordained assistant minister of Christ Church in 1822; became rector of the Church of the Ascension in 1827; was consecrated bishop of Massachusetts Dec. 29, 1842; and died in Boston, Sept. 12, 1872. Bishop Eastburn published several addresses and essays, and edited Thornton's Family Prayers. See Drake, Dict. of Amer. Biog. s. v.; Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 183.

Easter-candle. See PASCHAL TAPER.

Easter-eggs. The egg was the symbol of creation in Egypt, and of hope and the resurrection among early Christians; and the custom of giving colored pasch eggs on Easter morning is found in the East, in the Tyrol, in Russia, in Greece, in many parts of England, where it may be traced back to the time of Edward I, and was observed at Gray's Inn in the reign of Elizabeth. In France the pasch egg is eaten before any other nourishment is taken on Easter day. Tansy pudding, according to Selden, is a memorial of the bitter herbs eaten by the Jews; and peculiar cakes in some places formed the staple fare on this day. Paul II issued a form of benediction of eggs for England, Scotland, and Ireland. Henry VIII received a paschal egg in a case of silver filigree from the pope. The Jews regarded the egg as a symbol of death.—Walcott, Sac. Archaeol. s. v. See EGG.

Easterwine (or Bosterwini), coadjutor-abbot of Wearmouth, was the nephew of Benedict, the founder of that monastery, and was born in 650. At the age of twenty-four he renounced his secular prospects, was ordained in 679, and devoted himself with singular humility and affection to the duties of his reclusive life. He died March 7, 686.

Eastlake, Sir CHARLES LOCK, an English painter, was born at Plymouth in 1793. He studied under Fuseli at the Royal Academy, and at the Louvre, in Paris. He went to Rome in 1817, and remained there many years. In 1841 he was appointed secretary to the royal commission on fine arts; from 1843 to 1847 was keeper of the National Gallery; and in 1850 was knighted, made president of the Royal Academy, and director of the National Gallery. He died in Pisa, Dec. 23, 1865. Among his most noted works are, Christ Weeping over Jerusalem; Pilgrims Arriving in Sight of Rome; Christ Blessing Little Children; Illegit and Ishmael, and the Raising of Jairus's Daughter. He wrote Materials for a History of Oil Painting, and Contributions to the Literature of the Fine Arts (posthumous; edited by lady Eastlake). A History of his life was published by lady Eastlake in London in 1870.

Eaton, THOMAS, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated from Glasgow University; was licensed to preach in June, 1807; presented by lord Douglas to the living of Kirriemuir in 1809, and ordained March 22, 1810. He died April 5, 1856, aged seventy-nine years. In him learning, knowledge, modesty, and moral worth were combined with meekness and piety. He published six different works, chiefly of a local theological character. See Fasts Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 777.

Eata (or Eckta). (1) First bishop of Hexham. A.D. 678, and the fifth of Lindisfarne, 681-685, was originally from Northumbria, and abbot of Old Melrose; he died Oct. 26, 686. (2) An anchorite of Crayke, in Yorkshire, who died in 767.

Eaton, ASA, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Maistow, N. H., July 25, 1778. His preparatory studies were begun at the age of twenty-one, and he graduated from Harvard University in 1803. On Oct. 23 of the same year Christ Church invited him to act as lay-reader, and he continued in this position until 1805, when he was ordained, and remained rector until 1829. In that year he became city missionary, laboring among the destitute until 1837. From 1837 to 1841 he was connected with St. Mary's Hall, a young ladies' school at Burlington, N. J. Then he returned to Boston, but without a regular charge, and died there, March 24, 1858. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1858, p. 341; Necrol. of Harvard College, p. 178.

Eaton, George W., D.D., LL.D., a distinguished Baptist scholar, was born near Huntingdon, Pa., July 3, 1804, and graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1829. Upon his graduation he was appointed tutor, which position he held a year or two. In 1831 he became professor of languages in Georgetown College, Ky., and in 1833 professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at Hamilton College. He subsequently filled the professorships of ecclesiastical and civil history, and of systematic theology, and was appointed president of Madison University and of the Hamilton Theological Seminary, holding the latter position until his death, Aug. 3, 1872. Dr. Eaton was a man of the widest and warmest sympathies, earnest in his convictions, and able to maintain them with fervid eloquence. (J. C. S.)

Eaton, Horace, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Sutton, N. H., Oct. 7, 1810. He studied at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1839 and from the Union

Theological Seminary in 1842. For six years he was pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church in New York city, and thereafter of the First Presbyterian Church in Palmyra, N. Y., until his death, Oct. 22, 1883. See Providence Journal, Oct. 23, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Eaton, Joseph, a veteran Baptist minister, was born at Wells, Me., June 22, 1748. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, licensed to preach in 1793, and in 1798 was ordained pastor of the Church in Wells, the service being performed in Berwick. After his resignation, in 1820, Mr. Eaton was engaged for several years in evangelistic labors in the section of the country in which he lived. His death took place in December, 1831. See Millett, History of the Baptists in Maine, p. 442. (J. C. S.)

Eaton, Joseph H., LL.D., a Baptist minister, brother of Rev. G. W. Eaton, D.D., was born in Berlin, Delaware Co., O., Sept. 10, 1812. He graduated from the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution (now Madison University) in 1837, and for three years thereafter was engaged in teaching. He was elected professor in 1841, and in 1847 president of what is now Union University, Murfreesborough, Tenn. His ordination took place in 1843, and he was pastor of the Church in the same place, having also the oversight of several county churches. His health broke down under these excessive labors, and he died, Jan. 12, 1859. See Cathcart, Baptist Cyclop. p. 358. (J. C. S.)

Eaton, Peter, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Haverhill, Mass., March 25, 1765. He studied under the Rev. Phineas Adams, graduated from Harvard College in 1787, taught a school for one year at Woburn, and then passed some time in the study of theology. Having received license, he preached his first sermon in Boxford, Jan. 10, 1789, and in October following, was installed as pastor there. In 1819 he preached the annual sermon before the Legislature of Massachusetts, and in 1820 resigned his charge at Boxford. In 1845 he removed to Andover, where he remained until his death, in April, 1848. Dr. Eaton published many valuable Sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 222.

Ebal, Mount. We extract some additional particulars from Lieut. Conder's Tent Work in Palestine, i, 88:

"There are three curious places on Ebal: one of which is a rude stone building, enclosing a space of fifty feet square, with walls twenty feet thick, in which are chambers. The Samaritans call it part of a ruined village, but its use and origin are a mystery. It resembles most the curious monuments near Hizzeh, called the 'Tombs of the Sons of Israel.' The second place is the little cave and ruined chapel of Sitt Esalmyeh, 'The Lady of Islam,' who has given her name to the mountain. It is perched on the side of a precipice, and is held sacred by the Moslems, who have a tradition that the bones of the saint were carried hither through the air from Damascus. The third place is a site the importance of which has not been previously recognized. It is a little Moslem Mukâm, said once to have been a church, called 'Amâd ed-Dîn, the 'Monument of the Faith.' The name thus preserved has no connection with Samaritan tradition, but it is undoubted that the sacred places of the peasantry often represent spots famous in Bible history. It is therefore perhaps possible that the site thus revered is none other than that of the monumental altar of twelve stones from Jordan, which Joshua erected, according to the Biblical account, on Ebal, and not on Gerizim, as the Samaritans believe, charging the Jews with having altered the names (Deut. xxvii, 4). The hill-top on which this monument stands is called Rûs el-Kâdy, 'Hill of the Judge.' It was here that the Crusaders placed Dan, the site of Jeroboam's Calf Temple, and the present name may perhaps be connected with this theory, Dan ('the Judge') being translated into the Arabic Kâdy ('Judge'), just as it has been at the true Dan, now Tell el-Kâdy, at the source of the Jordan." Ebba (Æbha, or Ebbe), abbess of Coddingham, in Berwickshire, was daughter of Ethelfrid, king of Northumbria, and sister of St. Oswald. In A.D. 679 her convent was burned, and she died Aug. 25 (her festal day), 683.

Ebbo, Saint, twenty-ninth bishop of Sens, was born at Tonnerre (Burgundy). He was of a noble family, but entered the monastery of Saint-Pierre-le-Vif; was elected abbot of it, and soon succeeded his uncle, St. Genicus, bishop of Sens. He spent the latter part of his life in a hermitage at the village of Arce, where he died in 750. He is commemorated Aug. 27. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ebbo (Lat. Ebulus), twenty-ninth bishop of Limoges, cir. A.D. 752.

Ebeling, Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Buckeburg, Nov. 3, 1668. He studied at Jena; was in 1697 professor of philosophy at Rinteln; in 1708 professor of ethics, and in 1714 doctor and professor of theology. He died Sept. 3, 1716, leaving De Mystério Trinitatis (Lemgo, 1714):—Ethica Christiana Compendium (ibid. 1715):—Examen Concilii Tridentini (ibid. 1716):—Theologia Homiletica (ibid. eod.). Ebeneszer. On the strength of Jerome's location of this spot, near Bethshemesh, Lieut. Conder proposes (Tent Work in Palest. ii. 336) to identify it with the present Deir Arbān, two miles east of Ain-Sheems, "a large village on the lower slope of a high ridge, with a well to the north, and olives on the east, west, and north" (Memoirs of Ordnance Survey, iii, 24).

Eberhard, Matthias, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Treves, Nov. 1, 1815. He studied at the clerical seminary of his native place, and received holy orders in 1839; in 1840 became chaplain of St. Castor's, at Coblenz; was called in 1843 as episcopal secretary to Treves, and appointed the same year professor of dogmatics at the clerical seminary there. In 1850 he became member of the chapter, and was consecrated in 1862 bishop of Treves. After Arnold's death, in 1864, his name was stricken from the list of candidates as persona regis minus grata, but he was elected in 1867 by the chapter. In 1869 and 1870 he was at Rome as member of the Vatican Council. The Prussian "Folk-Laws" brought him in 1873 in conflict with the government, and as he could not pay the fines, he was imprisoned in 1874. He died May 5, 1876, leaving De Tituli Sedis Apostolicæ, etc. (Treves, 1846). (B. P.)

Eberle, Christian Gustav, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born in 1813, and died Dec. 9, 1879, at Ochsenbach, in Württemberg. He published, Luthers Glaubensrichtung (Stuttgart, 1858):—Luther ein Zeichen dem widersprochen wird (ibid. 1860):—Luthers Evangelien-Auslegung aus seinen homiletischen und exegetischen Werken (ibid. 1857). Eberus, Paul, D.D., a German clergyman, was born at Kitzingen, in Franconia, Nov. 8, 1511, and was educated at Anspach. He was appointed to the professorship of philosophy in 1544, and in 1556 to that of Hebrew; in 1558 he gathered a Church in Wittenberg. He died Dec. 20, 1589. Some of his works are, Expositio Evangelion:—Dominicalium Calendarium Historicum (Wittenb. 1550, 8vo, reprinted at Basle the same year).

Eblis, the name given to the devil by the Mohammedans.

Ebon Version of the Scriptures. Ebon is the most southerly of the Marshall Islands. These islands are the second group of Micronesia, beginning from the east with the Gilbert Island. The first Scripture in this language was from the gospel of Matthew, chap. v to xi. This translation was printed at Ebon, between 1858 and 1860. The work was done by the pioneer missionaries, Revs. E. T. Doane and G. Pierson. A version of Mark, prepared by Mr. Doane, was printed at Honolulu in 1863. The Rev. B. G. Snow prepared for the press the gospels of Matthew and John, and the Acts, and revised Mark for a reprint. In 1871 he prepared the gospel of Luke and a revision of Matthew for the press. In 1877 Genesis was issued from the mission press at Ebon, translated by J. F. Whitney, who also resumed the work on Romans, left unfinished by Mr. Snow, and translated the epistles from 1 Corinthians through Philipians. These were printed at the New York Bible House in 1882, together with the book of Genesis and the three epistles of John. The Rev. E. M. Pease, who joined the mission in 1877, has resumed the work of translation of the rest of the New Test. (B. P.)

Eboras, a Persian presbyter, martyred with Miles, a bishop, and Seboas, a deacon, during the reign of Sapor II (A.D. 346); and commemorated Nov. 13.

Eborinus, sixteenth bishop of Toul, cir. A.D. 664.

Ebruharites, an order of monks among the Mohammedans, who derived their name from their founder, Ebruhar, the scholar of Nacshbendi, who came from Persia to Europe in the 14th century to propagate their faith. They professed to surrender all care about worldly concerns, and to give themselves wholly up to the contemplation of eternal objects. They were esteemed heretics by the Mohammedans generally, because they refused to go on pilgrimage to Mecca, alleging that the journey was unnecessary, as they were permitted in secret vision, while sitting in their cells, to behold the holy city.

Ebregesilus, ninth bishop of Cologne, A.D. 590.

Ebregesius, Saint, twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth bishop of Liege, A.D. 618-623; commemorated March 28.

Ebulus (Evolus, Bubrelus, or even Ermillus). (1) Third bishop of Limoges, A.D. 89. (2) Sixth bishop of Avignon, A.D. 202.

Eccard, JOHANNES, a celebrated composer of Church music, was born at Mühlhausen, on the Unstrut, Prussia, in 1553. Having received some instruction in music at home, he became, at the age of eighteen, the pupil of Orlando di Lasso at Munich. In 1574 he was again at Mühlhausen, where he resided four years, and edited, together with Johann von Burgk, his first master, a collection of sacred songs called Crepundia Sacra Helmboldi (1577). He was for some time engaged in a private family, and in 1583 became assistant conductor, and twelve years later first chapel-master, at Königsberg. In 1608 he became chief conductor of the elector's chapel in Berlin, and died in 1611. Eccard's works consist exclusively of vocal compositions, such as songs, sacred cantatas, and chorales for four or five, and sometimes for seven, eight, or even nine voices. They are instinct with a spirit of true religious feeling, and possess an interest above their artistic value. Eccard's setting of "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" is still regarded by the Germans as their representative national hymn. Eccard and his school are in the same way inseparably connected with the history of the Reformation. Of his songs a great many collections are extant. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.) s. v.; Grove, Dict. of Music, s. v.

Ecclesiā (the Church), one of the eight primary sons in the system of Valentinus (q. v.), and held to be the archetype of the lower one on earth. The Gnostics likewise had a heavenly Church, but not a distinct being. This notion is evidently a corruption of the Scriptural idea of the heavenly Jerusalem, and tendencies to a fanciful separation of the Church triumphant and the Church militant are noticeable in the Shepherd of Hermas (Vis. ii, 4) and in Clement's Second Epistle to the Corinthians (chap. xiv).

ECCLESIA APOSTOLICA, a name applied by some of the early fathers to the Church of Rome, on account of the prevalent belief that the apostles Peter and Paul both taught at Rome, and honored the Church by their martyrdom.

ECCLESIA MATRIX (Mother Church), a name given in ancient times to the cathedral church, to which all the clergy of a city or diocese belonged.

Ecclesiæ Causidici (Church lawyers), the name formerly applied to ecclesiastical chancellors. See CHANCELLOR.

Ecclesiarch, in the East, was the sacrist, who had general charge of the church and its contents, and summoned the people by bells or other means. The minor ecclesiastical officials were under his authority.

Ecclesiasterion, a term sometimes used in early times to denote the church building as distinguished from the ecclesia, or members of the Christian Church.

Ecclesiastes, Book of. A somewhat fuller discussion of the points relating to the authorship of this composition is appropriate, in view of the confident assertion of many critics, especially in Germany, that the contents forbid its ascription to Solomon. We might fairly offset these opinions of modern scholars by that of the ancient Hebraists, certainly in nowise their inferiors, who seem to have found no such difficulty even in the linguistic peculiarities of the book as to require a later than the Solomonic age for its production. The direct evidence of the writer himself, in the opening verse, has not been fairly treated by these rationalizing critics, for while most of them are compelled to admit that "the Preacher, the son of David, king in Jerusalem," can only point to Solomon, they yet evade the argument as if this were merely a nom de plume; and Plumptre (Cambridge Bible, introd. ad loc.) does not hesitate to compare this with the pious fraud in the apocryphal book of "The Wisdom of Solomon." The attempt to justify this pseudonym by the modern practice of fictitious authorship will apply very well so far as the assumption of the fancy title Kohleth is concerned, but is a total failure as to the more definite addition "son of David, king in Jerusalem;" for such a precise and misleading designation is unprecedented in the history of trustworthy literature. The book is either Solomon's or a forgery.

The anonymous author of The Authorship of Ecclesiastes (Lond. 1880, 8vo) has nearly exhausted the arguments in favor of the Solomonic date, as derived from a comparison of Solomon's other writings, and he extends the inquiry into the minutiae of style and phraseology with a thoroughness that ought to shake the confidence of the holders of the opposite view. As to alleged Aramaisms in Ecclesiastes, there are certainly none more decided than appear in Deborah's ode (Judg. v; pure Chaldaism כִּי־יָרַח, ver. 13; so כִּי־יָרַח, Psa. ii, 12).

Delitzsch, in his Commentary on this book (Clark's translation, Edinb. 1877, p. 190 sq.) has collected a formidable "list of the Hapaxlegomena, and of the Words and Forms in the Book of Kohleth belonging to a more recent Period of the Language" than Solomon; and this has been pointed to by later critics generally as conclusive against the Solomonic authorship. The writer of the above monograph justly remarks (p. 32), "A cursory glance at the list, however, seems sufficient to shake one's confidence in it; and if it be faithfully scrutinized, it shrinks down to almost nothing." Accordingly he examines several of these words, as specimens, and shows conclusively that they do not sustain the position. It is worth our while to analyze this "list," and we shall see what a slender basis it affords for the conclusion based upon it. There are ninety-five of these words enumerated by Delitzsch, of which, by his own showing, fifteen (besides one which he has overlooked) are found in the same form and sense, more or less frequently, in writings of the early or middle Hebrew (Moses to Isaiah), and may therefore be set aside as wholly irrelevant. Of the rest, twenty-six words occur elsewhere only in the Talmudic writers or the Targums, in the same form and sense, and therefore, if they prove anything, prove entirely too much, for they would argue a rabbinical date, which we know is impossible, since the Sept. translation of Ecclesiastes, now extant, carries the original up to the time of the Ptolemies at least. Still further we may reduce the list by excluding nineteen words which appear in substantially the same or some closely cognate form in confessedly earlier writers, and thirteen others which are used by them in a slightly different sense. Deducting all these immaterial peculiarities, there remain only twenty-one words, or less than one fourth in the list, that are really pertinent to the question. Of these, again, eleven are found in this book only (strictly hapaxlegomena), and therefore determine nothing as to its age, being such forms as, for aught we know, might have been employed by any writer. Once more, we ought in fairness to exclude certain particles and dubious forms (רָבִי, רַבִּי, אֵל, אֱלֹהִים), which are vague and inconclusive. The actual residuum available thus dwindles down to six words only, namely, בָּנִי (xii, 8), זָכָן (iii, 1), מִשְׁנֵר (x, 10; xi, 6), מִשְׁנֵר (viii, 1), מִשְׁנֵר (ibid.), and בְּרִיָּה (i, 17; ii, 22; iv, 16), which is no greater number than can be pointed out in Job and some other pre-exilic books. None of these half-dozen words is sufficiently distinctive in known origin and history to determine the date of the writing. The evidence is too negative. They are not like some modern terms, which we can trace to a specific source and occasion when they were first coined or introduced. The cognate dialects exhibit all of them in the same or similar signification, and of most of them (perhaps even the last two are no exceptions) the Hebrew itself has the root in no very remote sense. They are neither foreign nor technical terms.

The same line of argument is applicable to the peculiar inflections and constructions adduced by Delitzsch in the same connection. They have been greatly exaggerated in relative number and importance. That the book of Ecclesiastes is singular in many of its forms and phrases no one can doubt, but that these peculiarities are such as specially belong to the later Hebrew has not been made out. We have several books written in the post-exilic period, but Kohleth does not wear their impress, either in general or in particular. The only other book in the canonical Hebrew Scriptures analogous to it in teaching is Proverbs, and we have nothing in apocryphal Jewish literature that compares with it, except perhaps "The Wisdom of Solomon," which is only extant in Greek (which is apparently the original), and was evidently modelled after Kohleth. That Solomon was a perfectly classical writer is not to be assumed, either from his era or what else we know of him. The effort to express philosophical ideas in the inadequate Shemitic tongue may well explain many of the harsh terms and strange constructions of Ecclesiastes. Certainly we gain nothing by attributing the book to some unknown writer of some indefinite age, concerning whom nothing can be proved or disproved. Subjective arguments on a question of authorship are of the most deceptive character, as the well-known attempt to determine who wrote The Letters of Junius has proved. One good historical statement, whether made in the writing itself or by traditional testimony, outweighs all such speculative and conjectural dicta. Until some candidate better accredited than Solomon shall be brought forward, in deserting him we shall be forsaking the substance for a shadow.

Ecclésiasticæ Res. (1) The term is used, in a wide sense, to denote all matters belonging to the Church, as opposed to things secular or worldly. It also indicates the priestly office and duties. It is likewise used in reference to "spiritual" things, immaterial or material. To the former class belong the invisible gifts and graces bestowed by God upon the soul; to the latter, the outward acts or objects connected with such gifts, as the sacraments and other religious rites. From this it is sometimes applied to the vestments of ministers, as well as to the beneficent institutions over which the Church has jurisdiction. (2) The narrower sense of the term designates the property of the Church.

Ecclésiastical Commission, in English law, is a standing body invested with very important powers, under the operations of which extensive changes have been made in the distribution of the revenues of the Church of England. In 1835 two committees were appointed "to consider the state of the several dioceses of England and Wales, with reference to the amount of their revenues and the more equal distribution of episcopal duties, and the prevention of the necessity of attaching by commendam to bishoprics certain benefices with cure of souls; and to consider also the state of the several cathedral and collegiate churches in England and Wales, with a view to the suggestion of such measures as might render them conducive to the efficiency of the Established Church, and to ascertain the best mode of providing for the cure of souls, with special reference to the residence of the clergy on their respective benefices." Upon the recommendation of these committees a permanent commission was appointed by 6 and 7 Will. IV, c. 77, for the purpose of preparing and laying before the king in council such schemes as should appear to them to be best adapted for carrying into effect the alterations suggested in the report of the original commission and recited in the act. The first members of this commission were the two archbishops and three bishops, the lord-chancellor and the principal officers of state, and three laymen named in the act. By a later act (8 and 4 Vict. c. 113), all the bishops, the chiefs of the three courts at Westminster, the master of the rolls, the judges of the Prerogative Court and Court of Admiralty, and the deans of Canterbury, St. Paul's, and Westminster, were added to the commission; and power was given to the crown to appoint four and the archbishop of Canterbury to appoint two additional lay commissioners, who are required to be "members of the United Church of England and Ireland, and to subscribe a declaration to that effect." Five are a quorum; but two bishops at least must be present at any proceeding under the common seal of the commission, and if only two are present they can demand its postponement to a subsequent meeting. Paid commissioners, under the title of Church estates' commissioners, are also appointed—two by the crown and one by the archbishop of Canterbury. These three are the joint treasurers of the commission, and constitute, along with two members appointed by the commission, the Church estates' committee, charged with all business relating to the sale, purchase, exchange, letting, or management of any lands, tithes, or hereditaments. The schemes of the commission having, after due notice to persons affected thereby, been laid before the queen in council, may be ratified by orders, specifying the times when they shall take effect; and such orders, when published in the London Gazette, have the same force as acts of Parliament. Eckley, Joseph, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in London, England, Oct. 11 (O. S.), 1750. When about seventeen years of age his father moved with his family to America, and settled in Morristown, N. J. Soon after his arrival Joseph was sent to the College of New Jersey, from which he graduated in 1772; and, in order to prosecute his theological studies, he remained at Princeton. May 7, 1776, he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New York. The Old South Church, Boston, having been reorganized, after the dispersion occasioned by the Revolution, chose him for their pastor in 1778; and he was ordained Oct. 27, 1779. In 1808 he was provided with a colleague, Rev. Joshua Huntington. He died in Boston, April 30, 1811. In temperament Dr. Eckley was ardent. Although frequently called upon to preach on important occasions, he was not remarkable as a speaker, being inclined to abstraction and possessed of an unmusical voice. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii. 187.

Ecleston, Thomas, a Franciscan of the 14th century, was born at Ecleston, Cheshire; was bred a Franciscan in Oxford, and died in 1340. He wrote a book on the succession of the Franciscans in England, with their works and wonders, from their first coming in to his own time, dedicating the same modestly to a fellow-friar. Another work of his is, De Impugnatione Ordinis sui per Dominicanos. See Fuller, Worthies of England, i. 276.

Economist (a steward), called by Possidius provost of the church-house, was a priest, as stated by Isidore Pelusiotes, appointed by the Council of Chalcedon in 451, and elected by the clergy in the East, to discharge the same duties as devolved on a mediæval treasurer, provost of canons, and almoners in an English cathedral. In the Western Church he is mentioned in the 4th century, and was a deacon at Milan in the time of Ambrose. His office was contemporaneous with the restriction of an archdeacon to spiritual duties. In the vacancy of the see, by the councils of Chalcedon and Trent, he acted as receiver-general and administrator of the episcopal revenues. At Kilkenny, St. David's, and Exeter, as now at Windsor, he received the capitular rents, and at Westminster provided the common table and paid the servants' wages. At Hereford two economists, or bailiffs, rendered half-yearly accounts of the great commons.

Econômus. See ECONOMUS.

Ecphonēsis (ἐκφώνησις), that portion of an office which is said audibly in contrast with that which is said silently; especially the doxology, with which the secret prayers generally conclude.

Ecrar (confession of sins). The duty of confession of sins is reckoned by Mohammedans to be the fifth capital and fundamental article of their religion. It is the doctrine of the Koran that God will pardon those who confess their sins.

Ecstatici, a kind of diviners among the ancient Greeks, who were wont to fall into a trance in which they continued a considerable time, deprived of all sense and motion, and on their recovery they gave marvelous accounts of what they had seen and heard. In Roman Catholic countries, also, many stories have been told of individuals who have been in a state of ecstasis, or trance, during which they are said to have seen and conversed with the Virgin Mary and other saints.

Ectenia (ικτενια). The liturgies of Basil and Chrysostom begin with a litany, sometimes known by this name. It may also refer to the length or the earnestness of the supplication. Litanies of a similar form are also found in the hour-offices. See LITANY.

Ectypomata (εκτυπώματα) were gifts of a peculiar kind, which began to be made to churches probably about the middle of the 5th century. They are first mentioned by Theodoret, who tells us that when any one obtained the benefit of a signal cure from God in any member of his body, such as his eyes, hands, or feet, he then brought his ectypoma, the image or figure of the part cured, in silver or gold, to be hung up in the church as a memorial of divine favor. Such a practice prevailed among the ancient Greeks and Romans, and also among the Egyptians. The same custom was known among the Philistines, as we may infer from the case of the "golden emerods" and mice (1 Sam. vi, 4). In Roman Catholic countries representations of parts of the body healed are often seen suspended upon the walls of churches.

Eddius (i. e. Eddi, surnamed Stephen), a noted singer in Kent, a friend of Wilfrid, archbishop of York, A.D. 720.

Eddo, sixth bishop of Curia Rhetorum (now Chur, of Grisons), cir. A.D. 500-530.

Eddy, THOMAS MEARS, D.D., a distinguished Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. Augustus Eddy, was born in Newtown, Hamilton Co., O., Sept. 7, 1823. He received a careful religious training; consecrated himself to the Saviour very early in life; and in 1842 entered the Indiana Conference, filling its most important appointments. In 1856 he was elected editor of The Northwestern Christian Advocate. During his editorial career of fourteen years, this periodical increased from a weekly issue of fourteen thousand to about thirty thousand copies. At its close he re-entered the pastorate, in connection with the Baltimore Conference. In 1872 he was elected missionary secretary, and as such was very laborious and successful to the close of his life, Oct. 7, 1874. Dr. Eddy was a clear, logical, pathetic preacher; a forcible, sprightly writer; a genial companion, and a devout man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 17; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Edel, J. Löw, a famous Talmudist, who died at Słomim in 1827, is the author of אורי דורא, or Disquisitions on the Haggadas in the Talmud and Explanations of the Haggadic Interpretation of the Scripture (Ostrok, 1835): — שפת חכמה, a Hebrew grammar (Lemberg, 1793): — also Philosophical Derashas, or homilies (1802): — Commentaries on Maimonides' introduction to the Talmudic tract Tohoroth, etc. See Fürst, *Bibl. lowing are some of his principal works: The Holy Family, with St. John, St. Elizabeth, and Two Angels; The Holy Family, where St. John is Presenting Flowers to the Infant Jesus; The Virgin Mary at the Foot of the Cross; Mary Magdalene, penitent, Trampling on the Vanities of the World; St. Louis Prostrating himself before a Crucifix. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Edeling, CHRISTIAN LUDWIG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1678 at Löbejün, near Halle. He studied at Halle, and was the tutor of the famous count Zinzendorf. In 1706 he was appointed rector at Gröningen, and in 1710 was made assistant of the pastor primarius Müller at Schwanebeck, near Halberstadt, whom he succeeded in 1723. He died Sept. 18, 1742, leaving some fine hymns still used in the German Church: "Auf, auf, mein Geist, betrachte," "Christen erwarten in allerlei Füllen." See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 219 sq. (B. P.)

Edelmann, Gottfried, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Dec. 20, 1660, at Marolissa, in Upper Lusatia. He studied at Leipsic; was first pastor at Holzkirch, in his native province; in 1693 accepted a call to Lauban, and died there in 1724, leaving a number of hymns. See Hoffmann, Laubansche Prediger-Historie, p. 287; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 448 sq. (B. P.)

Edelmann, Hirsch, a Jewish scholar of Germany, who died at Berlin, Nov. 21, 1858, is the author of סדר הדורות, or the Narrative for the Jewish Passover, with critical notes and scholia (Königsberg, 1845). He also published the Jewish Prayer-book, with glosses and scholia (ibid.); and edited The Song of Solomon, with Obadja Seforno's commentary (Dantzig, 1845). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 222. (B. P.)

Eden. The locality of Paradise has recently been investigated afresh by Friedrich Delitzsch (Wo lag das Paradies, Leipsic, 1881), who places the garden of Eden in that part of Northern or Upper Babylonia which immediately surrounds the site of Babylon itself. He associates the name Eden with the non-Shemitic edin ("plain"), instead of the well-received Hebrew derivation, and compares the Accadian name Kardunias ("garden of the God Dunias"), of the district around Babylon. He regards "the river going forth from Eden to water the garden" as that system of watercourses, with one general current, which irrigated the isthmus between the Tigris and the Euphrates at its narrowest point, just above Babylon. The other two of the four principal "heads" of the stream he thinks were perhaps half-natural, half-artificial, canals flowing out of the Euphrates—the Pallokopas on the west, and the Shaten-Nil on the east. He has not actually found in the Chaldean records the names Pishon or Gichon, but he believes the former to be the Accadian pisan ("water-vessel"), and the latter is supposed to be the Babylonian Gughan dā, possibly pointing to one of these canals. The precariousness of this identification is evident at a glance, and well comports with the fanciful character of many of that learned Orientalist's interpretations. See PARADISE, in this volume.

Edénus, sixteenth bishop of Meaux, cir. A.D. 552.

Eder. Lieut. Conder proposes (Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 336) to identify this with the present Khubet el-Adar, three miles south of Gaza, consisting only of "ruined rubble cisterns and traces of a town, with immense masses of broken pottery forming mounds at the site" (Memoirs of the Ordnance Survey, iii, 251); but the location seems out of place if the list in Joshua begins at the east.

Eder, GEORG, a Roman Catholic writer, was born at Freysingen in 1524, and studied at Cologne. He was the spiritual adviser of the emperor Ferdinand I, and died May 19, 1586, leaving, Oeconomia Bibliorum seu Partitio Theologicarum, etc. (Cologne, 1568; Venice, 1572):—Compendium Catechismi Catholici (Cologne, 1570):—De Fide Catholica (1571):—Malleus Hæreticorum (Ingolstadt, 1580):—Mutologia Hæreticorum (ibid. 1581). Edessa, MARTYRS OF, under Trajan (A.D. 114), especially the bishop, Barsimeus (according to some), and Sabellius, together with Barbea, the sister of the latter; commemorated together on Jan. 30.

Edeyrn, a Welsh saint, commemorated Jan. 6, was a bard of royal descent, who embraced a monastic life in the early days of British Christianity.

Edgeworth, ROGKE, a Roman Catholic divine, was born at Holt Castle, on the borders of Wales. He was educated at Oxford, elected fellow of Oriel College in 1507, and soon after ordained. About 1519 he was appointed canon successively at Salisbury, Wells, and Bristol; in 1554 chancellor of Wells, and also vicar of St. Cuthbert's Church, to which he was admitted Oct. 8, 1543. He died in 1560, leaving a volume of Sermons (Lond. 1557, 4to). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Edhameis (also Ædhamaïs, Eadhamaïs, etc.), an Irish saint, daughter of Ædh, is commemorated Jan. 18.

Edhemi, a monastic order among the Mohammedans, founded by Ibrahim ibn-Edhem, who died at Damascus, A.D. 777. His disciples say that he was a slave, a native of Abyssinia, that he always desired to please God, regularly read the Koran in the mosques, and prayed day and night with his face to the ground. Edhem established a strictly ascetic order, who gave themselves much to prayer and fasting, and professed to discourse with Enoch in the wilderness.

Edhniuch (Lat. Egnacius), an Irish priest, son of Ere, and abbot of Liath, died A.D. 767.

Edibius. (1) Saint, bishop of Soissons, A.D. 451, is commemorated Dec. 10. (2) Sixth bishop of Amiens, in 511.

Edictius (Edictius, or Heddictus), said to have been thirty-fourth bishop of Vienne (France), A.D. 678; commemorated Oct. 23.

Edilfym, eleventh bishop of Llandaff, died in the latter part of the 7th century.

Edmondson, JONATHAN, A.M., an English Wesleyan minister (nephew of Jonathan Catlow, an early Methodist preacher, who withdrew a short time before his death on account of a disagreement with Wesley on the doctrine of sin in believers; cousin of James Catlow, who died when about taking orders in the Church of England, and of Samuel Catlow, a Socinian minister, and father of Jonathan Edmondson, of the Wesleyan Conference), was born at Keighley, Yorkshire, March 24, 1767. He was converted in 1784, was sent by Wesley to the Epworth Circuit in 1786, and retired a supernumerary at Portsmouth in 1836. He died July 7, 1842. Dr. Edmondson was eminently a holy and laborious minister, and was highly esteemed by his brethren. In 1814 he was made one of the general secretaries of the Missionary Society, in which office he labored beyond his strength. In 1818 he was elected president of the conference sitting in Leeds. He was a voluminous reader, a diligent student, a lucid expositor, an evangelical preacher, and a faithful pastor. During his busy ministry he wrote some valuable books: Short Sermons on Important Subjects (Lond. 1807, 1829, 2 vols. 8vo):—A Concise System of Self-government (ibid. 1815; 3d ed. 1834, 12mo):—Sermons on the Nature and Offices of the Holy Ghost (ibid. 1823; 2d ed. 1837):—Essay on the Christian Ministry (ibid. 1828, 12mo):—Scripture Vires of the Heavenly World (ibid. 1835, 12mo; 3d ed. 1850, 18mo):—Elements of Revealed Religion (1839, 12mo). See Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1850, p. 1, 118; Minutes of the British Conference, 1842.

Edmundson, WILLIAM, a noted minister of the English Society of Friends, was born in Westmoreland in 1627. He was apprenticed in York as a carpenter, served in the army under Cromwell, but resigned in 1652, and in 1653 became an earnest Quaker. Subsequently he resided at Antrim, Ireland, and in the spring of 1654 removed to County Armagh, devoting himself to secular pursuits. He established meetings at his own house, and soon after, in company with John Tiffin, from England, went through Ireland preaching. Subsequently he visited England and urged George Fox to send preachers into Ireland, and when some of these arrived he accompanied them through the country. Having been made a minister himself, he preached in public places with great effect. At Armagh he was thrown into prison, and subsequently was brought before the justices at the Sessions Court, who ordered his release. In 1655 he travelled into Leinster, holding meetings in most of the towns. At Finagh the innkeepers refused to lodge him because he was a Quaker. At Belturbet his meeting was broken up, many of his followers were arrested, and he was put in the stocks in the market-place, but eventually was triumphantly acquitted. For several months he suffered confinement in a dungeon at Cavan, where he nearly lost his life from suffocation. Being set at liberty, he visited the North of Ireland. While preaching at Londonderry, on a market-day, he was arrested and imprisoned. In 1661 the persecution of the Quakers was renewed with increased violence, and he was incarcerated at Maryborough. He made three voyages to North America and the West Indies between 1670 and 1684, and died June 30, 1712. See The Friend, vi, 167; Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Edoldus (or Heldoldus), twenty-fourth bishop of Meaux, about the close of the 7th century.

Edrei (of Naphtali). Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 366) for this site that of the present Yâter, situated a mile and a half north of Beit-lif (Heleph), and described as "a small stone village, containing about three hundred Metawêleh, situated on a hill-top, with olive-trees and arable land adjacent, having a pool and many cisterns and a spring near it;" also as containing rock-cut tombs, two ruined watch-towers, and other signs of antiquity (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, i, 203, 260). The place is not far from Hazor (if at Hazzôr), and on the extreme western confines of the tribe.

Edris (the student), one of the appellations of the prophet Enoch among the Mohammedans. He was the third of the prophets, and, according to the Arabians, the greatest that flourished in the antediluvian world. They represent him as having been commissioned to preach to the Cainites, but they rejected his teaching; and in consequence he waged war upon them and made them slaves to the true believers. He is also said to have ordered the faithful to treat all future infidels in the same way, being thus the originator of religious wars and of the persecution of infidels. To Edris the Arabians attribute the invention of the pen, the needle, the sciences of astronomy and arithmetic, and the arts of magic and divination. He is alleged to have written thirty treatises, only one of which survives to the present time—The Book of Enoch, an apocryphal work, held in great esteem by the Arabians. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Edson, THEODORIC, D.D., LL.D., an Episcopal clergyman, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., Aug. 24, 1793, being descended fifth in the line from Samuel Edson, who came to Salem soon after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, and was one of the original fifteen proprietors of the town of Bridgewater. Theodore received his academic education at the Andover Phillips Academy; graduated at Harvard College in 1822; studied theology with the Rev. Dr. Jarvis of Boston; and in March, 1824, conducted the first religious service in East Chelmsford, now Lowell, after John Eliot, the apostle to the Indians. In April of the same year ground was broken for St. Anne's Church, which was consecrated in March, 1825, at which time Dr. Edson was admitted to full orders. From that time until within a few days of his last illness he conducted the services of that Church "with dignity, solemnity, and impressiveness." He died in Lowell, after a long, useful, and singularly devoted life, June 25, 1883.—Boston Advertiser, June 26, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Edward, Saint, was the son of Edgar, king of the Saxons, and the beautiful Ethelfleda, who died shortly after his birth, in 961. In 975, when Edgar died, Edward, a pious youth, was elected to the crown, much to the discontent of Elfrida, his step-mother, who wished her own son, Ethelred, on the throne. In 979 (or 978), Edward was poisoned at Corfe Castle, by his own people, according to Henry of Huntingdon, or, as was probable, by order of Elfrida, as Florence of Worcester and William of Malmesbury record. Malmesbury says that a light from heaven shone over his grave at Wareham, and wonders were wrought there and miracles of healing; and that Elfrida, at length terrified and conscience-stricken, retired to the convent of Wherwell to repent of her wickedness. The young Edward was not a martyr for the Christian faith; but being a good youth, and unjustly and cruelly slain, the people looked upon him as a saint and called him Edward the martyr; and so he has a place in the Anglican and Roman martyrologies. He is commemorated on March 18. His body was afterwards translated to the minster at Shaftesbury (June 20), and his translation is set down on Feb. 18. See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, iii, 324 (March 18); Butler, Lives of the Saints (March 18); Fuller, Worthies of England, i, 453; Green, Hist. of English People, i, 96; Knight, Pop. Hist. of England, i, 147, 148.

Edward, a Scotch prelate, was formerly a monk of Cuppar in Forfarshire, and was promoted to the see of Brechin about 1260. It is said that he walked through the whole kingdom, with Eustathius, abbot of Aberbrothock, preaching the gospel wherever he came. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 160.

Edwards, Jonathan, D.D., an English divine and able writer against Socinianism, was born at Wrexham, Denbighshire, in 1629, and in 1655 became a servitor of Christ Church, Oxford, where he was admitted A.B. October, 1659. He was rector of Kiddington, Oxfordshire, which he exchanged, in 1681, for Hinton, Hampshire; was elected principal of Jesus College in 1686, and treasurer of Llandaff in 1687. He held other important offices, and died July 20, 1712. His publications are, Remarks upon Dr. Sherlock's Examination of the Oxford Decree, etc. (Oxford, 1695, 4to):—A Preservative against Socinianism (in 4 parts):—A Vindication of the Doctrine of Original Sin (Oxford, 1711, 8vo). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Edwards, Peter Cuthbert, a Baptist minister and educator, was born near Society Hill, S. C., Feb. 8, 1819. He was converted in early life, studied in South Carolina College, and graduated from the theological institution at Newton, Mass., in 1844. After studying for a time in the Union Theological Seminary, New York city, he became, in 1845, professor of Biblical literature and exegesis in Furman Theological Institution; and on the removal of the seminary from Fairfield District, S. C., to Greenville, he was appointed professor of ancient languages, which office he filled with rare ability until his sudden death, May 15, 1867. See Gen. Cat. of Newton Theol. Institution. (J. C. S.)

Edwardston, THOMAS, an English divine of the 14th century, was so named from his birthplace in Suffolk; was educated at Oxford; became an Augustinian in Clare; was a great scholar; and acted as confessor to Lionel, duke of Clarence, whom he attended to Italy; returned to his native country, and died at Clare in 1396. Pits thinks he had an archbishopric in Ireland; but this is disowned by the judicious sir James Ware (De Scriptoribus Hibernia, ii, 126). Perhaps Edwardston was temporarily intrusted with an archbishopric in Italy. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 167.

Edwen, a female saint of Saxon descent, is commemorated in Wales on Nov. 6.

Eed el-korban (Festival of the sacrifice), a festival celebrated among the Persian Mohammedans in honor of the patriarch Abraham. The day before the feast about four hundred camels are collected from the neighboring country, and the first that rises, after resting, is chosen for the sacrifice, shot, and speared. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Egan, MICHAEL, a Roman Catholic prelate, was recommended to the pope, by archbishop Carroll, for the see of Philadelphia, June 17, 1807, as "a man about fifty, endowed with all the qualities to discharge with perfection the function of the episcopacy, except that he lacks robust health, large experience, and eminent firmness in his disposition. He is a learned, modest, humble priest, who maintains the spirit of his order in his whole conduct." He was accordingly appointed October 28, 1810. During his short episcopacy the Sisters of Charity were (in 1814) established in his city. Egan died July 22, 1814, and was succeeded by Maréchal. See De Courcy and Shea, History of the Catholic Church in the United States, p. 214-217.

Egara, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Egarense), was held A.D. 615 at Egara (now Terassa), in Catalonia, to confirm the enactments of Osca and Huesca seventeen years before. Twelve bishops, a presbyter, and a deacon subscribed to it.

Egbald. (1) Abbot, probably of Peterborough, A.D. 671. (2) Abbot of Waltham (probably Hampshire), early in the 8th century. (3) Tenth bishop of Winchester, A.D. cir. 778.

Egbert, bishop of Lindisfarne, A.D. 803-821.

Egbo, an idol worshipped by the natives of Old Calabar, in Western Africa. It is a human skull stuck upon the top of a stick, with a few feathers tied to it. One of these idols is yet found in almost every house where the inmates adhere to their former idolatry.

Egdūnus, a presbyter, martyr at Nicomedia with seven others, A.D. 303; commemorated March 12.

Egemonius (Ægemonius, or Ignomus), bishop of Autun, died A.D. 374.

Eger, AKIBA MOSES, a famous rabbi and Talmudist, who died at Posen, Oct. 12, 1839, is the author of various disquisitions and novellas on Talmudic treatises. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 224; Kämpf, Biographie des hochberühmten, hochseligen Herrn Akiba Eger (Lissa, 1838). (B. P.)

Egerēdus, bishop of Salamanca, A.D. 646.

Egeria (or Ægeria), in Roman mythology, was an Italian spring-nymph, protecting deity of the city of Rome, who lived in the sacred woods of the Camena, and blessed the peaceful, wise ruler Numa by her useful advice. She is said by some to have been the wife of Numa. When the king died she retreated from Rome, and was so overcome with sorrow that Diana, out of sympathy, changed her into a spring, which has her name.

Egers, SAMUEL LEVI, a rabbi at Brunswick, where he died, Dec. 3, 1842, is the author of several novellas on Talmudic treatises and homilies upon Sabbatical sections of the Pentateuch. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 224. (B. P.)

Egerton, JOHN, an English prelate, was born Nov. 30, 1721; educated at Eton school; admitted a gentleman commoner in Oriel College, Oxford, May 20, 1740; ordained deacon in Grosvenor Chapel, Westminster, Dec. 21, 1745, and the following day priest. He became pastor of the Church at Ross, in Herefordshire, and Jan. 3, 1746, was collated to the canonry of Cullington, in the Church of Hereford, where he was promoted to the deanery on July 24, 1750. July 4, 1756, he was consecrated bishop of Bangor, at Lambeth; Nov. 12, 1768, translated to the see of Lichfield and Coventry, with which he held a prebend and residentiaryship in St. Paul's, and also the two preferments before mentioned, Ross and Cullington. He was elected to the see of Durham on July 8, 1771, and after enjoying several important positions, died in London, Jan. 18, 1787. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Egg, as a Christian symbol. Marble eggs have been found in the tombs of some of the saints, and egg-shells occasionally in the loculi of the martyrs, a relic of the celebration of the Agapæ. As a Christian symbol it signified the immature hope of the resurrection; the use of it on Easter doubtless has reference to this idea.

EGG, MUNDANE. In the cosmogonies of many heathen nations, both ancient and modern, the egg occupies a very prominent place, representing the world in its transition from the chaotic to the fully organized and orderly condition. In the Rig-Veda of ancient Hindûism the supreme spirit is represented as producing an egg, and from the egg is evolved a world. At a later period Brahma is said to have deposited in the primordial waters an egg shining like gold. In ancient Egypt we find Cneph, the creator, producing an egg, the symbol of the world. In the Sandwich Islands an eagle is represented as depositing an egg in the primordial waters, and among the Finns an aquatic bird. In the ancient Celtic legends the mundane egg was produced by a serpent, which had no sooner brought it forth than it hastened to devour it. But while the mundane egg represents the world in its first creation, it is often found also as emblematic of its renovation, after having been purified by fire. So Herodotus relates that the phoenix buried the body of its father in a mass of myrrh of the form of an egg. Similar fables are related as to the origin of man.

Eghionna, an Irish virgin saint of Cashel, commemorated Jan. 21.

Egica, bishop of Segontia (Siguenza), A.D. 655.

Egidio (or Egiel), an early missionary, lived in A.D. 964. He was bishop of Tusculum (Frascati), and was sent to Poland about 972 by pope John XIII to propagate the Catholic religion and to regulate its exercises. Egidio sent for prelates from Germany, France, and Italy, and divided them among the new churches. He erected the first archbishoprics and seven bishoprics. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Egidius (or Ægidius), nineteenth bishop of Rheims, A.D. 565, not to be confounded with the popular St. Giles (q. v.), was a liberal benefactor of his Church, but one of the most ambitious and intriguing prelates of his time, and was finally deposed for treason.

Egila. (1) Bishop of Osma, cir. A.D. 633-656. (2)

Bishop of Eliberi, about the end of the 8th century; supposed to be the same mentioned by Adrian I in the Adoptionist controversy.

Egilward (or Egilbert), fifth bishop of Würzburg, A.D. 803.

Ehinger, ELIAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 7, 1573. He studied at Wittenberg and Tübingen, and was in 1597 court-preacher at Albersberg, in Lower Austria. Being obliged to leave the country on account of intolerance, he went in 1605 to Rothenburg, on the Tauber, was made rector there, and accepted a call in 1607 to Augsburg. In 1629 he had to leave that place also, and went to Schul-Pforta, in Saxony. Being recalled to Augsburg, he stayed there only a short time, and went in 1685 to Regensburg, where he died, Nov. 28, 1653. He is the author of a large number of writings, of little value for our time. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Brucker, Commentarius de Vita et Scriptis Ehingeri (1724). (B. P.)

Ehinger, JOHANN, grandfather of Elias, was born at Lauingen in 1488. For some time he was a monk, but professed the Evangelical religion, and in 1537 became preacher at St. Stephen's, in Augsburg. Being obliged, on account of his religion, to leave the place in 1551, he became general superintendent of Pfalz-Neuburg, assisted in introducing the evangelical doctrine into the Palatinate, and died at Augsburg in 1572, having been recalled there in 1555, after the treaty of Passau had been signed. See Brucker, Vita Eliæ Ehingeri; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Ehrhardt, SIGISMUND JUSTUS, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Gemünd, Sept. 21, 1733. He studied at Erlangen, Jena, and Halle. In 1754 he was preacher at Markt Burg-Pressach, in Franconia, but the intolerance of the Roman Catholics obliged him to leave the place, and he went to Halle and Berlin, where he gave private lessons. In 1768 he was appointed deacon at Steinau, and died June 6, 1793, pastor at Besching, in the Silesian principality of Wohlau. He wrote, Commentatio de Claudii Tiberii Neronis (Coburg, 1752): Commentationes II de Latinitate S. Pauli (Schleusingen, 1755). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Ehrlich, Johann Gottlieb, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born at Rabenau, in Saxony, in 1719. He studied at Leipsic, where he also lectured for some time; in 1753 was appointed pastor at Poppendorf, and in 1760 preacher at Wezdorf, in Thuringia. He died March 4, 1779, leaving, De Quadragesima Jernio (Leipsic, 1744):—De Erroribus Pauli Samosatani (ibid. 1745):—De Genuina Voce אברהם Significatione (ibid. eod.):—De Opprobrio Egypti Abiato (ibid. eod.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Ehrlich, Johann Nepomuk, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Vienna in 1810. In 1827 he joined the Piarists, received holy orders in 1834, and was in 1836 professor of philosophy, history, and literature at the gymnasium in Krems. In 1850 he was called to Grazten as professor of ethics, and in 1856 to the chair of fundamental theology at Prague, where he died, Oct. 23, 1864. He wrote, Ueber das christliche Princip der Gesellschaft (Prague, 1856):—Fundamental-Theologie (ibid. 1859). (B. P.)

Ehrmann, DANIEL, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Muttersdorf, in Bohemia, in 1818, and studied at Prague. In 1843 he was rabbi at Kuttienplan, in 1844 at Hoheems, and in 1852 he accepted a call to Böhmisch-Leipa. In 1860 he resigned his position and retired to Prague, where he died, Dec. 12, 1882. He published, Betrachtungen über jüdische Verhältnisse (Buda, 1841):—Gebete für jüdische Frauenzimmer (Prague, 1842):—Geschichte der Cultur und der Schulen unter den Juden (ibid. 1846):—Die Bibel nach ihrem ganzen Inhalte dargestellt (Feldkirch, 1852; Prague, 1854):—Das Buch Esther übersetzt (Prague, 1861):—Geschichte der Israeliten (Brünn, 1869; 2d ed. 1873):—Aus Palästina und Babylon (Vienna, 1880). Eicetæ, an order of Syrian monks in the 9th century, who held dancing to be an essential part of divine worship, and engaged in this exercise in their public services. They defended their practice by the example of Miriam at the Red Sea and of David at the removal of the ark. They met with few imitators, but John of Damascus thought it best to expose their error.

Eichelberger, Lewis, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born in Frederick County, Md., Aug. 25, 1803. At an early age he attended the school in Frederick under the care of David F. Schaeffer, D.D. Subsequently he was taken to Georgetown, D. C., and entered Rev. Dr. Carnahan's classical school. He graduated from Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., in 1826, and with the first class at the Gettysburg Theological Seminary. On Oct. 21, 1828, he was licensed to preach. His first charge was the Lutheran Church in Winchester, Va., in connection with which he also served three other congregations. In the spring of 1833 he resigned the pastorate in Winchester, but still preached to the three neighboring churches. At this period he opened a female seminary in Winchester, which he successfully conducted for several years. He temporarily edited a political weekly journal, and for a time the Evangelical Lutheran Preacher, afterwards merged in the Lutheran Observer. In 1849 he was elected professor of theology in the Lexington (S. C.) Lutheran Seminary, where he labored for nine years. In 1858 he returned to Winchester, devoting himself to literature. At this time he began his History of the Lutheran Church. Among other offices of trust to which he was elected by the synod he was a trustee of Pennsylvania College and a director of the Gettysburg Theological Seminary. He died Sept. 16, 1859. See Evangelical Review, xiv, 293.

Eichhorn, Anton, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1809. He received holy orders in 1832, was in 1836 professor of the gymnasium at Braunsberg, and in 1838 professor of theology at the Lyceum there. In 1851 he became a member of the chapter at Frauenburg, in 1855 vicar-general, and in 1866 was appointed dean. He died Feb. 27, 1869, leaving Der ermländische Bischof und Cardinal Stanislaus Hosius (Mayence, 1854-55, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Eichhorn, Paul, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Eckau, in Courland, in 1599. He studied theology in Germany, was in 1621 preacher at Grenzhof for the Lettish population, in 1634 German preacher at Mittau, and in 1636 superintendent of Courland. He died at Mittau, Aug. 8, 1655, leaving, Widerlegung der Abgötterei und nichtigen Aberglaubens (Riga, 1627):—Reformatio Gentis Letticæ in Ducatu Curlandis (ibid. 1636):—Historia Lettica (Dorpat, 1649). The duke Jacob of Courland sent him to the conference held at Thorn, where he also signed the Positiones Theologorum Augustanæ Confessionis, Oct. 25, 1645. Einari (or Einarsen), GISSUR, an Icelandic theologian, lived about the middle of the 16th century. He studied at Hamburg and Wittenberg, where he heard Luther and Melancthon, and in 1540 was elected bishop in place of Paulson. In 1541 the government granted the ministers the privilege of marriage, of which they had been deprived since 1272, and this innovation occasioned many disputes. During these troubles Einari died. Such was the animosity against him that by order of the bishop, Jon Areson, his body was disinterred and his ashes scattered to the winds. He left a translation of the Proverbs of Solomon in Norwegian (Holar, 1580). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Einem, Johann August Christoph von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Osterweddingen, near Magdeburg, Nov. 25, 1730. He studied at Halle, and in 1754 was appointed teacher at a high-school in Berlin. In 1759 he was also appointed preacher at Trinity Church there, and in 1768 accepted a call to the pastorate at Genthin. He died Oct. 24, 1810, leaving, De Pelagianismo æque ac Fanaticismo ab Ecclesia Jesu Christi Arcendo (Halle, 1762);—Praktische Lebensbeschreibungen verstorbener und nachlebender Geistlichen (Stendal, 1787). His best work, however, is his continuation of Mosheim's Church history. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 535; ii, 52. (B. P.)

Einem, Johann Just von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Göttingen, Aug. 11, 1685. In 1712 he was pastor at Bergen, in 1728 pastor at Osterweddingen, near Magdeburg, and died in 1744. He wrote, Anweisung zum Studiren aus Lutheri Schriften gezeigt (Magdeburg, 1727);—Anweisung zur Hermeneutik aus Lutheri Schriften (ibid. eod.);—Melancthoniana (Helmstädt, 1730);—*Introductio in Bibliothecam Græcam J. Einhard (or Eynardus), Saint, a solitary of Altona, in Westphalia, is commemorated March 25.

Einhorn, DAVID, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Dispeck, in Bavaria, Nov. 10, 1809. He attended the rabbinical school at Fürth, and the universities of Erlangen, Würzburg, and Munich. At the latter place he took his degree as doctor of philosophy in 1834. His first charge was at Hopstaden, and while officiating there he attended the second conference of Reform Jews at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in 1845. A little later he succeeded Holdheim (q. v.) as chief rabbi of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. In 1851 he was called to Pesth by the Reformed congregation, where he advocated extreme measures for those days; his liberalism aroused the dissatisfaction of the government, and his temple was closed. In 1855 he landed at Baltimore, and was appointed rabbi of the Har Sinai congregation there. His known opposition to slavery aroused the ire of the Baltimoreans, in the days of '61, and he was called to Philadelphia by the Reform congregation. In 1866 he went to New York to take charge of the temple "Adas Jeshurun," which in 1873 was consolidated with the "Ansbe Chesed," under the name of "Beth El." On July 12, 1879, he retired from his office, and died Nov. 2 of that year. He published, Das Prinzip des Mosaismus, etc. (Leipsic, 1854);—Oluth Tamid (Baltimore, 1856). After his death two volumes of Sermons were published. See Morais, Eminent Israelites of the 19th Century (Philadelphia, 1880). (B. P.)

Einsiedel, GEORG HANBOLD, a German divine and statesman, was born in 1521. He studied theology, and was one of the zealous hearers of Luther, Melancthon, and Scharf, defending the Reformation with his word and with the sword in the war of Schmalkalden. He was counsellor of the princes Moritz and August der Starke, of Saxony, from 1576 to 1586. Einsiedel died in 1592. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eisler, TOBIAS, a German theologian, was born at Nuremberg, April 2, 1683. He received a careful education; studied law at Altorf and at Halle, was appointed secretary to the duchess of Saxe-Eisenach, afterwards returned to Nuremberg, and abandoned the law to devote himself to the education of the poor. At Helmstädt he founded a school for poor boys, and another for girls. Eisler was strongly pietistic. He died at Helmstädt, Oct. 8, 1753. For the chief among his numerous works see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eithne (or Ethnea), the name of several Irish saints. (1) Daughter of Bait, of the barony of Nethercross, County Dublin, in the 7th century, is commemorated March 29. (2) Daughter of king Laeghaire, A.D. 482, commemorated Jan. 11 and Feb. 26. (3) Virgin, daughter of Cormac or of Marcius, in the 6th century, commemorated July 6.

Eitzen, PAUL DE, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hamburg, Jan. 25, 1522. He studied at Wittenberg, under Luther and Melancthon, in 1544 became rector at Cöln, in Brandenburg, in 1555 superintendent at his native place, in 1562 first court-preacher at Schleswig, and in 1576 professor at the gymnasium there. He refused to sign the Formula Concordie, which caused him much trouble. In 1593 he resigned his offices, and died Feb. 25, 1598. His writings are mentioned in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; see also Greve, Memoria Pauli ab Eitzen Instaurata (Hamburg, 1744). (B. P.)

Ekron. The latest description of this important place is by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 174):

"North-east of Makkedah, Ekron still stands, on low rising ground—a mud hamlet, with gardens fenced with prickly pears. There is nothing ancient here, any more than at Ashdod or Jamnia; but one point may be mentioned which is of some interest. Ekron means 'barren,' yet the town stood in the rich Philistine plain. The reason is, that north of the Sorek valley there is a long, sandy swell reaching to the sea-coast—an uncultivated district, now called Deiran, the Arabic name being equivalent to its old title, Daroma; Ekron stands close to this dry, barren spur, and above the fertile corn-lands in the valley."

Elah. We extract some interesting details concerning this noted valley from the latest description, that of Lieut. Conder (Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 187, 190):

"The Great Valley of Elah (Wady es-Sant) is the highway from Philistia to Hebron; it has its head not far from Terkümeh, and runs down northwards, past Kellah and Haroth, dividing the low hills of the Shephelah from the rocky mountains of Judah; eight miles from the valley-head stands Shochoh, and Wady es-Sant is here a quarter of a mile across; just north of this ruin it turns round westward, and so runs, growing deeper and deeper, between the rocky hills covered with brushwood, becoming an open vale of rich corn-land, flanked by ancient fortresses, and finally debouching at the cliff of Tell es-Säfeh. About two and a half miles south of the great angle near Shochoh there is a very large and ancient terebinth, one of the few old trees of the species along the course of the valley, which took its Hebrew name of Elah from them. This terebinth is towards the west side of the vale, just where a small tributary ravine joins Wady es-Sant; and near it are two ancient wells, not unlike those at Beersheba, with stone water-troughs round them; south of the ravine is a high, rounded hill, almost isolated by valleys, and covered with ruins, a natural fortress, not unlike the well-known Tells which occur lower down the Valley of Elah."

"Two points require to be made clear as to the episode of David's battle with Goliath; one is the meaning of the expression Gai or 'ravine'; the other is the source whence David took the 'smooth stones.' A visit to the spot explains both. In the middle of the broad, open valley we found a deep trench with vertical sides, impassable except at certain places—a valley in a valley, and a natural barrier between the two hosts; the sides and bed of this trench are strewn with rounded and water-worn pebbles, which would have been well fitted for David's sling. Here, then, we may picture to ourselves the two hosts, covering the low, rocky hills opposite to each other, and half hidden among the lentisk bushes; between them was the rich expanse of ripening barley and the red banks of the torrent, with its white, shingly bed; behind all were the distant blue hill-walls of Judah, whence Saul had just come down. The mail-clad champion advanced from the west, through the low corn, with his mighty lance perhaps tufted with feathers, his brazen helmet shining in the sun; from the east, a ruddy boy, in his white shirt and sandals, armed with a goat's-hair sling, came down to the brook, and, according to the poetic fancy of the rabbis, the pebbles were given voices, and cried: "By us shalt thou overcome the giant." The champion fell from an uneven cause, and the wild Philistines fled to the mouth of the valley, where Gath stood towering on its white chalk-cliff, a frontier fortress, the key to the high-road leading to the corn-lands of Judah, and to the vineyards of Hebron." Eleazar, a teacher of the Maccabees, is commemorated as a saint, Aug. 1 (July 29).

Eleazar BEN-ARAK, a famous Jewish teacher of the 1st century of our era, was one of the most celebrated disciples of Jochanan ben-Zachai (q. v.). One of his recorded maxims is found in Aboth, ii, 19: "Be quick to study the law, and know what thou shouldst return in answer to the Epicurean, and remember before whom thou laborest; for the master who employed thee is faithful, and will recompense thee the reward of thy toil." As a teacher, he was so highly esteemed that to attend his lectures was regarded like fulfilling a commandment (Cholin, fol. 106). See Hamburger, Real-Encyclop., ii, 155 sq.; Bacher, in Frankel-Grätz's Monatschrift, 1882, p. 241. (B. P.)

Eleazar BEN-AZARIA, a Talmudic teacher of the 1st century of our era, belonged to a noble priestly family. When Gamaliel the younger was deposed at Jabneh, Eleazar was elected president of the college, although only seventeen years of age. One of his first measures was to remove the doorkeeper and give free admission to the college to all, whereas Gamaliel had excluded every disciple who was not "the same inwardly as outwardly." It is added that when anything is recorded as having happened ביום ההוא "on that day," the occasion of Azaria's accession is referred to; and the day is described as one in which all the pending controversies were decided. When Gamaliel was reinstated, Ben-Azaria acted as vice-president, and, according to the Talmud, matters were so arranged that on three Sabbaths in the month Gamaliel acted as president, whereas the fourth was given to Eleazar. Hence the saying: "Whose Sabbath is it? The Sabbath of rabbi Eleazar ben-Azaria." A saying of his is recorded in Aboth, iii, 26: "No Torah, no culture; no culture, no Torah; no wisdom, no fear of God; no fear of God, no wisdom; no knowledge, no discernment; no discernment, no knowledge; no meal, no Torah; no Torah, no meal." See Hamburger, Real-Encyclop. ii, 156 sq.; Bacher, in Frankel-Grätz's Monatschrift, 1883, p. 6 sq. (B. P.)

Eleazar BEN-ASKARI (or ASKARI), a rabbi of the 16th century, is the author of an exposition of the six hundred and thirteen precepts, ספר חרדים (Venice, 1601; Zolkiew, 1778; Brünn, 1795). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 65. (B. P.)

Eleazar BEN-CHISMA, a disciple of the famous rabbi Akiba (q. v.), was noted alike as a Talmudist and an astronomer. His recorded maxim (Aboth, iii, 28), "Qinnim and Pitche Nidda are essentials of the Torah; canons of astronomy and geometry are after-courses of wisdom," shows his delight in astronomical and mathematical problems. See Bacher, in Frankel-Grätz's Monatschrift, 1883, p. 538. (B. P.)

Eleazar BEN-JEHUDA. See ELIEZER BEN-JUDAH.

Eleazar BEN-SHAMNA, a Jewish teacher of the 2d century, was a pupil of the famous rabbi Akiba. During the persecution by Hadrian he went to Nisibis, in Babylonia. His recorded maxim was: "Let the honor of thy disciple be dear unto thee as the honor of thine associate; and the honor of thine associate as the fear of thy master; and the fear of thy master as the fear of heaven" (Aboth, iv, 17). See Hamburger, Real-Encyclop. ii, 159. (B. P.)

Eleazar BEN-YISHAI, a converted Jew of the 17th century, is the author of a Brief Compendium of the Fain Hopes of the Jews' Messias (Lond. 1652). See Wolf, Bibl. Hebræa, iv, 786; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehr.-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Eleazar HAK-KALIR. See KALIR, ELEASAR HA-

Eleazar OF MODIN, a Jewish teacher of the 2d century. He was a relative of Bar Cochab, and not only upheld his messianic pretensions, but also stimulated the religious energy and encouraged the hopes of the defenders of Bethar. Weighed down by years and emaciated by fasts, the aged ascetic was daily to be seen on the ramparts, where, clad in sackcloth and covered with ashes, he would, in the sight of all, implore heavenly aid with tears and by continual fastings. As long as the defenders of Bethar saw Eleazar at his post they felt secure under the canopy of his piety, and in the assurance of divine aid. Even the treacherous Samaritans felt the awe of his presence, and were wont to say that Bethar could not be taken "so long as this cock remained to crow in ashes." At last one of them succeeded in rendering Eleazar an object of suspicion to Bar Cochab, who rudely pushed the old man aside with his foot. Eleazar fell to the ground a corpse. His recorded maxim is: "He that profanes things sacred, and contemns the festivals, and annuls the covenant of Abraham our Father, and acts barefacedly against the Torah, even though he be a doer of good works, has no portion in the world to come" (Aboth, iii, 17). See Hamburger, Real-Encyclop. ii, p. 161 sq.; Bacher, Die Agula der Tanaïen, in Frankel-Grätz's Monatschrift, 1862, p. 529 sq. (B. P.)

Eleazarus, a martyr at Lyons, with his eight children and Minervius; commemorated Aug. 23.

Electi, a name sometimes applied to Christians in the early ages of the Christian Church.

Among the Manichæans, the term denoted the higher or more holy of the two classes into which believers were divided, the lower being styled simply "auditores."

Electoral College is a committee of clergy and notables convened to elect bishops and other clergy, as a means of avoiding the tumult of a popular election, following the advice of Clement of Rome and the Council of Laodicea.

Elements, Eucharistic. The Latin word elementa does not appear to have been used in this technical sense in the early ages of the Church, though it is a very natural word to express the component parts of anything. The unconsecrated elements on the altar are called, in Eastern liturgies, "the Mysteries;" the bread alone, "the Seal," from its being divided by lines in the form of a cross. When the elements have been placed on the altar they acquire other names, having more distinct reference to sacrifice, as "the Lamb," or "the First-born." The elements are also called "symbols," "types," "visible forms," as outward representations of inward and spiritual grace.

Throughout the Church, bread and wine have always been recognised as the elements in the eucharist, with but few exceptions. An obscure sect, called the Arto-tyrites, added cheese to the bread. Some sects used no wine, but water alone; while others used wine in the evening service, but not in the morning.

I. Composition of the Bread.—The Church has been unanimous in using wheat as the material for the bread, it being regarded as the superior grain. The great controversy has been, Shall the bread be leavened or unleavened? The principal arguments bearing on this question are the following: It has generally been assumed in the West that the Last Supper was eaten at the feast of the Passover, and that therefore the bread used was unleavened, which was the only kind the Jews were allowed to eat at that time. But it is contended by some writers of the Greek Church that the Last Supper was held on the 13th Nisan, when leavened bread was still used; and there is no direct statement, either in the New Test. or in the writings of the early fathers, to indicate that unleavened bread was used; on the contrary, the fact that only "bread" was mentioned would lead to the inference that only common bread was meant. Justin Martyr simply speaks of bread, and as he is giving a particular description of the Christian rites, it seems most probable that he would have mentioned the fact had any particular kind of bread been used. Epiphanius says that the Ebionites, in imitation of the saints in the Church, celebrate mysteries yearly in the Church with unleavened cakes. Innocent I sent to the bishops leavened bread, said to have been called by him "fermentum," in distinction from the unleavened. Cyprian, and still later, Isidore of Seville, in their discussions, leave out all mention of leaven as an ingredient in the eucharistic bread, which they would hardly have done had it been in use. But Alcuin (A.D. 790) says that the bread should be perfectly free from leaven of any kind. Rabanus Maurus (A.D. 819) likewise directs that the bread should be unleavened according to the Hebrew custom. It has been inferred by some that the eucharistic bread was introduced between the latter part of the 9th and the 11th centuries, for the reason that Photius of Constantinople (A.D. 867) never mentioned the use of unleavened bread; while Michael Cærularius, also patriarch of Constantinople (A.D. 1054), frequently does. The silence of Photius would only show that either the use of it was unknown to him, or that he regarded it as a thing of no consequence. But John Maro, writing, at any rate, before the Trullan Council, says that those who made the eucharistic offering in leavened bread reproached the Western churches, the Armenians, and the Maronites, with offering "unleavened cakes," which were not bread at all; a clear proof that the Western churches generally, in the 7th century, were thought to agree with the Maronites and the Armenians in this respect.

On the whole, then, there is distinct evidence that unleavened bread was used in the eucharist by the Latins, and by some eastern sects, in the 7th and 8th centuries; and there is strong evidence that it was used in the 3d. In the orthodox Eastern Church, there can be no doubt that leavened bread has been used from a very early period indeed; if not from the very first, at any rate from the time when Judaizing sects insisted on using unleavened cakes, like those of the Passover, in the Lord's Supper.

The Syrian Christians, besides the leaven which is common to almost all Oriental communions, mix with the bread a little oil and salt, a practice which they defend by many mystical reasons. The modern Greeks eagerly advocate the mixture of salt, which (they say) represents the life; so that a sacrifice without salt is a dead sacrifice.

In regard to the character of the bread, the sixth canon of the Council of Toledo (A.D. 693) enacts that no other bread than such as is whole and clean and especially prepared shall be placed on the altar of the Lord.

The form of the loaf used by the Jews was round, and somewhat less than an inch thick, and six or eight inches in diameter. Oblates were frequently used, and impressed with a cross.

II. Composition of the Cup.—With regard to the element of wine there has been less controversy, though it is an interesting and unsettled question whether the cup was mixed at the institution of the sacrament by our blessed Lord himself. Lightfoot (Temple Service, i, 691) says that he that drank pure wine performed his duty; so that, although it seems probable that our Lord used the mixed cup, yet it is not certain that he did so. The Babylonian Talmud calls water mixed with wine "the fruit of the vine;" but it would appear that the same term is used for pure wine in Isa. xxxii, 12; Hab. iii, 17; so that nothing positive can be ascertained from the use of that term. On the whole, it seems probable that our Lord used a mixed cup, and it is acknowledged on all hands that, with the exception of a few heretics, the Church used wine mixed with water. Justin Martyr and Cyprian both justify the mixing of the two. The third Council of Carthage orders "that in the sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord, nothing else be offered but what the Lord himself commanded, that is, bread, and wine mixed with water." The African code, both Greek and Latin, has this same canon. The liturgies of James and Mark contain like words, while the liturgies of Basil and Chrysostom order the deacon to put wine and water into the cup before the priest places it on the altar. In like manner, in some form or another, the mixing is mentioned in the liturgies of Ethiopia, Nestorius, Severus, of the Roman and the Gallican churches. A peculiar rite of the Byzantine Church is the mixing of hot water with the wine. In the liturgy of Chrysostom, after the fraction of the oblate, the deacon, taking up the vessel of boiling water, says to the priest, "Sir, bless the boiling water;" the priest then says, "Blessed be the fervency of thy saints forever, now and always, and for ages of ages;" then the deacon pours a small quantity of the boiling water into the chalice, saying, "The fervency of faith, full of the Holy Spirit. Amen." The principal deviations from the received practice of the Church in this matter have been the opposite usages of the Aquarians and Ebionites, who used no wine at all in the eucharist, and of the Armenians, who mixed no water with the wine.

Some in the 7th century offered milk for wine in the eucharist; others communicated the people not with wine pressed from grapes, but with the grapes themselves.

A peculiar instance of an addition to the cup is the dropping of milk and honey into it, according to the Roman rite, on Easter eve, the great day for the baptism of catechumens.

The wine in use in the Church has in general been red, apparently from a desire to symbolize as much as possible the blood of our Lord. Various mystical reasons have been given for the mixture of the water with the wine. Besides the presumption that our Lord used the mixed cup at the first institution, the liturgies generally allege as a further reason that blood and water flowed from his pierced side. In the comment on Mark, ascribed to Jerome, another is given: that by one we might be purged from sin, by the other redeemed from punishment. Alcuin (Epist. 90) finds in the three things, water, flour, and wine, which may be placed on the altar, a mystical resemblance to the three heavenly witnesses of 1 John v, 7.

Elenara (or Elevara), a virgin martyr with Sponsaria, in Gaul, in the reign of Diocletian, is commemorated May 2.

Elenog, a Welsh saint of the 7th century.

Eleph. Lieut. Conder identifies this place with the present village of Lifta, west of Jerusalem (Quar. Report of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1881, p. 51), a site which he elsewhere (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 339) assigns to Nephtoth (q. v.).

Elephantus, eleventh bishop of Uzes, A.D. 810.

Elephas, said to have been seventh bishop of Valence, at the close of the 6th century.

Eleri (or Melcri), the name of two Welsh saints. (1) Daughter of Brychan, in the middle of the 5th century. (2) Daughter of Dingad, at Pennach (Denbighshire), at the end of the 6th century.

Ellerius, a Cambrian monk (different from the martyr in Jersey), died cir. A.D. 660, and is commemorated June 13.

Elleshaan, an Ethiopian king, hermit, and saint (commemorated in Rome, Oct. 22; in Ethiopia, May 15), concerning whom the early hagiographers tell discordant stories, seems to have lived in the 6th century.

Eleuchadius, bishop of Ravenna, A.D. 100-112, commemorated Feb. 14, is said to have been originally an eminent Platonic philosopher, converted by Apollinaris on a visit to Rome.

Eleusius, bishop of Cyzicus, one of the most influential members of the Semi-Arian party in the second half of the 4th century, was a man of high personal character. At the instance of Acacius he was deposed, A.D. 380, but returned the next year, and finally seems to have fallen under the general condemnation of the Macedonian heretics, A.D. 383.

Eleutherius. (1) Bishop of Illyricum, martyred together with his mother, Anthia, in the reign of Hadrian; commemorated April 13 or 18. (2) One of the fourteen bishops (sees not named) who composed the synod of Diospolis (Lydda), A.D. 415. (3) Bishop of Geneva in the 5th century. (4) Saint, eighth in the list of bishops of Terracina, cir. A.D. 443; commemorated Sept. 6. (5) Bishop of Chalcedon at the time of the council, A.D. 451. (6) Said to have been elected patriarch of Alexandria by the orthodox party, A.D. 484. (7) Saint, commemorated Feb. 20, was third bishop of Tournay in the 8th or 9th century. (8) Saint, fifteenth bishop of Auxerre, A.D. 532-561, commemorated Aug. 16. (9) Bishop of Cordova, A.D. 589. (10) The first known bishop of Salamanca, A.D. 589. (11) Bishop of Lucca, A.D. 680. (12) Martyr in Persia under Sapor II, commemorated April 18. (13) Soldier and martyr at Nicomedia, under Diocletian, commemorated Oct. 2. (14) Martyr at Paris, A.D. 272; commemorated Oct. 9. (15) Martyr at Tarsus, in Bithynia, commemorated Aug. 4. (16) A martyr at Byzantium, A.D. 311. (17) Abbot of St. Mark's, Spoleto, in the 6th century. (18) Exarch of Ravenna, cir. A.D. 616-620.

Eleutheropolis. For a copious exhibit of the antiquities of Beit-Jibria, see the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 266 sq.).

Eleutherus, martyr at Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, perhaps under Hadrian, commemorated Sept. 27.

Elevation of the Host. The lifting up of the paten and consecrated element of bread was instituted by pope Honorius III (cir. 1210), and he directed that it should be adored when elevated, or carried to the sick, the people reverently bowing. Casalius quotes as his authority for this custom Psa. lxxii, 16. Anastasius Sinaita alludes to this ceremony; and it appears as early as, perhaps, the fourth century in the Greek Church; it has been traced in England in the 11th, in France in the 12th, and in Germany and Italy before the 13th century. Thomas Aquinas and Bonaventura mention the elevation of the paten only; the elevation of the chalice was of later date. The ringing of little bells at this time was introduced by William of Paris, and generally enjoined by Gregory XI.

Elf (old Scandinavian, Alfar; Anglo-Saxon, Ælf; Danish, Èlf; German, Alp; apparently meaning white), in Norse, British, and German popular superstitious belief, is a being between deity and man. The Edda names three classes of elves: Light, Dark, and Black; the first of whom inhabit the pure regions of light, the second mountain-grottoes and caves, the third the infernal regions. But this threefold division seems to have been soon abandoned for a dualism. Snorre Sturleson (died 1241) says: "In Alfheim there live the people of Light-Alfs, and under the earth are the Dark-Alfs, both entirely different from each other in appearance and powers; the former shining with a brightness that eclipses the sun, the latter darker than pitch." The light elves are cheerful, pleasant beings, sometimes visible, sometimes invisible; they enjoy the company of men and gods. On the contrary, the dark elves shun the light, and only leave their gloomy habitations at night; and in case the sun finds them still on earth, they become petrified by his rays. The dark elves are greatly misformed. They have monstrous noses and bellies, bones thin as a spindle, bald or horned heads. However, they are quite skilful, and not only expert in all powers of magic, but possess a rare knowledge in all metallic works; but with all their labors there is always an accompanying curse. The dwelling of these is ever in the thickest darkness; but they light up their dismal habitations by means of brilliant precious stones and shining metals. Some dwell in stones, others in the earth, still others in the sea. They eagerly steal unbaptized children of Christians, rear them in their earthen or rocky dwellings, and bring some of their own hateful, malformed children as substitutes, which can only be got rid of by rubbing their feet with fat and roasting them over the fire. The child cries unmercifully, whereupon the elves return and bring back the stolen child, in order to save their own from the tortures. The light elves are entirely different in every respect; justice and fairness are sacred to them. They never harm any one; even when they have been wronged they only revenge themselves by teasing. They find great pleasure in associating with Christians. As they have human forms and are extraordinarily beautiful, it is not seldom that they form intimate relations with men. If children follow from such intimacy, these must be bathed entirely in the sacred water for baptism, as otherwise they will not be endowed with immortal souls. The time of the elves' appearance is after sundown, in cheerful, summer moonlight nights; then they often appear in swarms, to enjoy themselves and follow every imaginable sport. Their favorite pastime is the dance; they pass whole nights occupied with this amusement, and wherever in the field or pasture a company of elves have danced, there the grass grows greener and fresher. We are accustomed to suppose the elves to be very small, but they can take on any form or size they choose. Sometimes they are hateful, sometimes beautiful; sometimes large, at other times small; just as suits their purpose. The Scots and Irish still hold to the belief that their respective countries are pre-eminently loved and visited by the elves. The most pleasant and animating stories may be found there relating to these beings; and whenever a cloud of dust is seen to rise from the road, the people, believing that the elves are changing their dwelling-places, bow in reverence before them. They often teach men their arts of magic; and, although the information they impart is very meagre, still the persons so instructed become powerful, and are feared and dreaded. Music is loved by the elves above everything else, and although their music is simple, still it exerts upon man a most wonderful influence. The piece of music entitled "Elf-king" forces every listener, and even the table and chairs, to dance as long as the music lasts; but the player cannot stop playing, for the arm and hand using the instrument is likewise charmed and bewitched: either he must play the piece backward exactly, or somebody must come from behind and cut the strings of the violin. Some have said that the elves are angels banished from heaven, who have not sunk into hell, and in this respect there is great similarity between them and the peris of the Persians. The latter are also pleasant, supernatural beings, but deprived of heaven, still not banished to hell. The elves often, in their songs, express a hope of a coming deliverance; this song immediately becomes a weeping and wailing if any one is so cruel as to disturb them in their hopes. The belief in elves has given German poets of modern days material for the loveliest and most animating representations. Compare the fable "The Elves," in Ludwig Tieck's book Phantasus; also the novel of the same, entitled Die Vogelscheuche; and especially a passage in the story of "Cordelia," by A. Treuburg (Friedrich Vischer), in the Jahrbuch schwäbischer Dichter, by Mörike and Zimmermann. Some myths of dwarfs, witches, sprites, etc., make all these appear as the nearest relatives of elves.

Elfán (Lat. Alvanus) appears in the legend of king Lucius, in his application to pope Eleutherus for Christian instruction, and is said in Welsh writers to have been abbot of Glastonbury; by others, of London, in the 2d century.

Elfeio (or Ailvym), a Welsh saint of the 9th century.

Elffin (Elphinus), a Welsh saint of the college of St. Illtyd in the beginning of the 6th century.

Elfedra (or Ælfled), abbess of Whitby (born A.D. 655, died at the age of fifty-nine), commemorated Feb. 8, was daughter of Oswy, king of Northumbria, and a friend of St. Cuthbert.

Elga, Saint, a Welsh hermit, said to have been born in Devonshire and taken by pirates to Ireland, but to have escaped to Bardsey, off Carnarvonshire. His remains were removed to Llandaff in 1120.

Elgu, a Welsh saint of the 6th century.

Elhæarn (or Ælhaiarn), a Welsh saint of Carnarvonshire, is commemorated Nov. 1.

Eliab, deacon and martyr of Ethiopia, A.D. 875, is commemorated Dec. 2.

Elian, a Welsh saint, confused with St. Hilary, is celebrated in August.

Elias (or Helias). (1) Bishop of Lyons, second after Irenæus. (2) Bishop of Sedunum (Setten), in the Valais, about the beginning of the 5th century. (3) A Syrian bishop who endeavored to dissuade Nestorius from his heresy. (4) Bishop of Bolandus, in Lydia, A.D. 451. (5) Bishop of Seleuco-belus, on the Orontes, A.D. 458. (6) Bishop of Majorca, A.D. 484. (7) Bishop of Cæsarea, in Cappadocia, deposed by Anastasius I before A.D. 512. (8) A martyr of the 5th century, commemorated Jan. 14. (9) Prior of a nunnery in Athribis, in the Delta, said to have been remarkably sanctified from carnal passion by a dream. (10) A solitary near Antioch, in the Thebaid, in the 4th century. (11) A hermit near the Dead Sea, noted for hospitality. (12) Abbot of a monastery in Syria, celebrated for his holiness and wisdom. (13) Abbot of Isania, near Antioch, near the close of the 6th century.

Elias (Armen. Eghia). (1) Patriarch of ARMENIA, was born at Arjich. He was bishop of the Pezounians, and was raised to the dignity of a patriarch in 703, after the death of Sahag or Isaac III. He showed himself as one of the most violent adversaries of the Council of Chalcedon. At this time, the princess who governed the Aghovans (Albanians) took pains to make her subjects adopt the doctrine of the Council of Chalcedon, and to unite them with the Romish Church; but this displeased the nobility, at whose suggestion Elias wrote three letters to the bishop and to the princess, in order to induce them to renounce the enterprise. But as these remonstrances remained without effect, he resorted to violence and persecution. The Arabians were then masters of Armenia, and the patriarch addressed himself to the emir, or kaliph, accusing his adversaries of forming a conspiracy with the emperor of the Greeks, in order to escape from the authority of the Moslems. In consequence Nerses and the princess were laid in chains, by the order of Omar II, and a new bishop was given to the Albanians. Elias died A.D. 718. (2) Occupied the patriarchate from A.D. 760 to 797, with the exception of an interval, during which he was expelled by the patriarch Theodoret. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Elias HAL-LEVI ben-Benjamin OF CONSTANTINOPLE, who flourished in the 16th century, is the author of a ritual for the Jewish congregations in Greece, printed at Constantinople in 1602. He also wrote various Talmudic decisions. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 236 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Elias, bishop of JERUSALEM. (1) A.D. 494-513. He was an Arab by birth, and received his education in one of the Nitrian monasteries; but being expelled by Timothy Ælurus in A.D. 457, he took refuge with St. Euthymius. He afterwards resided in a cell at Jericho. He was a strict ascetic, and took an active part in the Athanasian controversy, in consequence of which he was finally banished to Æla, on the Red Sea. (2) Cir. A.D. 760-797. He was for a time deposed on the charge of image-worship, brought by Theodorus, an ambitious monk, in 763. He was represented at the second General Council at Nice, in 787, by John, a priest, and Thomas, a prior of the convent of St. Arsena, near Babylon, in Egypt, who also represented the patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch. (3) Died about 907. In 881 he sent a letter to Charlemagne; likewise, also, to the prelates, princes, and nobles of Gaul. A Latin translation of the letter (it is not probable that the original was in this language) may be found in the Spicilegium of D'Achery (Paris, 1723, vol. iii).

Elias, Apocalypse of. Under this title an apocryphal work was current in the 2d century, from which, according to Origen (Homily 85 on Matt. xxvii, vol. iii, 916), the Pauline quotation "Eye hath not seen," etc. (1 Cor. ii, 9), is said to have been taken. The same was repeated by Zacharias Chrysopolitanus (Harmonia Evangelica, ch. 166); and by Georgius Syncellus, who writes that it was taken ἐκ τῶν ἑλπίων ἀποκαλύψεως. This view was, however, early controverted by Jerome, who, referring to 1 Cor. ii, 9, says: "Solent hoc loco Apocryphorum quidam deliramenta sectari, et dicere quod de Apocalypsi Eliæ testimonium sumunt sit, cum in Esai juxta Hebraicum ita legatur: A sæculo non audierunt neque auribus perceperunt" (Epistola 101 ad Pammachium; comp. also, on Isa. lxiv, 4 in lib. xvii in Isaiam, iv, 761, ed. Vallars.). It is probably the same work which is rejected in the Apostolic Constitutions, vi, 16, and in the Synopsis Sac. Script. ascribed to Athanasius, ii, 154. Elijah BEN-CHAYIM of Constantinople, who flourished in the beginning of the 17th century, is the author of אמרי נשר, or Homilies on the Pentateuch (Venice, 1630); מ"ם חיים, or Decisions (ibid. 1647). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i. 236; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.) p. 95. (B. P.)

Elined (Ælivedha, Luned, or Enid), a Welsh virgin saint, commemorated Aug. 1, was daughter of earl Ynywl and granddaughter of Brychan, in Brecknockshire, and is said to have been slain for refusing marriage with a prince.

Elinga, FRANCIS JANSSENS, a Dominican, who died at Bruges, Nov. 22, 1715, is the author of Auctoritas Thomæ Aquinatis:—Suprema Romani Pontificis Auctoritas:—Doctrina de Romani Pontificis Auctoritate et Infallibilitate:—Dissertationes Theol. Selectæ:—Summa Conciliorum Barth. Carranza Aucta et Additionibus Illustrata. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Eliot, Jared, M.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Joseph Eliot, was born at Guilford, Conn., Nov. 7, 1685. While Yale College was yet located at Killingworth, he graduated from it in 1706. In October, 1709, he was ordained pastor of the Killingworth Church, as successor to the Rev. Mr. Pierson, and retained this position until his death, April 22, 1763. From 1730 to 1762 he was a fellow of Yale College. In 1722, the day after commencement at Yale, a number of prominent men assembled in the college library to consider a paper signed by some of the leading clergymen of Connecticut, among whom was Dr. Eliot, in which doubts regarding the validity of Presbyterian ordination were expressed. In October following, according to arrangement, the divine right of Episcopacy was discussed before a large number of clergy and laity. As the result, some avowed themselves Episcopalians, while Dr. Eliot and others were convinced of the truth of Presbyterianism. It is said of him that he was the chief physician of his time in the colony, being eminent also as a botanist and as a scientific agriculturist. Through him the white mulberry was introduced into Connecticut, and with it the silkworm, concerning which he published a treatise. In 1761 he received a gold medal from a society in London for his process of extracting iron from black sand, for he was likewise a mineralogist. His linguistic acquirements were also of a superior order. His agricultural tastes led him to devise various ways for draining swamps and reclaiming marshes, and he published several essays on agriculture. A large number of farms in the colony belonged to him. So conscientious, however, was he as a clergyman that he never omitted preaching on the Sabbath during forty successive years. Benjamin Franklin frequently visited him, and the two maintained a correspondence. Socially he was very agreeable, and among his people he was regarded as a great preacher. A few of his sermons were published. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 270.

Eliot, John, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born in Boston, May 31, 1754. He prepared for college in the North Grammar-school in Boston, and in 1772 graduated from Harvard College. Soon after his graduation he took charge of a school in Roxbury, where he remained one year. He studied theology at Cambridge. In 1775 he commenced his labors as a preacher at Dover. In 1776 he received an earnest request from several leading members of the Episcopal Church at Halifax, N. S., to become an assistant to their aged pastor, but declined. He officiated for a short time as chaplain to the recruits of colonel Marshall's regiment, then raised in Boston for the expedition to Canada. After this he passed several months at Littleton as the assistant of Rev. Daniel Rogers, and during the winter of 1778-79 supplied the First Church in Salem. In 1779 he was ordained and installed pastor of the New North Church in the same town. In 1804 he was chosen a member of the corporation of Harvard College. He was also a member of most of the literary and charitable societies in Boston and vicinity, and in some of them he held important offices. Dr. Eliot died Feb. 14, 1813. He published several single Sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 92.

Elisæus. (1) Bishop of Arezzo, A.D. 713. (2) Bishop of Bologna, cir. A.D. 716. (3) Thirtieth bishop of Noyon, A.D. 747. (4) Forty-third bishop of Auch, about the close of the 8th century. (5) A Scotch prelate, promoted to the see of Galloway about 1405, and still holding that office in 1412.

Elisha, the prophet, is commemorated as a saint in various Christian calendars on June 14 (Oct. 12, Oct. 16).

Elisha of ARMENIA. (1) Elected patriarch A.D. 936, after the death of Theodorus (Asdouadzadour) I, and established the seat of his administration at Agathamar, on lake Van. His enemies deposed him by means of intrigues and betrayals in 941, and he died A.D. 943. (2) Born A.D. 1451. Being first bishop of Erivan and then vicar-general of the patriarch of Armenia, he became patriarch in 1503, after the death of Thaddæus I, and ruled with wisdom. He was well versed in theology, rhetoric, and sacred history. He died in 1575, leaving in MS. a Commentary on Genesis:—Life of St. Gregory, in verse:—and forty-five Sermons. See Hoefler, Nouv. Bing. Générale, s. v.

Elisha BEN-ABUJA (surnamed Acher, i. e. "the other one," after his apostasy) was a pupil of the famous rabbi Akiba (q. v.). He was the son of a wealthy citizen of Jerusalem, and was early initiated in the study of the law, but afterwards apostatized from Judaism. It is related of him that while attending the Jewish college he had often been noticed to carry with him writings of the "Minim" (probably of Gnostics), and that he had even been in the habit of quoting Greek poetry. One of the most intimate friends and pupils of Elisha was the famous rabbi, Meir (q. v.), who seized every opportunity to invite his friend to return into the bosom of the synagogue—a proposition to which Elisha refused to accede, as forgiveness could not be granted to one who had so wantonly abused the gifts bestowed upon him. When Acher lay on his deathbed, Meir hastened to his side, and renewed, this time effectually, his solicitations on this subject. Legend has it that Meir spread his cloak over the grave of Acher; a cloud of smoke rose from it, and Meir turned away with the somewhat blasphemous application of Ruth iii, 18, "Tarry this night (of time), and it shall be in the morning (of immortality) that he the All-merciful will deliver and ransom thee; but if he be unwilling, then I will redeem thee." See Hamburger, Real-Encyklop. ii, 168 sq.; Bacher, in Frankel-Grätz's Monatschrift, 1884, p. 234 sq.; Jelinek, Elischa ben-Abujja, genannt Acher (Leipsic, 1847). (B. P.)

Elisha GALICHO. See GALICHO.

Elissæus. (1) Bishop of Diocletianopolis, in Palestine, A.D. 359. (2) A priest condemned to slavery by the Council of Seville (A.D. 619), for ingratitude to his bishop.

Elithur, the name of three saints in the Irish calendar, at April 25, May 12, and Dec. 23.

Elivager, celebrated rivers which occupy a conspicuous place in the cosmogony of the ancient Scandilnavians. They are the source whence came the original cosmical matter or substance from which the worlds were formed, as well as the giants and men. See NORSE MYTHOLOGY.

Elizabeth. (1) Mother of John the Baptist, commemorated Feb. 10. (2) A wonder-worker of Constantinople, commemorated April 24.

Elkanah BEN-JEROCHAN BEN-ABIGDOR, a Jewish writer of the 15th century, is the author of a cabalistic work entitled, קנה חכמה וקנה בינה, which was first published at Prague in 1610:—ספריאח, also called סתרי תורה, a cabalistic Midrash on Gen. v, 29, published first in 1784. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 239 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Ella, bishop of Sigüenza (Segontia), cir. A.D. 680-685.

Ellbrigh, abbess of Cluain-Bronaigh (Clonbroney, County Longford), died A.D. 785.

Ellendorf, JOHANN OTTO, a Roman Catholic writer, was born at Wiedenbrück, in Westphalia, in 1805. In 1826 he was rector at the gymnasium of his native place, and in 1841 was called to Berlin as professor of jurisprudence. He wrote, Der heilige Bernhard von Clairvaux (Essen, 1837):—Die Katholische Kirche Preussens (Rudolstadt, 1837):—Thomas Becket (Essen, 1838):—Die Karolinger (ibid. 1838, 1839, 2 vols.):—Die Moral und Politik der Jesuiten (Darmstadt, 1840):—Das Primat der römischen Päpste (ibid. 1841, 1846, 2 vols.):—Ist Petrus in Rom gewesen? (ibid. 1841):—Die Stellung der spanischen Kirche, etc. (ibid. 1843). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 816 sq. (B. P.)

Ellentius, abbot of Llancarvan, A.D. 570-577.

Eller, MORITZ M., a Jewish preacher, was born at Mannheim in 1801. He studied at Bonn and Heidelberg. From 1834 to 1844 he was teacher at the Maier-Michel-David Free School in Hanover, accepted in the latter year a call as rabbi to Celle, and died Jan. 4, 1848. See Heimbürger, M. M. Eller nach seinem Leben und Wirken, nebst einigen Vorträgen des Vereinigten (Celle, 1848); Kayserling, Bibliothekjüdischer Kunzelredner, ii, 248. (B. P.)

Ellil, abbot of Whitton, in the 6th century.

Ellingwood, JOHN WALLACE, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Beverly, Mass., May 2, 1782. For several years he pursued the business of a silversmith, relinquishing that occupation in 1810 to enter the Andover Theological Seminary. In 1812 he was ordained over the Church in Bath, Me., where he labored with great fidelity and success until 1843, when ill-health compelled him to resign his charge. He died at Bath, Aug. 19, 1860. Dr. Ellingwood was a man of great wisdom and prudence, firmness and independence of opinion, benevolence and self-control; he took a deep interest in the great religious and moral enterprises of his day, and held responsible positions on the Boards of his Church. Eight revivals of religion resulted from his labors. Three of his sermons were published in 1851. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 420.

Elliott, Charles, D.D. See vol. iii, p. 1042.

Elliott, David, DD., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Sherman's Valley, Perry Co., Pa., Feb. 6, 1787. To the age of sixteen he had only the educational advantages of the rural district in which he lived; but in 1802 he entered the classical school in Tuscarora Valley, and in the spring of 1804 went to another in the town of Mifflin, where he spent one year. In 1805 he became an assistant of Rev. Matthew Brown, in the academy of Washington, at the same time making preparation to enter the junior class of Dickinson College, where he graduated Sept. 28, 1806. He studied theology with Rev. John Linn, Rev. Dr. Culbertson, of Zanesville, O., and Rev. Joshua Williams, D.D., of Newville, Pa. He was licensed to preach as a probationer by the Presbytery of Carlisle, Sept. 26, 1811; and Feb. 19, 1812 received a call to settle as pastor of the Church of Mercersburg, where he served until Oct. 29, 1829. His second pastorate was at Washington, lasting until 1836. For a time he was acting president of Washington College and professor of moral philosophy. In 1836 the Assembly called him to take a professorship in the Western Theological Seminary of Pennsylvania. In 1849 he was again solicited to become president of Washington College, but declined. He was often sent as a member to the General Assembly, and was moderator of the synod in 1831, 1834, and 1838. He died March 18, 1874. Dr. Elliott was successful as a preacher and pastor, a thorough student, successful educator, wise in the management of all affairs in the assembly, equal to the most trying crisis, a man greatly loved and honored by all. See Brownson, Memorial.

Elliott, James H., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, brother of bishop Elliott of Georgia, was born in Charleston, S. C., in 1819; ordained deacon in 1849; ministered successively at Beaufort, Grahamville, St. Michael's, Charleston, Madison, Ga., and St. Paul's, Charleston; was editor of the Christian Witness, Boston, from 1868 to 1870; and died at Charleston, June 11, 1871. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Elliott, Jared Leigh, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington, D. C., June 24, 1807. Most of his boyhood was spent as a sailor. He afterwards studied in the academy at Princeton, N. J.; graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1831; spent two years at Auburn Theological Seminary, N. Y.; then one year in Princeton Theological Seminary; was licensed by the Presbytery of New York, April 13, 1834; and was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Oct. 26, 1835. His successive fields of labor were, as stated supply at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 1834; of the Mariners' Church, Philadelphia, Pa., 1835; of the first and second churches of Washington, and of the Church at Frederick, Md., 1836-39; chaplain in the U. S. Navy, 1849; army, 1861-81. He made many long sea-voyages, and was attached to the South Arctic Exploring Expedition in 1840. Dr. Elliott died at Washington, D. C., April 16, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882.

Ellis, Clement, an English divine, was born in 1630, near Penrith, in Cumberland, and was educated at Oxford. In 1693 he was appointed a prebendary of Southwell. He died in 1700. He published a number of sermons and theological treatises (1661-1700), and some were issued after his death: Discourse on the Parable, with an Account of his Life and Writings (1704, 8vo);—The Scripture Catechist. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Ellis, William, an English Congregationalist minister, was born at Wisbeach, Aug. 29, 1794. Being converted when quite young, he offered his services to the London Missionary Society; was educated for mission work at Gosport, and, in January, 1816, was sent to Tahiti, the largest of the Society Islands. In 1822 he went to the Sandwich Islands, and greatly assisted in establishing Christianity there, preaching frequently in Hawaiian; he assisted in the arrangement of the alphabet; wrote the first hymns; baptized the first convert, the queen-mother, Keo-puo-lani; and shortly afterwards preached her funeral sermon. In 1824 his wife's health gave way and compelled their return to England. He went by way of Boston, and spent three months in the northern states, rendering great service to the American Foreign Mission Board by telling the story of the Hawaii mission. For six years after his arrival in England Mr. Ellis was agent of the London Missionary Society among the county auxiliaries. In 1841 broken health compelled him to resign official life, and he settled at Hoddesdon to the quiet duties of a country pastor. In 1862 he went to Madagascar, reorganized the mission which had been nearly ruined by the persecutions of the late queen, saw the native church and its agencies resettled on a healthy system, the schools reopened and the press at work, and in 1865 returned to Hoddesdon, where he died, July 9, 1872. Mr. Ellis published, Missionary Narrative of a Tour through Hawaii, or Oukyhee (Lond. 1826, 8vo; 4th ed. 1827, 8vo);—Polynesian Researches (1829, 2 vols. 8vo; last ed. 1853, 4 vols. 12mo);—Vindication of the South Sea Missions (1831, 8vo);—History of Madagascar (1832, 2 vols. 8vo);—History of the London Missionary Society (1844, 8vo), and other valuable works. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 325; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Life, by his son (Lond. 1873).

Elloc, an Irish saint of Killmalloch, is commemorated July 13 (or 24).

Elltin. (1) An Irish saint of Shannoe, County Sligo, commemorated Jan. 11. (2) A confessor of Kinsale, commemorated Dec. 11.

Ellwood, Thomas, a Quaker writer of some reputation, was born at Crowell, near Thame, in Oxfordshire, in August, 1639, where he was educated. He united with the Friends in 1658; became a preacher, and died March 1, 1713. The following are some of his publications: Forgery no Christianity (1674, 12mo);—The Foundation of Tithes Shaken (1682, 1720, 8vo; Wickham, 1690, 4to);—Sacred History (1705-09). He was an intimate friend of Milton. After perusing the MS. of Paradise Lost, he returned it to the author with the remark, "Thou hast said much here of Paradise lost, but what hast thou to say of Paradise found." To this timely hint the world is indebted for Paradise Regained. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Elmacin (or Elmakyn), George, an Egyptian historian, known in the East by the name of Ibn-Amid, was born in 1228. He was a Christian, and occupied the place of ketib, or secretary, at the court of the sultans of Egypt, an office usually filled by Christians. In 1238 he succeeded his father, Yaser el-Amid, who had held the office of secretary to the council of war under the sultans of Egypt for forty-five years. Elmacin died at Damascus in 1278. He wrote a History of the Saracens, consisting of annals which extend from the time of Mohammed to the year 1117. It is principally occupied with the affairs of the Saracen empire, but contains some passages relating to the eastern Christians. It was published, in Arabic and Latin, at Leyden, in 1625. Other editions have also appeared. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Elmendorf, Anthony, D.D., a (Dutch) Reformed minister, was born in Ulster County, N. Y., in 1818; graduated from Rutgers College in 1836, and from the New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1839. The first eight years of his ministry were passed in quiet country churches (Hurley, N. Y., 1840, Hyde Park, 1843). He then removed to Brooklyn, and after three years of earnest work in the new Church on Bedford Avenue (1848-51), started in his own house the Sunday-school and congregation of the North Reformed Church, Brooklyn, which is the monument of his courageous, indefatigable, and successful labors. Worn out with toil and feeble health, he resigned his charge but a few months before his death, which occurred in 1866. He was a careful sermonizer, a diligent student, and an eloquent preacher. His pastoral efficiency was wonderful. (W. J. R. T.)

Elmenhorst, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian, was born Oct. 19, 1632, at Parchim, in Mecklenburg, studied at Leipzig and Wittenberg, and accepted a call in 1660 to Hamburg, where he died May 21, 1704. He is the author of Geistliche Lieder (Hamburg, 1681):—Geistreiche Lieder (ibid. 1700). See Mølleri, Cimbria Literata (Copenh., 1744), ii, 183 sq.; Schröder, Lexikon der Hamburgischen Schriftsteller, vol. ii; Wezel, Hymnopoetica, iv, 103 sq.; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 365 sq.; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Elmerus (or Ermelius), patron saint of a church at Molhanium, diocese of Liege, is assigned to the 7th or 8th century, and commemorated Aug. 28.

Elmo, Saint. See ERASMUS.

Emsley, PETER, D.D., an English scholar and divine, was born in 1773, and educated at Westminster School and at Merton College, Oxford. In 1798 he was presented to Little Horkesley, a small chapel in Essex, but becoming master of a fortune by the death of an uncle, he devoted himself to literary studies, and particularly to Greek literature. He lived for a while in Edinburgh, where he was intimately associated with the founders of the Edinburgh Review, and contributed to that periodical several articles. He also edited with consummate ability several classical works. In 1816 he made a voyage to Italy in search of manuscripts, and passed the winter of 1818 in researches in the Laurentian library at Florence. The next year he was appointed to assist sir Humphry Davy in the unavailing task of trying to decipher some of the papyri found at Herculaneum. He died March 8, 1825. Dr. Emsley was one of the most accomplished Greek scholars of his day. See The New Amer. Cyclop. vii, 111; (Lond.) Annual Register, 1825, p. 232; Hart, English Literature, p. 439.

Eloesus (or Æloesus), one of the seven ruling spirits in the Ophite (q. v.) system.

Elodia, a virgin martyr with Nunilo at Osca (Huesca); commemorated Oct. 22.

Eloi, Saint. See ELIGIUS.

Elon. Lieut. Conder (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 336) proposes to identify this site with that of Beit Elio, a village marked on the Ordnance Map (sheet xiv) at eleven miles northeast of Jimzu (Gimzo), in a plain, without any traces of antiquity; and Tristram (Bible Places, p. 51) concurs in this location, which, however, is without the boundaries of Dan. But Elon-beth-hanum, which is probably the same place, the former identifies much more plausibly with Beit Anán, which is laid down at two and a quarter miles south of Beit-ur el-Foka (Upper Bethhoron), and described (Memoirs to the Survey, iii, 16) as "a small village on the top of a flat ridge; near the main road to the west are the remains of a khan, with water, and about a mile to the east is a spring. It was a fief of the Holy Sepulchre in the 12th century."

Eloquius, abbot of Lagny, commemorated as a saint Dec. 3, was a Hibernian or Scot who accompanied St. Fursey to Belgium as a missionary about the middle of the 7th century.

Elotharius (or Ehleutherius), twenty-seventh bishop of Avignon, A.D. 475.

Elpedephōrus, bishop of Cuiculis or Cuizis in Numidia, A.D. 349.

Elpenipsa, one of the forty-eight martyrs of Lyons (q. v.).

Elpidiphōrus and companions, martyrs in Persia, A.D. 320; commemorated Nov. 2.

Elpidius. (1) Bishop and martyr in Cherson under Diocletian, commemorated March 8. (2) Bishop of Comana in Cappadocia, A.D. 325. (3) Bishop of Palestine, A.D. 347. (4) Bishop of Satala in Armenia, deposed A.D. 360. (5) Bishop of a maritime town in the East, A.D. 375, excommunicated by Eustathius. (6) Bishop of Dionysia in Bostra, A.D. 381. (7) Bishop of Laodicea in Syria, deposed A.D. 404 for attachment to the cause of Chrysostom, but restored in 414. (8) Bishop of Lyons, cir. A.D. 424. (9) Two bishops of Thermo in Galatia, one A.D. 451, the other A.D. 692. (10) Saint, first of the four recorded bishops of Atella in Campania, cir. A.D. 400. (11) A bishop who, with eleven companions, is commemorated Sept. 1. (12) Bishop of Damietta, who fled to Constantinople, A.D. 487, to escape the Eutychians. (13) Bishop of Volterra, A.D. 501. (14) Bishop of Ancyra in the early part of the 6th century. (15) One of four brothers, all Spanish bishops in the first half of the 6th century. (16) Bishop of Thebes in Thessaly, A.D. 531. (17) Bishop of Catania, cir. A.D. 580. (18) A bishop, probably of some eastern see, censured by Gregory the Great, A.D. 597. (19) Bishop of Tarazona (Turiasso), A.D. 633–638. (20) Bishop of Astorga, A.D. 654. (21) Patron saint of the town of St. Elpidia in Pisenum, said by some to have been a Cappadocian by birth, and to have died A.D. 393. (22) Abbot of the monastery founded by Timotheus in Cappadocia, where he died before A.D. 420. (23) Archimandrite of Constantinople, A.D. 448. (24) Surnamed Rusticus, a deacon of Lyons, a skillful physician, and a friend of Ennodius, in the time of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths; the author of some poems still extant (see Migne, Patr. Lat. lxii, 545). (25) Martyr under Julian with several others, commemorated Nov. 16.

Elpidophorus. (1) An apostate during the persecution by the Vandal king Hunneric, A.D. 484. (2) Bishop of Anastasiopolis in Caria, A.D. 558.

Elpis (hope), one of the æons in the system of Valentinus (q. v.).

Elpis, a (mythical) martyr, daughter of Sophia; commemorated with her sisters, Pistis and Agape, Sept. 17.

Eltob, WILLIAM, an English clergyman and antiquary, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Jan. 1, 1673, and was educated at Eton and Catharine Hall, Cambridge. In 1696 he became a fellow of University College. In 1792 he was appointed rector of the united parishes of St. Swithin and St. Mary Bothan, London. In 1703 he published an edition of Ascham's Latin letters. He died in 1714. The following are some of his publications: An Essay on the Great Affinity and Mutual Agreement between the Two Professions of Law and Divinity (Lond. 8vo);—Sermons (1704, 4to);—A Translation into Latin of the Saxon Homily of Lupus, with Notes by Dr. Hickee (1701).

Eltowich, JOHANN HERMANN, a Lutheran divine, was born at Rendsburg, in Holstein, June 19, 1684, and was educated at Lubeck, Rostock, Leipzig, Jena, and Würtemberg, at which last university he took his master's degree. In 1717 he was invited to become pastor of the Church of Sta. Cosmo and Damian, at Stade. He died there, June 10, 1721. For a list of some of his works, see Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Eltekeh. Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 336; see Quar. Statement of "Palest. Explor. Fund," January, 1881, p. 51) that this is the present Beit Likia, which is laid down on the Ordnance Map one and three quarter miles south-west of Beit-ur el-Tahta (Lower Bethhoron), and described in the Memoirs to the Survey (iii, 16) as "a small village on a main road at the foot of the hills, supplied by cisterns; with ancient foundations among the houses;" and in this identification Tristram concurs (Bible Places, p. 51).

Eltinge, WILHELMUS, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born near Kingston, N. Y., in 1778, graduated at Princeton College in 1796, and pursued theological studies with Dr. Theodorick Romeyn at Schenectady, N. Y. He was licensed in 1798, and passed his long ministry at Paramus, N. J. From 1799 to 1811 he likewise served the adjoining church of Saddle River, and from 1816 to 1833 the First Church of Totown, now Paterson. He resigned the latter in 1850, and died in 1861. Dr. Eltinge was a man of respectable attainments, and of great firmness and decision. He was a very prominent actor in the ecclesiastical troubles in Bergen County which led to the secession in 1822, and the organization of the "True Reformed Dutch Church," of which he was a strong and life-long opponent. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 255. (W. J. R. T.)

Elton, Romeo, D.D., a Baptist minister and scholar, was born at Burlington, Conn., in 1790. He graduated from Brown University in 1818, engaged in teaching for two or three years; was ordained at Newport, R. I., June 11, 1817; became pastor of the Second Baptist Church there, but resigned in 1822 on account of his health, and two years after was settled in Windsor, Vt. Being professor of Greek and Latin in Brown University, he spent about two years abroad, chiefly in Germany, in study, and assumed his chair in 1827. He retired from his office in 1843, and in 1845 took up his residence in Exeter, in the south of England, where he remained twenty-two years; then removed to Bath, where he lived two years, during all which period he preached almost constantly in the vacant pulpits of Baptist and Independent churches, and wrote for the press. For several years he was one of the editors of the Eclectic Review. He returned to America in 1869, and died in Boston, Mass., Feb. 5, 1870. He left by his will, among other bequests, one of $20,000 to Brown University to establish a professorship of natural theology, and nearly as much to Columbian University to establish a professorship of intellectual and moral philosophy. Among his published writings may be found an edition of Callender's Century Sermon:—a volume of President Macy's Remains (1844):—and a Life of Roger Williams (1853). (J. C. S.)

Elurion, an Egyptian bishop, A.D. 347.

Elvetus, bishop of Arezzo, A.D. 775.

Elwandus, bishop of Treviso, in 452.

Elwert, Eduard, an evangelical theologian of Germany, was born at Cannstadt, Feb. 22, 1805. In 1830 he commenced his academical career at Tübingen, was in 1836 appointed professor at Zurich, and from 1839 to 1841 acted as professor at Tübingen. Bodily infirmities obliged him to retire from his academic activity, and he accepted the pastorate at Mötzingen. In 1850 he was placed at the head of the Schönthal Seminary, where he labored until 1864, when he was obliged to retire entirely from active work. He died June 9, 1865, at his native place, having published, De Antinomia Joh. Agricola (Zurich, 1836):—Annotiones in Gal. ii. 1-10, etc. (Tübingen, 1852):—Quaestiones et Observationes ad Philologiam Sacram N. Test. Pertinentes (ibid. 1860). He also contributed to several theological reviews. See Kütbel, in Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encyclop. a. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 818. (B. P.)

Elwin (or Alunus), Saint, one of Breaca's companions in her voyage from Ireland to Cornwall; commemorated Feb. 22.

Elwood, abbot of St. Iltyd's (now Lantwit Major), in the 6th century.

Elwog (Lat. Eluogus), bishop of Llandaff, in the second half of the 8th century.

Elwystyl (or Elgistil), suffragan bishop of Llandaff, in the first half of the 6th century.

Ely, Alfred, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at West Springfield, Mass., Nov. 8, 1778. Leaving a clerkship at the age of twenty-one, he prepared for college at the Hartford (Conn.) grammar-school, and graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1804. After a tutorship at the college for one year, he was ordained over the Church in Monson, Mass., in 1806, where he was an active minister for thirty-six years, and died July 6, 1868. Dr. Ely was an able preacher and theologian, and his ministry was greatly blessed to the spiritual and moral elevation of his people. Twenty-one of his sermons and addresses were published. See Cong. Quarterly, 1867, p. 137.

Ely, David, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Lyme, Conn., July 7 (O. S.), 1749. In 1769 he graduated from Yale College; in October, 1771, was licensed to preach; and Oct. 27, 1773, was ordained colleague with Rev. Jedediah Mills in Huntington, Conn. He died there, Feb. 16, 1816. During the Revolution he was a zealous patriot. Though he made no pretensions to style, he had a talent for communicating the truth, which strongly impressed it upon the memory. His facility and felicity in quoting Scripture were excelled by few. About a hundred pupils were prepared by him for Yale College. From 1778 he was a member of the corporation of Yale; was, for a long time, secretary of the same, and one of the prudential committee. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 4.

Ely, Samuel Rose, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at West Springfield, Mass., Dec. 29, 1803. He graduated from Williams College in 1830, studied theology for two years in Princeton Theological Seminary, and was ordained by the Presbytery of Westchester, N. Y., Dec. 4, 1834. He served as pastor at Carmel, from 1834 to 1836; at Easthampton, from 1836 to 1846; at Brooklyn, in 1850; and as stated supply at Roslyn, from 1853 until his death, May 11, 1878. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 82.

Elymas, a presbyter, martyred in Persia under Decius; commemorated April 22.

Elysium, in Greek and Roman mythology, is the abode of the blessed. According to Homer, it lies in the mild sunlight, this side of Oceanus; whether it is an island or not is not mentioned. Hesiod speaks of islands of the blessed, where on the Oceanus river the heroes live in peace, and where the earth yearly brings forth three harvests of fruits. According to Pindar, the citadel, Kronos (Saturn), is on the islands of the blessed. Here cool, refreshing sea-breezes blow, gold-glittering flowers bloom on the trees, and along the springs. The heroes decorate their persons with them. They only reach this blessed abode who pass a threefold test in Hades and on earth by keeping themselves unstained by crimes. Besides Rhadamanthus, whom Kronos selected as his successor, Pindar mentions Peleus, Cadmus, and Achilles as being here. Virgil gives another description of the Elysium: "Laughing aether fills the fields with a purple light; a distinct sun and distinct stars shed their light upon them." Æneas there finds those who received wounds in battling for their country, priests who led a spotless life, sacred poets who sung the worth of Phœbus, discoverers who benefited mankind by their arts, etc.

Elzevir is the name of a family, the members of which are known by their publications of theological works, more especially of the New Test. Louis Elzevir, who had embraced Calvinism in France, had to leave his country in 1580, and went to Leyden, where he established a book-store, which soon became known by the publication of Drusii Ebraicorum Questionum libri duo (1583). The descendants of Louis established themselves at Utrecht, Amsterdam, and at other places. His grandson, Isaac, was appointed in 1620 university printer at Leyden, and this privilege remained with the family until 1712. The Elzevirs published such works as La Pègrère's Præadamitæ, in 1655, and Richard Simon's Histoire Crit. du Vieux Testament, in 1680, which the Church of Rome tried to suppress. What assures the Elzevirs an honorable place in the history of theology is the fact that they issued several editions of the Greek New Test., which became popular and authoritative for a long period. The preface to the second edition, published in 1633, boldly proclaims, "Textum ergo habes, nunc ab omnibus receptum; in quo nihil immutatum aut corruptum damus;" hence the name textus receptus, or commonly received standard text. All the Holland editions were scrupulously copied from the Elzevir text, and Wetstein could not get authority to print his famous Greek Test. (1751-52) except on condition of following it. See Bernus, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; but more especially Alphons Willems's Histoire et Annales Typographiques (Brussels and Paris, 1880, 2 vols.), where a history of the Elzevir family and a list of their publications is given. Ema (or Ama), a martyr, with six other nuns, captives with Eliabus (q. v.), commemorated May 22.

Emant, of Cluain, an Irish saint, said by some to have been a bishop; commemorated July 1.

Emanuel BEN-SALOMO. See IMMANUEL.

Emanus, slain by thieves at Chartres in the 6th century, is said to have been a Cappadocian pilgrim to Rome and other cities of Italy; commemorated May 16.

Ember Days. These are days of fasting occurring quarterly, in commemoration of the seasons (Lat. quatuor temporum, whence by contraction the German Quatember, and the English Ember). We find them at an early period associated with the invoking of God's blessing on each of the four seasons in turn, and the special striving by prayers and fasting to merit such blessings. They were celebrated at Nativity, Easter, Epiphany, and Pentecost. About the time of Gelasius they were selected as the most fitting for the ordination of the clergy. In the Eastern Church there is no trace whatever of an observance of the Ember seasons. The passage of Athanasius, which some have quoted in support of a different conclusion, merely proves the existence of a fast at Pentecost. As regards the Gallican Church, the Ember seasons do not seem to have been established much before the time of Charlemagne. The second Council of Tours (A.D. 567), in prescribing the fasts to be observed by monks, makes no mention whatever of the fasts of the four seasons. The observance of the Ember days is purely a Western institution. It was, doubtless, at first a rite merely of the local Roman Church, whence it gradually spread throughout the West. The history of the development of the custom is probably thus: Fast was celebrated at the times of Lent, Pentecost, and the Nativity; these periods would roughly correspond with three of the four seasons, and thus some bishop of Rome, Leo or one of his predecessors, may have conceived the idea of making them symbolize the return of the seasons, and so added the one necessary to complete the four. It would soon come to pass, then, that they would be spoken of as originally ordained with that view; the length of celebration settled, the fasts then became associated with the seasons, and were regarded as independent of Lent, etc. Thus they might occasionally fall outside of these seasons, and finally such irregularity may have caused the settlement of the matter as at present.

Embla, in Norse mythology, was the first woman created by the Asas, from a tree-trunk (Embla, "the pine," while Ask, "the ash," was the name of the first man). She was endowed with feeling, motion, spirit, life, the senses of hearing and seeing, and was gifted with the power of speech. By Ask, her husband, she became mother of the human race.

Embolism (also Embolis and Embolum). (1) An inserted prayer; the name given to the prayer which in almost all ancient liturgies follows the Lord's prayer, founded on one or both of the two last petitions. It is so called because it is interposed there, and what had been already asked in the Lord's prayer is expanded, and it is more clearly expressed what evils we seek to be delivered from, viz. past, present, and future. There are also added the names of the saints by whose intercession we strengthen our prayers, viz. the Virgin Mary, Peter,

Paul, and Andrew. The embolism was usually repeated by the priest in a low voice, symbolizing the silence during the period that our Lord lay in the grave; but in the Ambrosian rite it was always pronounced aloud. This practice, which has left very faint traces in the Western Church, holds a more important place in Oriental liturgies. The embolism is not, however, found in the liturgies of Chrysostom and Basil, but appears in those of James, Mark, and Theodore the Interpreter, as well as in the Armenian, Mozarabic, and Coptic Basil. As examples of the shorter embolism we give that of the Church of Jerusalem:

"And lead us not into temptation, O Lord, the Lord of Hosts, who knowest our infirmity; but deliver us from the Evil One, and his works, and every assault and will of his, for the sake of Thy Holy name which is called upon our lowliness:"

and the Syriac Liturgy of St. James:

"O Lord our God, lead us not into temptation, which we devoid of strength are not able to bear, but also with the temptation make a way of escape, that we may be able to bear it, and deliver us from evil, through Jesus Christ," etc.

(2) Embolism also designates the excess of the solar year over twelve lunar months, commonly called the Epact.

Emböhlus, a covered portico or cloister; in ecclesiastical language a cloister surrounding the external walls of a church, serving as an ambulatory in hot, rainy, and dirty weather, and also affording a convenient passage for the priests and ministers of the church from the bema and diacanicum to the narthex. These porticos were generally vaulted, and highly ornamented with mosaic pictures. Such porticos were found at St. Sophia, Constantinople; St. Michael, at Anapli; and the Deipara, at Jerusalem.

Emden, JACOB ISRAEL, a Jewish writer of Germany, was born in 1696, and died at Altona in 1776. He is the author of numerous treatises, among which are, בית אל, a ritual for the whole year (Altona, 1745, 4 parts, and often; latest ed. Lemberg, 1860):—A Life of Jon. Eybenschtütz, entitled בית יחזקאל (Altona, 1752):—מטעחת ספרים, The Wrapper of Books (ibid. 1763); a critique on the Sohar:—צנים ופירחים: On the Fundamental Doctrines of the Cabala (ibid. 1756):—זורת הקנאות, A Collection of Accounts Referring to Sabbathai Zewi, his Pupils and Adherents (ibid. 1752; Lemberg, 1870). Emeran, Saint. See EMMERAN.

Emerentiāna, a virgin martyr at Rome, A.D. 304, foster-sister of St. Agnes; commemorated Jan. 23.

Emeria, daughter of St. Patrick, and abbess of Clonbroney, commemorated July 11.

Emerio. See EYMERIO.

Emerinus (or Eamenus), bishop of Limoges in the 3d century.

Emërta. (1) Supposed sister of the British king Lucius, whom she followed in his missionary journeys; she was martyred at Coir of the Grisons in Switzerland, and is commemorated Dec. 4. (2) Virgin martyr at Rome, cir. A.D. 257, commemorated Sept. 22.

Emeritense, CONCILIUM. See MERIDA, COUNCIL OF.

Emërītus. (1) Donatist bishop of Julia Cæsarea (now Shershell) in Morocco, largely concerned in the Council at Carthage, in June, A.D. 411. (2) Bishop of Macri, in Mauritania, banished by the Council of Carthage, A.D. 484. (3) Eleventh archbishop of Embrun, A.D. 585-610. (4) A reader and martyr at Abitina, in Africa, A.D. 308, commemorated Feb. 11 or 12.

Emerus. (1) Eighth bishop of Saintes, A.D. 562 or 563, and seated by order of king Charibert, although irregularly elected. (2) Saint, son of St. Candia, and first abbot of Banyoles, in Catalonia, A.D. 739, commemorated Jan. 27.

Emery, SAMUEL MOODY, D.D., an Episcopal minister, was born in West Newbury, Mass., in 1803, and graduated from Harvard College in 1830. He was ordained by the bishop of Connecticut in 1836, and was called to be rector of the Church in Portland, where he remained in the discharge of his ministerial and parochial duties for the long period of thirty-seven years. Having resigned in 1873, he did not accept another pastorate, but after a time removed to his native place, where he resided about ten years, and died Aug. 16, 1883. See Boston Advertiser, Aug. 18, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Emeterius AGRICOLA (St. Madir or Matinus), is said to have suffered martyrdom near Barcelona, cir. A.D. 680; commemorated March 8.

Emetherius (or Hæmaterius), martyr at Calaborro, on the Ebro, commemorated March 8.

Emigdius, first bishop and tutelary saint of Ascolin, in Picenum, suffered martyrdom A.D. 303 or 304, and is commemorated Aug. 5.

Emila. (1) Bishop of Barcelona, cir. A.D. 600-615. (2) Bishop of Mentesa, consecrated before A.D. 589. (3) Bishop of Ilici (Elche), A.D. 688. (4) Last bishop of Coimbra under the Goths, A.D. 693. (5) Deacon and martyr at Cordova, under the Saracens, commemorated Sept. 5.

Emiliānus (or Æmilianus). (1) First bishop of Valence, in Gaul, A.D. 374. (2) Eleventh bishop of Vercelli, cir. A.D. 500, commemorated Sept. 11. (3) Twenty-second bishop of Vercelli, A.D. 653. (4) Pain the remotest parts of Burgos, where he passed forty years of ascetic life; was drawn into public life by Didymus, bishop of Tarrazona, and ordained a presbyter; but his utter unworldliness drew upon him the odium of his colleagues, and he finally withdrew to a monastery near Vergegium, where he died, after the most rigorous asceticism, cir. A.D. 572. He is commemorated Nov. 12. His Life was written by St. Braulio (who died in A.D. 657), and first published by Sandoval in 1601. There is much legend connected with him. (8) Abbot of Lagny, cir. A.D. 648, commemorated March 10. (9) Martyr in Numidia, A.D. 259, commemorated April 29. (10) Martyr at Dorostorum, in Mæsia, under Julian, commemorated July 18. (11) Deacon, martyred at Cordova, is commemorated Sept. 17. (12) Presbyter and confessor in Tarragona, commemorated Nov. 12.

Emilius (or Æmilius). (1) Martyr at Capua under Diocletian, commemorated Oct. 6. (2) A bishop, father of Ia, who was married to Julian of Elana. (3) Saint, bishop of Beneventum, A.D. 405; perhaps the same with No. 2.

Eminentius, a Donatist bishop in A.D. 411.

Emitericus (or Emiterius), twelfth bishop of Tarentaise, in the middle of the 7th century.

Emmaus, of Luke xxiv, 13. The Sinaitic MS. here reads, one hundred and sixty furlongs, which has been eagerly seized upon as confirming the identification with Nicopolis; but Tischendorf in his last edition of the MS. does not adopt the reading, and the distance as stated by Josephus (War, vii, 6, 6) confirms the number sixty. Lient. Conder is inclined to fix the site of this Emmaus at Khurbet el-Khamasa, eight miles from Jerusalem towards Beit-Jibrin, containing ruins of an ancient church (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 86).

A full description of the interesting remains at Amwās (the Emmaus of 1 Macc. iii, 40) is given in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 63 sq.).

Emmaus, now Amwās. (From Thomson's Southern Palestine and Jerusalem.)

trianch of Grado, A.D. 749. (5) An Irish bishop, patron of Faenza, in the north of Italy. (6) A hermit in the forest of Pontiacum, in Auvergne, who died at the age of ninety, in A.D. 538. (7) Called San Millan, one of the most famous of Spanish saints, is said to have been born about 473 in Old Castile, and to have been converted by a dream while a shepherd; instructed by St. Felix; fixed his hermitage first at Verdoyo, afterwards

Emmerich, Anna Katharina, a German visionary, was born at Flansk (duchy of Münster), Sept. 8, 1774. In 1802 she joined the Augustinians of Dulmen. She had visions when quite young, and in 1798 declared that she had seen Jesus Christ placing on her forehead a crown of thorns. On the suppression of her convent she retired to a private house, where she became subject to new visions, during which she claimed to have received the stigmata of the crucifixion, and a cross-mark on her chest. The facts were investigated in 1813 by a physician and an ecclesiastical commission, who seem to have been convinced of their reality, and recorded them, in 1814, in a journal of Salzburg. She died Feb. 9, 1824. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Emmerich, Frédéric Charles Timothée, a French theologian, was born at Strasburg, Feb. 25, 1786. After a journey through Germany he went to Paris, and on his return to Strasburg in 1809 was appointed superior of the College of St. Thomas, and professor of ancient languages in the gymnasium, whence he was transferred in 1812 to the Protestant school, and to the theological faculty in 1819. He died June 1, 1820, leaving, De Evangelii secundum Hebræos, Egyptæ atque Justinum Martyrem:—Choix de Sermons (1824). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Emmerling, Christian August Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 6, 1781. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1805 catechist, and in 1810 preacher there; in 1811 became assistant to the pastor of Probstheyda, near Leipsic, and in 1814 was appointed to the pastorate of that place. He died Jan. 22, 1827, leaving, De Paulo Felicem Institutionis sue Successum Prædicante, 2 Cor. 2, 14–17 (Leipsic, 1809):—C. A. Th. Keilii Elementa Hermeneuticæ Novi Testamenti (ibid. 1811):—Pauli Epistola ad Corinthios posterior (ibid. 1823). Empereur, Constantine Lk. See L'EMPEREUR.

Emphotium (ἐμφώτιον) is one of the names for the white robe with which persons were invested at baptism. The name is no doubt derived from the "enlightening" attributed to the baptismal ceremony. See BAPTISM.

Emphytensia (ἐμφύτεσις) is a contract by which the beneficial ownership of real property is transferred by the proprietor to another, either for a term of not less than ten years, or for a life or lives, or in perpetuity, in consideration of an annual payment. It differs from letting in that it applies only to real property, and must last for at least ten years; while in letting only the use and enjoyment of produce is transferred. It is unlike feudal tenure in that it requires periodical payment, not personal service.

Ecclesiastical emphytensia is a contract by which property belonging to a church, monastery, or other religious foundation, is granted. It requires the assent of the bishop, and must be for the benefit of the body granting it. This precaution is taken to check the alienation of church property. See ALIENATION.

Empie, Adam, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Schenectady, N. Y. He graduated from Union College; studied medicine at Columbia College; then studied theology; was ordained deacon in 1809, and his first charge was in Hempstead, L. I., where he also taught the classics; became pastor of St. James's, Wilmington, Del., in 1811; in 1814 received an appointment as chaplain and professor of rhetoric in the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.; became rector again at St. James's parish, Wilmington, in 1815; president of the College of William and Mary, Virginia, in 1827; resigned the presidency in 1836; was temporarily principal of the diocesan school at Raleigh, N. C.; removed in 1837 to Richmond, Va., becoming rector of St. James's, where he remained until declining health compelled his retirement. He returned to Wilmington in 1859, and died there Nov. 6, 1860, aged seventy-five years. Dr. Empie led a laborious life. He represented his church in Virginia on several occasions in the General Convention. Among his literary remains is a volume of Sermons, published in 1856. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1861, p. 698.

Emporagius, Eric Gabriel, a Swedish theologian, studied at Upsal, and taught physics there in 1637, and theology in 1641; was received as doctor by that faculty in 1647, and in 1654, after having filled other ecclesiastical positions, was appointed bishop of Strengnäs. He died March 14, 1674, leaving, among other writings, Admonitio Consolatoria, etc. (Upsal, 1629):—De Rerum Duratione (ibid. 1631):—Heriologice (ibid. 1636):—De Disciplina Ecclesiastica (Stockholm, 1661). Empyrean (Gr. ἐν, in, and πῦρ, fire), a name sometimes given to heaven, the special residence of deity, from the burning splendor with which it is supposed to be invested.

Enam. Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 836; comp. Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1881, p. 51) for this place "the ruin Allin, in the low hills south-west of Jerusalem," meaning apparently the insignificant Khurbet 'Aliu marked on the ordnance map at three and one quarter miles south-west of Bethlehem, but there is nothing striking in the identification.

Enander, Samuel, a Swedish prelate, was born at Eneby in 1607. After fulfilling several ecclesiastical function, she was appointed bishop of Linköping. He died in 1670. His principal works are, De Intellectu et Voluntate Hominis (Upsal, 1629):—De Sensibus Interioribus (ibid. 1632):—De Mundo (ibid. 1634). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Encheirium (ἐγχειρίδιον) is the napkin with which the priest wipes his hands, and which he wears at the girdle. Germanus of Constantinople describes it as above, and says that "to have a napkin at the girdle is typical of him who washed his hands and said, 'I am innocent' (Matt. xxvii, 24)."

Encolpium (ἐγκόλπιον) is a portable reliquary, worn around the neck. Such ornaments are of the highest antiquity. Chrysostom speaks of particles of the true cross, encased in gold, being suspended from the neck. The pectoral cross (q. v.), worn by the bishops, was also called Encolpium. Such are first mentioned by Gregory the Great. He sent one to Theodelinda containing a fragment of the cross; it still exists at Monza, and is used by the provost of that ancient church when he officiates pontifically. Two amulets, given to this princess by the same pontiff for the use of her children, are preserved in the treasures of Monza. From Gregory we also learn that filings from St. Peter's chains were sometimes enclosed in golden keys. Gregory himself had sent one of these consecrated keys to Childebert, king of the Franks, to protect him from all evils. See RELIQUARY.

Endemann, Samuel, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born March 18, 1727, at Carlsdorf. He studied at Marburg and Rinteln, was in 1750 preacher at Jesberg, in Hesse, and in 1753 at Hanau. In 1766 he was appointed member of consistory, and in 1767 became professor of theology and Hebrew at the gymnasium in the latter place. In 1782 he accepted a call as professor of theology to Marburg, and died there May 31, 1789, leaving, Institutiones Theologiæ Dogmaticæ (Hanover, 1777, 2 vols.):—Institutiones Theologiæ Mo-

Endowment, in ecclesiastical phrase, is the property given by the founder of a church for its maintenance, including the pay of the clerks. Justinian compelled those who built churches to endow them; without competent provision for support no clerk was ordained to any church; whoever desired a parish church on his estate was to set apart a landed endowment for its clerks (A.D. 541); a bishop was not to consecrate a church until the endowment of it had been regularly secured by a deed or charter (A.D. 572); founders of churches were to understand that they had no further authority over property which they had given to the Church, but that both the Church and its endowment were at the disposition of the bishop, to be employed according to the canons (A.D. 683). According to the ninth Council of Toledo, A.D. 655, a bishop was not to confer on any monastic church in his diocese more than a fiftieth part of the Church funds; and on a non-monastic church, or church designed for his own burial-place, not more than a one-hundredth part. The royal confirmation was required if one who held a fief from the king endowed a church.

Endress, Christian, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., March 12, 1775. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1790; in 1792 was appointed tutor in the same university; preached his first sermon at Zion's Church, Philadelphia, in 1793; in 1795 was elected principal of the Congregational school of Zion and St. Michael; in 1801 resigned and removed to Easton, having accepted a call to the Lutheran Church in that place, and while there preached frequently to neighboring congregations. Until 1799 he was subject to the superintendence of the minister or ministers of the Church in Philadelphia, but at the last-mentioned date he received a license from the ministerium of Pennsylvania, and was ordained at Reading in 1802. In 1815 he was chosen pastor of the Lutheran congregation at Lancaster, and died there in September, 1827. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, i, 107; Evangelical Review, vi, 22.

Enée, a French prelate and theologian, was notary or secretary to Charles the Bald, and was famed for his honesty and merit. In A.D. 853 he was elected bishop of Paris. On June 14, 859, he assisted at the Council of Savonnières, near Toul; in 861 at that of Pitres-sur-Seine, near Rouen; in 862 at that of Soissons; in 864 at the second at Pitres-sur-Seine; in August, 866, at that of Soissons, and October, 867, that of Troyes. He was also at the Council of Verberie on April 24, 869; in August, the same year, at that of Pitres-sur-Seine; and finally, in May, 870, at that of Attigny. After various other services to the Church and State, Enée was made abbot of St. Denis and grand chancellor of the palace. He died Dec. 27, 870, leaving a book against Photius and the errors of the Greeks (printed in vol. vii of the Spicilegium of D'Achery and in vol. viii of Labbe and Coisart's Concilia). En-gannim of Judah. For this site Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 336; comp. Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Soc." Jan. 1881, p. 51) the small ruin called Khurbet Um-Jina, laid down on the Ordnance Map on the south edge of Wady Surar, about three-fourths of a mile south-west of Ain-Sheems (Beth-shemesh), and in this identification Tristram concurs (Bible Places, p. 48).

Engastrimythi (Gr. ἐν, in, γαστήρ, the belly, and μῦθος, an utterance), a name given to the priestesses of Apollo, from a species of ventriloquism which they practiced, speaking from within, while not the slightest motion of the lips could be observed. The voice was supposed to proceed from a spirit within the body of the Pythoness (q. v.).

Engelbrechtsen (or Engelberts), CORNELIS, an old Dutch painter, was born at Leyden in 1468, and studied the works of Hans van Eyck. The following are some of his noted pieces: The Taking down from the Cross; Abraham about to Sacrifice Isaac; Scenes from the Life of the Virgin. His best work, however, was an altar-piece in the Church of St. Peter, at Leyden, representing the Adoration of the Lamb, as described in the Apocalypse. He died at Leyden in 1533. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engelcken, Heinrich Ascanius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Rostock, Aug. 15, 1675. He studied at the universities of his native place and Leipsic, was in 1704 professor at Rostock, in 1718 superintendent and pastor of St. George's at Parchim, and died Jan. 13, 1734. He published a number of theological dissertations. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Engelcken, Hermann Christoph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Jennervitz, in Mecklenburg, June 9, 1679. He studied at different universities, was in 1709 pastor of St. John's at Rostock, in 1710 doctor of divinity, and in 1716 professor of theology there. He died Jan. 2, 1742, leaving, Miraculum Dilacerati a Sineone Inermis Leonis :—De Deo Israelis Perdore ad Hos. ziii, 9 :—Vindicatio Psalm. ciii, cxlv, et cxlix :—De Dogmate Transubstantiationis :—De Resurrectione Mystica :—De Gentilium Salute non Speranda :—De Expulsione Principis Mundi Joh. xii, 31 :—De die Christi Viso ab Abrahamo, Joh. viii, 56 :—De Paulo Christi Cognitionem Omnibus aliis Rebus Antepone :—De Jesu de Vita Christi Resuscitati Vaticinante cap. liii, 8. Engelen (Lat. Angelus), WILLEM VAN, a Dutch theologian, was born at Bois-le-Duc, Sept. 1, 1583. He commenced his studies in his native town, and finished them at Louvain, under the direction of Ransin, Follega, and Malderus. In 1606 he taught both Greek and philosophy at the College of Porc; was received into orders in 1607; in 1614 appointed canon of St. Pierre and professor of morals; in 1616 elected president of the College of Viglius, and was made doctor of theology on Oct. 11 of the same year; in 1646 became president of the College of Pope Adrian VI; in 1648 was appointed to the bishopric of Ruremond, but died at Louvain, Feb. 3, 1649, without having received his bulls from Rome. He was celebrated in dogmatical theology and scholastics, and vigorously opposed the doctrines of Jansenism.

He left, Den Deckmantel des Catholyckenaems, etc. (Louvain, 1630), which specially attacked Vaët, Udemans, van Swalmen, and Everwyn:—Relation des Troubles à Louvain, etc. (1641):—Protestatio Theologarum Lovani (1642). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engelgrave, Assuerus, a Belgian monk, brother of the following, was born at Antwerp. He took the habit of a Dominican there, and gained great reputation as a preacher in Brabant and Flanders. He died in the prime of life, July 21, 1640, leaving Conciones Variæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engelgrave, Hans Baptist, a Belgian theologian, was born at Antwerp in 1601. He joined the Jesuits in 1619, assisted at the ninth general assembly of the society at Rome, became rector of the College of Bruges, was twice provincial of Flanders, and finally superior of the house at Antwerp, where he died, May 8, 1658, leaving, Meditationes in Omnes Dominicas (Antwerp, 1658):—Dominicales et Festivales (Cologne, 1659). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engelgrave, Hendrik, a Belgian theologian, brother of the preceding, was born at Antwerp in 1610. He joined the society of Jesus in 1628; became successively director and then prefect of the lower classes; directed for fifteen years several convents; became rector of the colleges of Oudenarde, Cassel, and Bruges, being surnamed the Magazine of Sciences, on account of his extended knowledge; and died at Antwerp, March 8, 1670, leaving, Cæleste Pantheon (Cologne, 1647):—Lux Evangelica, etc. (Antwerp, 1648; inserted in the Index at Rome on July 27, 1686, but reprinted several times):—Cæleste Empyreum (Cologne, 1668):—Méditation ofte Saete Bemerkingen (Antwerp, 1670):—Divum Domus Facta, etc. (Cologne, 1688):—Commentaria in Evangelia Quadragesimæ (ibid. 1725):—and several pieces of poetry in Latin, 4to. Engelhardt, Daniel. See ANGELOCRATOR.

Engelhardt, Moritz von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 8, 1828, at Dorpat, where he also completed his theological studies. Being advised by his teachers, Philippi, Th. Harnack, and K. F. Keil, to pursue an academical career, he went to Erlangen, where he attended the lectures of Hofmann, Thomasius, and Delitzsch; then to Bonn, where Rothe and Dörner were his teachers, and finally to Berlin, where Hengstenberg lectured. Thus prepared, he returned to his native city, taking the magister-degree by presenting his monograph on Valentin Ernst Löscher nach seinem Leben und Wirken (Dorpat, 1853; 2d ed. 1856), and commenced his lectures as a privat-docent. In 1855 he was appointed professor of Church history, and in the following year was made doctor of theology on presenting his De Tentatione Christi. In 1864 he published his Schenkel und Strauss, Zwei Zeugen der Wahrheit, and in 1878 Das Christenthum Justins des Märtyrers (Erlangen; reviewed in Schltr's Theol. Literaturzeitung, 1878, 632 sq.). In 1880 his Sermons, delivered at the university church, were published, and in 1881 Die ersten Versuche zur Aufrichtung des wahren Christenthums in einer Gemeinde der Heiligen (Riga). He died Dec. 5, 1881. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Engelschall, Carl Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 5, 1675. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, was in 1698 pastor at Embarkirchen, in Bavaria, in 1701 archdeacon at Reichenbach, and in 1707 court-preacher at Dresden. He died March 23, 1738, leaving many ascetical writings. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Engenhagen, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lübeck, April 26, 1615. In 1643 he was appointed deacon at St. James's, in his native place, became its pastor in 1662, and died Sept. 1, 1685. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Engeström, Johann, a Lutheran doctor of theology, of Sweden, and bishop of Lund, who was born in 1699, and died May 16, 1777, is the author of Grammatica Hebræa Biblica (Lund, 1734). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, s. v. (B. P.)

Enghein, François d', a Belgian theologian, was born at Brussels in 1648. He took the habit of a Dominican at Ghent, and finished his studies at Louvain, where he was made doctor of theology, Jan. 21, 1685, and taught successively philosophy and theology. Having become director of the studies of his order, he assisted at the chapter-general which assembled at Rome in 1694, and after a very long sojourn with pope Clement XI. came back in 1703 to take up again his functions at Louvain. In 1706 he refused the bishopric of Antwerp, and retired to Ghent, where he spent the rest of his days in study, and died Nov. 9, 1722, leaving, De Potestate Ecclesiastica (Cologne, 1685):—Auctoritas Sedis Apostolicæ (ibid. 1689):—Vindicia Adversus Arrium Academicum:—De Doctrina S. Thomæ ad Gratiam Efficacem (Louvain, 1703):—Contra Constitutionem Sedis Apostolicæ Unigenitus (Ghent, 1715). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engil, a word which very frequently occurs in the Koran, and denotes the Gospel or New Test. as distinguished from the Taurat, the Law or Old Test. Mohammedans generally understand by Engil, as used in the Koran, an imaginary gospel, which they say was sent by God from heaven to Jesus Christ, and of which nothing remains but what is cited in the Koran: while the gospel which is in the hands of Christians they regard as corrupted.

England, John, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in Cork, Ireland, Sept. 23, 1786, and was educated at Carlow. He was ordained priest Oct. 9, 1808, and appointed lecturer at the North Chapel in Cork, and chaplain of the prisons. In May, 1808, he began the publication of a monthly magazine called The Religious Repository. He was made president of the theological college of St. Mary in 1812, and in 1817 parish priest at Brandon; 1820, was appointed bishop of the new diocese of Charleston, S. C., where he established an academy and theological seminary, and taught in both of them. He went to Rome in 1832, and was appointed by the pope apostolic legate to Hayti. He died at Charleston, April 11, 1842. Bp. England founded several religious and charitable institutions at Cork, and left a number of writings, most of which appeared in the periodical press. A complete edition of his works was prepared by bishop Reynolds (Baltimore, 1849, 5 vols. 8vo).

Englert, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schweinfurt, Dec. 29, 1688. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1713 preacher at Oberlorf, and in 1715 sub-deacon at his native place. In 1725 he was appointed professor of theology and of Hebrew at the gymnasium there, and in 1732 he succeeded his father, Johann Matthäus (q. v.), as pastor primarius and inspector of the gymnasium, and died Feb. 25, 1751. He published, Disp. de Paschate Jesu Christu Ultimo (Schweinfurt, 1725; Jena, 1726):—Disp. de Singulari Dei Providentia Circa Scholas (Schweinfurt, 1734):—Quæstiones in Tria Prima Capita Geneseos (ibid. 1744). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Neubauer, Jetzlebende Theologen, s. v. (B. P.)

Englert, Johann Matthäus, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Jan. 14, 1661, at Schweinfurt; studied at Giessen, Leipsic, and Wittenberg; was in 1687 called to his native place as teacher of the high-school; in 1709, accepted the appointment as deacon, and died in 1732, pastor primarius and inspector of the gymnasium. He is the author of several hymns. See Wezel, AnaL. Hymn. i, 58 sq.; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchen-

Englert, Johann Wilhelm, was born at Schweinfurt, Dec. 10, 1706, where he was also appointed pastor of St. Saviour in 1732. In 1737 he was made sub-deacon of St. John's, in 1751 deacon and professor of theology, in 1754 archdeacon, and in 1764 pastor primarius and inspector of the gymnasium. He died in 1768, leaving, among other treatises, Disp. de Indulgentia Judaeorum Paschalis Tempore Modoque (Giessen, 1731). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

English Nuns, a society founded in the 17th century, by Maria Ward, and originally intended for the education of youth. The first convent was established at St. Omer; there were soon others opened at Rome, in other parts of Italy, and in Munich. Doubts concerning the orthodoxy of the opinions held by the founder led to their suppression by Urban VIII in 1630. Yet they were not destroyed, and were formally re-established by Clement XI in 1703. Aside from education, they also devoted themselves to the care of the sick. The congregation recognises three degrees: noble ladies, civilian maidens, and serving sisters; yet they make no difference in their dress or mode of life. The superiors are always chosen from the first degree. See Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.

Engratia (Enkratia, or Engracia), a Spanish saint, lived at Saragossa in 304. She was persecuted as a Christian under the emperors Diocletian and Maximian Hercules, and suffered, as reported by Prudentius, most fearful tortures. Nevertheless Engratia "recovered with the time," and in spite of her wounds died at an advanced age. Her relics are preserved at Saragossa, and she is commemorated April 16. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Engstfeld, Peter Friedrich, a German hymn writer, was born June 6, 1793, at Heiligenhaus, near Elberfeld, and died Oct. 4, 1848. His hymns are published in Zeugnisse aus dem verborgenen Leben (Essen, 1840; 2d ed. 1846). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 296 sq. (B. P.)

En-haddah. As the modern representative of this site Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 386; comp. Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1881, p. 51) Kefr Adan, on the south edge of the plain of Esdraelon, three miles north-west of Jenin (Enganim), which the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey (ii, 45) describe as "a village of moderate size on the slope of the hills, built of stone, with olives below and a well on the west. This appears to be the Kefr Outhen of the Talmud, a village on the border between Samaria and Galilee (Mishna, Gittin, vii, 7)."

En-hakkore. Lieut. Conder is inclined to find this spot in a series of springs to which he gives the name of 'Ayn Kára (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 386), and which are laid down on the Ordnance Map three and one half miles north-west of Ain-Shemis (Beth-shemesh). But the identification is precarious. See LEHI.

Enimia (or Emmia), Saint, a Frankish princess, lived in 631. She was, according to some hagiographers, the sister or daughter of king Dagobert I. She retired about 631 into the mountains of Gévaudan, near the source of the Tarn, and constructed there a double monastery for both sexes. After having been consecrated by St. Liare, bishop of Javoux (now Mende), Enimia took the title of an abbess, and died in the government of her communities. She is commemorated Oct. 6. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Enjedin, George, a Transylvanian Socinian, who was born about 1550, and died Nov. 28, 1597, superintendent of the Socinian congregations in Transylvania, is the author of, Explicatio Locorum Scripturae Vet. et Novi Test. ex quibus Trinitatis Dogma Stabilitur Solet:

Enna (Lat. Endeus) is the name of several Irish saints, the most noted of whom was the son of Connall Derg, chief of the Oriels, whom he succeeded on the throne, and became a famous warrior. Being suddenly converted to Christianity, he renounced the throne, and after studying in the monastery of Mansenus, in Britain, thence went to Rome, and, returning to his native land, became abbot of Aran, in Killeany bay, where he probably died, cir. A.D. 542. He is commemorated March 21.

Ennathas, Saint, a virgin, martyred in Palestine under Diocletian, by being scourged through the streets of Caesarea, and then burned. She is commemorated Nov. 13.

Ennemond, Saint. See ANNEMONDUS.

Enoch, the translated patriarch, is commemorated in some calendars of saints on Jan. 22 or July 19.

Ens (or Enzo), Giuseppe, called the Younger, was a court painter to Ridolfo II, and flourished about 1660. In his celebrated Tomb of Christ, at Ognissanti, he styled himself Jos. Heinsius. He gained such an immense reputation in his time for his pictures, that pope Urban VIII made him a chevalier of the Order of the Holy Cross. He painted several altar-pieces for the churches of Venice. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Ens, Jan, a Protestant theologian of Holland, was born at Quadyck in West Frisia, May 9, 1682. He studied at Leyden, was in 1720 professor of theology at Utrecht, where he died, Jan. 6, 1723, leaving, Bibliotheca Sacra:—Aanmerkingen over Jesaias xi en xii:—Oratio Inauguralis de Persecutione Juliani. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 832. (B. P.)

Entalma (ἐνταλμα) is the Greek name of the document by which a bishop confers on a monk the privilege of hearing confessions.

Enthronistic Letters were letters anciently addressed by newly installed bishops to foreign bishops, announcing their promotion to the episcopal office, and giving an account of their faith and orthodoxy. They received in return letters of peace and Christian fellowship. A failure to send such messages was regarded as an indication of a withdrawal from communion with the rest of the Christian world.

ENTHRONISTIC SERMON is the sermon preached by a bishop on the occasion of his enthronization (q. v.).

Enthronization. (1) The solemn placing of a bishop on his throne. See BISHOP.

(2) The word is also used to designate the placing or "enthroning" of relics of the saints in the altar of a church, on consecration. See CONSECRATION OF CHURCHES.

(3) The installation of a presbyter is sometimes designated by the same word.

Enthusiasts. Those who pretended to prophesy by the motion of an indwelling demon, which they thought to be the Holy Spirit. See EUCHITES.

Entrance. Two of the most remarkable ceremonies of the Eastern Liturgies are the Lesser and the Greater Entrance—that of the word and that of the sacrament.

I. The Lesser Entrance is the bearing in of the book of the gospels in solemn procession.

"Then the priest and the deacon, standing before the holy table, make three genuflections. Then the priest, taking the holy book of the Gospels, gives it to the deacon; and so, going out by the north side, with lights going before them, they make the lesser entrance."

That is, the deacon and priest pass from the sanctuary into the chapel of the prothesis, which is to the north of it, and so out into the body of the church, where, by a devious path, they return to the holy doors, which are open; the volume, often decorated with great magnificence, is laid on the holy table, whence it is again taken to the ambo, when the gospel is to be read.

This "Entrance" corresponds to the carrying of the gospel by the deacon to the ambo or rood-loft in the Western Church, once a rite of great importance; for the book was preceded not only by tapers, but by a crucifix.

II. The Greater Entrance. This ceremony has, like others, been developed from very small beginnings into great prominence and magnificence.

The liturgy of St. James simply alludes, in passing, to the bringing in of the elements. St. Mark's liturgy is even more vague.

In the Armenian rite the celebrant lies prostrate before the altar while the Great Entrance is made; in this rite (anomalously) the elements are spoken of as the body and blood of Christ before consecration.

In the much more developed rite of Constantinople, after the chanting of the Cherubic hymn, the ceremony proceeds as follows:

During the previous part of the eucharistic office, the elements have remained on the table in the chapel of the prothesis. At the proper point, the deacon censens the altar and the sanctuary, and then goes before the priest into the prothesis. The priest then lifts the "aer," or covering, from the chalice and paten, and lays it on the deacon's shoulder, and then places upon it the paten, covered with the asterisk and veil. The deacon takes hold of these with his left hand, bearing the censor in his right; the priest takes the chalice and follows the deacon, and so, preceded by tapers, they move round to the holy doors, as in the lesser entrance. In great churches, where there are dignified clergy and many attendants, this procession is one of great magnificence. Where there is but a single priest and no deacon, he bears the paten on his shoulder, supporting it by his left hand, and the chalice in his right hand before his breast.

In the Coptic St. Basil, the Great Entrance is made at the very beginning of the liturgy; the directions for it are very curious and minute.

"The priest goes to the Takaddemet (Prothesis) from which he shall take the lamb (i. e. loaf), looking attentively that there be no flaw in it. . . . When he hath all that he needs, the lamb, the wine, and the incense, . . . he takes the lamb in his hand and wipes it lightly, as Christ the Lord was first washed with water before he was presented to Simeon the priest; then he shall bear it round to the altar in his hands, as Simeon bare him round the temple. At last the priest shall lay it down on the altar and shall place it on the paten, which signifies the cradle; and shall cover it with a linen cloth, as the Virgin did at his Nativity."

A deacon seems to have borne the cruet. See INTROIT.

Entry INTO JERUSALEM. This event in our Lord's life is very frequently represented in the earlier art of the Christian Church, occurring on some of the first sarcophagi, though not, it seems, in fresco or mosaic in the catacombs or elsewhere, except in an ancient mosaic of the Vatican, and one from the basilica at Bethlehem. The earliest MS. representation of it is probably that in the Rabula or Laurentian Evangelary. The treatment is almost always the same; the Lord is mounted on the ass, sometimes accompanied by her foal, and the multitude with their palm-branches follow, or lay their garments before him. His right hand is generally raised in the act of blessing. The multitude frequently raise their hands in thanksgiving. In one of the oldest MSS. of the New Test. in existence, the Gregorian Evangelary of St. Cuthbert, the Lord is represented mounted on an ass, and bearing a large whip—evidently with reference to the scourge of small cords used in the expulsion of buyers and sellers from the temple. There is a certain variety in the examples taken from the different carvings. Sometimes Zacchæus is represented in the "fig or sycamore tree" behind the Lord, as if to call attention to the beginning of his last journey at Jericho.

Eutyctites, a sect of the followers of Simon, who, according to Clemens Alex. (Stromatu, vii, 17; p. 900), derived this name from their promiscuous (ἐντροχάδω) sexual intercourse at the night meetings. Others write the name Eutyctites or Euchites.

Envy was always reckoned an odious sin, and one of the first magnitude; but there are no distinct penalties attached to it, inasmuch as, before it could bring a man under public discipline, it required to be displayed in some outward and vicious action, which received its appropriate punishment.

Eonius (or Æonius), a French saint, was of noble birth, and became bishop of Arles, A.D. 492. He assisted, Sept. 2, 499, at the conference between the Catholic bishops of Burgundy and the Arian prelates at Lyons, in the presence of Gondeband, king of Burgundy, who favored Arianism. About the same time Eonius was involved in the dispute with Avitus of Vienne, concerning the primatial right of their respective churches, which was brought before pope Symmachus, and finally decided in favor of the see of Arles. Eonius was allied with Ruricius of Limoges, and with Pomerus, abbot of Arles, and has left us his correspondence with those saints. He died Aug. 16, 502, and is commemorated on Aug. 30. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog., s. v.

Epact. In determining the epact we either find the number of days required to make up the lunar to the solar year, and so the numeral of the moon's age on Jan. 1, or, with Scaliger, we may use March 1, which comes to the same thing, and has the advantage of avoiding the ambiguity of leap-year. The old Latin cycles of eighty-four years indicated Easter by means of the epacts of Jan. 1, and the day of the week on which Jan. 1 fell.

The method of determining the months (lunar) was as follows: For the first month of the year, that month was taken whose age was expressed by the epact. The day of December on which it commenced is found by subtracting the epact (when more than one) from thirty-three. The first month was always counted full, then hollow and full succeeded by turns, so that the last month in the year, in a common lunar year, was hollow, in an intercalary year full. From the last begins the new moon of the following year.

The Easter new moon being found, Easter-day was, according to the Latin rules, that Sunday which fell on or next after the 16th of the moon, not therefore later than the 22d of the moon. The choice of the month was determined thus: New moon must not be earlier than March 8, and full moon not later than March 21; the first of these rules sometimes having to give way to save the violation of the latter.

The following rule is given for the epoch of Jan. 1, viz., multiply the golden number by eleven, and divide the product by thirty, the remainder is the epoch. But this rule will not give the epochs mentioned above, which were constructed as we have just described—with a saltus lunæ, or addition of twelve after the 19th year of the cycle, etc.

Ephes-damnum. The ruined site, Damân, proposed by Van de Velde for this place does not appear on the Ordnance Map; and Lieutenant Conder suggests as an identification (Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 336), a place in the same general vicinity called Beit-Faed, lying one and three quarter miles south of Beit-Nettif.

Ephesus, SEVEN SLEEPERS OF. See SEVEN SLEEPERS.

Ephōri (Gr. ἐφοροι, inspectores), a name sometimes applied by ancient Christian writers to bishops.

Ephraim בן-שִׁמְשׁוֹן, a Jewish rabbi, who flourished at the beginning of the 13th century in France, is the author of a commentary on the Pentateuch. Excerpts are made from it by Azulai in his קדושים נחל, and in פירוש אורי. See Flirst, Bibl. Jud. i, 223; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico, p. 94 (Germ. transl.). (B. P.)

Ephrem (or Ephraim), patriarch of ANTIOCH, a Greek theologian, was born in the second part of the 5th century. If the epithet of Amidiān (ὁ Ἀμιδιός), which Theophanes gives him, indicates the place of his birth, he was born at Amida, in Armenia, near the source of the Tigris. He first had civil employments, and under the reign of Justin I obtained the high dignity of a count of the Orient. In the years 525 and 526 Antioch was almost wholly destroyed by earthquakes, and by fire, which were the consequences of them. The inhabitants, who were touched by the compassion which Ephrem showed for their disasters, and by the help which he extended to them, appointed him successor to the patriarch Euphrasius, who was buried under the ruins of the city. All the writers on Church history praise his conduct as a patriarch, his charity towards the poor, the zeal and vigor with which he opposed heretics. Not satisfied with condemning, in a synod at Antioch, those who tried to revive the errors of Origen, he also wrote divers treatises against the Nestorians, the Eutychians, the Severians, the Acephali, and in favor of the Council of Chalcedon. Towards the end of his life he was forced by the emperor Justinian to subscribe to the condemnation of three of the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon, which he had there so warmly defended. Ephrem died A.D. 545. His works are known to us only by their analysis, which Photius has given in his Bibliotheca; they made together three volumes, which were consecrated to the defense of the dogmas of the Church, and particularly of the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon. The first volume contained a letter to Zenobius, advocate of Emessa, and member of the sect of the Acephali; letters to the emperor Justinian; to Anthimus, bishop of Trapezus; to Dometianus Syncreticus, metropolitan of Tarsus; to Brazes the Persian, and to others. The acts of a synod (συνοδικὴ πράξις) were kept by Ephrem, on the subject of certain heterodox books, panegyrics, and other discourses. The second volume contained a treatise in four books, in defense of Cyril of Alexandria, and of the Synod of Chalcedon, against the Nestorians, the Eutychians, and responses on the theological subjects to the advocate Anatolius. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Ephrem, patriarch of ARMENIA, was born at Sis in 1734. The objects of his study were poetry, eloquence, theology, history, and chronology. The pope appointed him bishop in partibus, on account of his talent and of the influence which he possessed with the united Armenians. After the death of his brother, Gabriel, in 1771, he was raised to the patriarchal see of Sis, and died in 1784, leaving, Explanation of the Psalms of David:—Collection of Sacred and Profane Poetry:—A Poem on Genesis:—Rules of Armenian Versification:—Collection of Letters, both in prose and in verse:—Chronological History of the Armenian Patriarchs of Cilicia. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ephrem, Saint, bishop of MYLASA, in Caria, lived anterior to the 5th century, and is commemorated Jan. 24 at Leuca, near Mylasa, where he had been interred. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Epiotētus, a Roman Stoic philosopher, was born at Hierapolis, Phrygia, in the 1st century, and while young was a slave of Epaphroditus. When he became a freedman is not known. He was involved in the proscription by which Domitian banished all philosophers from Rome, and retired to Nicopolis, in Epirus, where he opened a school of Stoic philosophy, and held those conversations which have been preserved in the Manual and philosophical lectures, compiled from his discourses by his pupil Arrian. His teachings are summed up in the formula, "Bear and forbear." Recognizing only will and reason, his highest conception of life was to be passionless under whatever circumstances. "Man," he said, "is but a pilot; observe the star, hold the rudder, and be not distracted on thy way." He is supposed to have committed nothing to writing.

Epigonatium (ἐπιγονάριον), a portion of the sacerdotal habit, used in both the Greek and Roman churches, consisting of an appendage somewhat resembling a small mantle, on the right side hanging from the girdle. In the Roman Church it is worn only by the pope. In the Greek Church it is borne by all bishops, and consists of brocade, velvet, or some stiff material, a foot in dimensions, with a cross wrought upon it, and tassels hanging from the three lower corners. It is not used in the English Church. See VESTMENTS.

Epigōnus, a heresiarch, was a disciple of Noëtus, and came to Rome about A.D. 200, and there propagated his master's opinions. See NOËTIAN.

Epilensea, sacred games celebrated among the ancient Greeks in the time of vintage, before the invention of the wine-press. They contended with one another in treading the grapes, who should soonest press out the must, in the meantime singing the praises of Dionysus, and begging that the must might be sweet and good.

Epimanicia, the maniples or hand-pieces of the priests of the Greek Church. They are provided with epimunicia for both arms, while the maniple (q. v.) of the Romish priesthood is worn on the left hand alone.

Epinicion, a triumphal hymn used in the communion service of the early Church. It consisted of the words, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts!" It has sometimes been confounded with the Trisagion (q. v.).

Epiphanians, a branch of the CARPOCRATIANS (q. v.).

Epiphanius, bishop of ARMENIA, lived in the latter part of the 7th century. After having been one of the most distinguished scholars of the patriarchal school, he retired into a desert near Tevin, whence he was taken to discharge the functions of abbot of the monastery of Sourp Garabed (St. John the Baptist), in the province of Daron, to which dignity was joined the title of bishop of the Mamigonians, borne by Epiphanius for twenty years. In A.D. 629 he assisted at the Council of Garin (Erzerûm), and wrote, The History of the Monastery of Sourp Garabed:—The History of the Council at Ephesus:—Commentary on the Psalms of David and on the Book of Proverbs:—Sermons. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Epiphanius, fourteenth bishop and fifth patriarch of CONSTANTINOPLE, A.D. 520–535, seems to have been a quiet and prudent person, well fitted for that violent age, when the great popular sedition occurred in that city (A.D. 531), and when the emperors prescribed the policy of the Church. His letters to pope Hormisdas are extant, also the sentence of the court which he held against Severus and Peter (Migne, Patrol. Græc. lxxxvi, 783 sq.).

Epiphanius OF JERUSALEM, a Greek hagiographer, lived probably in the 12th century. Allatius (De Symeonum Scriptis, p. 106) and Fabricius (Codez Apograph. n. 2) have given an extract from the Life of the Virgin by this author; the entire work has been published since in the Anecdota Literaria of Amodutius. Epiphanius is also the author of a History of St. Andrew, the apostle (Allatius, De Symeonum Scriptis, p. 90), and of a Description of Jerusalem (published by Ferdinand Morelli in his Expositio Thematum, Paris, 1620, and by Allatius, Σύμμυκτα). A MS. in the Bodleian Library contains a treatise entitled Epiphanius Monachi et Presbyteri, Character B. Virginis et Domini Nostri, which differs from the Life of the Virgin cited above, but seems to be by the same author. The same is also true of the MS. entitled De Disidio quatuor Evangelistarum Circa Resurrectionem Christi, which is found in the same library. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Epiphanius THE YOUNGER, bishop of Constantia, lived about the end of the 7th century. He was represented at the third General Council of Constantinople, in A.D. 680, by the bishop of Trimithus. Several of his discourses attributed to St. Epiphanius belong probably to this Epiphanius or to a bishop of Constantia, also called Epiphanius. This latter is the author of a letter of congratulation, which was addressed to the patriarch John, who was restored to the see of Constantinople in 867. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Episcōpa, a name sometimes given in the early Church to the wife of a bishop. The word is used in this sense in the second Council of Tours, where it is said that if a bishop have not a wife there shall no train of women follow him.

Episcōpæ, a name given to the deaconesses (q. v.) of the ancient Christian Church.

Episcopate, the office of a bishop (q. v.).

Episcōpi Senātus (bishops of the senate), a name given in the canon law to the chapter of a cathedral (q. v.).

Episcopissæ, a name sometimes given to the deaconesses of the early Church.

Episcōpus Judæorum (bishop of the Jews). The Jews of England, under the first Norman kings, had over them an officer under this title, licensed by the crown, who judged and ruled them according to their own law.

Episcopopus Regionarius, a bishop in the early Church, whose labors were confined to no particular place, but who wandered about from one district to another.

Episēmōn (ἐπίσημον, i. e. distinguished), a cabalistic word much used in the Gnostic system of Marcus, and hinted at by several of the early Church fathers.

Episozomēne (ἐπισωζομένη), a name given by the Cappadocian Christians to Ascension day (q. v.), probably because on that day our salvation was perfected.

Epistemonarch (Gr. ἐπιστάται, to know, ἀρχων, a ruler), an officer in the Greek Church, whose duty it is to guard the doctrines of the Church, and to examine all matters relating to faith.

Epistle, the first lesson in the communion service of the Church of England, deriving its name from the circumstance that it is generally taken from the apostolic epistles; though sometimes from the Acts, and occasionally from the Old-Test. writings. The form was derived from that of the Greek and Latin churches, where it was usually denominated the "Apostle." It has been in use in the English Church since the time of Augustine of Canterbury, a period of twelve hundred years. See Hook, Church Dict. s. v.; Staunton, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Epistler, an ecclesiastical officer mentioned in the canons of the Church of England, and in the injunctions of queen Elizabeth, whose duty it was to read the Epistle in collegiate churches. He was required to be dressed in a cope. The office is now obsolete.

Epistōlæ Synodiæ, a name sometimes given to enthronistic letters (q. v.), but more generally used to indicate the circular letters by which a primate summoned a council of the Church in ancient times.

Epitrachelion (Gr. ἐπί, upon, and τράχηλος, the neck), a vestment of the Greek ecclesiastics, which, instead of being put round the neck like a scarf, is joined at the centre, and has an orifice left at its upper end that it may be passed over the head. See STOLE.

Eponamon, a name given by the natives of Chili, in South America, to the devil, as being strong and powerful.

Epulōnæ, a special order of priests among the ancient Romans. They were first appointed B.C. 198, to preside at the Epulum Jovis (q. v.) and similar feasts, and were usually three in number, although they were at one time seven and at another ten.

Epulum Jovis (the feast of Jupiter), a festival of the ancient Romans, held in honor of the father of the gods. At these the gods themselves were supposed to be present; for their statues were brought on rich beds, with their pulvinaria or pillows, and placed at the most honorable part of the table as the principal guests. The care of this apparatus belonged to the epulones (q. v.).

Equiria (Lat. equus, "a horse"), two festivals celebrated by the ancient Romans, the one in February, the other in March, in honor of Mars, the god of war, at which horse-racing was the principal amusement.

Equitius, bishop of Hippo Diarrhytus, notorious for his turbulence, against whom the Council of Carthage, A.D. 401, took steps towards a deposition.

Eractius. See HERACLUS.

Erard (Eberhard), a Bavarian bishop, lived about 679. He was the brother of St. Hidulphus, archbishop of Treves, and assisted him in the administration of his see. He was consecrated originally bishop of Arslagh, in Ireland, but finally of Ratisbon, yet without a stationary location. He is often given the title of the Blessed, and is commemorated Jan. 8 (also Jan. 6, Feb. 9, April 14, and Oct. 8). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Erasmus, Saint (commonly called Elmo, also Ermo), was bishop of some see near Antioch, and is said to have returned to Firmæ, in Campania, and then to have suffered martyrdom under Diocletian. The acts of this saint, given by the Bollandists, are entirely apocryphal. It is pretended that the body of Erasmus was preserved at Gaeta, with the exception of some parts which were given to the monastery of Mt. Coelius at Rome, and some to those of St. Orestes. St. Erasmus is invoked by the sailors on the Mediterranean against tempest and other danger, and for this reason they have given his name to an electric phenomenon which often appears on top of the masts of vessels during a storm. He is also the patron saint against the stomach-ache, on the tradition that he suffered martyrdom by evisceration. He is commemorated June 2 (or 3). See Jameson, Sacred and Legendary Art, p. 699.

Erasmus, JOHANNES, a Dutch theologian, lived in 1538. He was very learned, even according to the testimony of his adversaries. He knew Hebrew well, and had corrected Tremellius and Junius's version of the prophets. Having been appointed rector at Antwerp, he confessed the doctrine of the Unitarians, but William, prince of Orange, prevented his making proselytes, and obliged him to leave Holland. Erasmus first retired to Poland, and then into Transylvania, where the Unitarians made him minister at Claudiopolis, on the condition, however, that he would not teach that the Son of God was created before all other things. Erasmus had a great conference on this subject with Faustus Socinus. He went from Claudiopolis to Cracow, and asked permission of the Unitarians to explain his reasons for not believing "that Jesus Christ was not at all the Son of God before his birth by his mother." Socinus was appointed to answer him. The disputation lasted two days, but ended in the satisfaction of neither party. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Erath, Augustin, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 28, 1648, near Augsburg. In 1679 he was appointed professor of theology at Dillingen, and died Sept. 5, 1719. He is the author of many writings, enumerated in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Erato, in Greek mythology, was one of the nine muses; her songs were so touching and charming that they moved even the most callous hearts to love; hence also her name (from ἔρως, love). She is said to have been the first to compose elegies or plaintive verse. She is generally represented with the lyre on her arm and a plectrum in her hand.

Erbkram, Heinrich Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born July 8, 1810, at Glogau. For his academical career he prepared himself at the Wittenberg Seminary, and commenced his theological lectures at Berlin in 1838. In 1855 he accepted a call to Königsberg, and died there, Jan. 9, 1884. He is best known as the author of Geschichte der protestantischen Sekten im Zeitalter der Reformation (Hamburg and Gotha, 1848). (B. P.)

Erc (Lat. Hercus) is the name of several Irish saints, the chief of whom was bishop of Slane, of royal descent, who died A.D. 512, aged about ninety years, and is commemorated on Nov. 2.

Erchembert (or Erchempert), an Italian historian, was descended from the dukes of Benevento. The castle of Pila, where he resided with his father, Adelgair, was taken in August, 881, by Pandonulf, count of Capua, and Erchembert was carried away a prisoner, but escaped and took the habit of a monk at the convent of the Benedictines of Monte Cassino. At the age of twenty-five he was elected abbot of a convent near by; but was driven from it by Arnulf, and returned for the rest of his days to his cell. He wrote a Chronicle, or an extended history of the Lombards, which is believed to be lost, although an abridged edition, from 774 to 888, as a continuation of the work of Paul Diacre, was published by Antonio Caracioli (Naples, 1626); by Camillo Peregrini, in his Historia Principum Longobardorum, etc. (ibid. 1643). There is also attributed to Erchembert, De Destructione et Renovatione Cassiensis Canobii;—De Ismaelitarum Incurione;—Vidu Landolfi I, Episcopi Capuae, extending from 851 to 879, in verse;—Acta Translationis Corporis St. Matthei, Apost. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ercnat (or Herenat), an Irish saint, commemorated Jan. 8 and Oct. 30, was a virgin of Dunane, A.D. 480, who died, it is said, of love for St. Benignus, but revived, and spent her days in preparing and embroidering sacred vestments.

Erdaviraph, an impostor who flourished in Persia in the 3d century, and was considered the real restorer of the doctrines of the Magi. He professed to have fallen into a deep sleep, during which his soul made the journey to paradise, being seven days on the way.

Erēbus (Ἔρως, darkness), in Greek mythology, is the infernal region, the subterranean, chaotic night; being represented as son of Chaos and Caligo. Erebus does not seem to be identical with Tartarus. His descendants are the following, by Night: Age, Death, Fate, Abstinence, Dreams, Epiphron, Clotho, Lachesis, Atropos, the three Parcae, Dispute, Evil, Malice, Nemesis, Euphrosyne, Friendship, Sympathy, Styx, and Sleep.

Erembert, Saint, eleventh bishop of Toulouse, was born at Villiolicorte, near Poissy. He became a monk in 648 at the abbey of Fontenelle, which then was directed by Wandregisilus. Being appointed by Clothaire III to the see of Toulouse, about 656, he governed it twelve years with prudence, and then resigned, and dwelt for some time at his native home, but finally retired to the monastery of Fontenelle, where he died in 671 or 678. He is commemorated May 14. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Erendiganus, Rufi, a Swiss theologian, lived in the second part of the 17th century. He was a Capuchin, and definitor and provincial of his order. He wrote, Manuductio Sacerdotis (Lucerne, 1674);—Calendarium Spirituale (ibid. 1698);—Revelationes S. Brigittæ (ibid. 1699);—Speculum Animarum Thomæ de Kempis (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Erevantsi, Melchisedech (i. e. Melchisedech of Erivan), an Armenian doctor, was born in 1559 at Vejan. He early devoted himself to monastical life, and after studying under the famous doctor Nersēs Peghlow about fifteen years, left his monastery, which was situated in the isle of Lim, in the centre of the lake of Van, in order to visit Armenia. He planted a great number of institutions of education, and returned to his monastery. The patriarch, Moses III, sent him out again as director of the patriarchal school of Echmiadzin. He died at Erivan in 1631, leaving several MSS. on grammatical, rhetorical, and philosophical subjects. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ergas, Joseph ben-Immanuel, a Jewish rabbi, who flourished at Leghorn in the 18th century, is the author of סוּפֶר אֱמוּנָה, a Philosophy of Religion and Cabala, written in the form of a dialogue (Amsterdam, 1736);—סוּפֶר אֱמוּנָה, Introduction to the Science of the True Cabala (ibid.);—a collection of decisions, שו"ת דבר יוסף (Leghorn, 1742). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 247; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Erhard, Thomas Aquinas, a German theologian of the order of the Benedictines, who lived in the first part of the 18th century, wrote, Gloria S. Benedicti (Augsburg, 1720);—Opus Rhetoricum;—Die Bibel Lateinisch und Deutsch (ibid. 1726);—Manuale Biblicum (1724);—Polygraphes Gersensis, etc. (1729);—Commentarius in Universa Biblia (Augsburg, 1735);—De Imitatione Christi (about 1739);—Concordantie Bibliorum Wessofontana (Augsburg, 1751). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eribert, archbishop of Milan, A.D. 1015, took a prominent part in the intrigues that then divided Italy. He was a noted warrior, and established a military order of the Humiliati, which subsisted till 1570. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eric of Brandenburg, twenty-sixth archbishop of Magdeburg, was son of John I, elector of Brandenburg, and was elected in 1278. He had a stormy administration, and died in 1295. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eris (Ἔρις, strife), in Greek mythology, was the personification of Discord, the daughter of Night. When the deities were merrily assembled at the wedding of Peleus and Thetis, Eris threw an apple among them, bearing the inscription "To the most beautiful." Juno, Venus, and Minerva claimed it. Had Jupiter decided in favor of one he would have incurred the bitter enmity of the others, and hence he refused to announce his opinion; therefore Paris was authorized to decide. Power and greatness, wisdom and fame, offered by the earnest goddesses, had no influence with him; for Venus promised him the most beautiful woman of Greece as a possession. That goddess therefore received the prize of beauty; Paris carried off Helena, the Trojan war was the result, and all the deities took a part in it: Juno and Minerva as enemies of the Trojans; Venus, Apollo, and Mars on the side of those against whom war was made.

Erkenwald, the fourth bishop of the East Saxons, whose episcopal see was London, was brother of St. Ethelburga, and is said to have been born at Stallington, in Lindsey, of a noble family. From Bede we learn that he was already noted for sanctity when raised to the episcopate in 676. He died in 690, and is commemorated April 30 as the founder of St. Paul's (where his remains were interred), and also of one or two monasteries.

Erlkigt, in Greenland mythology, are the spirits of war, living on the east side of the country, cruel, and enemies of man. They are represented as large men with animal heads. Probably this superstition came from an ancient tradition, which gives to the northern coast of Greenland very warlike inhabitants, who sometimes pressed to all parts of the island in plundering and devastating expeditions, and destroyed all living beings.

Erlkönig, in Norse mythology, is probably akin to Elfkönig, the ruler of the ethereal beings which are called elves (q. v.). He is not dangerous to grown persons, but often abducts children of Christians before they are baptized, not from any evil motive, but because he takes a great joy in them, and because the elves generally glory in coming into contact with human beings. He is represented as an unusually large, bearded man, with a shining crown and a wide, trailing mantle.

Erløersortok, in Greenland mythology, is the ruler of the air, the evil principle. He is cruel and cunning; waylaying those who are on the way to heaven, and lives on their vitals, which he tears from them.

Ermelendis (or Hermelinda), Saint, was born at Olenca, near Louvain, about 550. She was of a rich family of Brabant, and was but twelve years old when she resolved to consecrate herself to God. Some time later her parents tried to induce her to marry, but she cut off her own hair in their presence and hid herself in the solitudes of the vicinity. She only left her cell, with bare feet, when she assisted at the divine services. Two young men, brothers, and lords of the place, having designs upon her chastity, Ermelinde retired to a more secluded place called Meldric (now Meldaert), near Hugard (Brabant), and subsisted there on fruits and herbs till her death, about A.D. 595. Forty-eight years afterwards her obscure tomb was discovered, and a chapel was erected over it, which has since perished. She is commemorated on Oct. 29. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Ermenaire (Hermenarius), twenty-sixth bishop of Autun, A.D. 678, piously buried the mutilated remains of his predecessor, St. Léger.

Ermenfrid, abbot of Cuisance, in Franche-Comté, entered monastic life, about 627, at Luxeuil; and coming into possession, by inheritance, of the monastery at Cuisance, restored it, and died there in old age. He is commemorated on Sept. 25. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Ernan (also Mernoc), the name of several Irish saints, one of whom was uncle, and two others nephews, of St. Columba.

Ernest of Saxony, forty-first archbishop of Magdeburg, was elected to that see Jan. 19, 1476; but the pope declined at first to consecrate him, and he had a long contest with Adolphus of Anhalt and the citizens of Magdeburg before he secured quiet possession of the see. He died Aug. 8, 1513. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ernesti, Günther Gottlieb, an Evangelical preacher of Germany, was born June 25, 1759, at Coburg. He studied at Jena, was for some time employed by the minister for ecclesiastical affairs at Hildburghausen, and died there, June 28, 1797, being court-preacher at the time. Most of his publications were sermons. See Döring, Die Gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Ernesti, Heinrich Friedrich Theodor Ludwig, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 27, 1814, at Brunswick. He studied at Göttingen; was in 1838 deacon at his native place, in 1842 pastor at Wolfenbüttel, in 1843 superintendent, in 1850 member of consistory, and in 1858 general superintendent, and died at Wolfenbüttel, Aug. 17, 1880. He published Exposition on Luther's Smaller Catechism (1861), which is used in many places as the official manual for religious instruction. He also wrote, Ursprung der Sünde nach Paulinischen Lehrbegriff (Göttingen, 1862, 2 vols.): — Die Ethik des Apostels Paulus (8d ed. ibid. 1880). His earliest work was De Præclara Christi in Apostolis Institutis Sapientia atque Prudentia (ibid. 1834). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 382 sq. (B. P.)

Ernesti, Jakob Daniel, a German Protestant theologian, was born at Rochlitz, Dec. 3, 1640. He studied till the age of fifteen under his father, Daniel, and then at Leipzig and Altenburg, and became, in 1668, minister of the gospel at Eybitz, rector at the gymnasium of Altenburg in 1678, deacon in 1688, arch-deacon in 1685, and finally consistorial assessor in 1705. He died Dec. 15, 1707. His principal works are, Prodromus Apanthismatum (Altenburg, 1672): — Selecta Historica Ruriorum Casuum (ibid. 1680). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ernesti, Johann Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 13, 1695. He studied at Wittenberg and Leipzig, and died superintendent in Langensalza, in 1770. A list of his writings is given in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Ernesti, Johann Christoph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 11, 1662. He studied at Wittenberg, and died there doctor of theology, Aug. 11, 1722, leaving Disputationes de Bibliis Polyglottis: — De Antiquo Excommunicandi Ritu: — De Dialogis Doctorum Veteris Ecclesie: — De Absoluto Reprobationis Decreto. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 247. (B. P.)

Ernesti, Johann Heinrich Martin, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 26, 1755, at Mittwitz, near Cronach, and died at Coburg, May 10, 1836. He wrote, Irene (Sulzbach, 1828): — Ueber Censur- und Bücherverbote, etc. (Leipzig, 1829): — Der Kirchen-Staat (Nuremberg, 1830). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 333; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 610; ii, 321, 322. (B. P.)

Eromangan Version of the Scriptures. This language is spoken in the island of Eromanga, one of the New Hebrides group. The version of Luke's gospel, which was published in 1864, was begun by the Rev. G. N. Gordon, who was cruelly massacred by the natives in 1860. The work was completed by his brother, the Rev. James I. The latter has since translated the book of Genesis, which was printed at Sydney in 1868, and was followed by Matthew's gospel in 1869, at London. In 1878 the Acts of the Apostles, which were translated by the Rev. H. A. Robertson, were published at the request of the New Hebrides mission at Sydney. These are at present the only parts of the Scripture translated into this language. (B. P.)

Erovaz, grand priest to the gods of Armenia. He was the brother of Erovant II, who intrusted him with the direction of the supreme national cultus, and also placed in his care the fortress of Pacaran, the ecclesiastical capital of Armenia. Sempad the Pacratide, who had taken possession of that place after the death of Erovant, drowned Erovaz in the river Akhourian, A.D. 88, and took away his treasures and his five hundred slaves. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Erskine, Charles, a cardinal of Scotch descent, was born at Rome, Feb. 13, 1753. After entering the profession of a lawyer when still quite young, he attained a rare knowledge of Latin and philosophy, and was honored by Pius VI, who himself had been a lawyer. During the French revolution, Erskine was sent on an embassy to London by that pontiff, remained there for eight years, and when he came back to Italy under Pius VII received the cardinal's hat. When afterwards he went to Paris he was welcomed by the consular government. Erskine died March 19, 1811. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Erskine (or Areaskine), Henry, a Scotch divine, one of the youngest of the thirty-three children of Ralph Erskine of Shieldfield, was born at Dryburgh in 1624, where he received his early education. He took his master's degree at the University of Edinburgh in 1645, was ordained to the ministry by the Presbyterians in England, to the living at Cornhill, in Durham, but was soon ejected by the act of uniformity, in 1662, and returned to his own country. But the persecutions carried on then in Scotland required him to take refuge in Holland. In 1687, when king James's toleration was proclaimed, Mr. Erskine embraced it; and on the re-establishment of the presbytery in 1690, he was appointed minister of Chirnside, in Berwickshire. He died Aug. 10, 1696. He never published any of his works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Fusti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 427, 451.

Erskine (or Erakyn), John, a Scotch clergyman, of Dun, knight, son of John Erskyne, of Dun, was born about 1508; studied first at the University of Aberdeen, then on the Continent. Having imbibed the doctrines of the Reformation, he taught them to the son of Alexander Straton, a neighbor who paid the forfeit of his life for his opinions, at Edinburgh, in August, 1534. He led many other persons to embrace the new principles, and secured for them safety and protection. When the English invaded Montrose, in 1548, Erskine, supported by his townsmen, repulsed them with a loss of eight hundred of the invaders. He lived a retired life till John Knox appeared, in 1555, when he joined him at Edinburgh, took part with his followers in their public services, and was coadjutor with Knox till a secession took place. He was one of the eight appointed by parliament, in 1557, to witness the marriage of the queen with the dauphin of France. On his return, in 1568, he assisted in forming a Church of the Reformation, became an exhorter, drew up an address to the queen-dowager against the Romanists, with whose dissimulations, in 1559, the people at Perth became so enraged that they attacked the monasteries, and cast down the images, sparing only the places of worship through the influence of Erskine and Knox. He was nominated by the lords and barons, in July, 1560, the first minister at Montrose under the Reformation, sat in the first General Assembly, 1560, and was appointed superintendent of Angus and Mearns, in 1561. Of the first fifty-six General Assemblies, he attended forty-four, and was the moderator over five of them, three times in succession. He was a member of the convention at Leith in 1571; had to summon principals, and three regents of the university, and try them for teaching popery, in 1567 and 1569, and on their refusal to accept the new faith they were deprived by the privy council. He several times offered his resignation, which was always declined, and he died March 12, 1589, having been second only to Knox in accomplishing and securing the work of the Reformation. He governed his portion of the Church with singular wisdom and authority, disallowing all innovations. He was a man of courage, zeal, learning, prudence, generosity, and liberality. He compiled and published part of the Second Book of Discipline. See Fusti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 887.

Erskine, Thomas, of Linlathen, Scotland, a writer on theology and religion, was born Oct. 18, 1788. After being educated at the high-school of Edinburgh and at Durham, he attended the literary and law classes of the University of Edinburgh, and in 1810 became a member of the Edinburgh faculty of advocates. On the death of his elder brother, in 1816, he succeeded to the family estate of Linlathen, near Dundee, and retired from the bar, spending the remainder of his life in the discussion—either by conversation, by letters, or by literary publications—of the most important religious questions. He died at Edinburgh, March 20, 1870. His principal works are, Remarks on the Internal Evidence for the Truth of Revealed Religion (1820)—an Essay on Faith (1822)—and the Unconditional Freeness of the Gospel (1828). These have all passed through several editions, and have also been translated into French. He also wrote, The Brazen Serpent (1831)—The Doctrine of Election (1839):—a posthumous work entitled Spiritual Order and Other Papers (1871), and various essays. Two volumes of his Letters, edited by William Hanna, D.D., with reminiscences by dean Stanley and principal Shairp, appeared in 1877. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Erskine, William, a Scotch nominal prelate, was minister of Campsey and commendator of Paisley. He was a titular bishop of Glasgow in 1585, but was never consecrated. He held the office but two years. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 262.

Erthal, FRANZ LUDWIG VON, a German prelate, was born at Lehr-on-the-Main, Sept. 16, 1730. He studied law at Würzburg, and when thirty-three years of age became a member of the chapter there. The emperor Joseph II appointed him to several high positions, and in 1779 he was made prince-bishop of Bamberg and Würzburg. His government was in every respect an excellent one. He died Feb. 16, 1795, leaving, Zeit und Pflicht der Christen (Würzburg, 1798):—Reden an das Landvolk (Bamberg, 1797). See Schmid, in Herzog-Platt's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Geschichte der Katholischen Deutschlands (Munich, 1872); Bernhard, Franz Ludwig von Erthal (Tubingen, 1852). (B. P.)

Erwin, ALEXANDER R., D.D., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Louisiana, Jan. 12, 1820, of pious Baptist parents. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1839; was licensed to preach in 1840, and in 1842 entered the Tennessee Conference. In 1848 he was appointed president of Clarksville Female Academy; in 1854 re-entered the regular work; in 1859 was appointed president of Huntsville Female College, and died Jan. 10, 1860. Dr. Erwin was manly and dignified in appearance, humble and cheerful in spirit, extensive in knowledge, and energetic in labor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 212.

Erythraeus, Joachim (1), a Lutheran theologian, was born Dec. 13, 1637, at Bela, in Upper Hungary. He studied at Wittenberg, and was for some time archdeacon in his native country. When the evangelical preachers had to leave Hungary, he went to Pomerania, and was appointed pastor at Stettin, where he died, March 21, 1699. He wrote, Dissert. de Attributis Dei:—Synopsis Biblica Stilo Ligato Scripta:—Breviarium Biblicum:—Apodemica Sacra:—Expositio Con- fessionis Augustanae. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Erythraeus, Joachim (2), son of the foregoing, was born Jan. 28, 1663. With his father he went to Pomerania, was in 1688 deacon, and in 1700 succeeded his father. He died April 28, 1703. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Erythropel, a name common to several Lutheran ministers of Germany:

1. DAVID RUPERT, was born March 30, 1653, at Hanover, and studied at Jena. In 1679 he was court-preacher at his native place, in 1685 member of consistory, in 1698 superintendent, in 1706 first court-preacher, and died Dec. 22, 1732. He wrote, De Montibus Pietatis:—De Ministris Ecclesiarum Augustanae Confessionis. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

2. DAVID WILHELM, son of the above, was born at Hanover, June 20, 1687. He studied at different universities, and after his return commenced his ministry in his native city in 1710. He was intrusted with the highest ecclesiastical positions, and died in February, 1768. He wrote, De Fatis Calicis Eucharistici (Helmstädt, 1708).

3. GEORGE, was born at Hanover in 1607, studied at Rinteln and Jena, and died in his native city in 1669.

4. MARTIN, was born at Hanover in 1610. He studied at Helmstädt and Marburg, was in 1634 pastor at Darmstadt, in 1648 court-preacher and general superintendent, and died June 1, 1655. He wrote, Pathologica Christi Prophetica (Marburg, 1640):—Thesaurus Commubialis, or Geistlicher Eheschutz in Predigten (ibid. 1641).

5. RUPERT, father of Martin, was born in 1556, studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, and was in 1584 rector at Hanover. In 1585 he was made pastor of the Church of the Holy Cross, in 1596 of St. George's, and died Oct. 7, 1626. He wrote, Analysia Logica in Epistol. et Evangel. Dominic. Periopis:—Postilla Methodica in Epistol. et Evangelia:—Theologia Apostolica et Methodica, or exposition on the epistles of Paul, Peter, James, Jude, John, and the epistle to the Hebrews:—Harmonia Historica IV Evangelistarum:—Catenæ Aurea in Harmon. Evangel. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Esaias of Egypt, who lived about the end of the 4th century, was abbot of some monastery in that country, and left a large number of MSS., nearly all in Greek. Assemani cites some in Arabic and Syriac, but these are probably translations from the Greek. Several have been published, viz., Chapters on the Ascetic and Quiet Life (Κεφάλαια περὶ ἀσκητικῆς καὶ ἡσυχίας), in Greek and Latin, in the Thesaurus Ascticus of Peter Possin (Paris, 1684):—Præcepta seu Concilia Posita Tironibus (Augsburg, 1759):—Orationes, a Latin translation of twenty-nine discourses, or rather apothegms, published by Franc. Zini, with other ascetical writings by St. Nilus and other theologians (Venice, 1574):—Dubitationes in Visionem Ezechielis, in MS. in the royal library of the Escorial in Spain, has been described by Montfaucon, but it has not been printed. It is doubtful if all these works are by the same author, as there may have been several writers of this name in Egypt. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog., s. v.

Escalante, Juan Antonio, a reputable Spanish historical painter, was born at Cordova in 1630, and studied under Francisco Rizi. There are a number of his works in the churches of Madrid, which are highly praised, among which is a fine picture of St. Catharine, in San Miguel; and an altar-piece representing The Dead Christ, with other figures, in the Church of Espíritu Santo. He died at Madrid in 1670. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Eschenbach, Andreas Christian, a German divine and philologist, was born at Nuremberg, March 24, 1663, and was educated at Altdorf, where, in 1684, he received the poetic crown. He went to Jena and taught the classics with considerable reputation. He travelled through Germany and Holland, and on his return assisted his father in the Church of Wehrd, in Nuremberg. In 1691 he was appointed inspector of the schools of Altdorf, and in 1695 was recalled to Nuremberg as deacon of the Church of St. Mary, and professor of eloquence, poetry, history, and the Greek language in St. Giles's College, to which office, in 1705, was added that of pastor of St. Clare. He died Sept. 24, 1722. Some of his philological dissertations were printed in 1700, in the Synlogma Secundum Dissertationum Philologicarum (Rotterdam, 8vo). His Epigenes sive Commentarius in Fragmenta Orphica, was published at Nuremberg (1702, 4to). He translated into German, Allix on The Truth of the Christian Religion, and on The Coming of the Messiah. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict., s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Eschenburg, Bernhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Lübeck, Sept. 30, 1832, is the author of, Versuch einer Geschichte der öffentlichen Religionsvorträge (Jena, 1785). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 628; ii, 57. (B. P.)

Eschenburg, Johann Joachim, a Lutheran hymn-writer of Germany, was born Dec. 7, 1743, at Hamburg, and died at Brunswick, Feb. 29, 1820. He is the author of twelve hymns. See Jöcher, Lexicon deutscher Dichter und Prosaisten, vi, 768-798; Schröder, Lexicon der Hamburgischen Schriftsteller, vol. ii; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 287 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 290. (B. P.)

Eschenmayer, Adam Carl August, a German philosophical writer, was born July 4, 1768, at Neuenburg. In 1811 he was made professor of philosophy at Tübingen, but retired in 1836 from his academical position to Kirchheim, and died there, Nov. 17, 1852. He wrote, Die Philosophie in ihrem Ubergange zur Nichtphilosophie (Erlangen, 1803):—System der Moralphilosophie (Stuttgart, 1818):—Religionsphilosophie (Tübingen, 1818-24, 3 vols.):—Die Hegelsche Religionsphilosophie verglichen mit dem christlichen Prinzip (ibid. 1834), written against Hegel:—Der Ischariotismus unserer Tage (ibid. 1835), written against the Life of Jesus, by Strauss:—Charakteristik des Unglaubens, Halbglaubens und Vollglaubens (ibid. 1838):—Grundriss der Naturphilosophie (ibid. 1832):—Grundzüge der christlichen Philosophie (Basle, 1840):—Organon des Christenthums (Stuttgart, 1843):—Sechs Perioden der christlichen Kirche (Heilbronn, 1851). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 286, 288, 429, 551, 594; ii, 10; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 336. (B. P.)

Eschrakites (enlightened), a Mohammedan sect who give themselves to contemplation. Their meditations pertain chiefly to God, whom they, unlike the other Mohammedans, believe to be a trinity of persons. Wherever the Koran conflicts with their doctrines they consider it abrogated. They hold in utter contempt the gross notions of Mohammed concerning the sensual pleasures of paradise, and consider man's supreme happiness to consist in the contemplation of divinity. This is one of the most respectable of the Mohammedan sects, resembling more nearly than any other, both in faith and practice, ordinary Christians.

Escobar, Bartolomeo de, a Spanish missionary, who spent his life and fortune in pious labors, was born at Seville in 1562. He became a Jesuit in the West Indies, where he lived seventeen years, and afterwards spent three years at Lima, dying there in 1624, and leaving, Conciones in Quinquagesima (Lyons, 1617):—Conciones de Festis Domini (Paris, 1624):—Conciones super Omnes Beatas Virginis Festivitates (ibid. eod.):—Ser- mones de la Concepción (Oviedo, 1622). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Escobar (del Curro), Juan, a Spanish theologian, was born at Puente de Cantos (Andalusia); taught law with success at the College of Santa Maria and at the University of Seville; became afterwards inquisitor at Murcia and at Cordova, and died at Madrid after 1642, leaving, De Puritate Sancti Officii Inquisitionis, etc. (Lyons, 1637):—De Utrouque Foro (Cordova, 1642):—De Confessariis, etc. (ibid. eod.):—De Hovis Canoniciis (ibid. eod.):—Antilogia, etc. (ibid. eod.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Escobar, Marina de, a Spanish foundress of religious orders, was born at Valladolid, Feb. 8, 1554. Although the daughter of rich parents, she refused marriage. She had visions very frequently, in which St. Gertrude, Brigitta, and Mathikla appeared to her. In 1582 a number of women desired to share her mode of living, and retired under her guidance to a monastery, to which she gave the name of Recollection of St. Brülger. She died June 9, 1633. Her Life, begun by P. Del Puente, was finished by P. Cachupin, the provincial of the Jesuits of Castile (Madrid, 1665). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Escobar, Pedro Suarez de, a Spanish theologian, was born at Medina; belonged to the order of the Hermits of St. Augustine, and went into Spanish America, preaching the Catholic faith in Mexico. He became successively first theologian of the cathedral of that city, prefect of the province, and bishop of Guadaluza. He died at Tlaicapan in 1591, leaving, Escala del Purgatorio Celestial:—Silva de la Perfeccion Escapologica:—Relox de Principes:—Sermones de los Escapulos de Todo et Año (Madrid, 1601). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Esdaile, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, became a tutor in the family of Mr. Christie, of Durie; was licensed to preach in June, 1803; presented by the town council to the second charge at Montrose in June, and ordained Aug. 14, 1805; promoted to the East Church, Perth, Oct. 18, 1810; resigned his charge, which was accepted June 15, 1844, after securing a bond from the magistrates for an annuity of £200, having discharged the duties of his office with great ability and a high degree of acceptance and usefulness. He died Jan. 8, 1864, aged eighty years. He published, Christian Theology (Edinb. 1823):—Apocryphy, for the Perthshire Bible Society (1826):—A Letter to the Rev. W. A. Thomson (Perth, eod.):—Lectures on the Shorter Catechism (ibid. 1829):—Civil and Religious Institutions Necessarily and Inseparably Connected (ibid. 1833):—The Voluntary Church Scheme without Foundation in Scripture, Reason, or Common-sense (ibid. 1834):—The Spirit, Principles, and Reasoning of the Voluntaries Exposed (ibid. eod.), with various articles in the Edinburgh Encyclopædia. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 619; iii, 848.

Esdras (Armen. Ezr or Ezras), catholicos or universal patriarch of Armenia, was born at Parhajnaguerd (in the province of Ararat). He was educated from his childhood in the patriarchal palace, and after having filled the office of doorkeeper to St. Gregory the Illuminator, was elected to succeed the patriarch Christopher III, who died A.D. 628. A short time after that the emperor Heraclius, on his return from his expedition against Chosroes II, king of Persia, stopped at Garin, formerly called Theodosiopolis and now Erzerum, and undertook to unite the Armenian Church with the Greek. To this end he tried to conciliate the affections of the Armenians who had submitted to his rule. He gave them as governor-general a very popular man, the prince Mjej Cnouni; he treated the patriarch with distinction, and gave him a part of the city of Gogh. At the order of the emperor, Esdras called together a council (A.D. 629) in the city of Garin, where a great number of bishops, doctors (vertabeds), and Armenian princes, likewise several Greek doctors, came together. During the conference of one month, the reunion of the two churches was decreed. The Council of Chalcedon was recognised as the fourth General Council, and it was concluded that the feast of the nativity of Jesus Christ is to be celebrated separately from that of his baptism. Most of the Perso-Armenian bishops adhered to the decisions of the council. Many of the theologians who had attached themselves to the anathematized doctrines received Esdras very coldly when he came back to Tevin, the seat of his administration, and loudly disapproved his last acts. The chief of this party, John Mairagometsi, was ill-treated by order of the patriarch and sent into exile as a heretic. Esdras died in 689, of sorrow, it is said. He has been differently judged by his compatriots; the historians John VI Catholicos and Michael Asori (or the Syrian) call him ignorant, while the Armenians unitedly reverence him as a saint. During his time Armenia was ravaged by the Arabs, who massacred thirty thousand people in the city of Tevin. Nerses III, bishop of Daik, succeeded Esdras. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Esger, Hans, a Dutch theologian and hebraist, was born at Amsterdam, Jan. 2, 1696. He was preacher at Ost- and Wester-Blocker, at Naarden, Middelburg, and finally at Amsterdam. In 1755 he was called as professor of Hebrew antiquities at Leyden, where he had been teaching theology before, and died there, May 28 of same year, leaving, Mosis Maimonidis Constitutio de Sigtis (Leyden, 1727):—Oratio de Supremo Ecclesie Doctore (ibid. 1740):—De Regimine Ecclesie (ibid. 1741):—De Fontibus Theologiae (ibid. 1751). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eshbill, Yom-Tob ben-Abraham, a famous Talmudist of the 13th century, is known for his novellas on almost all the treatises of the Talmud. These novellas, or חורושים, are highly appreciated by Talmudic scholars, and are therefore often reprinted. A complete list of them is given by Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 248-250. (B. P.)

Eshean. For this Biblical site Lieut. Conder suggests (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 313) the present ruined village es-Simia, lying three and a half miles southwest of Juttah.

Eschild, a Swedish prelate, succeeded to the see of Lund, although his election was forbidden by king Eric Ermund, against whom he took arms while only bishop of Röskilde. He finally retired to the monastery of Clairvaux, in France, where he died, Sept. 6, 1181. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eschilli, Nicolaus, a Swedish theologian, was born July 4, 1588. He studied at different universities of Germany, and was in 1611 rector at Calmar. The war between Sweden and Denmark put a sudden stop to his activity, but he resumed it in 1623. He died Feb. 17, 1650, leaving, Disp. Synodalis de Scriptura Sacra (Colmar, 1629):—De Jehovah Elohim (ibid. 1632):—De Persona et Officio Christi (ibid. 1633):—De Creatione et Providentia (ibid. 1635):—Disputationes Octo Synodales (ibid.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Eskuche, Balthasar Ludwig, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Cassel, March 12, 1710; studied at Marburg; was in 1734 preacher and professor at Rinteln, and died March 16, 1755, leaving, De Naufragio Paulino (Bremen, 1730):—De Requie Pauli in Melita (Magdeburg, 1731):—De Feste Judeorum Purim (Marburg and Rinteln, 1734):—In Orationem Paulinam in Areopago (Rinteln, 1735-40):—De Feste ευλοφωπιω (ibid. 1738):—Disp. ad Oraculum Jerem. xxi, 22 (ibid. 1739):—De Muliere Bethaniensi (ibid.):—Erläuterung der heiligen Schrift aus morgenländischen Reisebeschreibungen (ibid. 1745, 2 vols.):—Observationes Philolog. Crit. in Nov. Test. (ibid. 1748-54). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 134; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 250. (B. P.)

Esora (Judith iv, 4) is thought by Lieut. Conder (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 386; comp. Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," January, 1881, p. 52) to be the present "village Asiréh, north of Shechem," meaning, doubtless, what is laid down on the Ordnance Map as Asirét el-Ilatob, three miles north of Nablús, but not noticed in the Memoirs accompanying the Survey.

Espagne, JEAN D', a French Protestant theologian, was born in Dauphiny in 1591; became pastor at Orange in 1620, but soon left France, and was successively minister in Holland and at London, where he died, April 25, 1659, leaving English translations of some small treatises, especially Les Erreurs Populaires en Points de la Religion, etc. (La Haye, 1639):—La Manducation du Corps de Christ (ibid. 1640):—L'Usage de l'Oraison Dominicale (Lond. 1646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espence (Lat. Espencæus), CHARLES D', a French theologian, was born of noble parents at Châlons-sur-Marne, in 1511, and became a doctor of the Sorbonne and rector of the University of Paris. Cardinal de Lorraine employed him in various important cases. He distinguished himself in the assembly of Orleans in 1560, and at the Conference of Poissy in 1561. He died Oct. 5, 1571, leaving, Institution d'un Prince Chrétien (Lyons, 1548):—Traité des Ouvrages Claustrins:—Des Commentaires sur les Épîtres de Saint-Paul à Timothée et à Tite, full of long discussions on hierarchy and ecclesiastical discipline; also several controversial treatises, some in French and others in Latin. All these were collected at Paris in 1619. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espinac, PIERRE D', a French prelate, born early in the 16th century, was the son of Pierre d'Espinac, lieutenant of the king in Burgundy. He became canon-count, then dean of the Church of Lyons, and finally archbishop there, after the death of his uncle, Antoine d'Albon, in 1574. The clergy chose him as their orator in the assembly of Blois, and he became chief of the deputation of the Catholics at the celebrated deputation of Suresne. He died Jan. 9, 1599, leaving, besides addresses on the above occasions, Exhortation au Peuple de Lyon (1583):—Un Bréviaire:—Des Poesies Françaises (not printed). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espinay, André d', a French prelate, was successively archbishop of Arles and of Bordeaux, cardinal-archbishop and count of Lyons, and aided Charles VIII in his war in Brittany. He died at Paris, Nov. 10, 1500. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espinay, Charles d', a French bishop, born of an ancient family of Brittany about 1530, became commendatory abbot of Tronchet, of St. Gildas du Bois, and prior of Gahard and of Bécherel, was appointed in 1558 bishop of Dol, but before being consecrated assisted at the Council of Trent. He was active in the ecclesiastical troubles of his time, and died in September, 1591. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espinay, Jacques d', a French prelate, was apothecary of the holy see, and succeeded by his intrigues in being appointed bishop of St. Malo, Jan. 9, 1450. Nicholas V transferred him, March 18 following, to the see of Rennes, but the duc of Brittany, Pierre II, violently opposed these changes. In the end, Espinay was deprived even of his patrimony, and although suffering from the gout was confined in a prison, where he died, Jan. 9, 1482. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Espinel, VICTOR, a Spanish writer and ecclesiastic, was born at Ronda, in the province of Granada, about 1551. He was educated at Salamanca, and served as a soldier in Flanders. His ecclesiastical position seems to have been that of chaplain at Ronda, but he resided chiefly at Madrid. He died about 1634. He is now chiefly noted for his romance of Marcos de Olregon, a work delineating Spanish manners. He was also a poet of some reputation. There is a good English translation of his Marcos de Olregon, by Algernon Langton (Lond. 1816, 2 vols.). See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Espinosa, DIEGO DE, a Spanish prelate and statesman, was born at Martininos de las Posadas (old Castile), in 1502. He studied civil and canonical law, which he taught when very young at Cuenca; then became auditor at Seville, and director of the royal council of Navarre. Philip II appointed him some time afterwards grand inquisitor of Spain, superintendent of the negotiations and affairs of Italy, and finally bishop of Sigüenza. In 1568 Espinosa received the cardinal's hat. In the exercise of his high functions he was remarkable for his equal severity against iniquitous judges and heretics. He died Sept. 6, 1572. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Esquimaux Version of the Scriptures. The Esquimaux are a people dispersed over the northern coast of North America, inhabiting the shores of all the seas, bays, gulfs, and islands of the Arctic Ocean, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They are also found on the Atlantic side of the continent, along the coast of Labrador, as far south as the fiftieth degree of latitude; and are likewise to be met with on the opposite coast of America, along the shores of the Pacific, from Behring Strait to Mount St. Elias, in the sixtieth degree of latitude. Moravian missionaries were the first who proclaimed the glad tidings of the Gospel in these inclement regions. The first part of the New Test. which was published in that language was the gospel of John, and three years later, in 1813, the British and Foreign Bible Society published the other three gospels. Other parts soon followed, till in 1826 the entire New Test. was given to that benighted people. Of the Old Test. different parts were published from time to time, till in 1871 the entire Bible was printed for the Esquimaux. The language has been treated in modern times by Kleinschmidt, in Grammatik der grönländischen Sprache (Berlin, 1871). See GREENLANDISH VERSION. (B. P.)

Estaing, François, a learned and charitable French prelate, was born Jan. 6, 1462. He was bishop of Rhodéz, and constructed the tower of the cathedral at his own expense. He died Nov. 1, 1529. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Estaing, Joachim, bishop of Clermont, died in 1650, and had as his successor in his diocese his brother Louis, who was almoner to Anne of Austria. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Estampes. See ÉTAMPES.

Este, Ippolito d', an Italian prelate, son of duke Ercole I, was born in 1479. He was appointed cardinal at the age of fifteen years by pope Alexander VI. He is accused of having given orders for putting out the eyes of his natural brother, Giulio d'Este, through jealousy. He was the political counsellor and lieutenant of his brother Alfonso, who had become duke of Ferrara in 1505. He contributed to the destruction of the Venetian fleet, Dec. 22, 1509. Cardinal d'Este had received a very careful education, and possessed extensive knowledge, particularly of mathematics. He died in 1520. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Este, Juan Baptista d', a convert from Judaism, who flourished in the beginning of the 17th century in Portugal, is the author of Consolação Christiana (Lisbon, 1616):—Diálogo entre Diácono e Mestre Catechizante, in one hundred chapters (ibid. 1621). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 258; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. i and iii, 810; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Estella, DIEGO D', a Spanish ascetic writer, was born at Estella in 1524. After studying at the universities of Toulouse and Salamanca, he entered the monastic life, and gained the confidence of Philip II, who called him his consulting theologian. He died Aug. 1, 1578, leaving De la Vida del Evangelista San Juan (Lisbon, 1534):—De la Unidad del Mundo (Salamanca, 1574):—In Evangelium Luca (Alcala de Henares, 1578). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Estes, DANIEL GORDON, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from the General Theological Seminary; officiated in St. Louis, Mo., in 1853, and in the following year became rector. In 1857 he resided in Amesbury, Mass.; subsequently became rector of St. James's Church in that place, and continued to serve that parish until 1872. He died Aug. 9, 1873, aged fifty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 138.

Estouteville, GUILLAUME, a French prelate, was born before 1403. He studied at the University of Paris, entered early the Benedictine order, and was raised to the highest dignity, being successively bishop of Maurienne, Digne, Beziers, Ostia, Velletri, and Port-Sainte-Kufin, and also archbishop of Rouen. He had, among other abbies, those of St. Ouen de Rouen, of Jumièges, of Montebourg, and of Mont St. Michel, together with the priories of St. Martin-des Champs, at Paris, Grand Pré, and Beaumont en Auge (Normandy). In 1437 he was made cardinal-priest by Eugenius IV, with the title of Silvestre et Martin des Monts. He was legate in France under Nicholas V, and took part in the election of four pontiffs. In 1477 Sixtus IV appointed him chamberlain of the Church of Rome. D'Estouteville died dean of the sacred college, Dec. 22, 1483. He bestowed his immense wealth on several ecclesiastical and literary institutions. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Estrées, César d', a French prelate, was born at Paris, Feb. 5, 1628. When quite young he was appointed bishop of Laon. Louis XIV charged him several times with negotiations, in which he showed a profound knowledge of the affairs of the Church and of those of the State. D'Estrées obtained the cardinal's hat in 1674. In 1680 he resigned the bishopric of Laon in favor of his nephew, and went to Rome on public affairs. He was eventually made abbot of St. Germain-des-Prés, and died dean of the French Academy, Dec. 18, 1714. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Estrées, Jean d', a French prelate, was born in 1666, and became abbot of St. Claude. Louis XIV sent him on an embassy to Portugal in 1692, and finally to Spain in 1703. In January, 1716, he was appointed archbishop of Cambray, and died March 8, 1718, without being consecrated. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Etam. The rock thus designated in the account of Samson's exploits (Judg. xv) is regarded by Lieut. Conder (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1875, p. 12) as the remarkable chasm or cave near the present Beit-Atâb, eight miles west by north from Bethlehem, and described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 23) as a cavern some two hundred and fifty feet long, with an average height of five to eight feet and a width of about eighteen feet; entered at the east end by a vertical shaft called "the well," six by five feet wide and twenty feet deep. The village is a small one, standing on a bare knoll of rock some sixty to one hundred feet above the surrounding ridge, with cisterns to the houses, and a few traces of antiquity. The place is in the vicinity of Samson's adventures, and the identification is accepted by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 48).

Etam of Simeon (1 Chron. iv, 32) will in that case be a different place, for which Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work in Palest. ii, 336) the present ruin Aitûn, laid down on the Ordnance Map at eight miles south by east from Beit-Jibim, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 278) as "a mound with foundations; a square cell is cut in the rock opposite the ruin on the south."

XII.—12

Etam of Judah (2 Chron. xi, 6), as still different, has been confirmed at Wady Urtas by the recovery of the name in Ain-Atân, a spring on the hillside, south-east of the pools of Solomon (el-Burak), one of the four that feed the reservoirs (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 90).

Étampes-Valençay, Achille d', a French prelate and general, was born at Tours in 1589. He was for a long time a valiant captain of the Knights of Malta. At the siege of Montauban he attracted the attention of Louis XIII, who assigned him a company of cavalry in his regiment. After the capture of La Rochelle, where he commanded as vice-admiral, he became major-general. Immediately after the restoration of peace he returned to Malta. Pope Urban VIII charged him with the command of the pontifical troops against the duke of Parma, and as a reward gave him the cardinal's hat. The new prelate showed as much vigor in the council as he had at the head of the army. He was involved in a contest between Mazarin and the court of Rome. He died in that city in 1646. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Étampes-Valençay, Léonor d', a French prelate and theologian, brother of the preceding, was born about 1585. He entered the ministry, and obtained, while quite young, the abbey of Bourgueil-en-Vallée, which he represented as deputy to the Estates-general of 1614. In 1620 he succeeded his cousin Philippe Hurault in the see of Chartres, and in 1647 was transferred to the archbishopric of Rheims. He signalized himself in the assembly of the clergy of 1686 by maintaining the royal authority. He died at Paris in 1651, leaving a poem in Latin, in honor of the Virgin (Paris, 1605):—a Ritual, for the diocese of Chartres (ibid. 1627). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Etchen (Echeus, or Etlan), commemorated Feb. 11 in the Irish and Scotch calendars, was bishop of Cluain-fada, in Meath, of royal descent, originally a physician. He seems to have been born cir. A.D. 490, to have lived on the borders of Ossory, and died A.D. 578.

Eternâles, a Christian sect, supposed to have arisen about A.D. 260, deriving their name from their belief in the eternity of the world. They maintained that the earth will continue in its present state, even after the resurrection of the dead.

Eternity of the World. See COSMOGONY.

Ethelbert. (1) Saint, king of the East-Angles, beheaded in 792 (rather 794) by order of Offa, king of Mercia, and venerated May 20 as the patron of Hereford. (2) Saint, martyred with his brother, St. Ethelred, at the court of their cousin Egbert, king of Kent, in the 7th century, and commemorated on Oct. 17. (3) Archbishop of York (called also Adalbert, and usually Albert), a kinsman and pupil of archbishop Egbert, and the teacher of Alcuin, was consecrated to the see April 24, 767, and in 778 pope Adrian sent him the pallium. He made an excellent archbishop, continuing his frugal habits, and devoting himself to the interests of the Church. In 780 he appointed Eanbald his coadjutor, and died at York, Nov. 8, 781 or 782. (4) Bishop of Withem, in Galloway, consecrated June 10, 777; died Oct. 16, 797.

Ethelburga is the name of several early English abbesses, one of whom is especially entitled saint. She was sister to Erkenwald, bishop of London; was by him appointed first abbess of the nunnery at Barking, Essex, which he built and endowed. Here she led a very austere life, and died in 676. She is commemorated on Oct. 11.

Ethelgar, archbishop of Canterbury, was educated at Glastonbury, where he was a favorite pupil. In 964 he was appointed abbot of Newminster at Winchester, and on May 2, 980, he was consecrated to the see of Selsey.

For more than eight years Ethelgar was bishop of Selsey. In 988 he was translated to the see of Canterbury. All hopes and expectations seem to have been disappointed by his death, Dec. 3, 989. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, i, 428 sq.

Ethelhard, archbishop of Canterbury, does not seem to have figured in history until his consecration to that see, July 21, 793. His first public act was to assist in nominating representatives to attend the council which the emperor Charlemagne had called to assemble at Frankfort, one of the most important councils ever held in the West. His administration was one of success and satisfaction to his people. He was especially instrumental in securing, in 802, the pope's recognition of the sovereign rights of the see. He died May 12, 805. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, i, 255 sq.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.

Ethelnoth, archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of Egelmaer, the earl, and was a Glastonbury man. He obtained the grant of additional privileges for the monastery from Canute, and is reported to have written its history. He was first a monk of Glastonbury, then dean of Canterbury, and chaplain to Canute, the king. Other preferment he declined until a vacancy occurred in the see of Canterbury. In 1020 the see was vacant, and Ethelnoth was nominated by the king as primate of England. Having settled his affairs in Canterbury, he made provision for a temporary absence, and proceeded to Rome in 1022, where he was received with distinction by Benedict VIII. From Rome he went to Pavia to visit the tomb of St. Augustine of Hippo. Ethelnoth seems to have been a church restorer. He repaired substantially the cathedral, which his predecessors had only patched over. He displayed both firmness and discretion during his administration. He died in October, 1038. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, i, 478 sq.

Ethelred, archbishop of Canterbury, is said to have been bishop in Wiltshire before his appointment to Canterbury in 870. He was educated at the monastery of St. Augustine. After his appointment to the see, he went immediately to Rome for the pallium, as was required in those days. During Ethelred's administration it is said that Cameliac came to Canterbury to be consecrated by him to the see of Llandaff. This plainly shows that the spiritual supremacy of the English Church already extended, at least, over the south-eastern part of Wales. In the episcopate of Ethelred, the same Church gave proof of its revived energy, by opening a communication with the Christians of the far East, especially with those then existing in India. These things occurred towards the close of Ethelred's life. He was cordial in his co-operation with the king, and took many steps towards the reformation of the Church. To him also is due, at least, the merit of carrying into effect the will of the sovereign. He died in 889. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, i, 298 sq.

Ethelreda, Saint. See AUDRY, ST.

Ethelwold (Lat. Ædiluoldus), bishop of Lindisfarne, cir. 724-740, was originally a servant under St. Cuthbert, and afterwards abbot of Melrose, and lived through many vicissitudes in those days of peril. He is commemorated on Feb. 12.

Ether is identified by lieutenant Conder (Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 336) with a ruined site, el-Atr, one mile north-west of Beit-Jibrin; but it is doubtful if the territory of Simeon extended so far north. Van de Velde's Tell Athan, "a little to the north-east of Beersheba," which is adopted by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 42), does not appear on the Ordinance Map.

Ethiopian Monks. Monasticism spread rapidly

Ethiopian Monk.

Several of them, however, preferred to retain their independence, like Congregationalists. Monks swarmed in Ethiopia long after the first fervor of asceticism; and the constitution of the Ethiopian Church was monastic. The story of a military order of monks, like the knight-templar, originating in the 4th century, is purely fabulous. See Helyot, Dict. des Ordres Religieux, ii, 222 sq.

Ethnophrōnēs (from ἔθνος, a nation, and φρονέω, to think), a name sometimes applied to the heretics of the 7th century, who sought to combine pagan customs and ceremonies with Christianity.

Etabega, a dignitary of the Abyssinian Church, next in authority to the Abuna (q. v.).

Etu, an object of worship in the islands of the Pacific, consisting of some bird, fish, or reptile, in which the natives believed a spirit resided. For an account of this worship see Williams, Missionary Researches.

Eucadirea, priests of the ancient Carthaginian deities, also called Abadires (q. v.).

Eucherius, the thirty-second bishop of Orleans, was born there, of noble parents, towards the close of the 7th century; devoted himself early to a monastic life at Jumièges; was elected to the see on the death of his uncle, in 717; administered it with remarkable success, but was banished to Cologne, in 732, by Charles Martel, apparently for resisting a confiscation of the Church revenues; and died at a place near Liege in 788 (or 742). He is commemorated Feb. 20.

Euchomēni (from εύχομαι, to pray), a name sometimes applied to those of the catechumens (q. v.) who remained to receive the minister's prayers and benedictions. See GENUFLECTENTES.

Eudes de Rougemont, sixty-eighth bishop of Besançon, belonged to one of the oldest families of Burgundy, and succeeded, Feb. 9, 1269, Guillaume de La Tour. He fell into a quarrel with his people, in 1279, concerning the expenses of the see, which resulted in his discomfiture. He died June 23, 1301. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Eufronius. See EUPHRONIUS.

Eugenius, a Catholic bishop of CARTHAGE, was elected to that see in 480 or 481. In 488 he was banished by the Arian party to Tripoli, where he remained until 484, when he returned to his diocese. But the next king banished him to Gaul, where he remained the rest of his life. He died at Vienne, Sept. 6, 505. He left Expositio Fidei Catholici (printed in Migne, Patrol. Lat. lviii). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. a. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. a. v.

Eugenius, bishop of Toledo, the second of that name, was first a clerk of the Church there, and on being chosen bishop, retired to Saragossa in a monastery; but being discovered, was brought back to Toledo, and ordained in 646. He presided at the councils held at Toledo in the years 653, 655, and 656, and died in 657. He was the author of several works, particularly a treatise on the Trinity, two books of miscellanies, and one in prose and verse, which were published by father Sirmond at Paris (1619, 8vo; also in 1696; Venice, 1728, in the Bibliotheca Max. Patrum; Lyons, 1677, xii, 345). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Bukteroi Olkoi (ἐὐκρητοί, an oratory, and οἶκος, a house), a name sometimes applied to ancient Christian churches.

Eulogium, the consecrated bread of the Greek Church.

Eulysius, bishop of Apamea, in Bithynia, one of Chrysostom's most loyal adherents, banished to Mizpah, beyond Bosrah, in Syria, A.D. 406.

Eumenides. See FURIES.

Euphemia, Saint, of Chalcedon, suffered martyrdom in the time of Galerius, cir. A.D. 307. Her anniversary is Sept. 16.

Euphemius (by some Euthymius), third patriarch of Constantinople, A.D. 489-496, was a learned historian and orthodox presbyter of that city, but became involved in the jealousies between the Greek and Roman ecclesiastics, and was finally deposed by the emperor Anastasius. He died in 515.

Euphrasia (or Euphrosyna), daughter of Paphnutius of Alexandria, early in the 5th century, fled from home to avoid marriage, and was received into a neighboring monastery, where, under the assumed name of Smaraagdus, she concealed her sex for thirty-eight years. Her father meanwhile visited her, without recognising her, and was converted to Christianity. On her death-bed she discovered herself to him, and he became a monk. She is commemorated by the Latins, Feb. 11; by the Greeks, Sept. 25.

Euphrates, a heretic of the 2d century, was the founder of the sect of Ophites or Serpentarians, one of whose dogmas was, that the serpent by which our first parents were deceived was either Christ himself or Sophia (wisdom) concealed under that form, for which reason they paid a kind of divine honor to certain serpents kept for that purpose. In most points he adhered to the Oriental or Gnostic philosophy, of two opposite principles, with the sons and other dreams of those sects. Origen did not consider the disciples of Euphrates as Christians, but as calumniators of Jesus Christ.

Euphronius (or Eufronius). (1) Bishop of Antioch, intruded by the Arian party, A.D. 332-334. (2) Bishop of Colonia, in Armenia; afterwards metropolitan of Nicopolis, A.D. 375. (3) Ninth bishop of Autan, not long before A.D. 452; commemorated Aug. 3. (4) The eighteenth bishop of Tours, A.D. 555-572, who resisted the violent encroachments of the civil power, died in his seventieth year, and is commemorated Aug. 4.

Eurōpa, in Greek mythology, was the famous beloved of Jupiter, for whose sake he transformed himself into a bull, and took her on his back to Crete, where she gave birth by him to Minos, Rhadamanthus, and Sarpedon. According to Homer, she was a daughter of Phenix and Perimede; but later writers make her the daughter of the Phœnician king Agenor and Telephassa. Agenor, on learning of her abduction, sent out all his sons in search of her, with the command not to return without her. As they did not discover her, the sons settled in strange countries, and thus the father lost all his children. Europa married Asterion, the king of Crete, who brought up her children as wise, just men, so that they became the judges of the infernal regions. She was worshipped on Crete. The myth doubtless represents the passage of colonists across the Hellespont from Asia to Europe.

weather, and heavy storms. Therefore he is represented on the tower of the winds with flowing hair, tangled beard, and of sultry aspect. See EAST WIND.

Eusebia, Saint, abbess of Hamay or Hamaige, daughter of Adalbrand, a Frankish lord, and of St. Rictrude, was born in 637. She was educated by her grandmother, St. Gertrude, abbess of Hamay (Hamaticum), and was elected to succeed her in 649; but as she was only twelve years old, Rictrude, who at that time was abbess of Marchiennes, let her come into her convent with her whole community, by order of the king, Clovis II. Eusebia, who could not forget her monastery of Hamaige, therefore rose secretly in the night with one of her friends, and went there to chant the service, and came back the following morning to Marchiennes. Her mother found this out, however, gave her a severe chastisement, and engaged many bishops and abbots to remonstrate with her, but they found her inflexible, and advised Rictrude to leave her at liberty. When only thirteen years old, Eusebia returned to Hamaige as abbess, and governed her community with humility, mildness, and prudence. She died in 660, and is commemorated March 16. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Eusebius, the name of a very great number of early Christian ecclesiastics, of whom we mention a few of the most noted. (1) Fifth bishop of Antibes, cir. A.D. 549-554. (2) Bishop of Caesarea, in Cappadocia, A.D. 362-370, a friend of Gregory Nazianzen. (3) The twenty-second bishop of Milan, A.D. 449-465. (4) Bishop of Pelusium, cir. A.D. 431-457. (5) Bishop of Tarragona, cir. A.D. 610-632. (6) Bishop of Valentinianopolis, in proconsular Asia, deposed for scandalous acts, A.D. 400. (7) Presbyter of Rome, A.D. 538, commemorated as a confessor Aug. 14. (8) Presbyter of Cremona, a friend of St. Jerome.

Eustachius (or Eustathius, said to have been named Placidus before his conversion), a noted saint, is commemorated by the Latins Nov. 2, and by the Greeks Sept. 20, as a military martyr, along with his wife Theopista, and his two sons, Agapius and Theopistus, at Rome, under Hadrian, A.D. 118. His Acts are evidently spurious, but his martyrdom is undoubted. Many churches are dedicated to him, especially one in Rome, and one in Paris. Baronius thinks he may have been the Placidus who was a general under Titus (Josephus, War, iii, 4; iv, 187), but that would make him very aged. See Jameson, Sacred and Legendary Art, p. 792.

Eustachius, GIOV. PAUL. See NOLA PAUL.

Eustathius. (1) Abbot of Luxeuil (Franch-Comté), born in Burgundy about 560, succeeded St. Columbanus in 610, labored as a missionary among the Varaci in 616, and died in 625; commemorated March 29 (by others Oct. 11). (2) Bishop of Attalia, resigned in 481. (3) Bishop of Berytus, in Syria, ejected for time-serving heresy, in 457. (4) Patriarch of Alexandria, 801-805.

Eustochius. (1) Fifth archbishop of Tours, 443-460, is commemorated as a saint, Sept. 19. (2) Patriarch of Jerusalem, 544-556.

Eustorgius, bishop of Milan, 512-518.

Eustrates, one of a class of martyrs to whom a festival is dedicated in the Greek Church on Dec. 13.

Eustratius, a Greek theologian, who lived in the 6th century, wrote a treatise on The Condition of the Soul of Man after Death, printed for the first time by Leo Allatius, in the De Occidentali et Orientali. The author has been identified with Eustathius, the biographer of Eutychius, of the 6th century.

Eustratius, bishop of Nice, flourished in the beginning of the 12th century, and was noted for his polemic writings in divinity, and his philosophical works. His Greek commentaries on Aristotle's Analytica, and on his Ethica, are still extant; the former published at Venice in 1584, the latter at the same place in 1636, and at Paris in 1543.

Euterpe, in Greek mythology, one of the muses, who presided over lyric poetry. See cut below.

Eutharius, bishop of Tyana, an earnest Nestorian, was an acknowledged leader of that party in the Council of Ephesus (A.D. 431), and for some time afterwards. He was ultimately banished to Scythopolis, and thence to Tyre, where he died. He wrote a treatise, usually published with the works of Athanasius.

Euthymius, abbot of Pharan, in Judæa, was born in Melitene (Armenia) in 377. He was educated under bishop Otreius, who ordained him priest, and intrusted him with the direction of the monasteries of Melitene. In 406 he went to Palestine, and retired into a cell near Jerusalem. Soon after he was joined by a great number of recluses, who chose him as their superior. His authority extended over several monasteries. Euthymius converted to Christianity a large number of Arabians, and brought back to the orthodox Church several Nestorians and Manichæans. Through his entreaty also the empress Eudoxia, the wife of Theodosius the younger, entered into the bosom of the Catholic Church. There was also attributed to Euthymius the power of performing miracles. He died in 473. After his death he was revered as a saint, first in the East, and then in the West. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dictionary of Christian Biography, s. v.

Eutropius, bishop of Valencia, in Spain, towards the end of the 6th century, originally abbot of the monastery of Servitanum, was associated with the most influential Spanish ecclesiastics of his time.

Eutuchites (from eû, good, and τιχη, fortune), a heretical sect mentioned by Theodoret as belonging to the 8d century. They held that our souls were placed in our bodies only to honor the angels who created them, that we ought to be afflicted at nothing, and to be equally pleased with vice and virtue. They also taught that Christ was the son of an unknown god.

Evangelists, THE FOUR, Representations of, in Christian Art. The adoption of the four creatures of the apocalypse (iv, 6) as images of the evangelists does not seem to have taken place generally, or is not recorded on Christian monuments, before the 5th century. It involves, of course, a peculiarly impressive connection between the beginning of the visions of Ezekiel and the unveiling of heaven to the eyes of John. Evangelists. In the British census of 1851 four congregations returned themselves as worshipping under this name, probably to avoid being identified with any sect.

Evans, Benjamin, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Bilston, Staffordshire, May 13, 1803. As a boy his thirst for knowledge was intense, and he excelled in drawings on Staffordshire pottery-ware. He was converted in his youth, joined the Baptists, and at twenty entered Horton College, Bradford, Yorkshire. In 1825 he accepted an invitation as pastor over a very small Church at the seaport of Scarborough, where, for forty years, he preached four sermons, held five prayer-meetings, and conducted three Bible-classes weekly. He formed a new Baptist Ministerial Association, which sent out a young man from Horton College to represent the Baptist cause in Germany. He also founded the first Baptist church in Brussels. He effectually resisted the levying of Church rates in Scarborough on Independents; took a leading part in the anti-Corn-Law League, and in the anti-State-Church Associations, and was the founder and first secretary of the Mechanics' Institute in the town; the Archæological Society and Museum owes much of its success to his efforts. He was the founder of the Society for the Education of Ministers' Sons, and its president; the founder of the Theological College at Bury, and professor of ecclesiastical history in it; and he also established and edited The Baptist Record, a quarterly journal. Among his published works are, The Enlarged History of Scarborough;—The History of Horton and Rawdon Colleges;—The History of the Early English Baptists (2 vols.);—Modern Popery;—Hints to Young Christians;—Life of Wickliffe;—History of the German Reformation;—Lectures on Ecclesiastical History;—The Religious State of Belgium, and about a score of pamphlets on popular topics. He was the father of the Freeman newspaper, and a contributor to half a dozen Baptist magazines. He died suddenly, April 6, 1871. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1872.

Evans, C., D.D., a Welsh Baptist minister, was born at Llannwchlyn, Merionethshire, June 22, 1781. He was baptized in early life, began to preach in 1809, was two years in the Abergavenny Academy, and then for seven years pastor of the small Church of Llannefyd and Llansannan. In 1823 he removed to Cefnawr, which was his residence for thirty-five years, during twenty-nine of which he was pastor of the Church in that place. Considering the imperfection of his early education, he became a more than ordinarily cultured scholar, and wrote, The Peculiar Tenets of the Baptists, and A History of the Baptists, Based on the Fundamental Principles of their System. He died March 28, 1864. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1865, p. 121. (J. C. S.)

Evans, Evan (1), D.D., a minister of the Church of England, is supposed to have been a native of Wales. He was sent to Philadelphia, Pa., by the bishop of London, in 1700. Five years before, a church had been built there, and of this he took charge. Through his instrumentality churches were formed at Chichester, Chester, Maidenhead, Concord, Evesham, Montgomery, Radnor, and Oxford, places all within a radius of forty miles. After four years of service at Philadelphia, he asked for and received an assistant. In 1707 he visited England, and urged that a bishop should be sent over to the colonies. In 1709 he returned to his charge in Philadelphia, and in 1711 it was found necessary to enlarge the church edifice. Resigning, he again visited England in 1716, and on his return to America accepted an appointment to Oxford and Radnor, a part of his former field, and remained there until 1718, when he resigned his mission, removed to Maryland, to St. George's parish, then in Baltimore, now Harford, County, and on every alternate Sabbath officiated in the adjoining parish, over twenty miles distant. He died in October, 1721. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 22.

Evans, Evan (2), a Welsh divine and poet, was born at Cynhawdren, in Cardiganshire, about 1730, and was educated at Jesus College, Oxford. After taking orders in college, he officiated as curate in several places, particularly Newick, in Kent, Llanvair Talhaiarn, in Denbighshire, and Towyn, in Merionethshire. He died at his birthplace in 1790. He published Disertation de Bardis (1764, 4to), and translated into Welsh two volumes of Tillotson's Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Evans, James, the celebrated Canadian missionary among the Indians, brother of Rev. Ephraim Evans, D.D., entered upon the missionary work at St. Clair, Ont., in 1834. He labored at Rice Lake, Credit, Ancaster, and other places. To his mental vigor and indomitable perseverance the Indians are indebted for many advantages. Not the least of these is a written and printed character of their language, invented by Evans. He left behind him many papers, both in print and manuscript—a private journal, translations, Indian vocabularies, letters, etc. He died suddenly, while on a visit to England, at Keelby, Lincolnshire, Nov. 23, 1846. Evans was a warm friend, a man of genius, an enterprising explorer, a devoted missionary, and an humble Christian. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1847, p. 462; Carroll, Case and his Contemporaries (see index, vol. v).

Evans, James Harrington, a Baptist minister of John Street Chapel, London, was born about 1785. He died about 1849. His works are, Dialogues on the Trinity (Lond. 1819, 8vo):—Sermons on the Spirit of Holiness (1839, 4th ed. 12mo). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Evans, John, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born about 1767, at Usk, Monmouthshire. He was pastor of a congregation of General Baptists, Worship Street, London, from 1792 to 1827, and died in the latter year, leaving a number of theological sermons and other works, for a list of which see Watt, Bibl. Brit., and the Gentleman's Magazine, XCVII, i, 369. He published, in 1797, An Attempt to Account for the Infidelity of the Late Mr. Gibbon. His best-known work is a Brief Sketch of the Different Denominations into which the Christian World is Divided (1794). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Evans, Jonathan, an English Congregational minister, was born at Coventry about 1748. He was converted in 1778 or 1779, and shortly after began to work with much earnestness for the salvation of his irreligious neighbors. In 1782 he turned his attention more particularly to the parish of Foleshill, near Coventry, and was so successful as to purchase, in 1784, a building for a place of worship, and eventually a chapel was built. In 1796 a church was formed, chiefly of those who were the fruits of his ministry, of which he was ordained pastor, April 4, 1797. He died Aug. 31, 1809. Mr. Evans was a plain, earnest preacher, and very successful in winning souls. He was the author of three fine hymns, commencing, "Come, thou soul-transforming spirit," "Hark! the voice of love and mercy," "Let saints on earth their anthems raise." See (Lond.) Evangelical Magazine, 1847, p. 128.

Eveillon, Jacques, a French theologian, and grand-vicar of Angers under Messrs. Fouquet, Miron, De Reuil, and Arnaud, was born at Angers in 1572, and obtained his preferments in consequence of his superior knowledge of ecclesiastical laws and customs. He died at Angers in 1651. He was the author of an excellent treatise, Des Excommunications et des Monitoires (1672). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eveleigh, John, D.D., provost of Oriel College, Oxford, and prebendary of Rochester (1781), was born in 1747. He died Dec. 10, 1814, leaving The Trinity (1791):—Sermons Preached before the University of Oxford (1792):—Plurality of Persons in the Godhead Proved (1797). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Everett, James, a noted English Methodist preacher, was born at Alnwick, Northumberland, May 16, 1784. He was converted when about nineteen years of age, joined the Wesleyans, soon began to preach, in 1806 was called into the regular work at Sunderland, and afterwards occupied important appointments in the Conference until 1821, when he became a supernumerary; but in 1828 resumed an efficient relation for a few years, and then retired as a superannuate to the city of York. In 1847 the celebrated "Fly Sheets" appeared in the Wesleyan connection, strongly inveighing against its administration; and their authorship being charged upon Mr. Everett, and he not denying it, he was expelled in 1848 from the ministry, together with Revs. James Dunn and Walter Griffith, who united in forming what has since been known as the Methodist Free Church (q. v.). Mr. Everett died in Sunderland, May 10, 1872. He is the author of several publications, chiefly biographical.

Everett, Robert, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Gronant, North Wales, Jan. 2, 1791. He studied under Rev. Thomas Jones, of Newmarket, also in the Denbigh Academy; began preaching in 1809, but two years later entered Wrexham Theological Seminary, and completed a four years' course. He was ordained pastor in Denbigh in 1815; dismissed in 1823; came to America and began to minister to the Welsh Congregational Church, Utica, N. Y., in July of the same year. This charge he resigned in 1832, and in the following year became acting pastor at East Winfield, where he remained until 1835, when, for about three years, he served the Presbyterian Church at Westernville. In April, 1838, he was installed pastor of the two Welsh congregations of Steuben, a position which he retained until the close of his life, although, during the last few years, he preached only occasionally. He died there, Feb. 25, 1876. The Welsh people in the United States gave him eleven hundred dollars as a testimonial in 1871. Stenographia is the title of a work which he published at Denbigh in 1816, in which shorthand writing was first adapted to the Welsh language. Sixty editions of his First Catechism were published in Wales, being first issued at Denbigh in 1822. This was republished in America, and passed through several editions. At Steuben he published a Larger Catechism; also Arwydd, an aid to reading Welsh, of which fifteen editions were printed prior to his death. In January, 1840, he published the first number of Y Cenhadwr Americanaidd (The American Missionary), a Welsh Congregational monthly, which was edited, after his death, by his son. In 1843 he published Y Ddwygarwr (The Philanthropist), devoted to emancipation and temperance; and from 1850 to 1852 he edited Y Detholydd (Eclectic). Two Welsh hymn-books, published in 1839 and 1846, were in large part prepared by Dr. Everett. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 425; 1877, p. 314.

Everton, Silvester DE, an English prelate of the 13th century, took his name from Everton, a village in Bedfordshire. He received the lord chancellorship of England in 1246, and was very skillful in customs of chancery. The next year he was consecrated bishop of Carlisle. With the rest of the English bishops he boldly requested of Henry III that all foreigners and insufficient persons might be put out of their bishoprics. The king retorted on the bishops, singling out Silvester as to the point of insufficiency. Everton lost his life by a fall from a horse, in 1254. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 168.

Evigilator, an officer in Greek monasteries, whose duty it was to waken the monks for nocturnal and matutinal services. Another officer of the kind was the excitator, who had to waken a monk asleep in church.

Evocatio, a religious ceremony observed by the ancient Romans when besieging a town, in which they solemnly called upon the deities of the place to forsake it and come over to their assistance. They usually attempted to bribe the gods by promising them temples and festivals.

Evodius, according to tradition, the first bishop of Antioch, after A.D. 42.

Evolution. The important relations which the scientific subject has assumed to religious literature justifies us in a more copious and particular treatment than was appropriate under the general head of DEVELOPMENT (q. v.).*

I. Definition.—Evolution in its widest sense, and viewed from the scientific standpoint, is the continuous transformation and differentiation of an identical substance. More specifically, it is the continuous unfolding of a material existence according to such method that constituent parts which were germinal or potential become actual and functional, and according to such an order that the primitive existence is successively more differentiated, with parts progressively more and more specialized in structure and function. It is the passage from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous. It implies continuity and unity of existence. It also implies persistence of the fundamental conception embodied in the primitive substance, so that, however diversified, all its parts still conform to a changeless type. It is a mode which reveals itself transcendently as the necessary product of mind; it reveals thought as all-pervading and all-enduring throughout the material realm in which the law of evolution finds its exemplification.

Whether the phenomena of the natural world come into existence under a method conformable to the above definition of evolution is a question of fact, to be decided by investigation of the phenomena.† This question of fact falls, therefore, strictly within the domain of natural science. Whatever verdict may be pronounced at this tribunal can never be invalidated by any a priori considerations, nor by any delineation of supposed consequences or implications of the verdict. Nor can it be set aside as proceeding from incompetent authority, since no authority in a question of fact can be conceived more competent than that of a body of witnesses who have surpassed all others in the study of that about which they testify. For our present purpose we must ascertain, therefore, what are the determinations of natural science in reference to the nature of the successions of phenomena in the natural world. Does science find a material continuity running through these successions; or does it find them marked by interruptions, discontinuity, and new beginnings?

II. History of Opinion.—In searching for the best judgment of mankind in reference to the question of material continuity in the natural world we ought to cite first the opinions of thinkers antedating the epoch when scientific research had supplied material for a proper demonstration of the doctrine. As all philosophizing on the laws of nature must, of necessity, be grounded on an observation of nature more or less extensive and more or less exact, so the opinions of the ancient philosophers, however slender the basis of their inductions, must be regarded as essentially scientific. Science had not yet been distinguished from philosophy. Theories as to the origin of the world and of organic existence were in vogue some centuries before the Christian era. The hylozoism of the Ionian physicists conceived a primordial matter endowed with generative or transmutative powers through which cosmic forms, successively differentiated, came into being. The speculation presents analogies with the modern one of Buffon. Heraclitus, about 500 B.C., taught the doctrine of a perpetual flux of things, involving ceaseless conflicts between opposites, in the midst of which individual things survive, by superior fitness, the processes of destruction and renovation. A developmental mode of cosmic origins was taught by Anaxagoras of Clazomenæ (Aristotle, Physica, viii, 1) about 500 B.C. He supposed the primitive condition of things to be a heterogeneous commixture of substances without order or motion. This continued an indefinite period, when the mind began to act upon it by instituting a revolving motion at a single point. This propagated itself into the surrounding realm, and led to the separation of the elementary contraries, fire and air, water and earth. The process was repeated in the resulting masses, and thus, by continuous differentiation of likes and unlikes, the actual constitution of the world resulted (Ueberweg, Hist. of Philos., i, 66). The views of Leucippus and Democritus, about 480 B.C., contemplated a gradual evolution of things. They held that immensity was eternally filled with atoms actuated by an eternal motion. These, in disposing themselves according to size, produced collisions which originated vortical motions. These, extending farther and farther, led to the formation of worlds. Such views were extended by Epicurus and the Roman Lucretius; and long afterwards, similar theories, but with more theistic leanings, were entertained by Torricelli, Galileo, and Gassendi. The Greek atomists attributed the lateral motions of the atoms to chance—a conception of the animated nature of atoms which was revived in the monads of Gassendi, Leibnitz, Rosmini, Campanella, Bruno, and Maupertuis; and reproduced in the conscious atoms and molecules of Hückel, Elsberg, and other moderns. The evolution of the cosmic system through the intervention of vortices was undertaken in the well-known theory of Descartes (Principia Philosophiæ, 1644); and Kepler made use, also, of a vortical movement in the matter of a primitive chaos, but invoked the Empedoclean conception of attractions and repulsions for the initiation of the primitive motions. The speculations of Swedenborg (Principia Rerum Naturalium, 1733-34) also posited vortical atomic motions, which expanded to cosinical movements and led to the differentiation of worlds. These various speculations (more fully set forth in Winchell's World Life, or Comparative Geology, pt. iv), opened the way for the better-defined and better-defended nebular cosmogonies of Kant and his successors. The evolution of the earth's physical features by means of fire and water was first undertaken by Leibnitz (Protogæa, etc., 1749, first, in abstract, in Acta Eruditorum, Leipzig, 1683). These eminent thinkers, whom, in this connection, we can only mention, all conceive the earth and the solar system to have originated through the progressive differentiations of a primitive chaotic matter. This is the conception of modern evolution.

Meantime the notion of a material continuity in the successions of the organic world was repeatedly shadowed forth. Empedocles taught the progressive origination of organic forms. Aristotle maintained that immanent divine mind determines in nature a tendency towards improvement and perfection. Lucretius held that the races of men, however diverse, are derived from a common origin, and this through the continual survival of those best fitted for the environment. In later times, Sir Mathew Hale (Primitive Origination of Mankind, 1677, p. 211), enumerates distinctly the results of the struggle for existence in the animal. De Maillet (Telliamed, Amsterdam, 1748), attempted to explain how animal forms undergo transmutation through the influence of changed environment; and Lamarck (Philosophie Zoologique, new ed. 1873) to this influence added the principle of use and disuse, and admitted also an underlying inherent conatus towards beneficial change. These very concise references to the history of opinion may be supplemented by a perusal of the article on "Evolution" in the Encyclopædia Britannica, and by a study of the later works to be mentioned in the progress of this article. Within our restricted limits it will be more profitable to proceed to an outline of the evidences of evolution as at present understood.

III. The Scientific Evidences.—I. Inorganic Evolution. The processes of change in the topographical and hydrographical features of the earth's surface are so familiar that we almost fail to note the fact that these recent transformations are but the last terms of a series of changes which have moulded the globe and imparted to it the features that complete its fitness for the reception of organic populations. But, in fact, the filling and drainage of a pond or lakelet in a human lifetime is the same kind of work as that which spread the deposits of the prairies of the Mississippi, the tchornojom of southern Russia, the pampas of Buenos Ayres, and the steppes of southern Siberia. The alluvial sediment left by a Mississippi overflow of this year is only one of the succession of contributions which, in ages past, have formed the entire delta of the great river. The delta grows; ocean sediments accumulate; the hillsides waste; the mountains wear out; whole shore-lines rise or sink; and the integration of these minute annual changes between vast limits of time shows that all the grander features of our planet have grown into existence by progressive transformations of the original matter. All this is obvious.

So it is obvious that the observed and admitted tenor of events implies an ancient course of change, in times so remote that the conditions had not yet approximated to those revealed in the human period. The pages of geological science enumerate those changes. It is not necessary to assume that all or any of the conclusions of science are exact in reference to the particular events of the geological past; it cannot be doubted, however, that research has successfully shown that the present is the outcome of the past, and that the rocks and waters and gases which we observe are only a transformed portion of the material of the primeval world. The actual earth has passed, by material continuity, from a primitive state, in which all its physical conditions were extremely different from the present. Its mountains, rivers, islands, and seas have progressively come into existence. Its different portions have become more and more differentiated. It was once more homogeneous. It has undergone a real evolution.

But the geognostic data which pass before our observation disclose the primitive world in a process of emergence from a molten state. The world's history has been a history of cooling; and there are numerous indications that the actual records of geology note only the last stages of the world's cooling history. We have not the space at command, nor is it necessary, to enter into an enumeration of the grounds on which science has traced terrestrial evolution backward to a nebular state, and even to a remoter one, in which the matter of the whole solar system is disclosed in a process of common evolution, under the action of the same forces as enter into the transformations of the earth's surface in these times, before human eyes. That our planetary system has had a nebular history is almost unanimously admitted by the science of the present. The chief divergences of opinion concern only some details of that history. This conclusion implies a material continuity through the totality of the changes. Rocks and ocean and atmosphere have grown out of fire-mist and nebula. World-life is a grand spectacle of evolution, and it illustrates continuity and unity of method on a scale of vastness which is deeply impressive. The details of the evolution must be sought in special works (see Winchell, World Life, 1883). The conception of modern nebular theory is itself an evolution. It was first shadowed forth by the Greek and mediæval thinkers already quoted. It began to assume a consistent and modern aspect at the hands of Immanuel Kant (Allgemeine Naturgeschichte und Theorie des Himmels, 1755, and a prize essay, read in 1754 before the Berlin Academy of Science). Sir William Herschel's nebular researches disclosed the apparent existence of enormous patches of chaotic world-stuff, which seemed to undergo a process of differentiation into stars and planets (see sundry memoirs, read before the Royal Society of London between 1783 and 1818, but especially in 1784, 1785, 1791, 1795, 1811, and 1814; also Sir John Herschel, Observations of Nebulae and Clusters of Stars at Slough, 1825-33; Phil.

Trans. Nov. 21, 1833). Laplace, in apparent ignorance of Kant's remarkable speculation, brought the conception of nebular cosmogony to a rigorously scientific statement (Exposition du Système du Monde, 1796); and the general form of his theory enters into the most recent cosmological speculations, though the progress of discovery and of thought has necessitated slight modifications, and has greatly extended the scope of the grand generalization. That which for years was known as "the nebular hypothesis"* has strengthened into a nebular theory, accepted now with almost the same confidence as the Newtonian theory of universal gravitation. This is the verdict of science on a question in its own appropriate field. No dissent from the outside is deserving of consideration; though, of course, exceptions taken by a scientific minority must be honestly examined. For a discussion of alleged difficulties of nebular cosmogony, see Winchell's World Life, p. 153-198.

According to this conclusion, the cosmic realm is the grandest conceivable exemplification of the method of evolution pursued in nature. This evolution guides and determines all the ulterior details of inorganic history. The total inorganic universe, as we know it, is the final outcome of the method of efficient activity revealed in nature, and it has been exerted upon identical portions of matter from the dawn of cosmical history to the present. The question of fact, so far as concerns inorganic nature, can no longer be agitated.

2. Organic Evolution.—This is a greater and more serious question. Does a material continuity run through the succession of organic types which have appeared and disappeared in the history of the world? Are the higher species of the modern world descended from the lower species of the ancient world? Are the diversified types derived from a common ancestry? Is man's bodily organism the outcome of genealogical descent? That these queries must be answered affirmatively seems to be the inevitable conclusion from an enormous amount of modern research. The proofs are numerous and diverse; but we may range them along five lines of argumentation, converging towards the conclusion.

(1.) Ontogeny.—By this we mean the history of the individual. This, beyond all controversy, is an evolution. The succession of changes from the beginning of conscious life to maturity is great, but they are wrought in the same identical being. Still greater ontogenetic transformations may be traced back through

* The "nebular theory" here referred to is based upon the supposition that the universe originally existed in the form of gaseous vapor diffused by intense heat throughout space, and that all the heavenly bodies have resulted from this by rotation and gradual condensation through cooling off. Most or all the phenomena which they exhibit, such as sphericity, orbital and axial revolution, together with earthquakes and volcanoes (as showing the still liquid central mass), are thought to be best explained on this hypothesis, and the fact that nebulae are yet discovered in the starry spaces is held as confirmatory of it. On the other hand, some of these nebulae have already been resolved by powerful telescopes into a mass of separate stars, and the presumption is therefore strong that such is the composition of all of them. Comets are too little known to be of much weight in the argument. Many astronomical facts, however, are decidedly antagonistic to the "nebular" view, such as the want of ascertainable ratio between the magnitudes, distances from the sun and periods of revolution of our own planets and the obliquity of their orbits, some celestial bodies actually moving in the opposite direction. Experiments with the spectrum show that they are not all composed of the same elements. Moreover it is impossible to see, if space were at first filled with incandescent gas, where the excessive heat could have radiated to. For these and other reasons some of the ablest astronomers, Proctor for example, wholly discard the theory as insufficient and disproved. The question is a purely scientific one, of no especial interest to the theologian, so long as the origination of matter, motion, and life, with their laws and properties, be attributed to the divine fiat. But the attempt to identify the processes of the nebular theory of cosmogony with any part of the narrative in the first chapter of Genesis is exegetically preposterous. Whatever therefore may become of that theory, Moses is not responsible for it, and revelation has nothing to do with it.—Ed.

embryonic life to the earliest changes wrought in the fertilized ovum. The unfertilized ovum is itself only a transformed epithelial cell, and consists of yolk, germinal vesicle, and germinal dot. The successive transformations of these elements bring into view, first, the faint outlines of the most fundamental structures, as vertebrae, spinal marrow and brain, heart and digestive structures, then the complete details, and finally the accessory structures belonging to the perfected form. The particulars of the history are too technical to be enumerated in this place. This succession of embryonic transformations in a higher vertebrate reveals a wonderful case of characteristic evolution, beginning in a cell and ending in a complicated animal structure. But the most impressive significance of the history will be mentioned in another connection. For details, see Balfour, A Treatise on Comparative Embryology (1880, vol. i); Kölliker, Entwicklungsgeschichte des Menschen und der höheren Thiere (1876); Foster and Balfour, Elements of Embryology (1874, vol. i, on the chick); Hæckel, Anthropogenie (1874); Packard, Life Histories (1876); and, further, the important works of Hæckel, Owen, Bischoff, Parker, Remak, Agassiz, Clark, Reichert, von Baer, etc.

(2) Morphology.—The forms of animals and plants are said to be similar in proportion to their affinities; but the implications of the statement are seldom appreciated. Among men, family resemblances are understood to signify blood relationship more or less remote. All men of the same race possess so many points of resemblance that every one admits their common descent from the same original parent. All mankind, according to the doctrine of evolution, however diverse in feature or endowment, must have descended from a common primitive human ancestry. But when we speak of two so-called species of the cat family, say the leopard of Africa and the panther of Asia, the popular opinion is that they are primordially distinct; though their resemblances are vastly closer than those of the Bushman and his neighbor, the Cape Englishman, the denial of whose kinship we resent. In fact, these two cats are so closely similar that some zoologists unite them in one species. If pronounced one species, popular opinion would assign them a common descent; if two species, it would hold them primordially distinct. Yet the animals, with all their characteristics, remain the same, whatever view may be taken of the systematic value of their slight distinctions. Now the question of consanguinity is one of fact, not depending on the opinion which may be entertained respecting differences.* Whatever that opinion may be, it continues manifest that we have a better reason for ascribing these cats to a common ancestry than for doing this with a Congo African and a blonde Scandinavian. But suppose we compare the leopard and the tiger—two distinct species by all admissions. The nature of their resemblances is precisely the same as in the other case, and only a little less in degree. To admit the common descent of the leopard and panther is to compel, at the risk of inconsistency, the admission of the common descent of the leopard and the tiger. When we assent to the consanguineous relation of two recognised species the whole proposition, in all its breadth, is conceded, that not only all cats, but all mammals, are derived from some primitive stock; and the divergences existing have been acquired during the progress of the generations. But since mammals present so many gradations towards birds, in egg-laying ornithorhynchus and echidna, towards reptiles in the chelonians, and fishes in the cetaceans, we cannot refuse a common descent to mammals and all other vertebrates. This admission brings the whole animal kingdom with it, for some tunicates and cephalopods would be admitted close kin to some of the lowest vertebrates. Indeed, if we compare any two representatives of the animal kingdom, however divergent, we shall find that they resemble each other in more points than the number of their differences; and the argument for their common descent is of the same nature as in the case of the negro and Scandinavian. This, then, is an indication of the nature of the argument from morphology—and we can only present the indication (for further details, see works on zoology and botany). Some striking animal portraits may be found in Johnson, Natural History (2 vols. 8vo); Cassell, Natural History (1883, 6 vols. 8vo); Knight, Animated Nature (2 vols. 4to); Brehm, Thierleben (9 vols. 8vo). (3) Palæontology.—The doctrine of the descent of all living species from a common remote ancestry implies that in former times the divergences of organic types were less than at present. Such a retral convergence of genealogical lines is precisely what palæontology shows. Within historic times this convergence is almost imperceptible; but as soon as we enter the æons of geology no fact is more conspicuous. To take an example which has been much bruited, the domestic horse, now so widely differentiated from five-toed quadrupeds, we find that in the age immediately preceding the present true horses lived, in which the rudimentary second and fourth digits, or splint bones, of the modern horse were more developed. Further back were horses with the same bones terminated by dangling hooflets. Still further back were horses having these hooflets more developed, and reaching the ground. But these horses had other splint bones, the rudimentary condition of a first digit, and in remoter times these rudiments are found terminated by dangling hooflets, and in still remoter, by functional hoofs. So we trace the succession of equine types back to a four-toed quadruped which, when we consider the corresponding divergences in the teeth, tibiae, and other structures, we should hesitate to group with modern horses, if they were not connected by a gradation so gentle that we find no place to draw the dividing line.* The ancient four-toed horses are connected with a type of five-toed predecessors by a similar kind of relationship. The equine succession leads back, therefore, to a five-toed quadruped. If we take the modern ox or sheep or pig or camel or rhinoceros, we shall be able to trace back similarly a succession which leads towards a primitive five-toed quadruped; and in every case such quadruped approximates the form which stands at the beginning of the equine succession. The details of facts establishing such a generalization are accessible to all readers in the writings of Leidy, Cope, Marsh, Gaudry, Owen, Huxley, and other palæontologists. See Cope's memoirs in reports of surveys under Hayden and Wheeler, and briefer papers in American Naturalist; Marsh, in American Journal of Science (ser. iii); Leidy, U. S. Geol. Survey of the Territories (vol. i); Ancient Fauna of Nebraska (1853); "Extinct Mammalia of Dakota and Nebraska," in the Jour. Acad. Nat. Science (Phila. 1869, vol. vii). In a manner precisely similar the two types of modern birds—"flying" and "running"—may be traced back along two successional lines, to Mesozoic Saurian reptiles. So, progress has been made in tracing lines of succession among invertebrate animals and plants. The facts show what the doctrine of descent requires, a gradual convergence backward of all the lines of organic succession.

But, if these successions are genealogical,† there must have been uninterrupted continuity along each line. The chain connecting the past and the present exhibited no missing links. It is the attempt of paleontology to discover traces of all the links; but obviously the attempt is more difficult than to find all the fragments of a meteorite which exploded in the sky before the Christian era. The work of paleontology is necessarily incomplete; the relics of many types which once contributed to the continuity of the successions worked out remain undiscovered. There are, indeed, many missing links in our knowledge; but the tenor of discovery is such as to imply that no missing links interrupted the continuity of the actual successions. Every year's acquisition of new facts narrows the great gaps, and closes up some of the smaller ones. Some successions are already reconstructed with marvellous completeness; beyond question much more is destined to be accomplished; and we may logically forecast the future state of the evidence and anticipate the conclusion. So we reason from paleontology, and it seems entirely logical to conclude that in the actual life-history of our planet the successions of specific forms were nicely graduated from the rude and generalized types of the remote past to the large-brained and highly specialized types of the present. But this admission does not establish any genetic connections running through the several series. Each species may still have resulted from a special origination. Only the presumptions to be drawn from embryology and morphology suggest genetic descent in paleontology. The facts of paleontology might be as they are, with every species a primordial and persistent form; but the establishment of these graduated successions establishes what must have been the fact on the theory of common descent, and constitutes a link in the chain of argument.

(4.) Variability.—Is it within the economy of nature that organic types shall undergo indefinite secular variation, or maintain essential permanence? Within the historic period few undomesticated species are known to have varied to any marked extent; but all those domesticated have become differentiated, and sometimes to a striking extent. The different breeds of horses, cattle, dogs, fowls, and pigeons differ to such an extent that many of them, but for our knowledge of their common origin, would be set down by any naturalist as distinct species. They are distinct species in the same sense as the jaguar and the ounce and the panther are distinct. The elder Agassiz, though no evolutionist, used to proclaim the different races of men as widely distinct as the different families of monkeys. The suggestion that these divergences have not arisen in a state of nature seems to possess no relevancy, for it is still shown that the aptitude to vary is possessed by nature's organisms. Moreover, the influences brought to bear on these animals through man's treatment are the same in kind as those which sometimes arise from natural operations; they only differ in intensity, and thus accelerate changes for which nature fitted, and perhaps destined, the being. Finally, the changed forms result from the same kind of action of the same physiological forces as are in play in animals uninfluenced by domestication. Only powers like those of digestion, respiration, growth, and adaptation have been employed in the development of these varieties, and these are the functional activities of all animals. It would seem, therefore, that the results of domestication may be fairly appealed to as tests of the permanence of species. (See Darwin, Animals and Plants under Domestication.)

But it appears that great variations sometimes occur among animals and plants in a state of nature. Conflicts between individuals and conflicts with physical conditions are influences continually making their impressions on the organism. These are not causes, but only conditions, of organic change. By the law of adaptation the forces of the organism effect such changes as changed environment demands. The same species of birds, mammals, and molluscs, in their wide range across a continent from east to west, and from north to south, are found to vary according to the latitude, longitude, altitude, and other circumstances. A thorough knowledge of such variations in North America has led to the merging of large numbers of once accepted species (Allen, Proc. Bos. Soc. Nat. Hist. xv, 156; xvi, 276; Bull. Mus. Comp. Zool. ii, No 4, p. 345, Aug. 1876; Amer. Naturalist, Oct. 1876, p. 625; Baird, Mem. National Acad. Jan. 1863; Amer. Jour. Sci. II, xli, Jan., March, and May, 1863; Ridgway, Amer. Jour. Sci. III, iv, 464, v, 416). Similar extreme variability is observed in many invertebrate species, both recent and extinct. Hæckel, in a remarkable work on calcareous sponges, has reached the conclusion that all the forms belong to one species, so gradual are the transitions between the several nominal species (Die Kalkschwämme, 1872, 2 vols. 8vo). Many forms of fossil shells formerly regarded as distinct species have more recently been united, simply because series of intermediate forms became known. Hilgendorf has traced minutely the secular variations of a species of Planorbis (Ueber Planorbis multiformis in Steinheimer Süsawasserkalk), and Hyatt has extended these studies (Proc. Amer. Assoc. 1880, and "Anniversary Mem." in Bost. Soc. Nat. Hist. 1880). Similar work has been done among Paleozoic brachiopods.

The influence of changed environment is sometimes accelerated by human intervention. The axolotl, permanently gill-bearing in its native elevated home, loses its gills when kept near the sea-level, and becomes a land salamander. In Japan certain leeches and planarians have become adapted to land life, and a fish, even (Periophthalmus), frequents the land and seems in a transition state. Certain brine shrimps are reported by Schmaukevitch as undergoing important structural changes in the course of a few generations, when the brine is gradually freshened; and return to the original state as the salinity is again restored (Zeitsch. wiss. Zoologie, xxv, Suppl. i, 187b, p. 103, pl. 6; Annals and Mag. Nat. Hist. March, 1876; ib. xxix, 429-494, 1877. See, also, Contributions to a Knowledge of the Influence of External Conditions of Life upon the Organization of Animals, transl. in Hayden's twelfth Ann. Rep. pt. i, 473-514. But compare Verrill, Proc. Amer. Assoc. 1869, 280; Amer. Jour. Sci. II, xlviii, 244, 480; Packard, Amer. Jour. Sci. III, ii, 108). The domestic cat on the Pribilof Islands becomes thickened, short, losing the tail, and undergoing great change of voice. Certain domestic pigs in Texas are well known to have become solid-hoofed.

Through hybridity, also, probably, result forms divergent from recognised species. Among cultivated plants hybrids are not uncommon. In the wild state the number of reputed hybrid forms may be judged from a glance through any manual of botany. (See also, Hooker, Flora of New Zealand; Candolle, "Étude sur l'Espèce," in the Bibliothèque Univ. de Genève, Nov. 1862; Hooker and Thomson, Flora Indica, vol. i, "Introductory Essay," London, 1855; Gray, Amer. Jour. Sci. II, xxi, 184; Naudin: Hybridity in the Vegetable Kingdom.) Among animals, fertile hybridity, as well as infertile, is pretty well established.* From the hare and the rabbit has arisen a self-sustaining hybrid now extensively employed in Europe for food. Fertile hybrids of the common and Chinese geese are extensively reared in India, as also in England; while several generations of the hybrid from the mallard and muscovy ducks are reported living in Mt. Auburn cemetery (Brewer, Proc. Bos. Soc. Nat. Hist. 21 Jan. 1874). Carl Vogt reports fertile hybrids of the wolf and dog, as also of the goat and sheep, and the latter is confirmed by Hæckel; Von Tschudi and Vogt both report the same of the goat and steinbock, and of the fox and dog. The same is alleged of the buffalo and bison. Without relying on the intervention of hybridity, enough has been observed of the power of organic forms to adapt themselves permanently to the perma-sent changes of the environment to fully establish the conclusion that it is the economy of nature to permit structural variations without limits.* If a full survey of the facts to which we have too briefly alluded justifies the conclusion, as we think it does, then no bar exists to the conclusion that the successions of Palaeontological types have arisen through the continued variation of primitive forms; and that the latter, also, may have arisen through variation and descent from one primordial, life-endowed being. This extreme conclusion, however, is not at all necessary to the proof of a method of evolution in the world, since the genealogical lines may have proceeded from any such number of beginnings as the state of the observed relationships may allow.

(5.) Comparative Embryology.—A careful study of the aspects of the developing embryo of a higher vertebrate, as indicated above, under "Ontogeny," shows that it reaches, in ascending order, a succession of stages which may be enumerated and defined. Now the facts to which we wish to direct attention particularly, constitute a series of significant parallelisms. (a) Ontogenetic parallelism. Research shows that every higher vertebrate passes through the same embryonic stages, and no divergences revealing the characteristics of class, genus, and species make their appearance until the development is well advanced. To a certain stage the human embryo cannot be distinguished from that of a fish; at later stages, it diverges successively from the embryo of reptiles, birds, quadrupeds, and quadrumana. The embryo chick is absolutely undistinguishable from the embryo of man until about the sixth day of incubation. Even invertebrates pursue a course of development closely parallel with that of the earlier stages of the mammalian embryo. (Häckel, Natürliche Schöpfungsgeschichte, xi Vortrag; Anthropogenie, xiii-xix Vorträge; Balfour, British Assoc. Address, 1880, Nature, xxii, 418). (b) Taxonomic parallelism. The succession of aspects presented by the mammalian embryo is identical with that shown in the gradations of living animals. The disappearance of the nucleus of the egg results in a simple cytode, which is paralleled in the living world by Protamöba, the lowest known animal. The new-formed nucleus gives the ovum the character of Amöba. The "morula" mass resulting from the divisions of the yolk is paralleled by Labyrinthula. The spheroid formed of a single layer of cells corresponds to the larvae of Planula. The invagination of this, forming a two-walled spheroid or urn ("gastrula") is paralleled by the larvae of Protasius. The four-layered, elongated form answers to the worm Turbellaria. The fibrous, semi-tubular cranium and gelatinous spine are found adult in the lancelet. The gill-arches of the embryo are permanent in the dog-fish and other sharks. The tailed condition represents the maturity of the reptile. So, without further particulars, it may be broadly asserted that the gradations of living animals are pictured in the successive stages of the mammalian embryo. (See especially Häckel and Balfour, as cited; Baer, Nachrichten über Leben und Schriften, 1865.) The principle has, indeed, found useful application in some cases, in determining the relative rank of animals. (c) Palaeontological parallelism. It was amply shown by the elder Agassiz that the geological succession of organic types presents an order identical with that of the classificatory arrangement of animals. (See especially, Essay on Classification.) This has been more fully illustrated by Häckel (see citations above). Owing, however, to the recognised imperfection of our knowledge of extinct life, this parallelism is less detailed than the others. We know specifically, however, that the primitive form, Eozoön, must have been akin to Amöba and Labyrinthula; that the turbellarian grade was reached in Scolithus, of the Potsdam sandstone; that the shark type was attained in the Upper Silurian and Devonian; the transition from aquatic to terrestrial creatures, in the Amphibia of the Coal Measures, with some advance in the Trias; that reptiles succeeded in the Mesozoic, and birds appeared on their decline; that the lowest mammalian types existed in the Jurassic, and higher types followed through the Tertiary; that the lowest four-handed animals were of Lower Eocene age, and that tailed monkeys, anthropoid apes, and men followed in due order.

The established facts of comparative embryology show a prolonged and detailed succession of organic conceptions literally three times repeated. The doctrine of chances demonstrates that this must result from some mutual dependence and connection among them. The palaeontological succession must result from the order of succession under a law of development as primitively exemplified in the evolution of the individual. In the latter, each successive stage arises demonstrably by continuity with the preceding. The palaeontological series consists of the final terms of many genetically related embryonic series successive in the extinct world. The taxonomic series consists of the final terms of many genetically related embryonic series simultaneous in the actual world. All the terms in each series are therefore materially connected through the embryonic series of which they are several parts.*

IV. Evolution Theories.—While most evolutionists believe that the intellectual and moral elements of man are, equally with the material organism, the outcome of a long process of improvement, Mr. A. R. Wallace holds that both body and mind of man may have arisen in a different manner. (Wallace, Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection, Am. ed. 1871; Address at Glasgow Meeting Brit. Assoc. 1871, Amer. Jour. Sci. III, xiii, 377), while St. George Mivart limits the exception to man's psychic nature (Genesis of Species, 1871; Lessons from Nature, 1876). The majority of evolutionists maintain that man's body is so intimately identified in structure with that of lower animals that it is incredible that it has not participated in the common history. As to his psychic nature, it is held to be identical in many of its manifestations with the natures of brutes, and a strong presumption hence arises that even man's highest powers exist germinally in the lower animals.

The speculations of theorists concern chiefly the causes, conditions, and instrumentalities on which organic evolution depends. De Maillet, in a work whose title (Telliamed, 1748) was an anagram of the author's name, represents that organic beings possess an aptitude for structural changes, and that changes arise when, under changed conditions, the animal puts forth efforts to exercise changed functions. Lamarck (Philosophie Zoologique, 1809; new ed. by Martins, Paris, 1878) maintained that primitive rudiments of the great divisions of the organic kingdoms arose by spontaneous generation; that these were endowed with an inherent tendency to improvement, which becomes effective especially through use and disuse of organs, while the influence of external conditions determines use and disuse. The author of the Vestiges of Creation, 1844, suggested that life first appeared on our planet "in simple germinal vesicles," "produced by some chemo-electrical operation," and that successive steps of advance were effected "through the agency of the ordinary process of generation." The conditions under which this process resulted in an improved being were presented, he thought, in abnormally prolonged gestation. Next, the principle of natural selection was suggested simultaneously by Charles R. Darwin and A. R. Wallace (Jour. Linnean Soc. London, August, 1858; preceded by Wallace's paper in Ann. and Mag. Nat. Hist. September, 1855), and this was most industriously and ably elaborated and illustrated by Darwin in a subsequent series of publications which have constituted an epoch in the history of scientific thought (Origin of Species, 1859; Variations of Animals and Plants, 1868; The Descent of Man, 1871; Expression of the Emotions, 1872; Insectivorous Plants, 1875; Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization, 1876, and numerous other works and memoirs bearing more or less directly on the question of natural selection). This theory is not to be identified with the broad doctrine of evolution, as is commonly done. It assumes that a method of evolution exists in nature, and undertakes to explain by what means and agencies it is carried on. Recognising the fact that a perpetual struggle exists among individuals for existence, and for most favorable conditions of existence, and that the strongest always succeed the best, while the feeblest tend to perish, the obvious and necessary inference is drawn that the species is perpetuated by its best representatives, and thus undergoes continual improvement, precisely as when man intervenes to improve the breeds of domestic animals. Darwin inclined at first to consider this tendency a full explanation of organic progress, but later he admitted other influences, including, like Lamarck, an inherent nisus towards improvement, and the effects of use and disuse of organs. For an ampler exposition of the doctrine, see the article "Darwinism" in the Encyclopædia Americana. That a process of natural selection goes on, and that its tendency is what Darwin claims, all must admit. But there is a growing belief that organic advances and relapses require an appeal also, to other conditions, instrumentalities, and causes. For instance, professor Parsons, of Harvard, inclined to regard specific variation as the result of extraordinary births (Amer. Jour. Science, July, 1860, II, xxx, 1), and soon afterwards Richard Owen advanced an almost identical idea (Anat. of Vertebrates, chap. xl; Amer. Jour. Science, II, xlvii, 33). Galton's theory seems to be the same (Hereditary Genius, 1869, p. 363-383). Kölliker varied this conception by suggesting heterogeneous generation through agamic and parthenogenic reproduction—a profound misapprehension of proper generation (Ueber die Darwin'sche Schöpfungsgeschichte, 1864). Huxley, while accepting Darwinism for what it is worth, has indicated some qualifications and additions (Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews, 1862; On the Origin of Species, 1863; Critiques and Addresses, 1869, etc.). He holds particularly that nature sometimes makes considerable jumps; that the process of natural selection goes on among the molecules of the organism, and that there exists an inherent tendency of organization to vary. The latter point he emphasizes. Alpheus Hyatt, in 1868, pointed out that degradational metamorphoses in the old age of the individual, or the type, could not rationally be referred to natural selection, which acts in the contrary direction. An internal law fixes the duration of the species as of the individual. Specific advance he attributes to habitual acceleration of embryonic development. In the advanced age of species the reverse takes place, and thus the decline of a species reproduces, in inverted order, the succession of types which appeared during the rise of the species (Mem. Boston Soc. Nat. Hist. 1867, i, pt. 2; Amer. Naturalist, June, 1870, iv, 230; Fossil Cephalopods, Museum Comparatur Zoöl. Cambridge, 1872). Professor E. D. Cope varied this conception by attributing the recession of organic types to the influence of retarded development (Synopsis of Cyprinidae of Penn. 1866; "Origin of Genera," in the Proc. Acad. Nat. Science, Phila. October, 1868; "The Hypothesis of Evolution," in Lipp. Mag. 1870, and University Series, New Haven, 1873; "The Method of Creation of Organic Types," in the Proc. Acad. Nat. Science, Phila. 1871, and other papers). Probably the suggestions based on rate and duration of embryonic changes are all available. At the same time it is quite conceivable that the principle of natural selection obtains in embryonic life, both in conditions immediately present with the embryo and those external conditions which produce them—the circumstances surrounding the female parent, or even the male. This becomes intelligible on the basis of some such theory as Spencer's "Physiological Units," Darwin's "Pangenesis," Elsberg's "Plastidule Hypothesis" (Proc. Amer. Assoc. 1874, 1876), Hæckel's "Perigenesis" (Die Perigenesis, 1876; Die heutige Entwicklungslehre, etc., 1879; Nature, Oct. 4, 1877, and Pop. Sci. Monthly Suppl.), or Brooks' "Law of Heredity" (New York, 1883). Still, it must be admitted that in some cases widely variant forms, as in the Ancon breed of sheep, arise suddenly where, to all appearance, some other condition not yet known determines the divergence. We think also it must be finally admitted that the organism is affected by an implanted destination or law, which bends it constantly towards conformity to the environment, and employs the several agencies mentioned for the accomplishment of this result. In the history of the world the environment has undergone a progressive differentiation and improvement. Organization has advanced correspondingly. When the environment remains persistent, or deteriorates, organic forms persist or even deteriorate to a corresponding extent. If, however, no existing theory of organic evolution proves final, the fact of organic evolution remains highly probable.

*We submit that these very limited variations do not prove a capacity for unlimited variation.—En.

*The force of this argument, however, seems to us to be wholly invalidated by two facts: 1. No instance of the propagation of one species of animal by parents of another, has been historically found; 2. The embryo in every instance stops at the precise point prescribed by its specific character; and becomes either an abortion or a monster if it fails to reach it.—En.

V. Limitations of the Doctrine.—We have stated, preliminarily, that the question of evolution is simply one of fact. In ascertaining whether a method of evolution is a fact in the natural world, we are not concerned in anything outside of this simple inquiry. It is of no import whether the result is effectuated by necessity or free-will, by inherent forces, by implanted forces or external forces, by material forces or spiritual forces, by mediate action or immediate action. We are not even concerned in determining what conditions are favorable, what instrumentalities are employed, whether the action is prenatal or postnatal, whether through embryonic development, prolonged, accelerated, or retarded. All these questions are interesting—some of them may be important. The human mind cannot be restrained from investigating them. But it is important to understand clearly that a verdict on any one of these questions does not bear on the antecedent question of fact. If the fact exists, different persons may explain and interpret it differently. The explanation falls within the domain of science; the interpretation touches philosophy and theism. Scientific explanations are already various—each probably partial. Interpretations may be materialistic or spiritualistic—that will depend on the antecedent philosophy of the thinker. They may be theistic or atheistic—that depends on the predisposition of the interpreter. Philosophic and theological opinions must rest on other grounds. The fact of a method of evolution in the world is not responsible for them.

More categorically, we may state: (1) The fact of evolution implies nothing in respect to causation. It throws no light on secondary cause or first cause. It does not imply the evolution of life from inorganic matter. It knows nothing of beginnings; it discovers only a method of continuance; the beginning may have been a creation by fiat. It knows nothing of the cause or causes of continuance; it may be by immanent divine agency. (2) There is no assumption of inherent forces or necessary activities, or eternal matter. It is allowable to deny inherent forces and necessary actions, and hold to the creation of matter and force, and even to the identification of natural force with the divine volition. (3) There is no implication concerning the nature or origin of mind. It may arise with each distinct organism; it may arise only in the human organism. (4) Nothing is implied concerning the interpretation of the activities going forward in the organism. We are at liberty to affirm that they imply choice, selection, intelligence. We are at full liberty to trace intelligence in the methods of the inorganic world, or to affirm that the all-embracing method of evolution is itself the highest possible manifestation of intelligence and unity. (5) We may also, if we please, maintain that the method of the world and the collocations of the world imply determination and motive. Thus, in brief, the limitations of the essential doctrine of evolution are such that, in spite of the speculative views of some evolutionists, the full acceptance of the doctrine does not conflict with any fundamental conception of Christian theology.

A monthly journal of highest ability, devoted to evolution, is Kosmos, Stuttgart. (A. W.)

EVOVÆ is an artificial word made out of the vowels in the words "æculorum Amen," which occur at the end of the Gloria Patri. Its object was to serve as a kind of memoria technica to enable singers to render the several Gregorian chants properly; each letter in evovæ standing for the syllable from which it is extracted. It must be borne in mind that psalms, etc., were sung under antiphons, and that the music of the antiphon, being constructed in a particular "mode" or "scale," such as Dorian, Phrygian, and the like, the chant or "tone" ("tune") to the psalm, being not intended to represent a full stop or close, might (and usually did) not end on the final belonging to the mode, leaving that for the concluding antiphon: thus different forms of the same mode or tone would arise, and these were called evovæ, and sometimes by other names. This only applies to the latter half (cadence) of the chant, as in the "mediation" (at the middle of the verse of a psalm) scarcely any variety was admitted, except such as arose from local use. Thus, in the various works on the subject, and in service books, varieties of endings are to be found of greater or less antiquity. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Evremond (Lat. Ebrmundus), Saint, was born at Bayeux of a noble family; married a high-born lady, but suddenly devoted himself to a monastic life in Fontenay; afterwards became abbot of Mont Mairé, in the diocese of Sees, and died about A.D. 720 (others say before 584). He is commemorated June 10. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.; Guérin, Les Petits Bollandistes, vi, 553.

Evroul (Lat. Ebrulfus). (1) Saint, was brought up at the court of Childebert I and his successor, was noted for his learning and wealth, but renounced all for a monk's life, and founded the monastery of St. Evroul d'Ouche (Uticus), in the diocese of Lisieux (Neustria), where he died in 596. He is commemorated Dec. 29. (2) The eighteenth bishop of Noyon and Tournay, died A.D. 621 (according to others, before 575). (3) Saint, is said to have been abbot of the monastery of St. Fuscien-aux-Bois, near Amiens, probably near the close of the 6th century. He is commemorated July 26.

Ewald, Christian Ferdinand, an Episcopal minister and famous missionary among the Jews, was born of Jewish parentage, Sept. 14, 1802, at Maroldsweisach, near Bamberg. At the age of twenty he joined the Christian Church, studied at Basle, and was in 1826 licensed to preach the gospel. In 1829 he was called to London, and having duly prepared for missionary work, he connected himself in 1832 with the London Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Jews. In 1836 he was ordained by the bishop of London, having been previously in Lutheran orders. There are but few of the society's missionaries whose sphere of labor has been so lengthened in duration or so wide in extent. For nearly ten years he labored with great devotedness in one of the most trying portions of the Jewish mission field—the north coast of Africa—at Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, and other large towns. In 1839 he left Tunis for a time and proceeded to Leghorn, and in 1841 finally left Tunis to accompany the first Anglican bishop, Dr. Alexander, to Jerusalem as his chaplain, and for some ten years was earnestly engaged in the Holy City. An account of the work is given in his Missionary Labors in the City of Jerusalem. In 1851 ill-health compelled him to leave the East, and, being appointed principal of the home mission, he took up his abode in London. In 1872 a general debility of constitution rendered it necessary for him to resign his position. He died August 9, 1874. The University of Erlangen, of which Ewald was a graduate, on the publication of his German translation of the Talmudic treatise Aboda Sarah, in 1856, conferred upon him de religione Christiana inter barbaras gentes propaganda optime merito, linguarum orientalium gnarissimo, the diploma of a doctor in philosophy, and the archbishop of Canterbury conferred upon him, in 1872, the degree of bachelor of divinity, as stated in the diploma, in consideration "of his uprightness of life, sound doctrine, and purity of morals; of his proficiency in the study of divinity, of Hebrew and Oriental languages and literature; and also of his missionary labors and eminent services in the promotion of Christianity among the Jews." (B. P.)

Ewald, Georg Heinrich August, one of the most learned Orientalists of our century, was born at Göttingen, Nov. 16, 1803. In 1820 he entered the university of his native city, and three years later received the degree of doctor of philosophy. After teaching for some time at the Wolfenbüttel gymnasium, he returned in 1824 to Göttingen, became repentant at the university, and in 1827 was made professor. In 1837 he was expelled from his position for having signed, with six other professors, a protest against the revocation of the liberal constitution of 1833, which Ernest Augustus, king of Hanover, effected. In 1829 and 1836 he had visited France and Italy, and now (in 1838) he visited England. In the same year he was appointed professor at Tübingen, where he remained for ten years. The bitter feuds with his colleagues made his stay there very unpleasant, and it was a relief when, in 1848, he was recalled to Göttingen. In 1867 he refused to take the oath of allegiance to the king of Prussia, and this refusal was punished by his exclusion from the faculty of philosophy, although he was still allowed his salary and the privilege of lecturing. This latter privilege was withdrawn in 1868, on account of utterances against the king. He died of heart disease, May 4, 1875. Ewald's writings have found about as many admirers abroad as at home. The value of much of his learning is seriously impaired by his dogmatic spirit. His independence often degenerates into self-conceit. His violent rationalism is conspicuous. His literary activity began in 1823, with the Composition der Genesis Kritisch untersucht, and only closed with an autobiography written during the last months of his life, which has not been published. Of his many writings we mention, De Metris Carminum Arabicorum (Brunswick, 1825);—Das Hohelied Salomo's übersetzt und erklärt (1826; 8d ed. 1866);—Libri Wakedii de Mesopotamiae Expugnata Historia pars (1827);—Kritische Grammatik der Hebr. Sprache (eod.), subsequently enlarged, and Ausführliches Lehrbuch der Hebr. Sprache des Alten Testaments (1844; 8th ed. 1870; Engl. transl. by Nicholson, Lond. 1836; of the syntax alone, from 8th ed. by Kennedy, Edinb. 1879);—Hebräische Sprachlehre für Anfänger (1842; Engl. transl. from 8d ed. by Smith, Lond. 1870);—Abhandlungen zur orientalischen und biblischen Literatur (1832);—Grammatica Critica Ling. Arab. (1831-33, 2 vols.);—Die poetischen Bücher des Alten Bundes (1835-39; 3d ed. 1868; Engl. transl. Lond. 1880 sq.);—Propheten des Alten Bundes (1840, 1841; 2d ed. 1867, 1867, 3 vols.; Engl. transl. Lond. 1876-81, 5 vols.);—Geschichte des Volkes Israel (1843-59, 7 vols.; 8d ed. 1868; Engl. transl. corresponding to vol. i-iv);—History of Israel (Lond. 1867-74, 5 vols.);—Die Alterthümer des Volkes Israel (1848; Engl. transl. Antiquities of Israel, Lond. 1876);—Die drei ersten Evangelien übersetzt und erklärt (1850);—Das äthiopische Buch Henokh (1854);—Das vierte Buch Ezra (1860);—Die Sendschreiben des Apostels Paulus übersetzt und erklärt (1857);—Die Johanneischen Schriften (1861, 1862);—Die Bücher des Neuen Testaments (1870, 1871);—Die Theologie des Alten und Neuen Bundes (1870-75, 4 vols.);—Jahrbücher der biblischen Wissenschaft, i-xi, 1848-61, containing a number of essays which are still very valuable. In connection with L. Dukes he published, Beiträge zur Geschichte der ältesten Auslegung des Spracherklärung des Alten Test. (1844, 3 vols.). See Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encyklop. a. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopädie des Sciences Religieuses, a. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 341-344; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 261; Steinschneider, *Bibl. Ewe Version of the Scriptures. The Ewe or Ewegbe (also called Eipe, Aijigbe, Krepe, Dahomey) language is spoken on the west coast of Africa, at and beyond the river Volta. The Rev. B. Schlegel, of the Bremen Missionary Society, began to translate the Holy Scriptures into this language in the year 1858, and the Bremen Bible Society undertook the printing of the same. In 1861 the four gospels were published. In 1874 the British and Foreign Bible Society published, at the request of the Bremen mission, St. Paul's epistles, which were translated by the Rev. Mr. Ulerz, and in 1878 the entire New Test. was issued from the press. Several books of the Old Test. have also been published, as Exodus, Joshua to Ruth, and Samuel. Up to March 31, 1884, there were distributed 4500 portions of the Old Test. and 3000 portions of the New Test. For the study of the language, see Schlegel, Schlüssel zur Ewe Sprache (Stuttgart, 1857). (B. P.)

Ewh, George, a Lutheran minister, was born in 1828, at Kirchberg, in Rhenish Prussia. He studied theology at Bonn and Berlin, came to America in 1866, and was appointed pastor of the Lutheran Church (St. Matthew's) at Jersey City, N. J., where he died, April 7, 1881. (B. P.)

Ewing, Alexander, D.C.L., a Scotch bishop, was born in Aberdeen, March 25, 1814. He was educated at a private school in Chelsea and at the University of Edinburgh, but, owing to his delicate health and ample inheritance, he did not adopt a profession on leaving school. He began preparation for the ministry in 1836, and entered into priest's orders in 1841, when he took charge of the Episcopal congregation at Forres. He remained in this position until 1846, when he was elected first bishop of the newly restored diocese of Argyll and the Isles, the duties of which office he discharged till his death, May 22, 1873. His theological views were communicated to the world in the form of letters to the newspapers, pamphlets, special sermons, essays contributed to the series of Present Day Papers, of which he was the editor, and a volume of sermons entitled Revelation considered as Light. He also published the Cathedral or Abbey Church of Iona (1865). See Memoir, by Ross (1877); Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), a. v.

Ewing, Greville, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was born in Edinburgh in 1767; educated at the high-school; apprenticed to an engraver, but when of age studied theology at Edinburgh University; became tutor to the family of Mr. Lockhart, of Castle Hill; was licensed to preach Sept. 5, 1792, and his talents made him popular from the first. He was nominated by the trustees as minister of lady Glenorchy's chapel, Edinburgh, in June, 1792, and ordained colleague in October, 1793. Aided by Robert Haldane, Esq., he proposed to organize a select company for propagating the gospel in Bengal, but the East India Company was hostile to the movement. He established the Missionary Magazine for Scotland, the first religious periodical in that country. He resigned his charge, Dec. 26, 1798; became minister to a large congregation at the Tabernacle, Glasgow, in May, 1799, under the auspices of Mr. Haldane, and presided over a seminary for training pious young men for the ministry for two and a half years with considerable success. Differences having arisen with Mr. Haldane, he resigned, and in 1811 became senior tutor to a new theological seminary belonging to the Congregational Union, and continued to discharge the duties with praiseworthy fidelity till obliged by debility to resign. He died Aug. 2, 1841. He published five single Sermons; several controversial works; A Greek Grammar, and Greek and English Scripture Lexicon (Edinb. 1802, 1812);—Facts and Documents respecting the Connections between Robert Haldane and Greville Ewing (1809);—An Essay on Baptism (1823);—Memoir of Barbara Ewing (1829), with many smaller works. Excellentia. See GAONS.

Exclusion, an ecclesiastical sentence among the Jews, whereby a person was separated or cut off from his people. See BAN; EXCOMMUNICATION.

Exclusiva, in ecclesiastical law, means the right, claimed by Austria, France, and Spain, to exclude each one candidate at a papal election. This right has never been formally acknowledged by the curia, but the claim has always, since the 15th century, been complied with by the conclave, although the Jesuits, shortly before the death of Pius IX, asserted that this right should no more be granted, since these states were no longer Catholic, in the old sense of the word, but tolerant rather. See Häberlin, Römisches Conclave (Halle, 1769), p. 152 sq.; Ueber die Rechte der Regierungen beim Conclave (Munich, 1872); Bonghi, Pio IX e il Papa Futuro (Milan, 1877), p. 47-58; Mejer, in Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v. (B. P.)

Exedra, a name sometimes given by St. Augustine to the ambo (q. v.). It is often used in ancient writers as synonymous with the apsis (q. v.).

Existeria, sacrifices offered by the ancient Greek generals before setting out on any warlike expedition. They were of the nature of divination, to ascertain whether the enterprise was to be successful or disastrous.

Exocatacolli, a name given to several officers of the Church at Constantinople, high in authority, and in public assemblies taking precedence of the bishops. Originally they were priests, but afterwards only deacons. The college of the exocatacolli corresponded to the college of cardinals (q. v.) at Rome.

Exocionites (Ἐξωνίται), a name applied to the Arians (q. v.) of the 4th century, who, when expelled from Constantinople by Theodosius the Great, retired to a place outside the city. The name occurs in the records of Justinian, and frequently in the chronicle of Alexandria.

Exoteric. See ESOTERIC.

Exothoumēni (ἐξωθούμενοι), the first of the four classes of catechumens (q. v.) in the early Church. They were instructed privately outside the Church, and prevented from entering into the Church until they were more fully enlightened.

Expectatives, a term employed in the 14th century, when the French pontiffs residing at Avignon assumed to themselves the power of conferring all sacred offices, by which means they raised immense sums of money, calling forth the bitterest complaints from all the nations of Europe. Expectatives were abolished by the Council of Constance, March 25, 1438. See EXPECTANCY.

Expilly, LOUIS ALEXANDRE, a French prelate, was born Feb. 24, 1742, at Brest. He studied at Paris, and was made bachelor of divinity there; was nominated pastor of St. Martin of Morlaix; in 1789 became deputy of the states-general; was consecrated bishop of the department of Finistère, Feb. 24, 1791, and shared the fate of twenty-five of his colleagues, who were beheaded, May 22, 1794, for having taken an appeal to the department of the West against the national convention. See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Exsufflation, a part of the ceremony of baptism in the ancient Christian Church, in which the candidate stood with his hands stretched out towards the West, and struck them together; then he proceeded thrice to exsufflate or spit, in defiance of Satan. See BAPTISM.

Extispices (Lat. exta, entrails, and specio, to look), a name sometimes given to the ancient haruspices (q. v.), because it was their duty carefully to examine the entrails of the victims offered in sacrifice.

Exucontians (Ἐξουκόντιοι), a name given to the class of Arians called Aëtians (q. v.), because they affirmed that the Son of God might be called God and the Word of God, but only in a sense consistent with his having been brought forth from non-existence. See ARIANS; SEMI-ARIANS.

Eybenschütz, JONATHAN, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Cracow in 1690. He was not only a very learned Talmudist, but especially a follower of the cabalistic system of the pseudo-Messiah Chayon, whom he had met at Prague in 1726. At the age of twenty-one Eybenschütz was president of a rabbinical college at Cracow, which soon became very famous. From year to year the number of his pupils increased, and he was soon recognised as a great authority. His position shielded him from the ban which was to be pronounced upon the followers of Sabbathai Zewi (q. v.) and Chayon. To avoid all suspicion, Eybenschütz himself pronounced the ban upon all the followers of the pseudo-Messiah, and in 1728 the congregation of Prague appointed him preacher. In 1740 he accepted a call to Metz, and in 1750 he went to Altona. It seemed as if with him an evil spirit had entered that place, which divided the German and the Polish Jews. When Eybenschütz came there, the famous Jacob Emden (q. v.) lived there, and, like his father, who had proscribed Chayon and his followers, regarded himself as the keeper of orthodoxy. An opportunity was soon offered to Emden whereby his vanity and his desire for heresy-hunting should be satisfied. At the time when Eybenschütz came to Altona there was an epidemic in that city. Since every rabbi was regarded as a sort of magician, the new-comer was expected to put a stop to the disease. Eybenschütz prepared amulets, which he distributed among the people. For curiosity's sake one was opened, and lo! in it was written: "O thou God of Israel, who dwellest in the beauty of thy power, send down salvation to this person through the merit of thy servant Sabbathai Zewi, in order that thy name, and the name of the Messiah Sabbathai Zewi, may be hallowed in the world." This amulet came into the hands of Emden. Eybenschütz denied all connection with the adherents of Sabbathai, and as he had already gained a great influence, it was believed; at least, everybody kept quiet. But Emden was not quiet, and finally the ban was pronounced against Eybenschütz. The matter was brought before the king, Frederic V of Denmark, who decided in favor of Emden. Eybenschütz lost his position as rabbi of the congregation. As his best friends left him, in his perplexity he finally went to a former pupil of his, Moses Gerson Kohen, who after his baptism had taken the name of Karl Anton (q. v.). Anton wrote an apology in behalf of his teacher, which he dedicated to the king of Denmark. This, and other influences, had at last such effect that the whole affair was dropped, and Eybenschütz was elected anew as rabbi of the congregation. The Jewish community, however, became divided, and this division lasted as long as both Eybenschütz and Emden were alive. Eybenschütz died in 1764, and was followed twelve years later by his opponent Emden. Both are buried in the Jewish cemetery of Altona. Eybenschütz wrote, אורח חיים, sermons and comments (Hamburg, 1766): אגרות, homiletical comments upon the Lamentations (ibid. 1765), etc. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 261 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico, p. 96 (Germ. transl.); Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, x, 385 sq., note 7, p. liv; Jost, *Gesch. d. Juden. u. s. Eyck, HUBERT and JOHN VAN, two brothers, were Flemish painters, and natives of the small town of Maeseyck, on the river Maas. Hubert was probably born in 1866, and John in 1370. They established themselves at Bruges. They are said by some writers to have been the discoverers of oil painting. They generally painted in concert until the death of Hubert. Their most important work was an altar-piece with folding-doors, painted for Jodocus Vyts, who placed it in the Church of St. Bavon, at Ghent. The principal picture in this curious production represents the Adoration of the Lamb, as described by St. John in the Revelation. On one of the folding-doors is represented Adam and Eve, and on the other St. Cecilia. In the sacristy of the cathedral at Bruges is preserved a pictare painted by John in 1436, representing the Virgin and Infant, with St. George, St. Donatus, and other saints. Hubert died Sept. 18, 1429, and John in July, 1440. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Eyckens, Peter, an eminent Flemish historical painter, was born at Antwerp in 1599, and was chosen director of the academy at Antwerp. His principal works in that city are, The Last Supper, in the Church of St. Andrew; St. Catherine Disputing with the Pagans, in the cathedral; and St. John Preaching in the Wilderness, in the Church of the Convent called Bogaerde. At Mechlin, in the Church of the Jesuits, were two of his most admired works. He died in 1649. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Eyre, William, an English Calvinistic divine, was born in Wiltshire about 1613, and entered the University of Oxford in 1629. In 1654 he was minister of St. Edmund's Church, Salisbury, and was ejected for non-conformity in 1662. He died in 1670. He published, Epistola ad Vaserium de Textus Hebraici Variantibus Lectionibus (1652):—The True Justification of a Sinner Explained (1654); in Latin, under the title of Vindicia Justificationis Gratuita (cod.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Eytel, Friedrich Hermann, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Feb. 11, 1819, at Easingen. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1856 pastor at Höfingen, in 1861 at Maichingen, where he died, April 21, 1869. He published Psalter in Modernem Gewande (Stuttgart, 1862; 2d ed. 1866). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vii, 306. (B. P.)

Ezan, a hymn used in Mohammedan countries by the Muezzin (q. v.), or public crier, who chants it from the minarets of the mosques in a loud, deep-toned voice, summoning the people to their devotions. The proclamation is as follows: God is great, four times repeated; I bear witness that there is no god but God, twice repeated; I bear witness that Mohammed is the prophet of God, twice repeated; Come to the temple of salvation, twice repeated; God is great, God is most great; there is no God but God, and Mohammed is his prophet. At the morning prayer the muezzin must add, Prayer is better than sleep, twice repeated.

Ezekiel, a Jewish Greek writer, who lived a century before Christ, is the author of a dramatic poem after the manner of Euripides, on the Deliverance of Israel from Egypt, entitled ἱεραγωγία. Fragments of this poem are preserved in the Preparatio Evangelica of Eusebius (ix, 28, 29), and in the Stromata of Clement of Alexandria (i, 23, p. 414). They are given by Delitzsch in his Zur Geschichte der jüdischen Poesie (Leipzig, 1836), p. 211–219. The best edition of them, with translation and notes, is by Philippson (Berlin, 1830), entitled Ἐξέκλιον τοῦ τῶν Ἰουδαίων τραγωιδίων ποιήτρον ἱεραγωγία, etc. See Etheridge, Introduction to Hebrew Literature, p. 114; Edersheim, History of the Jewish Nation, p. 563 sq.; Herzfeld, Gesch. des Volkes Israel, ii, 491, 517–519, 579 (Leipzig, 1863); Fürst, *Bibl. Ezengatsi, George (Armen. Keore), an Armenian doctor, was born about 1338. He was a disciple of the celebrated John Orodetsi, and a friend of Gregory Dathervatsi. He was one of the greatest theologians of his century, and professor in a monastery near Ezen-ga. He wrote, Instructions how to Administer the Sacraments of Marriage and Baptism:—Explications of the Homilies of St. Gregory Nazianzen:—A Commentary on the Apocalypse:—fourteen Sermons. There is also attributed to him a Commentary on Isaiah. All these works remain in MS. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ezengatsi, John (Armen. Hovan), surnamed Blis and Torzoreti, the last of the classical writers and fathers of the Armenian Church, studied under Parzer-petsi, became vastabed (priest and doctor), and retired to the monastery of Torzor. In 1281 he travelled through Armenia, and went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. On his return he was made patriarch and head of the school of Hromgla. Soon after he retired to a monastery on Mt. Sebouh, and wrote his Treatise on Grammar. In 1284 he went to Tiflis, and gained great celebrity as a preacher. He died in 1326, leaving numerous other works, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Eznik (or Esnag), GOGHPATS (i. e. native of Kolp), a theologian, and one of the best writers of Armenia, was born in 397. He was well versed in the Syriac and Greek languages, so that his masters, the patriarchs Isaac and Mesrob, gave him a mission to Edessa in 425, then to Constantinople, to collect and translate into Armenian the works of the Church fathers. Eznik became still later bishop of the province of Parcrevant and of the country of the Arsharounikhi. In 449 he attended the national council of Ardachad, which refused to embrace the religion of Zoroaster. Eznik died about 478, leaving, besides some homilies and short treatises, a work entitled The Destruction of False Doctrines (first published in the original Armenian at Smyrna, in 1762; and in a better form in the Collection of Armenian Classics, Venice, 1826; translated into French by Vaillant de Percival, Paris, 1833). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Ezra, Abraham ibn—See ABEN-EZRA.

Ezra, Moses ibn—ben Jacob, a Jewish writer, was born about 1070, and died about 1189. He is considered one of the most finished of Hebrew poets, but is equally celebrated as a Talmudist and professor of Greek philosophy. Although, like his brother poets, he excelled in sacred song, he also tuned his lyre as an inhabitant of the West, and sang at times of love, but more often in praise of the beauties of nature, which in later times was even acknowledged by Alexander von Humboldt (Cosmos, iii, p. 119), who praised his sublime description of natural scenery. His works are remarkable not only for the intrinsic excellence of the matter, but also for the purity, sweetness, and æsthetic grace of their style. His selichoth, or penitential hymns, are greatly esteemed by the Jews, who give to Ibn-Ezra the epithet of has-salach, or the "selichoth poet," par excellence. He wrote hymns for festival and other occasions, entitled זמירות ורחמינים, in the Sephardim ritual:—Diwan R. M. ben-Ezra, a collection of poems, lyrical, occasional, and devotional:—Sefer ha-tarshish, or Sefer Anak, ספר חזקוני; ספר חזקוני; this poem is called Tarshish, from the number of its stanzas—1210:—Sefer Arugath Hab-bosem, ספר ערנות הבושם, the "Garden of Spices," on the philosophy of religion, after the manner of Saadiah's Emunoth, in seven chapters, fragments of which have been published by Dukes, after a Hamburg MS. in Zion ii, p. 117 (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1842, 1848):—Tokacha, תוכחה, a penitential hymn, reprinted by Asker, in his Book of Life, with an English translation (Lond. 1849). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 267 sq.; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 11; Grätz, Geschichte der Juden, vi, 123 sq.; Delitzsch, *Zur Geschichte der jüd. Faber, Ægidius, a Carmelite monk, who died at Brussels in 1506, is the author of, De Origine Religionum: — De Testamento Christi in Cruce: — Commentarii in Ezechielia, Epistolæ Pauli, Librum Ruth et Job. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Faber, Frederick William, D.D., an English clergyman and hymn-writer, was born at Calverley, Yorkshire, June 28, 1814. He was educated at Harrow and the University of Oxford, where he became a fellow of University College in 1837. About this time he gave up his Calvinistic views and became an enthusiastic admirer and follower of John H. Newman. In 1841 he travelled on the Continent, and on his return published Sights and Thoughts in Foreign Churches and among Foreign Peoples, a work of great merit. He now became rector of Elton, in Huntingdonshire, but soon proceeded again to the Continent to study the methods followed by the Roman Catholic Church. Returning to Elton he devoted himself earnestly to his parish, but was constrained to adopt the Romish faith in 1845. On leaving Elton his parishioners sobbed out, "God bless you, Mr. Faber, wherever you go." He founded a religious community at Birmingham, called Wilfridians, after the name Wilfrid, which Faber assumed. The community was ultimately merged in the oratory of St. Philip Neri, of which father Newman was the head; and in 1849 a branch of the oratory was established in London, over which Faber presided until his death, Sept. 26, 1863. He was a voluminous writer, although it is mainly as a hymn-writer that he will be known in the future. Among his finest compositions of this class are, The Greatness of God; The Will of God; The Eternal Father; The God of my Childhood; The Pylims of the Night; The Shadow of the Rock. Besides the work above mentioned, he published, previous to his conversion to Romanism, Tracts on the Church and the Prayer-Book (1839):—A Sermon on Education (1840):—The Cherwell Water-Lily and other Poems (1840):—The Styrian Lake, etc. (1842):—Sir Lancelot, a poem (1844):—The Rosary, etc. (1845), and several other papers. After his conversion he published, Catholic Hymns:—Essay on Beatification and Canonization (1848):—The Spirit and Genius of St. Philip Neri (1850):—Catholic Home Missions (1851):—All for Jesus (1854):—Growth in Holiness (1855):—The Blessed Sacrament (1856):—The Creator and the Creature (1857):—The Foot of the Cross, or Sorrows of Mary (1858):—Spiritual Conferences (1859), and other works. The only complete edition of his Hymns is the one published by Richardson & Son in 1861 (2d ed. 1871). His Notes on Doctrinal and Spiritual Subjects were edited by father Bowden, and issued after Faber's death. See his Life and Letters, by father Bowden; Early Life, by his brother; Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Faber, Georg, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Offenheim, in Franconia, in 1579, and studied at Wittenberg. In 1606 he was preacher at Lichtenau, in 1616 at Nürnberg, where he died, July 16, 1634. He is the author of, Institutiones Grammaticæ Hebraicæ (Nürnberg, 1626):—Lectiones Hebr. Institutio (Anspach, 1608). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 265; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, s. v. (B. P.)

Faber, Johann Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, March 8, 1717. He studied at Tübingen, and was appointed professor there in 1748. In 1767 he was made member of consistory and abbot of Alpirsbach. He died at Stuttgart, March 18, 1779, leaving, De Naturalismo Morali (Tübingen, 1752):—De Anima Legum (ibid.):—De Principe Christianismo (ibid. 1753):—De Miraculis Christi (ibid.

1764):—Meletema Philosophicum (ibid. 1765):—De Diversis Fontibus Tolerantia (ibid. 1769):—Theologia Dogmatica (Stuttgart, 1780). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 392 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 685; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Faber, Matthias, a Jesuit, was born Feb. 24, 1587, at Altomünster, in Bavaria. In 1607 he entered the German College at Rome, received holy orders there, and returned to Germany in 1611. In 1637 he went to Vienna and joined the Jesuits, and died at Tyrnau, in Hungary, in 1653. He is the author of a homiletical work entitled, Concionum Opus Tripartitum, which has often been published (latest ed. Ratisbon, 1879). Besides he wrote, Rerum Naturæ Descriptio (Dillingen, 1607). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Literarischer Handweiser für das Katholische Deutschland, 1880, No. 266. (B. P.)

Faber, Philip, a Franciscan, and professor of theology at Padua, where he died, Aug. 28, 1680, is the author of, De Primatu Petri et Pontificis Romani:—De Censuris Ecclesiasticis:—De Prædestinatione. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 460. (B. P.)

Fabiola, a Roman lady of an illustrious family. Being married first to a man who became lost in debauchery, she divorced herself from him, and being then but little acquainted with the commands of the gospel, she married a second husband of the same sort as the first. For this act she was excluded from the communion of the Church, to which she eventually returned, after public penitence, with extreme humility. She spent all her fortune for the relief of the poor, and for the establishment of a large hospital at Rome. In A.D. 395 she went to Palestine, and visited Jerome at Bethlehem. The invasion of the Huns into Palestine forced her to leave that country, and she returned to Italy, where she continued to consecrate her life to continual exercises of piety and charity. Fabiola died Dec. 29, 399. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Fabre, Jean, a French preacher, was born at Tarascon, in Provence, about 1370. He entered the order of the Carmelite friars in 1390, and preached with success in divers churches in Provence. Pope Martin V appointed him archbishop of Cagliari in 1423. Fabre governed his diocese for seventeen years. Having been made patriarch of Caesarea, he resigned his archiepiscopacy, and ended his days in retirement about the year 1442. His sermons have been collected under the title of Homilia Sacra. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fabricius, Johannes (1), a German theologian, was born at Nürnberg in 1560, and was successively instructor and pastor there for forty-eight years, being enthusiastically attached to the doctrines of Melancthon. He died in 1636, leaving De Dignitate Conjugii (1592). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fabricius, Johannes (2), son of the preceding, a German theologian, was born at Nürnberg, March 31, 1616. He studied at Jena, Leipsic, Wittenberg, and finally at Altorf, where he became professor of theology. In 1649 he was appointed preacher in his native city, and died there about 1690. For his works, which are not now of much interest, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fabricius, Theodosius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Nordhausen, Aug. 11, 1560. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1584 deacon there, and in 1586 superintendent at Herzberg. He died at Göttingen, Aug. 7, 1597, leaving Compendium Doctrinæ

Christianæ:—Harmonia Passionis et Resurrectionis Christi:—Loci Communes ex Scriptis Lutheri. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 265. (B. P.)

Fabronius, HERMANN, a Reformed theologian of the 17th century, is the author of a didactic poem entitled, Christiades, i. e. Israelis in Terram Sanctam Introductio per Moysen, et in Cælum per Jesum Christum:—Concordia Lutherano-Calvinistica:—Weissagung Daniels von Verwüstung der Stadt Jerusalem. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 265. (B. P.)

Facildes, VICTORIN GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian, was born in 1777 at Mittweida, in Saxony. He was for some time pastor at Rochlitz, in Bohemia, and from 1835 superintendent at Oschatz, where he died, Dec. 31, 1841. He wrote, De evangelii Homiletica Observatione (Leipzig, 1830), and also published a number of sermons. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 348; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 65, 173, 174, 176, 177. (B. P.)

Faculty Court, a court of the archbishop of Canterbury, which grants dispensations to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, to hold two or more benefices, etc. The officer of this court is called the master of faculties. See FACULTY.

Faes, JOHANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lüneburg, Feb. 11, 1646. In 1675 he was pastor at Steigerberg, in the county of Hoya, in 1682 at Minden, in 1687 at Stade, and died there in 1712. He wrote, De Jubilæis Pontificum Romanorum:—Exercitatio in Curtesii Meditationes:—Anatome Bullæ Jubilæi Universalis Anni 1700:—Expositio in Epistolam ad Philemonem. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 631. (B. P.)

Fagan, LUKE, D.D., an Irish prelate, was translated from the diocese of Meath to the see of Dublin in 1729. In 1733, probably the last of Dr. Fagan's life, the act was passed (7 Geo. II, c. 6) whereby converts from the Roman Catholic faith, whose wives were of that persuasion, or whose children were educated in it, were prohibited, under severe penalties, from exercising the office of justices of the peace. This prelate did not in any way distinguish himself. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 466.

Fage, DURAND, one of the French Illuminati (q. v.), was born at Aubais, in Languedoc, in 1681. After the suppression of the Camisards in 1705, he submitted to the Church authorities, and was taken across the frontier to Germany, whence he passed to Holland, and in 1706 went to London. He died, probably, in England about the middle of the 18th century, leaving a work entitled Théâtre Sacré des Cévennes (Lond. 1707, 12mo); reprinted under the title Les Prophètes Protestants (Paris, 1847, 8vo).

Fahlcrantz, CHRISTIAN ERIK, a Lutheran theologian of Sweden, was born Aug. 30, 1790. In 1829 he was professor of theology at Upsala; in 1849 was elevated to the episcopal see at Westera, and died Aug. 6, 1866. He was one of the editors of the Ecklesiastisk-Tidskrift, and published a collection of his writings (Orebro, 1863-66, 7 vols.). (B. P.)

Faigaux, FRANÇOIS LOUIS, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Yverdon, in Berne, in 1707. He studied at Basle, where he was also preacher for some time. In 1751 he was called as French preacher to Cassel, where he died, Oct. 20 the same year, leaving, Religion du Cœur (Rotterdam, 1736):—Sermons Diverses (Hague, 1740):—Adversus Dilationem Conversionis (Marburg, 1743):—Les Paroles de la Vie Éternelle (Schwabach, 1743; Cassel, 1752):—Sur la Folie de l'Athéisme (Schwabach, 1749):—Le Petit Catéchisme de Heidelberg (ibid. 1752). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Faillon, MICHEL ÉTIENNE, a French theological and historical writer, was born at Tarascon in 1799. He became a Sulpician of Paris, and was sent to Montreal in 1854 as visitor of the houses of that congregation in America. He died in Paris, Oct. 25, 1870. His literary work was confined chiefly to subjects connected with the history of Canada. His publications include a Life of Margaret Bourgeoys, foundress of the Congregation Sisters (1862):—Life of Madame d'Youville, foundress of the Gray Sisters (eod.):—Life of the Venerable Mr. Olier (1858):—Life of Mlle. Maure, foundress of the Hôtel Dieu (1854):—Life of Mlle. le Rer, the recluse (1860):—and a very extended History of the French Colony in Canada (1865-66, 3 vols. 4to), only a small part of his plan.

Fainche, an Irish virgin saint, commemorated Jan. 1, was sister of St. Ennea, of noble lineage, and greatly aided him in his religious labors. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Fairbairn, PATRICK, D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born at Halyburton, Berwickshire, Scotland, Jan. 28, 1805. He was educated in the school at Greenlaw, and sent to College at Edinburgh; licensed to preach in 1826; in 1830 went to the Orkney Islands with a family who had large possessions there, and was shortly after ordained pastor of the island parish of North Ronaldshay, where he labored six years. While there he translated Steiger on 1 Peter, for Clark's Theological Library, and began the study of typology. In 1837 he removed to Glasgow, where for three years he was pastor of one of the churches erected in connection with the church-building scheme of Dr. Chalmers; in 1840 he was installed pastor of the parish of Saltoun, East Lothian, where he was when the disruption of the Scottish Church occurred, and he continued in the Free Church there until 1852, when he was appointed first assistant professor, and shortly after professor of divinity in the Free Church College at Aberdeen. In 1856 he was transferred to Glasgow, being the first professor appointed to the Free Church Theological College, and the next year was elected principal of the same. In 1867 he was appointed a delegate from the Free Church of Scotland to visit the churches in America. He died suddenly at Glasgow, Aug. 6, 1874. Dr. Fairbairn's literary productions were numerous. Besides editing the Imperial Bible Dictionary (2 vols. 8vo), the following may be noted: An Exposition of the First Epistle of St. Peter (1836, 2 vols. 12mo):—Typology of Scripture (Edinb. 1845-47, 2 vols. 8vo; Phila. 1853, 8vo):—Commentary on the Psalms, translated from Hengstenberg (1845-48, 3 vols. 8vo):—Jonah; His Life, Character, and Mission (1849, 12mo):—Ezekiel and the Book of his Prophecy (1851, 8vo):—The Revelation of St. John, translated from Hengstenberg (Edinb. 1851, 3 vols. 8vo):—Prophecy, etc. (1856, 8vo):—Hermeneutical Manual (1858, 8vo):—Pastoral Epistles (1874):—Pastoral Theology (posthumous, 1875):—Law in Scripture (1868). Fairchild, ASHBEL GREEN, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born at Hanover, N. J., May 1, 1795, and was piously trained by a widowed mother. At the age of thirteen he commenced his classical studies at Morristown; in November, 1812, entered the senior class in Princeton College, and graduated in September, 1813. In January, 1814, he made a public profession of religion, and united with the Presbyterian Church of Hanover; and in June of the same year entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Jersey in April, 1816, and in September following he left the seminary and entered upon a missionary tour of six months in North Carolina, as assistant to Rev. Dr. Hall. Returning home in April, 1817, he spent two months in a missionary field in the north-western part of his native state. In September of the same year he entered upon another missionary tour, under the direction of the Western Missionary Society, spending three months on the waters of the Monongahela, and then three months on the upper branches of the Allegheny. He was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Redstone, April 21, 1818, and was appointed stated supply to the congregation of George's Creek for half his time; on July 1 following was ordained as an evangelist in Pittsburgh; July 2, 1822, installed pastor of the churches of George's Creek, Morgantown, and Greensborough, Va., and for the first three years was obliged to make up the deficiency in his salary by teaching; in April, 1827, he was installed pastor of the Tent Church, Pa., where he served for thirty-six years. He died there, June 30, 1864. In Dr. Fairchild the dignity and the simplicity of the Gospel ministry were most beautifully combined and exemplified. Besides frequent contributions to the weekly religious press, he published The Great Supper:—Scripture Baptism:—Unpopular Doctrines:—and What Presbyterians Believe, all issued by the Presbyterian Board of Publication. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 16; Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. a. v. (H. O. R.)

Fairfowl (or Fairfull), ANDREW, a Scotch prelate, was born at Dunfermline, Dec. 14, 1606; graduated from the University of St. Andrews in 1623; early became chaplain to the earl of Rothes; minister at Leslie in 1632; afterwards at North Leith, and at Dunse in 1636. He was preferred to the see of Glasgow, Nov. 14, 1661, by king Charles II, and was consecrated in June, 1662. He died at Edinburgh, Nov. 2, 1663. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 265; Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 378, 549.

Fairlie (or Fairly), JAMES, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, was promoted from regent in the Edinburgh University; admitted to the living at South Leith in 1625; transferred to the professorship of divinity in Edinburgh University in 1629; presented to the collegiate or second charge, Greyfriars Church, Edinburgh, in 1630; resigned July 28, 1637, having been elected bishop of Argyll, but was deposed by the assembly in 1638. He failed in his suit to obtain the living of Largo and other parishes, was recommended by the Commission of Assembly, and accepted in March, 1644, as minister at Lasswade, and was presented to that living by the king in 1645. He died in February, 1658, aged about seventy years. He published The Muses' Welcome, two poems. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 45, 105, 289.

Fairy (variously derived from the Celtic, faer, "to charm;" Old English, fer, "a companion;" from faran, "to go;" Persian, peri; Arab, feri; but probably rather from the Lat. fatum, through the mediæval fatore, "to enchant;" the French faer, thence faerie, "illusion"), an illusory or imaginary being, properly female, of supernatural but limited power, common to the popular belief of most European countries. The foy of romance resembles the Greek nymphe, generally represented as a damsel of almost angelic loveliness, who seduced knights into enchanted isles and palaces. Fairy-land was supposed to be sometimes underground, at others amid wildernesses, or even in the ocean. The English sprite, or male fairy, Shakespeare's Puck, called "Robin Goodfellow," corresponds to the German "Knecht Ruprecht;" the Scotch "brownie," and the French "esprit follet," or "gobelin" (goblin), and the Cornish "pixy." See E.L.R.

Everything known of fairies in the way of sayings and fables came from the Romance people. There were at first only three of these beings, but soon their number swelled to seven, and later to thirteen. Since their number was seven, these are six good and one evil, likewise later twelve good, the thirteenth evil. This, probably, is a result of the influence of Christianity, which sought to bring the fairies, as heathen deities, therefore spirits of darkness, into disrepute, which, however, could not be accomplished at once. They are spoken of as superhuman, long-lived female beings, sometimes good, sometimes bad; the former adorned with all the charms of body and spirit, exceedingly beautiful and young, perfect mistresses of all female arts, and ever ready to help the down-trodden, to lead the lost in the right path, by their gift of sorcery to make the impossible possible, and to use this power as becomes the perfect will of a divine being. The evil fairies are the opposite, but have no power to undo the work of other similar beings. In the French Pyrenees it is believed that if flax be laid on the threshold of a fairy grotto, they immediately change it into the finest thread. On New Year's day the fairies visit the houses whose inmates believe in them, and bring fortune in their right hand and misfortune in their left. In a room a table is spread for them, a white cloth on it, a loaf of bread, with a knife, a white shell full of water or wine, and a candle. The windows and doors are then thrown open, and he who shows the greatest hospitality may hope for a rich harvest, but he who neglects this duty may fear the greatest disasters. On New Year's morning the family surround the table, the father breaks the bread and distributes it, whereupon it is eaten as breakfast; then all wish each other a happy New Year. In the Highlands of Scotland it is thought dangerous to speak out the name of a fairy on the mountains which they inhabit. The fairies are able assistants at births; therefore they are often taken as god-parents, and a place is reserved for them at the table. In Franche-Comté there is known a Fée Arie, who appears at country festivals during the harvesting season, and rewards the diligent reapers; she drops fruit from the trees for good children, and during the Christmas season she distributes nuts and cake, similar to the German Frau Holda. Again, the fairies appear as giant-maidens, carrying fluge rocks on their heads and in their aprons, while with the other hand they turn the spindle. On Saturdays the power of the fairies leaves them; they therefore take all kinds of forms on this day, and try to elude the gaze of all eyes. They can hide in a tree, in a horse, in a sword, in a mantle, and this is the origin of the belief that such things are "gefeyt," that is, possessed of a fairy.

For the literature of the subject see Shakespeare, Midsommer-Night's Dream; Perrault, Contes de ma Mère l'Oye (1697); Keightley, Fairy Mythology (Lond. 1860); and Scott's writings.

Faith-cure, a popular name for certain sudden and remarkable cases of recovery in recent times, claimed to have been effected by the power of faith in God alone, without the use of any medicine or physical remedy. We cite a few notable cases from the public prints:

"NEW HAVEN, CONN., March 27.—A remarkable faith-cure is reported from the village of Noank. Mrs. Fannie B. Spencer, the wife of ex-Representative John R. Spencer, has for many years been a victim of the opium habit and asthma. Her family is one of the wealthiest and most reputable in eastern Connecticut. She is now sixty-five years old. Over forty years ago she suffered from an attack of ill-health, and her physician prescribed opium. She is of a nervous temperament. The use of the drug as a medicine developed an appetite for it, to which she gave way. She was also a great snuff-taker, and in addition there was the asthmatic trouble which the drug was used to relieve. All the local doctors agreed that an opium habit of forty years' standing was an incurable disease. One day about a week ago two or three of Mrs. Spencer's friends met at her residence, and a season of prayer was determined upon. Prayers were offered and continued with earnestness by those present for some time. It was during this period that Mrs. Spencer says she experienced a peculiar sensation of mind and body unlike anything she had ever felt before. She calls it the 'Blessings of the Holy Spirit.' From that moment she dates her complete cure, and she and her friends declare she has not since touched opium nor snuff, nor has she felt any desire for them, and she has been entirely free from the asthmatic trouble."—N. Y. Times, March 28, 1884.

"CLEVELAND, June 29.—A strange case of faith-cure came to light here to-day. It is that of Miss Rebecca Kerby, who has been on an invalid's bed forty years, in a farm-house just out of Chardon, a small town near here. During that time she has been on her feet but twice, and then only at the expense of great suffering. For twenty-eight years she has not got up, and yet it is told of her that on Monday, after prayer and an exercise of faith, she arose from her bed, sat in a chair for an hour, and was able to walk once across the room."—The Tribune (N. Y.), July 1, 1884.

"Mrs. Emily J. Wimpy, wife of John A. Wimpy, a resident of the village of Norcross, twenty miles from the city of Atlanta, Ga., who had not been able to walk upon the ground for twenty-two years in consequence of extreme physical weakness and suffering, was enabled to rise and walk and go about and do as others do without any assistance, being restored to her former state of good health. This was done through the faith that God was able and would heal her by divine power. The fact is attested and reported through the press by Rev. W. A. Parks, a preaching elder of the North Georgia Conference of the M. E. Church South, who was present and witnessed it."—The Way of Holiness, quoted in The Law and Gospel, Paris, Ill., December, 1884.

Many similar instances might easily be collected. In fact, there is a regular hospital, conducted by Dr. Cullis, of Boston, where patients of nearly all sorts repair for healing by means of simple prayer and faith, with no other outward sign than mere touch.* Professions of a

* The institution referred to is "The Faith-Cure House," which is part of a system of Faith-Work, established by Charles Cullis, M.D., at Grove Hall, Boston Highlands, in 1864, and now including in addition (according to the 19th Annual Report, 1883), "The Consumptives' Home, with its accommodation for eighty patients; the Spinal Cottage, with its four incurable cases of spinal disease; two Orphan's Homes, with their twenty-nine children; the Deaconesses' Home, for workers; Grove-Hall Church and the Little Chapel for the Dead;" besides the "Willard Tract Repository and Faith-Training College," in the city of Boston, branches in New York, Philadelphia, California, a Cancer Home at Walpole, Mass., a college at Boydton, Va., for colored people, and a mission in India. The whole involved an expenditure for that year of $37,863.91, and for the nineteen years, $589,770.86: entirely raised by voluntary contributions, without personal solicitation. The Faith-Cure House was dedicated in 1882, after an expenditure of $4,303.77, raised in a similar manner. None of these institutions have any permanent fund or resources except the free-will offerings of friends from time to time. Many remarkable cures, it is claimed, have been effected through these instrumentalities—"cancers, tumors, paralysis, spinal diseases, consumption, chronic rheumatism" (see the cases in Dr. Cullis's two little volumes, entitled Faith-Cures, published in 1879 and 1881 at his Repository); but they require careful sifting in the light of medical science before they can properly be adduced to show any direct or preternatural divine interference. It is but just to say that this last assertion is scarcely made in its bold or full form by the advocates of the system; although their language, at least in the popular impression, seems to imply such a view. Of the numerous cases recited in these small volumes no scientific or exact statement is made, and in most instances the real nature of the disease is not disclosed at all, or very vaguely. A few are apparently examples of incipient consumption, cancer, or other dangerous and violent maladies. There are some of affections of the eyes, ears, and other special organs; but the symptoms are equally indefinite. Most are nervous disorders. Failures are not reported. The whole narrative, except in its pious sentiment, reads very much like the popular advertisements of cures by patent medicines. In nearly every example it is easy to trace the beneficial influence of hope upon the nervous system of the patient, as the probable mainspring of the recovery. That devout gratitude to God should be experienced by the subjects of these changes was certainly proper and natural; but it does not follow that they were correct in their opinion as to the particular channel or medium of the cure. There is nothing decidedly preternatural or supernatural about one of them. Nearly every physician of extensive practice has witnessed equally remarkable restorations in which no distinctively divine claim was set up. Nevertheless the facts are doubtless stated by Dr. Cullis with substantial truth, and if invalids may be cured in that way, it is certainly a very convenient and economical method of practice. There have been some other institutions in this country, however, that have attempted to imitate his plan, so far at least as to discard medical treatment; but they have been such woful failures that the civil law has been invoked in order to save their victims from death by criminal neglect. Providence commonly blesses only judicious physical means to beneficial physical results.

There are several similar establishments in Europe, the most noted of which are one at Mannedorf, near Zurich, in Switzerland, established by Dorothea Trudel, and since her death, in 1862, carried on by Samuel Teller, and one at Bad Boll, in Württemberg, Germany, established by a Lutheran clergyman, and since his death carried on by his sons. These are Christian retreats for a temporary sojourn of patients laboring under various diseases of body or mind, at a nominal charge for board, or, in the case of like ability are put forth by several religious bodies, especially what is known as the "Irvingite," or Catholic Apostolic Church (q. v.).

With regard to all these statements we have to remark:

1. It is not impossible nor incredible that miracles should take place in modern times, provided that suitable occasions of necessity should arise. God is undoubtedly as able to effect them now as anciently. The only question is one of fact; and that is further limited to this inquiry: Do these phenomena take place through natural law—whether bodily or mental, or both combined—or are they the supernatural results of direct divine power in answer to believing prayer?

2. The evidence in most of the cases certainly, and probably in all, if the circumstances were detailed, is decidedly in favor of the former, or natural solution. It will be observed that they are chiefly if not wholly of such a chronic character that the mind of the patient has largely to do with their existence and continuance. They are nervous diseases, functional and not organic derangements. We have yet to hear of an acute malady, a well-defined fever, a settled consumption, a broken limb, or a positive lesion of any kind being cured in this manner. With the older prophets, with Christ and his apostles, all these and much more marked disabilities were just as readily healed as any. There was nothing done in a corner, nor was there the least opportunity to doubt the absolute divine power. There is generally—we might say invariably—an air of mystery and collusion about these cases, which justly lays them open to suspicion. Until, therefore, more palpable and bona fide examples shall be adduced, we hold ourselves justified in doubting that these cures are anything more than the effect of the imagination upon highly susceptible systems.

3. At the same time we fully and gladly admit that earnest faith and prayer have an influence upon divine providence, which may lead to a cure that would not take place without them. This is through a special blessing upon the means used, or upon the person, without any particular medical means. But this is a very different thing from the peculiar claim set up in the cases adduced. See MIRACLE; PRAYER.

4. The prerequisite of "faith" on the part of the subjects applying for these cures is a suspicious circumstance; for they are required not only to believe that the Lord is able to perform the cure (which no Christian doubts), but that he is also willing to do it, and even that he actually will do it, which they have no right to assume. This is more than Jesus demanded, for the leper only said, "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst," and the question asked on another occasion was, "Believe ye that I am able?" Confidence enough to induce the patient to come to our Lord, or in friends to bring him, of course was necessary; but a fixed conviction that the cure was positively about to be wrought was not demanded. When it is said that "He could not do many mighty works because of their unbelief," in a certain place, it merely denotes this indisposition to apply to him. There never was a failure, however desperate the case, when this simple condition of asking was complied with. A larger measure of belief than this in such matters we judge to be presumption rather than wholesome faith.

5. The champions of "faith-cure" generally appeal to James v, 14, 15, as a standing proof-text for the correctness of their position; but most of them pay little or no attention to the precise and express stipulations there made about "calling for the elders of the church," and "anointing with oil;" and they lay the whole stress the poor, entirely free, where many remarkable cures are said to have been effected by prayer alone without medicine. As statistical reports are seldom or never issued by these institutions, which are all conducted on the voluntary plan, it is impossible to exhibit or analyze their results accurately.

upon "the prayer of faith." This, however, as the whole passage shows, is not the petition of the patient merely, nor of a self-constituted committee or a few volunteers, but of the regular ecclesiastical authorities, duly and formally convoked for that purpose. Most judicious expositors hold that this refers to the exercise of the miraculous "gift of healing" enjoyed by some early believers as a special endowment of the apostles, and that the direction has therefore ceased to be pertinent in later times. Such has been the practical comment of the Evangelical Church, departed from only by a few ecclesiastical bodies (with whom the experiment has been a signal failure), and by the Roman Catholics (who pervert it to teach "extreme unction"). See ANONYMOUS.

Fakone, a district in Japan in which there is situated a lake, at the bottom of which the Japanese believe is found a purgatory for children. On the shore of this lake are built five small wooden chapels, in each of which sits a priest beating a gong, and howling a himanda. Fakone is also the name of a temple in Japan, famous for its relics. It contains the sabres of the heroic Camis (q. v.), still stained with the blood of those slain in battle; the vestments which were said to have been worn by an angel, and which supplied the place of wings; and the tomb of Juritomo, the first secular emperor of the Japanese.

Falk, NATHANIEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dantzic, Oct. 11, 1663. He studied at Rostock and Wittenberg, and died at Stettin, Aug. 18, 1693, leaving, De Demonologia Recentiorum Autorum Falsa:—Septinarius Sacrum Concionum Sacrarum, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Falco, JUAN CONCHILLAS, a reputable Spanish painter, was born at Valencia in 1651, and studied in the school of Mario. He was much employed for the churches and private collections, and died in 1711. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Falconer, COLIN, a Scotch prelate, was born in 1623, studied the liberal arts at St. Leonard's College, and graduated from the University of St. Andrews in 1645. He became a clergyman in 1651, and ministered to the parish of Essil, in the diocese of Moray, and a few years afterwards at Forres, where he continued until promoted to the bishopric of Argyle, Sept. 5, 1679, whence he was translated to the see of Moray, Feb. 7, 1690. He died at Spynie, Nov. 11, 1686. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 154, 292; Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 152, 169, 177, 446, 452.

Falconer, JOHN, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Dr. David Falconer, graduated at Edinburgh University in 1679; became chaplain to the family of Wemyss; was admitted to the living at Carnbee, May 23, 1683, but deprived by the privy council in 1689 for not praying for the king and queen. He was consecrated a bishop of the Non-Jurant Church at Dundee, April 28, 1709, having the district of Brechin assigned to him in 1720. He died at Inglismadie, July 6, 1723, aged about sixty-four years. He wrote a tract describing the various covenants of God. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 413.

Falconer, THOMAS, a learned layman, was born at Chester, England, in 1786, and died Sept. 4, 1792. He published, Devotions for the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (1786):—Chronological Tables from Solomon to the Death of Alexander the Great (1796). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Faloonet, ÉTIENNE MAURICE, an eminent French sculptor, was born at Paris in 1716, and studied in the school of Lemoine. In 1754 he was admitted to the Royal Academy, and was afterwards appointed professor and rector. Among his most important works in sculpture are Christ's Agony, The Annunciation, and Moses and David, in the Church of St. Roch, at Paris, also St.

Ambrose, in the Church of the Invalides. He died in 1791. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Falk is a name common to many Jewish rabbis:

1. JACOB JOSHUA, who died at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1756, is the author of novellas on different treatises of the Talmud, for which see Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 271 sq.

2. JOSHUA BEN-ALEXANDER hak-Kohen, who died about 1620, was rabbi at Lemberg, and wrote commentaries on the Jewish ritual, entitled דרישה ופרישה; he also wrote derashas on the Pentateuch. See Fürst, loc. cit. p. 272; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 103.

3. JOSHUA BEN-JOSEPH, who died in 1648, was rabbi at Cracow, and wrote discussions on some Talmudic treatises. See Fürst, loc. cit. p. 273 sq.

4. JOSHUA of Lissa, was rabbi at Hamburg, and wrote under the title במקד ירושלים, i. e., The Valley of Joshua, expositions on sections of the Pentateuch. See Fürst, loc. cit. p. 273; De' Rossi, loc. cit. p. 103; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Falk, LUDWIG, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born in 1801. He was first pastor at Landshut, afterwards first preacher at the Reformed Cathedral Church in Breslau, and member of the Silesian consistory. He died at Waldau, near Liegnitz, Aug. 20, 1872, leaving a volume, of sermons, entitled Alles in allen Christus (Breslau, 1848). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 349. (B. P.)

FAN, ECCLESIASTICAL. See FLABELLUM.

Fancourt, SAMUEL, a dissenting minister, and the originator of circulating libraries in London, was born in 1678, and died in 1768. He published several Sermons and theological treatises in 1720. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fano, Fidelis a, an Italian writer, was born Dec. 24, 1838, at Fano, Italy. In 1855 he entered the order of the Franciscans, and was ordained priest in 1862. Having been called to Rome in 1870, he published there Bonaventura Doctrina de Pontificis Primatu et Infallibilitate:—Ratio Novæ Collectionis Operum S. Bonaventurae (1874). After having ransacked almost all the European libraries with a view to editing a new and critical edition of Bonaventura's works, for which he seemed to have been specially adapted, he died Aug. 12, 1881, at the College of St. Bonaventura in Quaracchi, near Florence. His notes, comprising several folio volumes, are in the hands of P. Ignatius, one of the first assistants of Fidelis, who will probably bring about the publication of the works of the doctor Seraphicus. (B. P.)

Fano, Menachem Asaria di, a Jewish rabbi, who died at Mantua in 1620, is famous alike for his Talmudic and Cabalistic lore. Most of his writings are on the Cabala, for which see Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 274 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 103 sq.; Wolf, Bibl. Hebræa, i, No. 772; iii, No. 1447. (B. P.)

Fanon. (1) A head-dress worn by the pope when he celebrates mass pontifically. It is described as a veil variegated, like the Mosaic ephod, with four colors, symbolizing the four elements, put over the head after the pope was vested with the alb, and tied round the neck, forming a kind of hood, the tiara or other head-dress being put on above it. The lower part was concealed by the planeta. The annexed figure is from a small brass statue on the doors of the oratory of St. John Baptist at the Lateran. At the "Foot-washing" the "Roman Ceremonial" directs that the pope should wear the fanon alone without the mitre. (2) The napkin or handkerchief, used by the priest during the celebration of the mass to wipe away perspiration from the face, etc., properly called faciterygium. (3) In later times the white linen cloth in which the laity made their oblations at the altar. The word is sometimes erroneously spelled "faronea." (4) A still later use of the word is for the church banners employed in processions. This is perhaps not earlier than the French and German writers of the 11th century. (5) The strings or lappets of the mitre.

Fansaga, Cosimo, an eminent Italian sculptor and architect, was born at Clusone, near Bergamo, in 1591, and visited Rome and studied sculpture and architecture under Pietro Bernini. The façade of the Church of Santo Spirito de' Neopolitani is the only work by him in that city. He, however, built and adorned a number of altars in Naples. Among his principal works are the façades of the churches of San Francesco Saverio, Santa Teresa degli Scalzi, and San Domenico Maggiore. He died in 1678. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fanti Version of the Scriptures. Fanti is a language spoken in the neighborhood of Cape Coast Castle, in West Africa. The Fanti people are supposed to number about two millions, of whom about five thousand are able to read. At present the four gospels only are circulated, the translation having been made but recently (it is first mentioned in the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1884), by a Mr. Parker, a very able native minister of the Wesleyan Church, whose father was a fetish worshipper. The version, chiefly made from the Authorized English Version, compared with the Otji translation, was submitted to a number of ministers for revision, and finally passed at the annual district meeting by a vote of the whole of the ministers. (B. P.)

Fara (or Burgundofara), Saint, daughter of Chagneric, a high official of the court of Theodebert, king of Austrasia, early became a nun at Meaux in 614, and afterwards abbess of a convent near that place. She died in 655, and is celebrated Dec. 7.

Fardh, a term by which the Mohammedans describe what is clearly declared in the Koran; and they consider any one an infidel who rejects it.

Farinato, Paolo, degli Uberti, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Verona in 1522, and studied some time under Nicolo Goltino. Among his principal works which are at Verona are three pictures in Santa Maria in Organo, representing St. Michael Discomfiting Lucifer, the Mothers Presenting their Children to Constantine, and the Murder of the Innocents. In San Tommaso is a picture of St. Onuphrius. One of Farinato's finest paintings is the Descent from the Cross, in the Church of the Cappucini. He painted a number of other pictures for different churches. He died in 1606. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Farlatti, Daniele, an Italian Jesuit, was born at San Daniele in Friuli in 1690. He studied at Bologna, was for some time at Rome, and in 1722 was called to Padua to assist Riceputi in preparing his history of the Illyrian Church. For twenty years he arranged the material, and after Riceputi's death, in 1742, he commenced the publication of the work, of which he edited four volumes, while four more volumes were published after his death, April 23, 1773, by Coleti. The title of the work is Illyricum Sacrum (Venice, 1751-1819, 8 vols.). The fifth volume contains a biography of Farlatti. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Farmer, Richard, D.D., a learned English divine, was born at Leicester in 1735, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became master in 1775. He subsequently became vice-chancellor and principal librarian of the university, and obtained prebends at Lichfield and Canterbury. He exchanged the latter for a canonry at St. Paul's. Both an English and Irish bishopric were offered him and declined. He died in 1797. In 1766 he issued proposals for publishing a history of the town of Leicester, from the MSS. of Thomas Staveley. He found the work too laborious, and gave his materials to John Nichols, who published it under the title, History and Antiquities of Leicester (1795-1811). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Farnham, Nicholas of. See FERNHAM.

Farnsworth, Benjamin F., D.D., a Baptist minister and distinguished educator, was born about 1790. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1818; for a short time was editor of the Christian Watchman; and in 1826 was chosen first principal and professor of theology in the New Hampton Literary and Theological Institution. In 1836 he was called to the presidency of Georgetown College, Ky., but shortly after went to Louisville, where he established the Prather Grove Seminary. Subsequently he was elected president of Union University, Murfreesborough, Tenn., and then of the Memphis University. He died near Lexington, Ky., May 4, 1851. See Amer. Baptist Register, 1852, p. 416. (J. C. S.)

Faro (or Burgundofaro), Saint, was born in Burgundy about 592, being the son of Agneric, one of the principal officers of Theodebert, king of Austrasia, and was educated at the court of that prince. In 618 he went over to Clotaire II, by whom he was highly esteemed. He then renounced the world, with the consent of his wife Blidechilde, received the clerical tonsure in Meaux, and was elected bishop of that city in 627. He administered his diocese with great zeal, died in 672, and was buried in the abbey of Sainte-Croix, near Meaux. He is commemorated Oct. 28. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Farolfus, Michael Angelo, a native of Crete, who died March 6, 1715, joined the Minorites and studied at Padua. He was chaplain to pope Alexander VIII, and was elevated to the episcopal see at Trau, in Dalmatia, by Clement XI. He wrote, Conciones in Sacellis Pontificis Habite.—Synopsis Controversiarum Græcorum cum Latinis.—Pro Canonisatione B. Jacobi de Marchia (3 vols.). The latter work made him lose the favor of the Roman see and the cardinalate, which was designed for him. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Farquharson, James, F.R.S., LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of the excise officer at Cull, was born in 1781; graduated at the University and King's College, Aberdeen, in 1798; was appointed schoolmaster of the parish the same year; presented by the prince regent to the living at Alford in August, and ordained Sept. 17, 1813. He died Dec. 3, 1848. His attainments in meteorological science were of a very high order, and he was a frequent contributor to various learned periodicals, and corresponded with most of the learned men in Europe. He published, A New Illustration of the Latter Part of Daniel's Last Vision and Prophecy (Lond. 1838).—The Native Forests of Aberdeenshire.—Noah's Ark.—The Aurora Borealis.—The Currency.—An Essay on Cutting Grain with the Scythe.—in the Transactions of the Highland Society.—besides many papers in the Philosophical Transactions.—also An Account of the Parish. See Fusti Eccles. Scotica, iii, 547.

Farr, Alfred A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Middlebury, Vt., Aug. 29, 1810. He joined the Church in 1826, and in 1839 entered the Troy Conference, wherein he labored earnestly and faithfully as a pastor, chaplain, and missionary until 1869, when he became superannuated. He died Nov. 4, 1874, honored as a sort of "veteran reserve" in all useful labor. See Minutes of the Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 65.

FARRAR, ABRAHAM ECCLES, an English Wesleyan minister, was of a family somewhat distinguished in clerical lists. His father (John) was a Methodist minister, who died in 1837; his younger brother was president of the British Conference in 1870, and is the author of Dictionary of the Bible and other valuable works; his elder son, Wesley, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1846, and his youngest son is canon of Durham and author of the Critical History of Free Thought. Abraham E. was born at Sowerby, a village overhanging the vale of Todmorden, April 20, 1788. From 1797 to 1801 he was at the Kingswood School. Soon after his return home he gave his heart to God. He was articulated to an attorney at Sunderland, but in 1807 was received into the ministry. His first field was Holderness, where this talented and refined young man was subjected to all the humiliating trials that mobs and persecuting rectors made the order of the day with the early Methodist preachers (Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 211 sq.; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Meth., ii, 451 sq.). He served the Church faithfully, and was intrusted by it with important offices. While the fire of youth was still burning upon the altar, and the gravity of age and the maturity of intellect gave evidence of long years of usefulness, he was suddenly called away. On April 1, 1849, in great pain, he preached an anniversary sermon in the East London Circuit, and died one week thereafter. Farrar was amiable, courteous, diligent, and sympathetic. He had a mind of critical, reflective, and analytical power. He wrote, The Condemner of Methodism Condemned (1814);—Religious Instruction of Children Enforced (1820);—The Juvenile Bible-class Book (1825);—The Benefits of Messiah's Advent, a sermon (1842);—Sketches of Popular Antiquities for the Young (1850). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1849; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 322; Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1849, p. 543, 906; 1853, p. 305; Wesleyan Trakings, i, 346.

FASSETT, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died April 26, 1694, while pastor and superintendent at Liebenwerda, in Saxony, is the author of Dis. de Imperio Hominis in Hominem;—De Origine Falsi;—De Unctura Christi Sepulcruli;—De Vita Solitaria;—De Primo Atrium in Gen. i, 20. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

FASSEL, HIRSCH B., a Jewish rabbi, was born at Boskowitz, in Moravia, in 1801. He was for some time preacher at Prossnitz, in Moravia; and from 1851 until his death, in December, 1883, at Gross-Kaniza, in Hungary. He wrote, Das mosaisch-rabbinische Civilrecht (Gross-Kaniza, 1852-54, 2 vols.);—Das mosaisch-rabbinische Gerichtsverfahren (ibid. 1858);—Die mosaisch-rabbinische Tugend- und Rechtslehre (ibid. eod.);—Das mosaisch-rabbinische Strafrecht und strafrechtliche Gerichtsverfahren (ibid. 1870). He also published a Catechism of Judaism, Sermons, and some minor treatises. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 277; Lippe, Bibliographisches Lexikon (Vienna, 1881), p. 98 sq. (B. P.)

FAST OF THE HOLY APOSTLES, a fast observed by the Greek Church in imitation of the apostles, who, they suppose, prepared themselves by fasting and prayer for going forth to proclaim the gospel message. This fast commences the week after Whitsuntide, and continues till the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Fast Synoda, a name given to Christian synods in ancient times, which met on fast weeks.

Fasti, the sacred books of the ancient Romans, in which were recorded the fasti dies, or lawful days—days on which legal business might be transacted before the prætor without impiety. These fasti contained a full enumeration of the months and days of the year, the various dates belonging to a calendar, and the several festivals arranged under their appropriate dates. Before the adoption of the practice of preparing such tables, it was customary for the priests to proclaim the different festivals, for the information of the people.

Faté (or Efatese) Version of the Scriptures. This language is spoken on the island of Faté, or Sandwich island, the centre of the New Hebrides. In 1865 the gospel of Mark was translated by the Rev. D. Morrison of Errakor, and printed at Sydney in 1865. From the annual report of the British and Foreign Bible Society for 1866 we subjoin the following:

"The history of the gospel in Faté has been peculiar and interesting. For about a quarter of a century our brethren of the London Missionary Society have had native teachers from Samoa and Raratonga laboring on this island. Several of those devoted men were barbarously murdered by the natives; several more of them fell victims to the sickly climate, and some of them left the island to recruit their enfeebled health elsewhere. At times as many as six or eight stations were occupied by teachers, but, owing to the above causes, for the last ten or twelve years only one, or, at times, two stations could be kept open; the others relapsed to heathenism. But in one of these stations, Errakor, the chief and the whole people embraced Christianity; and although at one time for two years they had no teacher living among them, they held fast to their profession, while the rest of the island was heathen. Errakor was like an oasis in the desert. Six years ago we settled two Anelityum teachers on Faté. One of them died about three years ago; the other died in August last. This year we reopened one of the old stations, and settled three teachers from Mare. Eighteen months ago, when we settled Mr. Morrison at Errakor, he found a population of one hundred and sixty, all Christian. Of these sixty were Church members. There is another station at Paugo, about three miles distant, occupied by teachers, where the chief and a part of the people are Christians. Mr. Morrison has had no accessions as yet from the heathen; but there is evidently a softening process going on around, and from the growing intelligence and increased vigor of Christian character observable at Errakor, there can be little doubt that from this centre the Word of God will soon sound forth to the regions beyond, till all Faté shall receive the gospel of salvation."

In 1870 the gospel of John was printed at Auckland, New Zealand, the translation having been made by the Rev. James Cosh. This gospel was followed by the translation of that of Luke and the book of Genesis. In 1880 the Acts of the Apostles were also printed, the translation having been made by the Rev. J. W. Mackenzie. FATHERS OF THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE, an order of monks collected in France by Cæsar de Bus in the 16th century, who employed themselves in instructing the ignorant, and especially the young. It was approved by Clement VIII in 1597. Another order, bearing a similar name and having a like object, was formed in Italy about the same time by Marcus Cusanus, a knight of Milan, and was approved by Pius V and Gregory XIII. See DOCTRINAIRES.

FATHERS OF SOMASCHO, a name given to the clerks (regular) of St. Majuli, from the town Somascho, where their first general resided. See SOMASCHIANS.

Fatihah (preface or introduction) is the title of the first chapter of the Koran, which consists only of the following short prayer: "Praise be to God, the Lord of all creatures, the most merciful, the king of the day of judgment. Thee do we worship, and of thee do we beg assistance. Direct us in the right way, in the way of those to whom thou hast been gracious; not of those against whom thou art incensed, nor of those who go astray."

Fatima, the daughter of Mohammed, was born at Mecca in 606, five years before her father assumed the office of a religious reformer. At the age of fifteen she was married to Ali, the cousin of Mohammed, of whom she was the only wife. She died in 632. The Arabian dynasty of the Fatimites, which from 909 to 1171 ruled over Egypt and the northern part of Africa, and latterly over Syria and Palestine, claimed to be descended from Fatima. The religious tenets of their adherents differed considerably from those of the orthodox Mohammedans, and in time they sought to give to the Koran an allegorical interpretation, so as to avoid obedience to its literal precepts. The Shiites, including the Mohammedans of Persia, hold both Ali and Fatima, as well as the twelve Imams, in the utmost veneration, while they regard Abubeker, Omar, and Othman as usurpers of the caliphate. They venerate Fatima as a saint, and the Shiites afford us the only instance which occurs in Islamism of giving religious honor to a woman. She was one of the four women whom the prophet regarded as perfect.

Faudoas, PIERRE PAUL, Baron de, a French prelate, was born at Lalanne, April 1, 1750, of a noble family in reduced circumstances. Having entered into orders, he became titular of the abbey of Gaillac in 1788. During the revolution he was obliged to emigrate, and, returning to France, found himself compromised in some conspiracies of the royalists, but was advanced to the bishopric of Meaux in January, 1805. Thereafter he attached himself strongly to the emperor. Louis XVIII, on his restoration, left him in a sort of disgrace until his death in 1819. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Fauna, a species of demi-gods, inhabiting the forests, called also Sylvani, satyrs. They were sons of Faunus and Fauna, or Fatua, king and queen of the Latins, and, though accounted semi-divine, were supposed to die after a long life. They were Roman deities, unknown to the Greeks, and were represented with horns on their heads, pointed ears, and crowned with branches of the pine, while their lower extremities resembled those of the goat. Later, when Greek mythology was introduced, they were often confounded with Pan. They were of a musical and voluptuous character. Female fauns are also spoken of.

Faust, Isaac, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Strasburg, June 10, 1631, and died there, a doctor and professor of theology, Nov. 20, 1702. He wrote dissertations in Latin on various passages of Scripture. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Faust, Johann, brother of Isaac, was born at Strasburg, Sept. 22, 1682, and died there July 1, 1695, a doctor and professor of theology. He wrote monographs in Latin on several Scriptural subjects. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Lit.* i, 13, 75; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Feki, The Blind Men of, an order of blind devotees in Japan, instituted in A.D. 1150. There is a legend that their founder, Feki, was captured by Joritomo. The captive, though kindly treated, not being able to look upon his captor without an irresistible desire to kill him, plucked out his eyes and presented them to Joritomo. There is another more ancient but less numerous order of the blind, claiming as its founder a son of one of the emperors of Japan, who cried himself blind at the death of his beautiful princess. This last society is composed of none but ecclesiastics; the other consists of secular persons of all ranks. They are not supported by alms, like many other devotees, but most of them are mechanics, who earn their own living.

Felbinger, Jeremias, a Socinian, who was born at Brieg, in Silesia, April 27, 1616, was for some time rector at Cöslin, in Pomerania, and afterwards chorister at the princely school in Stettin. On account of his Socinian tendencies he had to give up his position, and went to Holland, where he died in 1687. He wrote, Demonstrationes Christianæ (1653):—Die Lehre von Gott, etc. (1654):—Epistola ad Christianos unum Alisimum Deum, Patrem, etc. (1672). He also translated into German the Confessio Fidei Christi, edita Nomine Ecclesiar. quæ in Polonia unum Deum Profitentur (1653):

—and made a translation of the New Test. from the Greek into German (Amsterdam, 1660). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 169, 838, 419; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Felde, ALBERT ZUM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 9, 1675, at Hamburg. He studied at Strasburg; was in 1836 pastor at Bolbec; in 1838 was called to the chair of ethics and homiletics at Montauban, and in 1865 was made dean of the faculty. In 1870 he retired from public activity, and died at Lausanne, Oct. 23, 1871. Félice was a very excellent preacher. Besides his contributions to Les Archives du Christianisme, L'Espérance, New York Observer, and the Evangelical Christendom, he published, Essai sur l'Esprit et le But de l'Institution Biblique, a prize essay (Paris, 1823):—Appel d'un Chrétien aux gens de Lettres (ibid. 1841; Germ. transl. by Dieltz, Berlin, 1843):—Histoire des Protestants de France (4th ed. Toulouse, 1861; translated into four different languages). See Pélèzeret, G. de Félice, Professeur et Prédicateur; Recolin, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 352 sq. (B. P.)

Felician, Saint, was arrested at Rome for being a Christian, in company with his brother Primus. The two were brought before the emperor Maximian Hercules, who, on their refusing to sacrifice to idols, condemned them to be publicly scourged. He then sent them to Promotus, the judge of Normentum, a city four or five leagues distant from Rome. Promotus not being able to shake their resolution, beheaded them both, in the year 286 or 287. Moréri says that "the acts of these martyrs do not seem authentic;" however it be, the Church honors their anniversary on June 9. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Felician, a noted Donatist bishop of Musti, somewhere in Africa, deeply implicated in the controversy concerning Prætextatus, at the close of the 4th century, and finally deposed. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Feliciano, PORFIRIO, an Italian prelate and poet, was born in the canton of Vaud in 1562. He was educated in philosophy, mathematics, jurisprudence, belles-lettres, and wrote very fine Latin. Being at first attached to cardinal Salviati, he became secretary to pope Paul V, who appointed him bishop of Foligno, where he died, Oct. 2, 1632. He left Rime Diverse, Morali, Espirituali (Foligno, 1630), and several volumes of letters in Latin and Italian. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Felicianus, HISPALENSIS, a Spanish Capuchin, who died between 1730 and 1740, is the author of Instructio vita Spiritualis Brevis et Clara (Seville, 1696; Madrid, 1700):—Comiones Spirituales (Seville, 1698):—Officium Parvum SS. Trinitatis (1700):—De Fontibus Salvatoris (1708):—Lux Apostolica (1716). See Bern a Bononia, Bibl. Capucc.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Félicien DE SAINTE-MAGDELKINE, a French Carmelite monk, was born in the beginning of the 17th century, at Nantea. He taught theology in his native town and at Bordeaux; afterwards became prior of Agen; and at last definitor of the province of Touraine. He distinguished himself by his great knowledge and regular habits. Being suspected as a Jansenist, he returned to Nantea, where he died in 1685, leaving Defensio Providentia Divina (Bordeaux, 1657, 3 vols.):—Nova Eloquentia Methodus (Paris, 1666). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Felix is the name of a very large number of early Christians, among whom we notice the following: (1) Bishop of Aptunga, apparently in proconsular Africa; prominent in the controversy concerning the ordination of Cæcilianus (q. v.) to the see of Carthage, early in the 4th century. (2) The apostle of the East Angles and first bishop of Dunwich; died cir. A.D. 647, and commemorated as a saint March 8. (3) Donatist bishop of Idisia, in Numidia, in 361; guilty of great excesses. (4) Saint, bishop of Nantea, in Brittany, in 550; died Jan. 6, 582; commemorated July 7. (5) First bishop of Nuceria (or Nocera), in Umbria, in 402. (6) Archbishop of Ravenna in 708; carried to Constantinople and blinded, but afterwards restored, and died Nov. 25, 724. (7) Metropolitan bishop of Seville; confirmed by the Council of Toledo near the close of the 7th century. (8) Bishop of Siponto; addressed by Gregory the Great in 591 and 593. (9) Bishop of Treves in 386; resigned about 398. (10) Bishop of Tubzoca, martyred under Diocletian in 303, and commemorated as a saint Oct. 24. (11) Abbot of a little monastery in Byzacena, to which Fulgentius (q. v.) retired early in the 6th century. (12) Surnamed Oclarus, a reader, of Abutina, in Africa, martyred at Carthage under Anulinus, the proconsul, with Darivus (q. v.), and commemorated as a saint Feb. 12. (13) A native of Scilita, martyred at Carthage under Severus (A.D. 200 or 202), along with Perpetua (q. v.) and others; commemorated July 17.

Felix OF CANTALICIO, Saint, an Italian monk, was born at Cantalicio, Umbria, in 1513. He took the habit of a Capuchin, in 1543, at Ascoli. In 1546 he was sent to Rome as a mendicant friar. During a plague which desolated Rome in 1580, Felix made himself remarkable by his truly Christian zeal; as also during a famine in 1585. In spite of his privations and penances he lived to the age of seventy-four. Urban VIII beatified him Oct. 1, 1625; Innocent X commenced his canonization Feb. 6, 1652, and Clement XI finished it, May 8, 1709. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

He was rector of St. Mary-le-Bow, Jan. 17, 1596, and some time of St. Antholin's, London. He was elected master of Pembroke Hall, June 29, 1616, and admitted rector of Great Easton, in Essex, Oct. 23 following; in the same year collated to a prebend in St. Paul's, and in 1617 promoted to the see of Bristol, to which he was consecrated Dec. 14. In 1618 he was nominated to the bishopric of Coventry and Lichfield, but translated to Ely March 11 of that year. He died Oct. 5, 1626. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Feltus, HENRY J., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in 1775. He was a native of Ireland, and came to America when quite a young man. Having been for some time a preacher in another communion, he was admitted into the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church about 1798. He officiated for a period at Easton, Pa., when he became rector of Trinity Church, Swedelsborough, N. J., whence he was called, in 1808, to the rectorate of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, L. I., and thence, in 1824, to that of St. Stephen's Church, New York city. He died Aug. 24, 1828. Dr. Feltus was distinguished for piety, and fidelity in the discharge of all his ministerial duties. He was humble and affectionate, and much beloved and respected by his congregation. See The Christian Journal (N. Y.), 1828, p. 287.

Felwinger, JOHANN PAUL, a German theologian, was born at Nüremberg in 1616. Having been professor at Altdorf, he took part in the religious controversies of the time, and distinguished himself by his zeal against the writings of the Socinians, in opposition to whom he put forth, Anti-Ostorodus:—Defensio pro A. Graewero contra Smalzium. He died in 1681. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fen, JOHN, a Roman Catholic divine of the 16th century, was born at Montacute, Somersetshire. He was educated at New College, Oxford, where he continued till ejected by the queen's commissioners for his zeal for Romanism. He was then schoolmaster at Bury St. Edmund's, till removed on the same account. He fled to Flanders, thence to Italy, and at last fixed his residence at Louvain, where he died in 1618. He wrote and translated many books, living to celebrate his fiftieth year of exile beyond the seas. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 106; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

In 1778 he was professor at the gymnasium in Ingolstadt, in 1795 preacher at Seeg, in 1805 at Vöhringen, near Ulm, where he died, Oct. 12, 1812. Feneberg is the author of several hymns, which breathe an evangelical spirit, and are found in Fuchs, Sammlung Erbaulicher Lieder (Kempten, 1812). See Sailer, Aus Fenebergs Leben (Munich, 1814); Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 558 sq. (B. P.)

Fenner, WILLIAM, a minister of the Church of England, was born Jan. 31, 1831, at Southwark. In 1854 he entered the college of the London Jews' Society, and in 1857 was appointed lay missionary among the Jews of the duchy of Posen. In 1860 Mr. Fenner was to reopen the mission in Tunis, and was ordained by bishop Tomlinson of Gibraltar. He died at Tunis, July 22, 1874. (B. P.)

Fenouillet (or Fenoillet), PIERRE DE, a French prelate, was born at Annecy (Savoie), studied there, entered into orders, became theological tutor at Gap, and then went to Paris, where he became preacher to Henry IV. In 1607 he was nominated bishop of Montpellier, and in 1609 assisted at the Council of Narbonne; but he became so zealous for Romanism that the Protestants complained of his rigor, and he abandoned his diocese and joined the royal army, July 2, 1621. He was afterwards busy in commissions until his return to his diocese, Sept. 20, 1636. In 1652, being sent to Paris on some religious matters, he died there, Nov. 23, leaving a number of addresses, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fenris (or Fenrir), in Scandinavian mythology, was a wolf, the frightful son of the evil Loke and the giantess Angerbode. The Asas knew the danger that threatened them from the children of this pair, therefore they brought Fenris up, in order to moderate his wildness, which was so great that only one Asa, the strong and wise Tyr, could bring food to him. The gods attempted to bind him, and laid two huge chains on him, Leding and Droma, but when he stretched himself they flew apart. Then the Asas ordered a band to be made, which appeared to be of silk, but was composed of the beard of a woman, the root of a mountain, the breath of a fish, the saliva of a bird, and the muscles of a bear; this was called Gleipner. It was light, but the wolf did not allow it to be laid on him, and he had become much stronger since tearing the two chains. The Asas began to persuade him, telling him that if he did not expose himself to some danger he would never become renowned; the band was certainly stronger than it appeared to be, but they would loose him in case he were too weak. "If I do not free myself," Fenris answered, "I know what awaits me; therefore let it not touch my feet. There must be some magic in play; but if you are honest, let one of you lay his hand into my throat as an assurance of your sincerity." After much persuasion, Tyr assented to lay his hand into the wolf's throat; the band was adjusted, but when Fenris wanted to stretch himself, he found that the band gradually contracted. Then the Asas laughed, except Tyr, for his hand had been bitten off. Since that time Tyr is one-handed. They might have killed the monster, but the sanctity of the place forbade it. They therefore took one end of the band, called Gelgia, drew it through a rock, Gjöl, and with the aid of another rock, Twite, they hammered the first still deeper into the earth, and as Fenris wanted to devour all who came near him, they put a sword into his throat, so that the handle lay in the upper, the blade in the lower jaw, and Fenris was made harmless. His body has grown so that by opening his mouth he touches heaven and earth. Eventually he will free himself, unite with his sister, the Midgardsnake, and with the sons of Surtur, in war against the Asas, devour the sun, and even the god Odin; but finally the god Allvaldur will tear his throat so far apart that he will die. Odin will come from his grave, and the world will be renewed. Fenris had two sons, Sköll and Hati, by the giantess Gríge. Sköll persecutes the sun, Hati devours the moon. See NORSE MYTHOLOGY.

Fenton, ROGER, D.D., an Anglican clergyman of the 16th century, was born in Lancashire, became fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, and was the laborious, pious, beloved, and learned minister of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, London. He was a friend of Dr. Nicholas Felton, collegiate and city ministers together. Fenton died in London in 1615, in his fiftieth year, leaving a treatise against usury. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall).

Fenwick, Benedict Joseph, a Roman Catholic bishop, was born at Leonardstown, Md., Sept. 3, 1782. He was made bishop of Boston, Mass., Nov. 1, 1825, a diocese which then had only three priests. He enlarged his cathedral, established schools, started a theological seminary, introduced the Sisters of Charity through Ann Alexis in 1832, saw the first synod of Boston assembled in 1842, the erection of a new see of Hartford in 1844, founded the College of the Holy Cross at Worcester, through the Jesuits, the great Catholic university of New England, and died in Boston after an energetic episcopate, Aug. 11, 1846, prudent, learned, and charitable. See De Courcay and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 509.

Fenwick, Edward, a Roman Catholic bishop, was a native of Maryland, long a Dominican missionary in Kentucky, and was consecrated the first bishop of Cincinnati, Jan. 13, 1822, a see which then included Ohio, Michigan, and Wisconsin. He built churches throughout his vast diocese, dedicated the Cathedral of Cincinnati in 1826, called in the aid of the Sisters of St. Dominic, Sisters of Charity, and the Poor Clares, founded in his city the Athenæum, now St. Xavier's College, and in 1831 established the Catholic Telegraph, the oldest of American Catholic papers. Edward Fenwick died of cholera at Wooster, O., Sept. 26, 1832. See De Courcay and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 547.

Fenwick, Michael, an eccentric preacher, connected with the early Methodist movement in England, commenced to preach in 1750, and travelled some time with Wesley, until the latter, on account of Fenwick's peculiarities, dismissed him. He almost idolized Wesley, and imitated him so accurately in speaking, praying, preaching, and writing, that it was difficult to discriminate between them. Though imprudent, his courage and zeal for Methodism never changed. He was not given a circuit, nor was he acknowledged as a preacher for several years before his death. Yet he always attended the place of the annual conference, and continued there during its session, though he was not permitted to be present in conference after 1784. The conference allowed him a pittance annually, and he had many generous friends in different parts of the kingdom, in the house of one of whom he lived (in Briddington) for some years before his death, in 1797. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Feoligild, archbishop of Canterbury, was consecrated June 9, 832, to that see, but died Aug. 29 following. He had formerly been abbot of one of the Kentish monasteries. See Hook, Lives of Abps. of Canterbury, i, 283 sq.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Feralia, a festival of the ancient Romans, observed annually in honor of the manes of deceased friends and relations. It was instituted by Numa, and lasted eleven days. The family and acquaintances of the deceased went to the graves and walked round them, offering up prayers to the gods of the infernal regions in behalf of their dead friends. An entertainment was then prepared and placed on a great stone, and of this the dead were supposed to partake. During the entire days of the feast no marriages were allowed to be celebrated, and the worship of the other deities was suspended, all their temples being shut.

Ferat, in Mohammedanism, is separation from God, the greatest and severest punishment for the damned.

Ferber, JOHANN JACOB, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Strasburg in 1673. He studied at different universities, and died at his native place, Feb. 12, 1717, shortly after he was called there as professor of theology. He wrote, De Certitudine Theologiae Naturalis (Wittenberg, 1708):—De iis quæ in Philosophia Morali Eximia Sunt (ibid. 1709):—De Theologia Experimentalis (ibid. 1711):—De Principio Cartesii de Omnibus est Dubitandum (ibid. 1716). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Ferdinand. See FERNANDO.

Ferdinand, PHILIP, a Jewish convert, was a native of Poland. He was professor of Hebrew at Oxford and Cambridge, instructed the famous Scaliger in the Talmud, and died in 1598. He wrote, פְּרָשִׁי, Hæc sunt Verba Dri, in which he treats of the Jewish precepts, laws, feasts, etc. (Canterbury, 1587). See Fürst, Bibl. Theol. i, 279; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. i, No. 1832; iii, No. 1832; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Roi, Die Evangelische Christenheit und die Juden (Karlsruhe, 1884), p. 186 sq. (B. P.)

Fergus, Saint, a primitive Scotch bishop and confessor, commemorated Nov. 15 to 18, was probably of Irish birth, and passed through Scotland from the west southward, planting churches and converting the natives to Christianity. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Ferguson, COLIN, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in Kent County, Md., Dec. 8, 1751. A Scotch schoolmaster became interested in him as a pupil and took him to Edinburgh, paying the expenses of his education at the university. In 1782 he was an instructor in the Kent County School at Chestertown, Md. When Washington College, the oldest in the state, was organized in 1783, he was chosen professor of languages, mathematics, and natural philosophy, and held the position till 1793, when he was appointed president. After studying theology, he was admitted to deacon's orders, Aug. 3, 1785, to priest's, Aug. 7 of the same year, and became rector in St. Paul's Parish, Kent County, Md., where he served until 1799. In 1804 he retired to his farm, near Georgetown Cross Roads, where he spent the rest of his life. He died March 10, 1806. Of the General Convention of 1789, which framed the constitution of the Church, he was an active member. He was more distinguished as a scholar than as a preacher. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 342.

Ferguson, James, LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, born in Dolphinton, studied at the United College, and graduated at the University of St. Andrews in 1763; was licensed to preach in October, 1768; presented to the living at Dolphinton in September, 1772, and ordained April 7, 1773; transferred to Pettinain, Feb. 22, 1780, and died May 18, 1803, aged fifty-six years, much esteemed for his literary abilities. He published An Account of the Parish of Pettinain. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, i, 221; ii, 332.

Ferguson, Robert, D.D., LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born in Glasgow, May 12, 1806; educated at Hoxton College, and entered upon his ministry at Haddington about 1830. He afterwards preached at Leicester, Finchinglefield, Stepney, Stratford, ten years at Ryde, beginning with 1849, and then, returning to London, undertook the charge of Portland Chapel, St. John's Wood, but resigned six years later in order to devote his energies more directly to the establishment of the Pastors' Retiring Fund, of which he was one of the original founders. He died March 27, 1875. As a preacher Mr. Ferguson was in a marked degree argumentative and rhetorical, though not to the exclusion of the practical. As a writer he was elegant, persuasive, and forcible. Among other interesting productions of his pen are, Sacred Studies:—Consecrated Heights:—The Penalties of Greatness:—Sacrifice:—Family Prayers. He was for some time editor of the Eccletic Review, and the Free Church of England Magazine. He was elected a fellow of the Antiquarian Society in 1854, and in the same year became a member of the Royal Irish Academy. He took great interest in the advancement of workmen, and wrote for their benefit popular histories of England and Scotland. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 331.

Ferguson, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, born in Blair-Athol, was licensed to preach March 29, 1809; ordained by the Presbytery of Dalkeith, Dec. 7, 1813, as assistant at Inveresk; presented to the living at Death by the earl of Moray in March, 1815, admitted May 4 of the same year, and died March 19, 1866, aged eighty-four years. He published An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, ii, 578.

Fergusson, David, a Scotch clergyman, born in Dundee, was nominated by the lords of the privy council to be the first Protestant minister at Dunfermline, in 1560. He was a member of thirty-nine assemblies, from June, 1563, to May, 1597, and moderator in those of 1572 and 1578. In 1567 Roseyth was under his care, and in 1574 Carnock and Baith were added. In 1576 he was appointed visitor of the churches in the diocese from Forth to Tay and from the Ochils to Dunkeld. He died Aug. 23, 1598, at an advanced age. Though not educated at a university, yet from his good taste, lively fancy, piety, and integrity, he was highly useful in improving and enriching the Scottish language, and he was a favorite with all classes. He took a lively share in ecclesiastical affairs, wrote a diary of historical notes, and had a valuable library of books of theology and natural history. He wrote, An Answer to the Epistle written by Renut Benedict (Edinb. 1563); a Sermon preached at Leith in 1572, and Scottish Proverbs Gathered Together (ibid. 1641). Some of his tracts were printed by the Bannatyne Club in 1860. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, ii, 565.

Ferise (holidays), a name given by the ancient Romans to all peculiar seasons of rejoicing, including sacred festivals or days consecrated to any particular god. The ferise were of several classes. Some of the public festivals were regularly observed, and the date of their occurrence was marked in the Fusti (q. v.). Such were termed Ferise Stativæ or stated holidays. Other public festivals were held annually, but not on any fixed day, and received the name of Ferise Conceptivæ. The most solemn class of holidays were those appointed by the public authorities to be observed in consequence of some great national emergency or impending public calamity, and received the name of Ferise Imperativæ. No lawsuits were allowed to be conducted during the public ferise, and the people were strictly enjoined to abstain from work under penalty of a fine. The introduction of Christianity into Rome, and especially its adoption as the religion of the state, led to the abolition of the ferise and the substitution of Christian festivals.

FERIÆ LATINÆ, a festival instituted by Tarquinius Superbus, or perhaps at an earlier period, in honor of the alliance between the Romans and the Latins. It was held on Mt. Alba, and was originally dedicated to the worship of Jupiter Latiaris. The festival continued for several days, usually five or six. An ox was generally offered in sacrifice by the consul then in office, amid the assembled multitudes, who engaged in rejoicings of all kinds. The two days immediately following the festival were considered sacred, and on them no marriages were celebrated. This festival was observed until the 4th century.

FERIÆ SEMENTIVÆ, a festival of the ancient Romans, observed during a single day in seed-time, for the purpose of praying for the blessing of the gods upon the seed sown.

Feringa, Richard de, an Irish prelate, was promoted and consecrated to the see of Dublin in 1299. Immediately after his consecration he made that conveyance of Church lands alluded to by Carte in the introduction to his Life of Ormond. This caused some disturbance, but archbishop Feringa finally succeeded in bringing about an agreement in 1300. In 1303 he constituted the churches of Stagonil and Tipperkevin prebends of St. Patrick's Cathedral. In 1304 he renewed the privileges granted by his predecessors to the dean and chapter of St. Patrick's, and particularly the exemption of their prebendal churches from visitations by the archdeacon or dean. He did not succeed in his administration, and died Oct. 13, 1306, while on his way from Rome. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Aps. of Dublin, p. 114.

Fernald, Mark, a veteran minister of the Christian denomination, was born March 9, 1784, in Kittery, Me. He learned the trade of a carpenter, and at different times in his youth went to sea; but was converted in 1807, and united with a Free-will Baptist Church. The following year he began to preach, at once engaged in itinerant labor, and was ordained Sept. 20, 1809. For several years he was a travelling preacher, chiefly in New England. He became regular pastor at York in April, 1818, but gradually became identified with the body called "Christians." He died at Kittery, Dec. 29, 1851, where he had been pastor for thirty-six years. See his Life, written by himself. (J. C. S.)

Fernald, Woodbury Melcher, a Universalist minister, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., March 21, 1813. He began his ministry in Nashua in 1835, received ordination the following year, and in 1838 moved to Cabotville (now Chicopee), Mass. In 1840 and 1841 he was located in Newburyport; then three years in Stoneham; in 1845 removed to Boston; embraced Swedenborgianism, and was ordained a preacher of that faith. He published, the same year, a work entitled The Eternity of Heaven and Hell Confirmed by Scripture, and Grounded in the Realities of the Human Soul:—Compendium of the Theological and Spiritual Writings of Swedenborg (1854):—God in His Providence (1859):—Memoirs and Reminiscences of the late Professor Bush (1860):—First Causes of Character (1865):—a posthumous volume of Sermons, found marked for publication at his decease, was issued under the title, The True Christian Life, and How to Attain It (1874). He died in Boston, Dec. 10, 1873. Mr. Fernald was a voluminous and vigorous writer; a sincere, pure, and spiritually-minded man; and possessed of a metaphysical turn of mind. See Universalist Register, 1875, p. 124.

Fernandez, Alfonso, a Spanish Dominican, was born in 1573 at Placentia, and died after 1627. He is the author of Historia Ecclesiastica de Nuestros Tiempos:—Concertatio Prædicatoria pro Ecclesia Catholica contra Hæreticos, Gentiles, Judæos et Agarenos. See Echarl, De Scriptoris Ordinis Dominicanorum; Antonii Bibliotheca Hispanica; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fernandez, Antonio, a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Coimbra, where he also died, May 14, 1628. He was for some time missionary in the East Indies, and after his return was preacher at Lisbon. He wrote, Commentar. in Visiones Veteris Testamenti cum Paraphrasibus Cupitum. See Antonii Bibliotheca Hispanica; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fernando DE TALAVERA, a Spanish prelate and theologian, was born at Talavera-la-Reyna (Old Castile) in 1445. He was a Hieronymite monk, became bishop of Avila, confessor and counsellor of Ferdinand V, the Catholic, and of his wife Isabella. He encouraged them particularly in their enterprise against the Moors, which finally led to the surrender of Grenada. He obtained the archiepiscopacy of that city, and labored very zealously in the propagation of the Catholic religion. The biographers pretend that he died in sanctity, May 14, 1507, and that several miracles took place at his tomb. He wrote, Provechosa Doctrina de lo que Debe Saber Todo Fiel Cristiano:—Avisacion de los Muneris de Pecados:—El Restituir y Satisfacer:—De Como Demos de Comulgar:—Cerenomital Detodos los Oficios Divinos, in Latin and Spanish:—and divers other works. See Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fernham, NICHOLAS OF (or Nicolas de Ferneham), was born at Farnham, Surrey, and was educated as a physician at Oxford. He became a student in Paris, and there gained great esteem, being accounted famosus Anglicanus (Matthew Paris, 1229). Here he continued until the university was in effect dissolved through the discords between the clergy and people. He lived for some years in Bologna, and on his return home became physician to Henry III, who at last made him bishop of Chester. Fernham became bishop of Durham in 1241, which see he also resigned in 1249. He wrote many books "of the practice in physic and use of herbs," and died at Stockton in private life in February, 1258. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 206.

Ferquhard, a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of the Isles, and presented to the temporality of this see, and to the commendamry of Icolmkill, May 24, 1530. He resigned the bishopric into the hands of the pope, in favor of Roderic Maclean, in 1544. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 306.

Ferranti, Decio and Agostino, two miniature painters, very celebrated in their day, flourished at Milan in 1500. In the cathedral at Vigevano are three of their works, consisting of a Missal, a Book of the Four Evangelists, and a Book of the Epistles, illuminated with miniature pictures and ornaments in the most exquisite taste. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ferrara (d'Este), IPPOLITO. See ESTE.

Ferrari, Bartolommeo (by some erroneously called Ferrera), a noted Italian monk, was born at Milan in 1497, of one of the first families there. He was left an orphan in youth, but distinguished himself by his piety and charity. In connection with Antonio-Maria Zaccario de Cremona and Giacomo-Antonio Morigia, a nobleman of Milan, he instituted the congregation of the Regular Clerks of St. Paul, sanctioned in 1530 under Clement VII, and confirmed three years afterwards by Paul III. Ferrari was elected superior in 1542, but governed his order two years only. The Barnabites (by which name his order was commonly known) spread over Germany, Bohemia, Savoy, France, etc., teaching in the principal universities. Soon afterwards women likewise united themselves into communities, and were called Angelice, observing the rules of the Barnabites, under the direction of the same fathers; but the discipline of this religious order did not keep its original purity very long. Ferrari died in November, 1544. See Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ferrari, Gaudenzio (also called Gaudenzio Milanese), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Valduggia, in the territory of Novara, in 1484, and was probably a scholar of Pietro Perugino. Among his principal works was the cupola of Santa Maria, in Saronno. His picture of St. Christopher, in the church of that saint, at Vercelli, is greatly admired. In the same church are several other pictures of his, representing scenes in the life of Christ, including Mary Magdalene and the Passion. There are many other paintings of his elsewhere. He died in 1550. See Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Ferréol is the name of several French saints. (1) A presbyter and martyr of Besançon, suffered with Ferrutio in the time of Irenæus; commemorated June 16. (2) Martyr at Vienne, under Maximian, cir. A.D. 304, and commemorated Sept. 18, was a military tribune who befriended the Christians. (3) Fifth bishop of Uzes, said to have been born of a noble family in Narbonne, was educated by Roricus, bishop of Uzes, whom he succeeded in 553. He labored for the conversion of the Jews, and was once temporarily banished by king Childbert under false suspicion. He died in 581, and is commemorated Jan. 4. (4) Fourteenth bishop of Limoges, is said to have died in 595, and is commemorated Sept. 18. (5) Thirteenth bishop of Grenoble, is said to have been martyred A.D. 683, and is commemorated Jan. 12 (or 16).

Ferrie, WILLIAM, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was promoted from the professorship of civil history, St. Andrews; presented by the earl of Balcarras to the living at Kilconquhar in April, 1813, which he held in conjunction, as agreed to by the assembly, and was ordained Feb. 8, 1814. He died June 7, 1850, aged sixty-seven years. He was an energetic and laborious minister, whom Dr. Chalmers characterized as "the best minister in Fife, and the worst professor." He published, A Catechism on the Evidences of Revealed Religion, with Questions on Natural Religion (Edinburgh); a Sermon preached at Kilconquhar in 1842, and An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 438.

Ferrin, CLARK ELAM, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Holland, Vt., July 20, 1818. In 1845 he graduated from the University of Vermont, and, after teaching two years in Georgia, graduated in 1850 from Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained Dec. 9 following, at Barton, Vt., and remained with that Church until Dec. 13, 1854. From Feb. 9, 1856, until Sept. 7, 1877, he was pastor in Hinesburg, and in Plainfield from February, 1878, till his death, June 27, 1881. During twenty-four years he was a member of the corporation of the Vermont University. In 1858 and 1859 he represented Hinesburg in the State Legislature. He was the author of several pamphlets. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 30.

Ferris, ISAAC, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in New York city, Oct. 3, 1799. He graduated from Columbia College in 1816, and from the New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1820; was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in the same year, and became pastor there in 1821; at Albany in 1824; Market Street, New York city, in 1836; and was then chosen chancellor of New York University, and professor of moral philosophy and evidences of revealed religion in 1852. After laboring seventeen and a half years, he was made emeritus, with the college debt paid and four professorships endowed. In 1870 he retired from active labors, and remained thus till his death, June 16, 1878. As a preacher, Dr. Ferris was clear, discriminating earnest, and practical; and as an administrator he has seldom been equalled. He was very successful as a pastor, possessing personal magnetism which gained for him friends, and made him a centre of influence. He had a noble, well-balanced, fully-disciplined, and broad mind. His nature was kind, and his benevolence large, yet he could be stern and positive when necessary. He was deeply pious, and this trait shone forth on all occasions. Many of his sermons and addresses have been published, and some of them delivered before various religious societies are of permanent historical interest. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 258.

Ferus, GEORG, a Bohemian Jesuit, was born in 1585, and died Jan. 21, 1655. He translated from the Latin into the Bohemian language the Lives of Ignatius Loyola and Francis Xavier:—The Glory of Ignatius, by Nicol. Lancitius:—The Spiritual Praxis, by Nicol. Spondratus, etc. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fervors, in Zendic mythology, constitute the third rank of celestial deities, being the souls of every object that had life, to which, therefore, prayers were offered; a species of celestial manes.

Fesole, CONGREGATION OF, an order of monks, founded about 1386 by Charles of Montegraneli, who lived among the mountains of Fesole. They were also called Mendicant Friars of St. Jerome. The order was approved by Innocent VII., and confirmed by Gregory XII and Eugenius IV. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Fessel, DANIEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in Saxony in 1599; studied at Wittenberg, was in 1625 court preacher to the widow of the elector of Brandenburg, in 1630 superintendent and member of consistory at Cüstrin, and died Oct. 17, 1676, leaving, Adversaria Sacra:—Theatrum Theologico-Politico-Historicum:—Promptuarium Biblicum:—Theosophia Mystica Nucleus:—Regnum Christi et Diaboli Mysticum:—Christus Mysticus. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 189; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fessler, JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic theologian and bishop, was born Dec. 2, 1813, at Lochau, in Vorarlberg, Austria, and studied at Brixen and Innsbruck. In 1837 he received holy orders, and was promoted in 1839 as doctor of theology at Vienna. In 1841 he was made professor of Church history and of canon law at Brixen, and in 1852 was called to Vienna. In 1862 he was appointed bishop of Nyasa in partibus, and in 1865 succeeded Feiglerle as bishop of St. Pölten. At the Vatican council he was first secretary. He died April 25, 1872, leaving, Ueber die Provincial-Synoden und Diöcesan-Synoden (Innsbruck, 1849):—Institutiones Patrologiæ (1850–52, 2 vols.):—Das Kirchliche Bücher-Verbot (Vienna, 1858):—Die Protestantenfrage in Oesterreich (ibid. 1861):—Vermischte Schriften (Freiburg, 1869):—Die wahre und falsche Unfehlbarkeit der Päpste (Vienna, 1871). See Erdiager, Joseph Fessler (Brixen, 1874); Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 354; Literarischer Handweiser für das Kathol. Deutschland, 1872, p. 212. (B. P.)

Fest, JOHANN SAMUEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in Thuringia, Feb. 28, 1754. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1784 preacher at Trachenau, near that city, and died there, Nov. 16, 1796, leaving, Ueber die Vortheile der Leiden und Wüthendigkeiten des Lebens (Leipsic, 1784; 2d ed. 1787; translated also into Dutch). His other publications are of no importance. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 399 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 426, 861; ii, 160, 196, 383, 385, 386. (B. P.)

Fête Dieu (Fest of God, the French name for Corpus Christi), a solemn festival observed in the Romish Church on the Thursday after the octave of Whituntide, for the performing of a peculiar kind of worship to our Saviour in the eucharist. The festival is said to have originated with pope Urban IV in 1264; but in consequence of the political commotions of the time, the bull appointing it was not universally obeyed. It was confirmed, however, by the Council of Vienne, in 1311, and further solemnized by pope John XXII, in 1316.

Feti, DOMENICO, an able Italian painter, was born at Rome in 1589; was a scholar of Lodovico Cardi, and afterwards studied the works of Giulio Romano at Mantua. There is a picture by him, representing the Miraculous Feeding of the Multitude, which is highly commended. Some of his other principal works are: Christ Praying in the Garden; Christ Presented to the People by Pilate; Christ Crowned with Thorns; and The Entombment. Feti died at Venice in 1624. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fetiâles, a college of ancient Roman priests, supposed to have been instituted by Numa, whose duty it was to see that, in all transactions with other nations, the public faith should be maintained inviolate. In case of any injury from a neighboring nation, four fetiâles were despatched to claim redress. One of these was chosen to represent the four. This deputy then proceeded to the court of the injuring tribe or nation, delivered his message, and waited thirty days for an answer. On his return the government would proceed in accordance with the message he brought, and in case of a declaration of war it became the duty of the fetiul deputy to return at once to the border of the offending country, and, throwing a spear pointed with iron or smeared with blood, to make a solemn declaration of war in the name of the Roman people upon the inhabitants of that land.

Fetish (from the Portuguese fetisso, "magician," and fetisseira, "witch"), is a general name for the deities of the negroes of Guinea; each differing, according to the direction of his masouki or priest. The natives of Africa ascribe all their good-fortune to these gods, and make libations of palm wine in their honor. Some birds, the sword-fish, and certain stones are considered fetishes. These deities are worshipped at the foot of certain trees, are adored as household gods, and carried about by the devotees.

Fetva, in Mohammedanism, is a declaration that a public act is in conformity with the Koran. The right of granting this sanction belongs to the Sheik ul-Islâm, who usually consults the college of Ulemas before making a decision. No act of the Turkish government will be readily obeyed without the fetva, because not necessarily binding on the faithful. It has sometimes been used to dethrone sultans, and deliver them over to the fury of the Janizaries. The privilege was resisted by Mourad IV, who boldly beheaded the Sheik ul-Islâm for opposing his will.

Feuardent, FRANÇOIS, a French controversialist, a member of the order of the Discalceati (q. v.), and doctor of the Paris University, was born at Coutances, Dec. 1, 1539. In 1576 he was made doctor of theology, and died, guardian of the monastery at Bayeux, Jan. 1, 1610. He was a severe opponent of the Protestants, and a sort of Ishmael against his own co-religionists, when they differed from him. He wrote, Theomachia Calvinistica:—Divina Opusculæ et Exercices Spirituels de S. Ephrem, mis en François:—*Censura Ecclesiæ Orientalis de Præcipuis Nostri sæculi Hæreticorum Dogmatibus Hieremie Constantinop. Feuerbach, LUDWIG ANDREAS, a German philosopher, was born at Landshut, Bavaria, July 28, 1804. He studied theology and philosophy at Heidelberg and Berlin. In 1828 he began to lecture on philosophy at Erlangen, and opened his lectures with a dissertation, De Ratione una, Universali, Infinita. In 1830 he published, anonymously, Gedanken über Tod und Unsterblichkeit, in which he denied the belief in immortality. As this book closed to him all and every academic advancement, he retired to Bruckberg, where he spent most of his life. In 1833 he published Geschichte der neueren Philosophie von Bacon von Verulam bis Spinoza; in 1837, Darstellung, Entwicklung und Kritik der Leibnizschen Philosophie; in 1838, Pierre Bayle nach seinen für die Geschichte der Philosophie und Menschheit interessantesten Momenten. In 1839 he joined the so-called left wing of the Hegelian school, became a very bitter opponent of his former master, and published Kritik der hegelischen Philosophie, in the Berliner Jahrbücher. Feuerbach now attempted an independent development in the direction of naturalism, or, rather, materialism. In his principal work, Das Wesen des Christenthums (Leipzig, 1841; Eng. transl. by George Eliot, Lond. 1863; new ed. 1881; Russian transl. by Philadelph Theomachoff, Lond. 1861), he defines God as a mere projection into empty space of the human ego, as an image of man, and religion as a simple psychological process, as an illusion. In 1848 he once more lectured publicly at Heidelberg; but, when the revolutionary movement completely failed, he again retired to private life. Feuerbach died Sept. 13, 1872. His writings comprise ten volumes (Leipzig, 1845-66; 3d ed. 1876). See Grün, Ludwig Feuerbach in seinem Briefwechsel und Nachlasse (Leipzig, 1874, 2 vols.); Beyer, Leben und Geist Ludwig Feuerbachs (ibid. 1873); Schaller, *Darstellung und Kritik der Philosophie L. Feuerborn, JUSTUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born in Westphalia, Nov. 13, 1587, was for some time court preacher at Darmstadt, afterwards professor at Marburg, and died at Giessen, doctor and professor of theology, Feb. 6, 1656. He wrote, Kenosigraphia Christologica:—Succincta Epitome Errorum Calvinianorum:—Expositio Epistolæ Pauli ad Galatas:—Theologia Jobæ:—Synagoga Disquisitionum Sacrarum. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 353; Freher, Theatrum Eruditum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Feuerlein, a name common to several Lutheran theologians, viz.:

1. CONRAD, was born Nov. 29, 1629, in Franconia, studied at different universities, and died at Nuremberg, May 29, 1704. His publications are mostly sermons.

2. CONRAD FRIEDRICH, son of Friedrich, was born at Nuremberg, July 15, 1694, and died there Aug. 22, 1742.

3. FRIEDRICH, brother of Johann Conrad, was born at Nuremberg, Jan. 10, 1664, and died there Dec. 14, 1716.

4. JACOB WILHELM, son of Johann Conrad, was born at Nuremberg, March 23, 1689. He studied at various universities; was in 1715 professor at Altdorf, in 1736 at Göttingen, and died there May 10, 1776. He wrote, De Dubitatione Cartesianæ Perniciosa (Jena, 1711):—An Existentiæ Dei sit Veritas Indemonstrabilis (Altdorf, 1717):—Philosophemata Potiora Recognitionum Clementi Romano Fulco Attributorum (ibid. 1728):—De Scriba Evangelico, ad Math. xiii, 52 (ibid. 1730):—De Libero Arbitrio (ibid. eod.):—De Historia August.

Confessionis (ibid. 1781):—De Axiomate, ex Nihilō Nihil Fit (ibid. 1732):—De Voce בְּרָא (ibid. 1733):—De Christo, Novo Legislatore (ibid. 1739):—De Jejunio Antepaschali (ibid. 1741):—Bibliotheca Symbolica Evangelica Lutherana (Göttingen, 1752). This is only a partial list of his many writings, the titles of which occupy five and a half columns in Jöcher. 5. JOHANN CONRAD, son of Conrad, was born Jan. 5, 1650, and died superintendent at Nördlingen, March 8, 1718. His publications are mostly sermons.

6. JOHANN JACOB, son of Conrad, was born at Nuremberg, May 9, 1670, and died there May 30, 1716. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; and Supplement to Jöcher, s. v. (B. P.)

Feustking, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stella, in Holstein, March 7, 1672. He studied at Rostock and Wittenberg; was in 1697 superintendent at Jessen; in 1703 provost at Kemberg; in 1706 court preacher at Zerbst; in 1709 professor of theology at Wittenberg; in 1712 first court preacher and member of consistory at Gotha, where he died, March 23, 1718. He wrote, Pastorale Evangelicum:—Historia Colloquii Jeurensis (Zerbst, 1707). See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 763; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Feutrier, JEAN FRANÇOIS HYACINTHE, comte, a French prelate, was born at Paris, April 2, 1785. After studying at St. Sulpice, he entered into orders, and was soon appointed, by cardinal Fesch, general secretary of the great almonry of France. He was active in politico-religious affairs under Napoleon. On the restoration of royalty he was appointed rector of La Madeleine, where he did many good works. In 1826 he was made bishop of Beauvais, and in 1829 a count and peer of France. He died at Paris, June 27, 1830. See Hoefer, Nouv. Évang. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Feyerabend, MAURUS, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 7, 1754. In 1777 he took holy orders; was for some time teacher in the monastery at Ottoberen, in Suabia; when it was closed in 1802, lived in literary retirement, and died March 8, 1818. He translated into German the Epistles of Gregory the Great (Kempten, 1807):—his Homilies (ibid. 1810):—and the Writings of Cyprian (Munich, 1817). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 404 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 906, 907. (B. P.)

Fiac, an Irish saint, commemorated Oct. 12, was bishop of Sleibhte (now Sletty), and is said to have been consecrated by St. Patrick. There are two hymns attributed to him; one (probably genuine) entitled The Praise of St. Patrick:—another (probably spurious), The Hymn on St. Brigida. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Fiancels, a ceremony of betrothal as practiced in the Romish Church, after which an oath was administered to the man, by which he bound himself "to take the woman to wife within forty days, if holy Church will permit."

Fitus, BARTHELOMÆUS, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Aix-la-Chapelle, Aug. 24, 1643. In 1662 he joined the Jesuits; was for some time professor of theology at Cologne, and died there, Feb. 13, 1706. He wrote, Apologia pro Conscientiis Infirmis (Cologne, 1682):—De Radice Damnatorum Propositionum ab Alexandro VII et Innocentio II (ibid. 1682):—Via Veritatis et Vitæ contra Atheos, Paganos, Juratos, etc. (ibid.

1696):—Demonstratio Tripartita Dei adversus Atheos, Gentiles, etc. (ibid. 1702). See Harzheim, Bibl. Colon.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fichte, IMMANUEL HERMANN VON, a German philosopher, the son of Johann Gottlieb Fichte, was born at Jena, July 18, 1797. Although he had given himself to the study of philosophy, he was at first teacher in the gymnasium at Saarbrück, afterwards at Düsseldorf, and in 1835 at Bonn as professor of philosophy. In 1842 he was called to Tübingen, and died there, Aug. 9, 1879, having been ennobled by the king of Württemberg in consideration of his great merits. His career as teacher and writer may be divided into two epochs. The first begins with his Beiträge zur Charakteristik der neueren Philosophie (1829), and especially with his Ueber Gegensatz, Wendepunkt und Ziel heutiger Philosophie (1832). During this period we find him in close connection with the Leipzig professor Weiss, with whom he labored for the destruction of the Hegelian system, out of which he tried to bring forth a speculative theism free from all rationalism. With his Speculative Theologie (1846), and System der Ethik (1850-53, 2 vols.), he closes this phase of development to give himself entirely to psychological speculation. To this second period belong his Anthropologie (1856; 3d ed. 1876), Psychologie (1864-73, 2 parts), and a number of monographs. His Vermischte Schriften zur Philosophie, Theologie und Ethik (1869) contain a part of his essays contributed to the Zeitschrift für Philosophie und philosophische Kritik, which he edited alone from 1837 to 1847. The ground character of his philosophy was a positive religious one, directed against all and every kind of materialism. See Neue Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, 1879, p. 585 sq.; Matter, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 356. (B. P.)

Floironi, FRANCESCO DI, a famous Italian antiquary, who was born at Lugano in 1664, and died at Rome, Jan. 25, 1747, is the author of, Osservazioni Sopra l'Antichità di Roma Descritte nel Diario Italiano di Montefusco (Rome, 1709);—Memorie più Singolari di Roma e sue Vicinanze (ibid. 1730);—Le Vestigie e Rarità di Roma Antica, e le Singolarità di Roma Moderna (ibid. 1744, 2 vols.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Fidanque, JACOB BEN-ABRAHAM, a Portuguese rabbi of London, who died at London, Aug. 4, 1709, is the editor of Solomon ben-Melech's שכלל יצירה (Amsterdam, 1685), and of Alabaranel's commentary on the former prophets (Hamburg, 1687). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 280; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fiedler, Caspar, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Rochlitz, in Bohemia, Oct. 20, 1619, and died there, May 15, 1719. He was an ascetic writer. See Heynen, Beschreibung von Rochlitz; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fiedler, Constantin, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Dantzic, March 6, 1579, and died at Rostock, Oct. 21, 1644. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fiedler, Ferdinand Ambrosius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 18, 1737, at Vienna. He joined the Augustinians, and after having received holy orders, was for some time professor of apologetics and canon law. In 1767 he left the monastery, went to Leipzig and Hamburg, and in the latter place joined the Evangelical Church. In 1772 he was appointed court-preacher at Ludwigslust, and in 1773 received the degree of doctor of divinity. In 1774 he was made superintendent at Doberan, and died at Altona, June 26, 1780. He wrote, Der Proselyt (Leipzig, 1768-71, 3 vols.):—De Ecclesia Representante (Bützow, 1773):—Geschichte aller Ceremonien der rö- misch-Katholischen Kirche (Leipzig, 1777-85, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 406 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 626; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Field, Benjamin, an English Wesleyan minister of marked ability, was born at Sevenoaks, Kent, in 1823. He was converted when twelve years of age, under the ministry of Thomas Collins, became a local preacher at the age of sixteen, was accepted as a candidate for the ministry in 1843, spent three years at the Richmond Theological Institution, and July 2, 1846, was ordained; a few days after, with Glanville and Morris, sailed as a missionary to India. For this work he had every qualification except that of physical adaptability to the climate, and he was soon stricken with fever. Returning to England, he travelled the Chatteris (1850), Luton, Bradford, Hackney, City Road, London, and Penzance (1861) circuits until he was compelled to desist through disease. In December, 1865, he embarked for Melbourne, Australia, where he spent the rest of his brief life. He edited the Wesleyan Chronicle for a year (1868). Mr. Field died in the city of Melbourne, Sept. 1, 1869. His piety and earnestness were successful in winning souls, and his love for God, superior abilities, and accumulated sorrows, won for him the love of all. Field wrote, Life of Mrs. C. E. Martin [his sister] (1862, 24mo):—The Penitent's Inquiry, an admirable tractate, which has had a large circulation in England and Australia:—The Student's Hand-book of Christian Theology, an excellent treatise (Melbourne, 1868; enlarged ed., with a biographical sketch by Rev. John C. Symons, Lond. 1870, 12mo). Among the shorter presentations of a systematic Wesleyan theology this latter work is probably unsurpassed. See Symons, Memoir, s. v.; Minutes of the British Conference, 1870, p. 12; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1870, p. 1026.

Field, Edward, an English prelate, was born in 1801. He studied at Rugby and Queen's College, Oxford, where he gained a Michel fellowship, was appointed public examiner in 1827, and was consecrated bishop of Newfoundland in 1844. He died June 8, 1876. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1876, p. 633.

Fierte, a privilege enjoyed formerly by the archbishops of Rouen, in Normandy, in consequence of the miraculous deliverance which St. Romanus is said to have had from a dragon which infested the neighborhood. The saint took with him a condemned malefactor, and repaired to the haunts of the monster. He then stripped off his stole, bound it around the neck of the dragon, and ordered the criminal to lead it into the town, where it was burned in the presence of the assembled inhabitants. In reward for his bold feat the malefactor obtained his pardon; and in order to keep up the remembrance of this wonderful deliverance, a custom was long preserved in the district of bestowing pardon on Ascension day upon a criminal, if he would only assist to carry in procession the shrine called the fierte of St. Romanus.

Fiesco, Cattarina. See CATHARINE OF GENOA.

Fiesco, Giorgio, an Italian prelate, was archbishop of Genoa when pope Eugenius IV appointed him cardinal-priest, with the title of St. Anastasia, and bishop of Ostia. Nicholas V gave him the legation of Liguria. Giorgio Fiesco enjoyed the favor of Calixtus III and of Pius II. He died at Rome, Oct. 11, 1461, but his body was transferred to Genoa. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesco, Giovanni, an Italian prelate, was bishop of Vercelli, and was appointed cardinal-priest, with the title of St. Mark, in 1378, by pope Urban VI, who was very fond of him, and charged him with several important missions. Fiesco died in 1384. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesco, Guglielmo, an Italian prelate, was born in Genoa, and was the nephew of pope Innocent IV, who made him, in December, 1244, cardinal-deacon, with the title of St. Eustachius. The same pontiff gave him the protectorate of the Augustinians, and placed him at the head of some troops in 1254, to operate against France. Guglielmo came back to Rome after the death of his uncle, and took part at the election of pope Alexander IV, on Dec. 12 of that year. He died in 1256, and was buried in the Church of San Lorenzo. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesco, Luca, an Italian prelate, was appointed in 1298 cardinal-deacon, with the title of St. Mary in Via Lata, by pope Boniface VIII. Luca proved his gratitude Sept. 9, 1303, by delivering Anagni from an insurrection. On Jan. 6, 1309, he was at Aix-la-Chapelle, and assisted as legate-extraordinary of pope Clement V, in the coronation of the emperor Henry VII of Luxemburg. John XXII sent him as legate to England. Fiesco died in 1336, and was buried in the metropolitan church of Genoa. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesco, Luigi, an Italian prelate, succeeded his uncle Giovanni through the favor of pope Urban VI, and was appointed, in 1385, cardinal-deacon, with the title of St. Adrian. Boniface IX nominated Luigi legate of the holy see in Romagna, and obtained by his instrumentality the submission of several cities, among them Anagni. In 1404 Luigi refused to recognise Cosmo de Migliorati (Innocent VII), who had been chosen by seven cardinals in place of Boniface IX. He put himself under the jurisdiction of the pope at Avignon, Pedro de Luna (Benedict XIII), whom he abandoned in 1409 or 1410, to join Pietro Philargi (Alexander V). The successor of this latter pontiff, Balthassar Coscia (John XXIII), appointed Luigi governor of Bologna. In 1414 he attended at the Council of Constance, and in 1417 at the election of Ottone Colonna (Martin V). He was sent by this pontiff as a legate into Sicily, and returned to Rome, where he died, April 8, 1423. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesco, Niccolo, an Italian prelate, was bishop of Fréjus and of Toulon. On the recommendation of Louis XII, pope Alexander VI appointed him, in May, 1503, cardinal-priest of St. Nicolas inter imagines, afterwards with the title of the Twelve Apostles. Some time later Niccolo obtained the archbishopric of Embrun, and also that of Ravenna. According to the account of his contemporaries, he was a just and liberal counsellor of popes Alexander VI, Julius II, and Adrian VI. It is said that he refused to be a candidate for the papacy in competition with Giulio de' Medici (Clement VII), the successor of Adrian VI. Fiesco died June 14, 1524. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fiesole, GIOVANNI DA. See ANGELICO.

Fifyne, THOMAS DE, a Scotch prelate, was probably a dignitary in the Church of Ross before his promotion to the bishopric of that see in 1274. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 187.

Fijian Version of the Scriptures. This language is spoken in the Fiji islands (q. v.). The principal dialect is that of Bau, and a translation of the New Test. was made into this idiom by the late Rev. J. Hunt, in concert with other Wesleyan missionaries. The work was completed in 1849. In 1854 the British and Foreign Bible Society printed an edition of five thousand Fijian New Testaments, and in 1858 the same society issued an edition of five thousand gospels. In the meantime the missionaries employed in the Fiji Islands were diligently engaged in the translation of the Old Test., which they completed in 1854. The printing of the work was commenced in England under the joint supervision of the Rev. Mr. Calvert, a long resident in the islands, and the editorial superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in the year 1857. As Mr. Calvert, however, was compelled to return to his missionary station, the work was left in an unfinished state. The printing was consequently suspended, and a new editor was appointed by the Wesleyan Missionary Society, to whom the examination of the unfinished part of the text was confided, in order that such revision might be introduced as was necessary to secure harmony in grammatical construction and orthography. The Rev. H. B. Lyth having been selected for this important duty, finished the work in 1864, and the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society announced to its supporters in the report for 1865 the completion of the entire Bible in the language of Fiji, a work upon the preparation of which a vast amount of care and anxious study had been expended. The following account of the reception of the Scriptures in Fiji, soon after their arrival, will be read with interest:

"How the natives rejoiced at the sight of the complete Bible! When I told them that the vessel was in with the Bibles on board, they wanted me to start off at once to fetch them. On receiving them, being greatly excited myself, I walked through Bau with a copy. I took it to the school, and to the king's house, followed by a troop of youngsters, who shouted as we went along. 'Here is the Bible complete—look at it, look at it!' On showing the copy to the king, he asked if we had plenty. I told him we had sufficient for all the preachers in Fiji. 'But,' said he, 'what about us chiefs who can read, and wish to have the whole book; can we not get a copy?' He was satisfied when I told him he should have one." (Report for 1866.)

The extensive circulation of the Fijian Scriptures made it necessary to print, in 1866, two editions of the New Test., consisting together of six thousand five hundred copies, and in 1870 another supply of three thousand copies. A revised edition of the Fijian Bible was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1883. According to the annual report of this society, there were circulated up to March 31, 1884, fifty-five thousand and eight parts of the Bible. For linguistic helps, see Hazlewood, A Compendious Grammar of the Fijean Language, and his Fijean and English and English and Fijean Dictionary. (B. P.)

Fikenscher, Georg Wolfgang August, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 28, 1773, at Bayreuth, and died there Sept. 4, 1813. He wrote, De Pontificum Eccles. Christ. Maximo. Potestate (Nuremberg, 1818). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 679. (B. P.)

Fikenscher, Karl Christoph Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born at Culmbach, Nov. 30, 1798, became pastor of St. Sebaldus at Nuremberg, and died in 1858. Besides a number of sermons, he published, Geschichte des Reichthums zu Augsburg im Jahre 1580 (Nuremberg, 1830); — Biblich-Praktische Auslegung des Evangelium Johannis (ibid. 1831–34, 3 vols.); — Die Protestantische Kirche gegen Herrn Weibischhof Willmann in Regensburg vertheidigt (ibid. 1832). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 357 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 752; ii, 28, No. 135, 155, 307. (B. P.)

Fikoosan, a mountain in Japan, to which an order of Jambabos or monks go in pilgrimage once a year; an extremely difficult task, on account of the precipices with which it abounds. This mountain is believed to be a test of the character of a man, for if a wicked person should undertake the pilgrimage, the devil would enter into him on his first attempt to ascend the hill. See JAMBABOS.

Filastre (or Fillastre), GUILLAUME, the name of two French prelates, uncle and nephew.

1. Born in 1347 or 1348 at La Suze (Maine), studied at the University of Angers, became dean of Rheims, where he also taught theology and mathematics, and founded a library; took an active part in the politico-religious movements of his day; was made prior of St. Ayoub, archbishop of Aix (in Provence), and in 1411 cardinal. He died at Rome, Nov. 6, 1428. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

2. Born probably in Maine, early entered the Benedictine order, became prior of Sernaise, abbot of St. Thierry in Champagne; was received as doctor at Louvain in January, 1486; made bishop of Verdun, Sept. 30, 1487, but after many turmoils exchanged his see for that of Tournay in 1452, and died at Ghent, Aug. 22, 1473, leaving La Toison d'Or, a treatise on that order, of which he had been chancellor (published at Paris, 1517; Troyes, 1530). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Filipowski, HIRSCHHELL, a Hebrew scholar, was born in Poland in 1817. In 1840 he went to England, and received an appointment as teacher of Hebrew and Oriental languages in the Jews' College, Finsbury Square, London. Subsequently he became connected with the Colonial and Standard Life offices of Edinburgh, remaining in that city a number of years, and died July 12, 1872. Filipowski is especially known as the editor of older Jewish works, such as of Abraham bar-Chiyah's Sepher Huibur, which treats of the mathematical and technical chronology of the Hebrews, Nazarites, Mohammedans, etc. (Lond. 1851):—Menahem ben-Saruk's Maabereh, מַאבֶּרֶת, or first Hebrew lexicon (1854):—Azarja de' Rossi's Sepher Mazreph Lakeseph or Dissertatio Critica de Aetate Mundi (Edinb. end.):—Abraham Saccuto's Liber Juchasin, סֵפֶר יוֹחָסִין (Lond. 1857). He also published Sepher Hu-azaph, or treatises pertaining to the exegesis of the Old Test. (Leipsic, 1849), and Sepher Moad Mo'adin, or a Hebrew and Roman almanac (Lond. 1846). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. iii, 84 sq.; Morais, Emment Israélites of the 19th Century (Phila. 1880), p. 71 sq. (B. P.)

Filippi, SEBASTIANO (called Bastianino), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Ferrara in 1532, and was instructed by his father, Camillo. When eighteen years of age he went to Rome and entered the school of Buonarroti. His great work in the Cathedral of Ferrara, representing the Last Judgment, established his fame. Among his best works are the Martyrdom of St. Catherine, in the church dedicated to that saint; and the Adoration of the Mugi, in Santa Maria de Servi. He painted also the Virgin and Infant; St. John, and the Dead Christ supported by Angels. Filippi died in 1602. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Filles de Dieu (Daughters of God), an order of nuns in France who devote themselves to visiting the sick. They repeat the Penitential Psalms once a week. Another religious order bearing the same name was formed in the 13th century, which afterwards became merged in the order of Fontrouvault (q. v.).

Filiuccius (or Figliucci), VINCENTE, a Jesuit of Sienna, was born in 1566, and died professor of theology at Rome, April 5, 1622, leaving De Christianis Officiis et Causibus Conscientie (Lyons, 1626, 2 vols.):—Synopsis Universae Theologiae (ibid. 1628):—De Statu Clericorum, de Beneficiis, de Pensionibus, de Spoliis, de Clericorum Vita et Simonia, de Alienatione Rerum Spirituum. Fillmore, GLEZEN, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Bennington, Vt., Dec. 22, 1789. He received license to preach in 1809, spent the following years as a local preacher, and in 1818 entered the Genesee Conference and was appointed to Buffalo and Black Rock. There were then about fifteen hundred inhabitants in Buffalo, and no church edifice. He leased a lot on what is now Franklin Street, forty-eight days later had on it a house of worship, and two years later reported eighty-two members. His next appointment was to the presiding eldership of Erie District, which stretched from Lake Ontario to Meadville, Pa., and on which his labors were extremely severe and his support exceedingly meagre. In 1830 and 1831 he was pastor of the first and only Methodist Episcopal Church in Rochester. A camp-meeting held in Henrietta had such an effect upon Rochester that nine hundred people professed conversion. The last four years of his active ministry were spent as presiding elder of Buffalo District. In that city, as pastor and presiding elder, he labored twenty-one years. He belonged to the Genesee Conference fifty-four years, and to the Western New York two years, during the last fifteen holding a superannuated relation. He took an active part in the establishment of the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, Lima, N. Y., and was chosen four times as a delegate to the General Conference. He died in Clarence, Jan. 26, 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 158; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism; Stevens, Hist. of the M. E. Church, iv, 268.

Fillmore, ISAAC OTIS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born July 15, 1816, at Sennett, N. Y. He graduated with honor at Union College in 1840, and soon after entered Princeton Seminary, where he spent nearly two years in study. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Troy, Feb. 18, 1842; ordained and installed at Cambridge, Washington Co., by the same presbytery, Sept. 15, 1843; labored there twelve years, and was next at Batavia two and a half years; then became pastor of the Park Central Church, Syracuse, for seven years; in 1866 took charge of the Church at Knowlesville, where he labored four years, and then went to California, and for two years preached at San Francisco, Marysville, and other important places. After this he returned to the East, preached (1873-74) at Jordan, N. Y., and then at Green Island, Albany Co., where he died, Oct. 22, 1875. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 24.

Finckel, SAMUEL, D.D., a Lutheran minister, was born at Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa., Feb. 22, 1811. In 1825 he began preparations for the ministry under the direction of Rev. John Stein, of Jonestown; in 1827 continued his studies at Gettysburg; in July, 1831, was employed as tutor in the Dauphin Academy, Harrisburg; in 1832 was licensed to preach, and in the following year was ordained pastor of the churches in Middletown and Greensburg. For more than three years he resided in Taneytown, Md.; about three years in Middletown, Pa.; four years in Germantown, and nearly three years in Cumberland, Md. Then for twenty-three years he was pastor of the German Evangelical Church in Washington, D. C. Resigning this charge on account of advancing age, he subsequently gathered an English congregation in Memorial Hall, in the same city, to whom he ministered about two years. In 1848, in addition to his pastoral labors in Washington, he was employed as a clerk in the quartermaster-general's office. He died in Washington, Feb. 13, 1878. See Fifty Years in the Lutheran Ministry, 1878, p. 235.

Findlay, JOHN (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was born in Glasgow, Sept. 26, 1751; graduated at Glasgow University; was licensed to preach Aug. 2, 1780; presented to the living at the High Church, Paisley, ordained March 14, 1781, and died March 25, 1821. He was a warm friend of the Bible, missionary, and school societies, and aided by his advice the formation of auxiliary societies at Paisley and Renfrew. He was grave and cheerful in conversation, uniformly correct in language and matter, yet lively, entertaining, and instructive. He published Sermons, preached before the London Missionary Society (Lond. 1799). See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 207.

Findlay, JOHN (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach May 7, 1800; called to the living at Norriestown in March, and ordained June 16, 1803; promoted to St. Paul's Church, Perth, in August, 1807, and died April 4, 1846, aged sixty-six years. He published an address, annexed to a sermon (Glasgow, 1803). See Fusti Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 619, 728.

Findlay, ROBERT (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Rev. Thomas Findlay, minister at Prestonkirk, graduated at Edinburgh University, Dec. 10, 1784; was licensed to preach July 5, 1788; called to the living at Inch, April 8, and ordained July 26, 1789; engaged in business at London, Nov. 18, 1761, and died March 80, 1782. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 758.

Findlay, Robert (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach Oct. 5, 1743; called to the living at Stevenston in March, and ordained Aug. 23, 1744; transferred to Galston April 29, 1745; promoted to the Town Church, Paisley, Feb. 20, 1754; transferred to the north-west quarter, Glasgow, Jan. 29, 1756; being admitted professor of divinity in the Glasgow University, he resigned his parish duties and charge, Jan. 1, 1783. He died June 15, 1814, aged ninety-three years. Dr. Findlay published, Vindication of the Sacred Books (1770):—Psalmody (1763). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 26, 116, 187, 203; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fingask, Thomas de, a Scotch prelate, was employed in divers embassies to England during the captivity of king David II, and was bishop of Caithness in 1848 and 1857. He died in 1360. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 218.

Finlay (1), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunblane in 1406 and 1408. He died in 1419. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 176.

Finlay (2), a Scotch prelate, was a Dominican friar, and chaplain to Murdoch, duke of Albany, in 1425. Upon the fall of the duke this prelate went to Ireland, and there died. He was probably for a time bishop of Argyle. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 287.

Finlay, John, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in the parish of Loudoun, Ayrshire, Scotland, March 10, 1794. He was educated in the Scottish Kirk; graduated from the University of Glasgow in 1810; was converted under the ministry of Dr. Chalmers; came to America in 1817, and, soon after landing at Savannah, went to Augusta, Ga., where he was elected rector of Richmond Academy. He was licensed by the Harmony Presbytery, and, for a time, preached in the "Brick Church" in Augusta; subsequently went to New York, where, uniting with Dr. Arch. McClay's Church, he was licensed as a Baptist preacher; soon after was ordained in Albany, N. Y., where he was pastor until called to the First Church in Baltimore, in 1821. In 1835 he removed to Jackson, Tenn., preaching and teaching for a time until a church was formed. Subsequently he went to Louisville, Ky., where he was pastor a year and a half; then returned to Jackson; next went to Middleton, O., then to Lebanon, and in the fall of 1849 to Memphis, Tenn., where he remained till the spring of 1852. He died at Greenville, on the Mississippi, about 1860. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Ministers, p. 254, 263. (J. C. S.)

Finlayson, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, professor of logic in the Edinburgh University, which office he held in conjunction with his benefice, was formerly tutor in the family of Sir William Murray; presented to the living at Borthwick, Aug. 30, 1786, and ordained April 6, 1787; transferred to Lady Yester's Chapel of Ease, Edinburgh, June 8, 1790; promoted to Old Greyfriars Church in that city, Dec. 25, 1793; transferred to the High Church, Feb. 27, 1799; unanimously elected moderator of the General Assembly, May 20, 1802; appointed almoner to the king the same year, but resigned the office soon afterwards, and died Jan. 28, 1808, in his fiftieth year. His life exhibited an example of self-prompted merit, unblemished purity, and elevated virtue; while to his generous aid not a few were indebted for their promotion in life. He was deeply interested in the welfare of the Church, and skilled in the management of her affairs. He published, Argument in Support of Chapels of Ease (fol. 1798):—Preaching, a Means of Promoting the General Progress of Human Improvement (Edinburgh, 1801):—

Sermons (ibid. 1809, 8vo):—Life of Dr. Blair, with Blair's Sermons, vol. v. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, i, 24, 44, 63, 64, 268.

Finney, Charles G., an eminent Congregational minister, was born at Warren, Conn., Aug. 29, 1792. In early manhood he left his father's farm in western New York, and began the study of law in Adams, Jefferson Co., but shortly abandoned it for the ministry, to which he was ordained in 1824, with comparatively little previous theological training. He soon became noted as an evangelist, and great revivals attended his preaching everywhere. In 1835 he became a professor in Oberlin College, O., where he continued as teacher, pastor, and president (1852-66), with brief tours as a revivalist in England (1848, 1851), until his death, Aug. 16, 1875. He was eminently successful in religious labors for the conversion of sinners, which were conducted with great fervor and earnestness, very much after the manner of Methodists. Mr. Finney wrote, Lectures on Revivals (Boston, 1835, and many editions since):—Lectures to Professing Christians (Oberlin, 1836):—Sermons on Important Subjects (N. Y. 1839):—Lectures on Systematic Theology (Oberlin, 1846, and later). See Autobiography (N. Y. 1876); OBERLIN THEOLOGY.

Finotti, Joseph M., a Roman Catholic divine, was born in Ferrara, Italy, in 1817, and educated at the Jesuit College, Rome. Being induced, in 1845, by professor Ryder, of Georgetown College, to come to America, Finotti was ordained at Georgetown; in 1850 was pastor of St. Mary's Church, Alexandria, Va.; in 1852 left the Society of Jesus, and went to Boston, Mass., where he was for three years editor of the Boston Pilot, was also pastor of Brookline, Brighton, and other missions, and afterwards at Arlington, near Boston. He resided for a time at St. Mary's Seminary, near Cincinnati, O., from there he went to Omaha, Neb., and finally to Central City, Col., in 1877, of which parish he had charge until his death, Jan. 10, 1879. Finotti was a lover of books, most of his time being spent in his library, and he was constantly writing. He published, A French Grammar (in Italian):—A Month of Mary (1853):—Life of Blessed Paul of the Cross (1860):—Italy in the Fifteenth Century:—Diary of a Soldier (1861):—The French Zouave (1863):—Herman, the Pionier (ibid.):—The Spirit of St. Francis of Sales (1866):—Works of Rev. Arthur O'Leary:—Life of Blessed Peter Cleaver, etc. Most of these works are translations, or were edited by him. His greatest work, never completed, was his Bibliographia Catholica Americana, being a list of all the Roman Catholic books published in the United States, with notices of their authors and epitome of their contents. The first part, bringing the list down to 1825, was published in 1872. One of the projects of Finotti was the introduction into schools of a well-arranged series of Christian classics. See (N. Y.) Catholic Annual, 1880, p. 44.

Fire, Holy, of the Greek Church, a fire kindled by the Greek and Armenian monks in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, under pretense of a miracle, on Saturday of the Greek Easter week, amid the wildest enthusiasm of the multitude, and the utmost confusion and uproar; so much so that many are trampled to death in the crowd. Dr. Wolff, in his Missionary Journal, relates that the Greek metropolitan declared in reference to this pretended miracle, "The holy fire was known in the time of the Greek emperors; it was then seen in the Holy Sepulchre, and also in the time that the Crusaders were in possession of the place. Many of the Latin historians mention it. From the time of the invasion of the Turks till now, the holy fire has been seen both by believers and unbelievers." See Herschell, Visit to my Fatherland in 1843.

Firkowitsch, ABRAHAM, a Karaite scholar, was born Sept. 27, 1786, at Lootsk, in Volhynia, and died June 7, 1874, at Shufut-Kale, in the Crimea. He is known for his zeal in collecting old manuscripts concerning the history of the Karaite Jews. The collected material he published in Massa u-Meriba (Eupatoria, 1838), and Abne Sikkaron (Wilna, 1872). Many of his manuscripts and epigraphs he sold to the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg. Although Firkowitsch was highly esteemed among his co-religionists, yet some doubts were raised as to the genuineness of some of his pretended dates, said to be found on tombstones and in manuscripts. What was a mere supposition while he was alive became a certainty after his death. Scholars like Strack and Harkavy examined his investigations, and proved that Firkowitsch was guilty of wilful forgeries, by which he deceived the literary world. See Jellinek, Abraham Firkowitsch (Vienna, 1875); Harkavy, Abraham Firkowitsch's Altjüdische Denkmäler in der Krim (St. Petersburg, 1876); Deinard, Biography of Firkowitsch [in Hebrew] (Warsaw, 1875); but especially Strack, *A. Firmament, in Christian Art. This seems to be represented usually by a male figure supporting an arch (see cut under DOCTORS), but occasionally likewise by a female figure in a similar position (Martigny, Dict. des Antiq. Chrétiennes, s. v.).

Probable Antique Christian Representation of the Firmament.

Firmin, the name of several early saints and ecclesiastics, of whom we particularize: (1) Bishop of Amiens, a native of Pampeluna, ordained as a missionary bishop of Gaul, died probably A.D. 303, and commemorated Sept. 25. (2) Saint, fourth bishop of Uzès, born in Narbonne of noble parentage, cir. A.D. 516; trained by his uncle, Porcius, early ordained, and consecrated bishop A.D. 538; died in 553, and commemorated Oct. 11.

Firmin, GILES, an English Nonconformist divine, was born in Suffolk in 1617, and educated at Cambridge. He was ordained, and became minister at Shalford, in Essex, where he continued until he was ejected, in 1662, by the act of uniformity. He died in 1697, leaving several sermons and theological treatises (1652 sq.), the best of which is The Real Christian. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Firminus is the name of several early Christians, of whom we particularize: (1) A martyr with Rusticus at Verona, A.D. 304; commemorated Aug. 9. (2) Bishop of the Cappadocian Caesarea, deposed by the Oriental party, and died A.D. 439. He left a number of letters, first published by Muratori, Anecd. Græc. (Patav. 1707), also by Migne, Patrol. lxxvii, 1477. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Fisch, GEORGE, D.D., a French theologian, commonly known as "Pastor Fisch," was born at Nyon, canton of Vaud, Switzerland, July 6, 1814. He studied at Lausanne, was for some time preacher of a small German congregation at Vevay, till in 1846 called to Lyons, France, to become an assistant preacher to Adolphe Monod, whom he subsequently succeeded. In 1855 he went to Paris as successor of Louis Bridel, and died July 3, 1881, at Vallorbe, Switzerland. Fisch took an active part in the Constitutional Synod of 1849, which formed the union of the Evangelical churches of France. From 1863 till his death he was president of the Synodal Commission, and thus directed the work of the Free churches. When, in 1856, the Evangelical Alliance was founded, he became the very soul of the branch of this society in France, and attended the meetings at London, Paris, Berlin, Geneva, Amsterdam, and New York. He was particularly interested in the South-Africa mission among the Bassutos, in Mr. McAll's mission in Paris, and in every way he advanced the cause of the Gospel. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Fischart, JOHANN (called also Mentzer, from his native place, Mayence), a Lutheran hymn-writer, was born about 1547. He studied law, and for some time practiced it at Frankfort-on-the-Main. From there he went to Strasburg, and died in 1589. Many of his hymns are found in the hymn-books of the 16th and 17th centuries. A copy of his Gesangbüchlein, published in 1576, has been found in the British Museum at London, by professor Max Müller, and from a copy made by him, with the assistance of Herr von Bunsen, an edition was published at Berlin in 1849. Fischer, Johann Michael, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Coburg, March 21, 1682. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1709 rector at his native place, in 1714 preacher at the Holy Cross Church, and died March 1, 1724, leaving De Solemnis Veteris Ecclesie Antepaschalis (Leipsic, 1704). See Unschuldige Nachrichten, 1725, p. 1041; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 617; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fischer, Ludwig Eberhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 6, 1695. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1727 preacher at Zavelstein, in 1732 at Stuttgart, and took a prominent part in the religious as well as political welfare of his country. He died in 1773, leaving several hymns, which are found in the Württemberg hymn-book. See Moser, Schwäbische Merkwürdigkeiten, p. 372; Koch, Geschichte des Deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 85 sq. (B. P.)

Fischer, Samuel, a Reformed theologian, who died at Aarberg, in Switzerland, in 1831, is the author of, Geschichte der Reformation in Bern (Bern, 1827):—Geschichte der Disputation und Reformation in Bern (ibid. 1828). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 811. (B. P.)

Fischlin, Ludwig Melchior, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1672 at Hausen, near Brackenheim, in Württemberg, studied at Tübingen, and died Aug. 11, 1729. He wrote, Theatrum Mysteriorum ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων (Ulm, 1710, 2 vols.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 856. (B. P.)

Fisen, Bartholomew, a Jesuit, was born at Liege in 1591, and died at Lisle, June 26, 1649. He is the author of, Origo Prima Festi Corporis Christi (Liege, 1628):—Historia Ecclesie Leodiensis (ibid. 1642, 1696, 2 vols. fol.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 619, 825; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fish, in Christian Art. The fish is a symbol of almost universal occurrence in the painting and sculpture of the primitive Church. Like the dove or the lamb, it is used in more than one sense; but its non-scriptural or anagrammatic meaning was perhaps the most popular. See ICHTHYS. At so early a period as the middle of the 2d century, and under the continual dangers of persecution, the use of such a symbol for the person of the Lord was perfectly natural, as it would attract no notice from the outer world; and in the same manner, with even more obvious reasons, the form of the cross was frequently disguised up to the time of Constantine. But the mystic senses assigned to the emblem by various fathers often seem to the modern mind somewhat gratuitous and ill-founded. See FISHERMAN.

Fish, Henry, A.M., an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Hooton-Pagnell, near Doncaster, Aug. 5, 1802. He joined a class in his eighteenth year, was accepted by the conference as a candidate for the ministry in 1823, became a supernumerary at Kettering in 1847, was a happy and useful servant of the Church during his long retirement, and died Jan. 16, 1879. He was a powerful preacher. "He had a quick discernment of the meaning of the text, and a faculty of clear, logical arrangement; and the Gospel which he proclaimed with noble eloquence and intense earnestness wrought deep conviction in the hearts of his hearers and turned many to righteousness, some of whom have ranked among the most gifted and devoted sons of Methodism." Mr. Fish published, Truth of the Christian Religion (Bristol, 1839):—Natural Theology (ibid. 1840):—The Workings of Popery (Lond. 1845):—Methodism the Work of God (Bristol, 1839):—Death of Rev. Maximilian Wilson (Lond. 1857):—Purchase of the Truth (Hull, ed.):—Memorials of Mrs. Pearson Cooper, of Dunstable (Lond. 1845, 8vo):—Joseph Pearson (Bath, 1849, 12mo):—John Wild, of Armsley (Lond. 1863, 18mo):—Romanism (Hull, 1836, 8vo):—Movements of the Oxford Tractarians (Lond. 1842, 8vo):—Doctrines of the Oxford Tractarians (ibid. 1841, 8vo):—Chapters on the Teaching of the Roman Catholic Church (ibid. 1853, 12mo):—The Class-leaders' Manual (ibid. 1849, 18mo):—The Present Agitation in the Wesleyan Methodist Connection (3d ed. ibid. 1851, 12mo):—Rev. Edwin Lewis, B.A. (Cong.), and the Wesleyan Methodists (ibid. 1863, 2 vols. 12mo). He also edited, with an introduction, A Poetical Version of the Psalms of David, by Charles Wesley (ibid. 1854, 8vo). He was for many years a contributor to Methodist periodical literature. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 24: Wesl. Centenary Tidings, i, 307; Osborne, Methodist Bibliography, p. 102.

Fish, Henry Clay, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Halifax, Vt., Jan. 27, 1820; graduated from Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1845; was ordained, June 26 of that year, over the Church in Somerville, N. J., and in January, 1851, became pastor of the First Church in Newark, which office he held till his death, Oct. 2, 1877. Dr. Fish was the author of several works, among them, Primitive Piety Revived (Boston, 1855):—Pulpit Eloquence of the Nineteenth Century (N. Y. 1856, 1877):—The Hand-book of Revivals (Boston, 1874). His Bible Lands Illustrated (Hartford, 1876), was the outcome of a tour in the Holy Land. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 36; (N. Y.) Examiner, Oct. 1877; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Fish, John H., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, graduated from the General Theological Seminary, N. Y.; in 1853 was employed as chaplain in the United States army, at San Sabá; in 1854 served in the same capacity at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.; in 1868 was removed to Fort Rice; in 1871 to Fort Randall, Dak., and there remained until within a short time of his death, which occurred at Montclair, N. J., Oct. 21, 1878, at the age of sixty-six years. See Prot. Epis. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Fish, Simon, a zealous promoter of the English reformation, was born in Kent, educated at Oxford, and died about 1531. He published, The Supplication for the Beggars, a satire upon bishops, abbots, priors, monks, friars, and the popish clergy in general (1526):—The Sum of the Scriptures, from the Dutch (1530). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fisher, Abiel, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Putney, Vt., June 19, 1787. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1811; studied theology with Rev. Nathaniel Kendrick; was ordained an evangelist in Brandon, June 15, 1815; was pastor in Bellingham, Mass., twelve years; in West Boylston, three years; and subsequently in Sturbridge, Mass., Pawtuxet, R. I., and Swansea and Sutton, Mass. He died at West Boylston, in the summer of 1862. He was one of the "fathers" of the Baptist denomination in Massachusetts, and held in high esteem. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 295. (J. C. S.)

Fisher, George H., D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, graduated from Columbia College in 1821, and from the New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1825; was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in the same year; was pastor at North Branch until 1830; at Fishkill until 1835; at Hudson until 1841; at Broome Street, New York city, until 1855; at Utica until 1859; at Hackensack, Second Church, from 1864 to 1870, and was then made pastor emeritus. He died at the last-named place, Nov. 23, 1874. As a preacher, Dr. Fisher stood for years in the foremost rank in his denomination, being fluent in speech, clear in statement, and tender in manner. He was for six years secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions for the eastern department, and published, Divine Providence Proved and Illustrated, in the National Preacher (1848). See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 260.

Fisher, James, one of the four leaders of the secession from the Established Church of Scotland, and professor of divinity to the Associate (Burgher) Synod, was born at Bar, Scotland, Jan. 23, 1697. He commenced his curriculum in Glasgow in 1712, and closed it in St. Andrews in 1716; and then entered the Divinity Hall in the University of Edinburgh, where he continued six sessions. He was licensed to preach in 1722, and for some time supplied pulpits within the bounds of the presbytery. His first parish was at Glenisla, Forfarshire, and in 1725 he removed to Kinclaven. In 1732 he took an active part in denouncing the encroachments of the British legislature on the ecclesiastical liberties of Scotland, before the General Assembly, which soon resulted in his being suspended from the ministry. Mr. Fisher, with his other dissenting brethren, shortly afterwards constituted themselves into a presbytery, and with their respective congregations thus formed The Associate Presbytery. After various fruitless endeavors on the part of the General Assembly to induce Mr. Fisher to return to the Established Church, he, in 1741, was ejected from the church and manse of Kinclaven, whence he removed to Glasgow in response to a unanimous call from a newly organized Church holding his views, which he served continuously for over thirty years. He died Sept. 28, 1775. Mr. Fisher was somewhat under the middle size, well proportioned, had a lively, affectionate, cheerful countenance, easy and alert in all his movements, was neat in dress, and orderly and punctual in all his affairs, an habitual early riser, and a conscientious, diligent student. His published works are, The Inestimable Value of Divine Truth, (Edinb. 1739):—Christ Jesus the Lord, Considered as the Inexhaustible Matter of Gospel Preaching (ibid. 1741):—The Character of a Faithful Minister of Christ (ibid. 1752):—The Assembly's Shorter Catechism Explained by Way of Question and Answer (Glasgow, 1753, pt. i, 8vo; pt. ii, 1760):—Christ the Sole and Wonderful Doer in the Work of Man's Redemption (ibid. 1755), and a few reviews. See Memorials of Alexander Moncrieff and James Fisher, in the United Presbyterian Fathers, 1849, p. 9; Fasts Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 802.

Fisher, John, D.D., an English prelate, was born in 1748. He received his early education at Peterborough and at St. Paul's School, London; in 1766 was admitted at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took the degree of A.B. in 1770; in 1773 was elected a fellow of St. John's College, and in the same year proceeded A.M., in 1780 B.D., and in that year was appointed tutor to his royal highness prince Edward, afterwards duke of Kent. In 1781 he was nominated chaplain to the king, and appointed one of the deputy clerks of the closet; and in 1783 elected a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1785, his attendance upon prince Edward ceasing upon his royal highness going to Germany to finish his education there, he went to Italy for his health; but was recalled from Naples in 1786, and appointed by the king a canon of Windsor; he resigned his canonry in 1803, on being promoted to the see of Exeter; at the end of the same year was appointed preceptor to the princess Charlotte of Wales; in 1807 translated to the see of Salisbury, which position he held until his death, May 8, 1825. Bishop Fisher was an accomplished scholar and a sound divine; but owing to the numerous duties which devolved upon him he had but little leisure to devote to literary pursuits. He published a number of sermons delivered by him on special occasions, which possess superior merit. See The (Lond.) Annual Register, 1825, p. 247.

Fisher, Jonathan Parker, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1757. He was matriculated May 7, 1774; proceeded A.M. Oct. 10, 1780; B.D. May 22, 1802; and grand compounder May 14, 1807. He died in 1838, being at the time sub-dean and canon-residentary of Exeter Cathedral, and rector of Farringdon, Devonshire. See The (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, September, 1838, p. 568.

Fisher, Nathaniel, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Dedham, Mass., July 8, 1742. He graduated from Harvard College in 1768, and soon after the beginning of the revolution was in the service of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, as a schoolmaster at Granville, Nova Scotia. Having crossed the Atlantic for ordination in 1777, he was admitted to orders by the bishop of London, Sept. 25; not long after arrived at Nova Scotia as a missionary to the churches at Annapolis and Granville, and remained there till 1781. In the following year he was invited to the rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Salem, Mass.; but on arriving in that commonwealth he was arrested as a subject of Great Britain, and imprisoned. On taking the oath of fidelity to the new government he was released. His ministry in Salem covered a period of thirty years, until his death, Dec. 20, 1812. Mr. Fisher actively promoted the organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Massachusetts, and was secretary of the first convention of the churches of Massachusetts and Rhode Island in 1784. In 1790 he was one of those chosen to frame the constitution for the government of the Protestant Episcopal churches in Massachusetts; elected a member of the first standing committee of the diocese, and was one of the persons appointed to publish the revised Book of Common Prayer. A volume of Mr. Fisher's Sermons, edited by judge Joseph Story, was published after his death. His style of preaching was compact, dignified, and vigorous. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v. 328.

Fisher, Peter S., a pious and successful German Reformed minister, was born in Berks County, Pa., Oct. 11, 1804; studied theology under the Rev. Dr. F. L. Herman; was licensed and ordained in 1826, and placed over some congregations in the vicinity of Harrisburg. After laboring there with great acceptance for seven years, he removed to Centre County, where he proved himself a faithful servant of Christ, and enjoyed the undiminished confidence of the people up to the time of his removal to Bucks County in 1857. Here he labored with his usual zeal, prudence, and success. Mr. Fisher always manifested a deep interest in the various benevolent operations of the Church, especially in the cause of orphans. He died very suddenly, May 22, 1873, universally esteemed. He is thought to have preached about ten thousand sermons, added to the Church some fifteen hundred members, and solemnized two thousand marriages. See Ref. Church Mess., June 4, 1873. (D. Y. H.)

Fisher, Samuel R., D.D., a prominent minister of the (German) Reformed Church, was born at Norristown, Pa., June 2, 1810. From his earliest childhood he evinced a spirit of piety, and became a full member of the Church when only fourteen years of age. About this time he entered the family of his pastor, the Rev. George Wack, in part as servant-boy and partly as student. Here he remained five years. In 1829 he matriculated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, and graduated in 1834. Soon afterwards he began the study of theology in the Seminary of the Reformed Church, then located at Carlisle. He was licensed to preach in 1836, and became pastor of the Reformed Church in Emmitsburg, Md. He remained here only about three years, when, in 1840, he became identified with the Publication Society of the Reformed Church, located at Chambersburg, Pa. In 1864 the establishment was removed to Philadelphia, where Dr. Fisher continued his labors, with slight changes, as editor-in-chief of the Reformed Church Messenger and superintendent of the publication interests of the Church. He died at Tiffin, O., whither he had gone to attend the General Synod, June 5, 1881. During a period of forty years or more, Dr. Fisher acted as stated clerk of the Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States. The duties of this office he performed with scrupulous exactitude and fidelity. In the meantime, also, he filled other stations of honor and responsibility, serving for many years as a member of the board of visitors of the theological seminary and as treasurer of the board of education. In every position which he occupied he rendered full and complete satisfaction. He was a man of good natural endowments, fine culture, and great skill in the practical application and use of his acquisitions. He was also noted for his extraordinary energy of character, perseverance, sterling integrity, and wonderful endurance. The amount of work which he accomplished was enormous. Besides the large amount of writing done as editor of the Messenger and stated clerk of the Synod, he published, Exercises on the Heidelberg Catechism:—Heidelberg Catechism Simplified:—Family Assistant, a book of devotions:—The Rump Plague, translated from the German. He was also a frequent contributor to the Guardian and the Mercurer Review. See Ref. Church Mess., June 15, 1881. (D. Y. H.)

Fisher, Samuel Ware, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Morristown, N. J., April 5, 1814. His father was an eminent Presbyterian minister in that town, his church being one of the largest in the state. Samuel graduated at Yale College in 1835; studied theology two years at Princeton, N. J., and one year at Union Seminary, New York. Shortly afterwards he was ordained pastor in West Bloomfield, N. J. Here he remained a little more than four years, and then was installed, Oct. 13, 1843, over the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Albany, N. Y. From Albany he removed to Cincinnati, O., and became pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church and successor of Dr. Lyman Beecher, entering upon the duties of his office in April, 1847. Here he had a brilliant and eminently successful ministry. A series of sermons preached by him to young men, Three Great Temptations, published in 1852, went through six editions. In the fall of 1858 he was inaugurated president of Hamilton College, N. Y., and remained in office eight years. He was installed pastor of the Westminster Church of Utica, Nov. 15, 1867, and remained four years in that position. His death took place at College Hill, near Cincinnati, O., Jan. 18, 1874. See Biog. Encyclop. of Ohio, p. 55; Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 13. (J. C. S.)

Fisherman, in Christian Art. By this emblem our Lord and his disciples are frequently depicted on ancient monuments. The net is more rarely represented than the hook and line; but the net of St. Peter, with the Lord fishing with the line, is a device of the papal signets. At San Zenone, in Verona, the patron saint is thus represented, and this subject, with those of Abraham's sacrifice, Noah's ark, and others, on the bronze doors and marble front of that most important church, are especially valuable as connecting the earlier Lombard carvings with the most ancient and scriptural subjects of primitive church-work. This symbol, like the vine, is adopted from pagan decorations, which, of course, proves its antiquity.

Fiske, NATHAN, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Weston, Mass., Sept. 9, 1738. He graduated from Harvard College in 1754; became pastor May 28, 1758, in the Third Precinct, Brookfield, and died there, Nov. 25, 1799. He had a genius for progressive improvement. His preaching was practical, and yet abounded in the beauties of literary composition. Besides several sermons, two volumes of his essays, entitled The Moral Monitor, are among his published works. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. People, i, 571.

Fitch, Chauncey W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was for a number of years rector of the church in Piqua, O.; in 1861, of St. Stephen's Church, Terre Haute, Ind.; in 1864, of St. Paul's Church, Jeffersonville, and chaplain of the military hospital at that place; in 1866 was appointed post-chaplain at Fort Wayne, Detroit, Mich., a position which he continued to hold until 1875, when he removed to Jeffersonville, Ind., and died there, July 13, 1878, aged seventy-seven years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Fitch, Elijah, a Congregational minister, was born at Windham, Conn., in 1746, and graduated from Yale College in 1765. After preaching for a time in Franklin, Mass., he was ordained, Jan. 15, 1772, at Hopkinton, as colleague with Rev. Samuel Barrett, who died the December following, when Mr. Fitch became sole pastor of the church. He remained in office until his death, Dec. 16, 1788. He was a fine scholar and poet, as well as an excellent minister. See Hist. of Mendon Association, p. 117. (J. C. S.)

Fitton, JAMES, one of the founders of the Roman Catholic Church in New England, was born in Boston, Mass., in 1803, and was confirmed by the first bishop of Boston, Dr. Cheverus. He attended the first Catholic school in New England, under Rev. Dr. Matignon, and was for a while teacher in the seminary attached to the old church in Franklin, where he had for one of his pupils, Dr. Williams, archbishop of Boston. He was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Fenwick, Dec. 23, 1827. In 1829 he was sent on a mission to the Passamaquoddy Indians, in Maine, the same year to New Hampshire and Vermont, and soon established his headquarters at Hartford, Conn., where he purchased the first Catholic church, established the Catholic Press, and extended his labors to every county in Connecticut. He established what is now the College of the Holy Cross, at Worcester, Mass., and helped build the Catholic cause at Northampton, Providence, R. I., Newport, and other places in those two states. In August, 1855, he was transferred to East Boston, Mass., where he founded four parishes. He also established several schools. He died in Boston, Sept. 15, 1881. Mr. Fitton compiled The Triumph of Religion, edited the Manual of St. Joseph, a prayer-book, and was the author of a History of the Catholic Church in New England (1872). "His work is seen in the whole history of Catholicity in New England. No page can be written without his impress upon it. Wisdom filled his works; wisdom completed them. In life he seemed to us what he really was, a model priest" (Bishop Healy). See (N. Y.) Catholic Annual, 1883, p. 74.

Fitz, DANIEL, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in New Hampshire in 1795; graduated from Dartmouth College in 1818, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1825; was ordained June 28, 1826, pastor of South Church, Ipswich, Mass., and died there, Sept. 2, 1869. See Trien. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 64.

Fitz-Geffrey (or Fitz-Geoffroi), CHARLES, an English clergyman, was born in Cornwall about 1575; educated at Broadgate-hall, Oxford; became rector of St. Dominic's, in his own county, and died in 1636. He was an excellent Latin poet. His publications are, Affinitas sive Epigrammata, lib. iiii, and Cenotaphia, lib. i (1601):—a religious poem called the Blessed Birthday (1634, 1636). He also published some Sermons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fitzgerald, GERALD, D.D., Hebrew professor in Dublin University; published Originality and Permanence of the Biblical Hebrew (1796):—A Hebrew Grammar, for the use of the students of the University of Dublin (1799). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fitzherbert, THOMAS, a zealous Roman Catholic, was born in Staffordshire in 1552; educated at Oxford; in 1614 became a Jesuit at Rome, and was rector of the English college in that city for twenty-three years. He died in 1640, leaving a treatise concerning Policy and Religion (1606-10), and several Tracts in Defence of the Church. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fitz-James, François, Duc de, a French prelate and theologian, was born at Saint-Germain-en-Laye, June 9, 1709. He renounced his family dignities to enter the clerical life at the age of eighteen, and was appointed abbot of Saint Victor in 1727. He became bishop of Soissons in 1739, and afterwards succeeded cardinal of Auvergne, as first almoner of Louis XV. This prelate taught the rigid doctrines of Jansenism. He died at Soissons, July 19, 1764, and after his death his works were published under the title, Œuvres Posthumes (1769-70, 3 vols.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fitz-James, Richard, an English prelate, and a distinguished benefactor of Merton College, Oxford, was a native of Somersetshire. He went to Oxford about 1459, and in 1465 was elected probationer fellow of Merton College; in 1473 was proctor; in March, 1484, vicar of Minehead, and about the same time rector of Aller, in Somersetshire. In May, 1496, he was consecrated bishop of Rochester, from which, January, 1503, he was translated to Chichester, and in March, 1505, to the see of London. He died Jan. 15, 1522.

Fitz-Jocelin, REGINALD, an English prelate, was the son of Jocelin, bishop of Salisbury, and was born in 1141. Early in life he was appointed archdeacon of Salisbury; when thirty-three he was elected to the important see of Bath and Wells, in 1174. He accompanied the archbishop-elect of Canterbury to Rome soon after, and was consecrated at the Church of St. John de Maurienne, in Savoy, by Richard, archbishop of Canterbury. On his return to England he was enthroned in great state. There was some opposition to this appointment. Reginald appears to have been a weak, well-meaning man, probably under the influence of his associates. In 1191 he was very unexpectedly elected to the see of Canterbury. Reginald sent to Rome for the pallium, and would have gone himself had he not been detained by illness. Meantime his illness increased, and he said "It is God's will that I should not be an archbishop, and my will submits to his." He died Dec. 26, 1191. See Hook, Lives of the Abps. of Canterbury, ii, 574 sq.

Fitzpatrick, JOHN BERNARD, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was born of Irish parents, in Boston, Mass., Nov. 1, 1812. He received his education at Boston, the College of Montreal, and the Sulpician Seminary, Paris. He was ordained priest in 1840, in 1844 was consecrated coadjutor-bishop of Boston, and in 1846 succeeded bishop Fenwick in the episcopacy. He died Feb. 13, 1866.

Fitz-Ralph, RICHARD, an Irish prelate, is supposed to have been born in Devonshire. He was educated at Oxford, and in 1347 was created archbishop of Armagh. He was a strenuous opponent of the mendicant orders; and being in London at a time when a warm contest was carried on between the friars and secular clergy, about preaching, hearing confessions, etc., he delivered several sermons, in which he laid down nine conclusions against the mendicants. Upon complaint made by the latter to the pope, Richard was ordered to appear at Avignon, which he did, and well defended his views. Miracles were attributed to him after his decease, in 1360, and a fruitless application for his canonization was made to Boniface IX. He wrote, Sermones ad Crucem Londoniensem (1356):—Adversus Errores Armenorum (Paris, 1612):—Defensio Curatorum adversus Fratres Mendicantes, etc. (Paris, 1496):—De Laudibus S. Deiparæ. Bayle says that he translated the New Testament into Irish.

Fitzsimon, Henry, a zealous Jesuit, was born at Dublin in 1569, educated at Oxford, and died in 1644. He published a Justification of the Mass (1611):—A Catalogue of the Irish Saints (1621), and some other theological treatises in defence of his faith. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fitzsimon, Patrick, D.D., an Irish prelate, was dean of Dublin, and was appointed to the see of Dublin in 1763, having previously been parish priest of St. Audeon's. He filled this see six years, and died in Francis Street, Dublin, in 1769. His life seems to have been so unobtrusive and purely ecclesiastical as to leave no materials of interest for a memoir. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 471.

Fitzsimon, Walter, an Irish prelate, was a bachelor of civil and canon law, a learned divine and philosopher, precentor of St. Patrick's Church, whose chapter he represented as proxy in a parliament of 1478. On June 14, 1484, he was appointed to the see of Dublin, and consecrated in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Sept. 26 following. In 1487 this prelate was one of those who espoused the cause of Lambert Simnel, and were accessory to his coronation in Christ Church. In 1488 Fitzsimon was permitted to renew his allegiance, and receive pardon through Sir Richard Edgecombe. In 1492 this prelate was made deputy to Jasper, duke of Bedford. While in this situation he endeavored to promote industrious habits among the more indolent of the people. In 1496 he held a provincial synod in the Church of the Holy Trinity, on which occasion an annual contribution for seven years was settled by the clergy of the province, to provide salaries for the lecturers of the university in St. Patrick's Cathedral. In May of the same year he granted to John Alleyne, dean of St. Patrick's, license to build a hospital for the relief of poor Catholics. In 1508 he was deputy to Gerald, earl of Kildare, and in 1509 lord-chancellor. He died May 14, 1511, at Finglass. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 171.

Fix, CHRISTIAN GOTTHELF, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Chemnitz, June 5, 1761, and died there, Jan. 6, 1809. He published, Der Kursächsische Kirchenstaat vor der Reformation (Freiburg, 1806, 1807, 3 vols.):—Abriß der Kursächsischen Kirchen- und Consistorialverfassung (Leipzig, 1795, 2 vols.):—Geistliche Statistik vom Königreich Sachsen (Gießen, 1800). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 800. (B. P.)

Flabellum (fan; Gr. πτέρυξ). Among the evidences of the Eastern origin of the Christian religion is the use of this implement during the celebration of the eucharist. Having its birthplace and earliest home in a climate teeming with insect life, where food exposed uncovered is instantly blackened and polluted by swarms of flies, it was natural that the bread and wine of its sacramental feast should be guarded from defilement by the customary precautions. The flabellum having been once introduced among the furniture of the altar for necessary uses, in process of time became one of its regular ornaments, and was thus transferred to the more temperate climates of the West, where its original purpose was almost forgotten.

The earliest notice of it as a liturgical ornament is in the Apostolical Constitutions, which direct that after the oblation, before and during the prayer of consecration, two deacons are to stand, one on either side of the altar, holding a flabellum made of thin membrane (parchment), or of peacock feathers, or of fine linen, and quietly drive away the flies and other small insects, that they strike not against the vessels. In the liturgies also of Chrysostom and Basil, the deacons are directed to fan the holy oblations during the prayer of consecration. This fanning ceased with the Lord's Prayer, and was not resumed. Early writers furnish many notices of the use of the flabellum as an essential part of the liturgical ceremonial. Moschus (Prat. Spirit. 196), when narrating how some shepherd boys near Apamea were imitating the celebration of the eucharist

In childish sport, is careful to mention that two of the children stood on either side of the celebrant, vibrating their handkerchiefs like fans.

As the deacons were the officers appointed to wave the fan over the sacred oblations, its delivery constitutes a part of many of the Oriental forms for the ordination to the diaconate. After the stole has been given and placed on the left shoulder, the holy fan is put into the deacon's hands, and he is placed "at the side of the holy table to fan;" and again, the deacon is directed to take the fan and stand at the right side of the table, and wave it over the holy things. See cut under ELEVATION OF THE HOST.

Although there is no mention of the flabellum in the Liturgical Flabellum of the Abbey of Tournus.

Latin ritual books, there is no doubt that it was used by the Western Church at an early time. The fan appears to have gradually fallen into disuse there, and to have almost entirely ceased by the 14th century. At the present day, the only relic of the usage is in the magnificent fans of peacocks' feathers carried by the attendants of the pope in solemn processions on certain great festivals.

Though the original intention of the fan was one of simple utility, various mystical meanings collected round it. Reference has been already made to the idea that these feather fans typified the cherubim and seraphim surrounding the holy throne. Germanus also holds (Contemp. Rev. Eccles. p. 157) that the vibration of the fans typifies the tremor and astonishment of the angels at our Lord's Passion. We find the same idea in a passage from the monk Job, given by Photius, who also states (Cod. v. 25) that another purpose of the vibration of the fans was the raising of the mind from the material elements of the eucharist, and fixing them on the spiritual realities.

Flaccilla (sometimes written Placilla or Placidia), an early Christian empress, was a Spaniard by birth, or rather, perhaps, daughter of Antonius (præfect of Gaul); was married to Theodosius I, in 376, by whom she had several children. She was a woman of great virtue and charity; died apparently in 385, and is commemorated as a saint in the Greek Church on Sept. 14.

Flaccillus (written also Flacillus, Placillus, Flacitus, Placetus, and Placentius), Arian bishop of Antioch, A.D. 333-342.

Flacha, SIGISMUND ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 21, 1692, studied at Leipsic, where he was also adjunctus of the philosophical faculty, and died at Leisnig, in Saxony, in 1745, leaving, De Restitutendis Duobus Versibus Jos. 21 (Leipsic, 1714);—De Casu Stellarum in Fine Mundi (ibid. 1718);—De Vocibus ἀπαξ λεγόμενοις in Epistola Jacobi (ibid. 1727);—Einführung zur Augsbургischen Confession (ibid. 1730). Flacksenius, Jacobus, a Finnish theologian and physician, a native of Mackyla, was provost of the cathedral of Abo. In 1665 he taught logic and metaphysics in that same city; in 1679 he lectured on theology, and died in 1696, leaving, Institutiones Pneumaticæ (Abo, 1664);—Collegium Logicum (ibid. 1678). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Flacksenius, Johann, a Lutheran theologian and prelate of Finland, was born at Mackyla in 1636. He studied at the University of Abo, of which he became secretary in 1665. Still later he was successively connected with the faculty of philosophy, professor of mathematics in 1669, and pastor in 1682. Finally he became bishop of Wiborg, and died July 11, 1708, leaving, among other works, Oratio Funebris in Alitum M. Andreæ Thuronis, etc. (Abo, 1665);—De Ecclesia Ejusque Subjecto, etc. (1689);—Sylloge Systematum Theologicæ, etc. (ibid. 1690);—Chronologia Sacra (ibid. 1692);—Harmonia Evangelicæ (ibid. 1701). Flaget, BENEDICT JOSEPH, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Courtenay, Auvergne, Nov. 7, 1763. He entered the Sulpitian seminary at Clermont, and after his ordination was received into the society of St. Sulpice. As the troubles of the French revolution came on he offered himself to bishop Carroll for service in America, and arrived in Philadelphia, Nov. 7, 1793. His first mission was at Vincennes, Ind., one of the oldest French settlements in the West, whence he was recalled in 1795 to assume a professorship in Georgetown College. On Nov. 4, 1810, he was consecrated bishop of the new diocese of Bardstown. His zealous labors extended to St. Louis and New Orleans. He established a seminary in his new diocese, and by the aid of priests like David, Elder, Byrne, and the Dominican and Jesuit fathers, institutions arose to meet the needs of his flock. In 1832 his resignation of his see was accepted, but, with Dr. Chalrat as coadjutor, he was reinstated. Bishop Flaget then visited Rome, when the pope urged him to travel through France and Northern Italy, to commend the Association for the Propagation of the Faith. Cures said to have been effected by his prayers added to the force of his reputation. Returning to Kentucky, he resumed his toilsome labors. After his see was removed to Louisville, Dr. Chalrat resigned, and M. J. Spalding, afterwards the learned archbishop of Baltimore, succeeded him. Bishop Flaget closed his long and laborious life, Feb. 11, 1850. See Cath. Almanac, 1872, p. 57; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the United States, p. 70, 538.

Flambard (or Passesflabere), RANULPH (or RALPH), an English prelate, and justiciar under William Rufus, was a Norman of low birth, who came to England in the train of William the Conqueror, in 1066. He took holy orders, obtained several Church preferments, was appointed chaplain to the bishop of London, and made prebendary of St. Paul's. He afterwards entered the service of William II, who made him his chaplain. By his unscrupulous artifices with the king he raised himself to the highest places in Church and State. He seems to have been the first man to apply feudalism to the estates of the Church. He suggested that they should be considered as fiefs or benefices held of the king, which at every vacancy should devolve to the crown till the vacancy was supplied. After the death of Lanfranc the king gave himself up unreservedly to Flambard. The justiciar obtained for himself the custody of the vacant abbeys of Winchester and Chertsey, the bishopric of Lincoln, and the archbishopric of Canterbury. His oppressive measures brought him into such odium that an attempt was made in 1099 to murder him at sea, which, however, proved unsuccessful. He was then rewarded with the see of Durham, for which he was obliged to pay the king £1000. On the death of William II, in 1100, he was imprisoned in the Tower, "the first man," says Freeman, "recorded to have dwelled as a prisoner in the Conqueror's fortress." In February of the following year he managed to escape from his prison, and fled to Normandy. There he joined duke Robert, instigated him to invade England, whither he returned with him. He was afterwards restored to his see, and appears to have attended to his duties faithfully the rest of his life. He completed his cathedral, built Norham castle, and fortified Durham. He endowed the college of Christchurch, and founded the priory of Motisford. He died Sept. 5, 1128. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Flaminia, the name of a young priestess, who assisted the Flaminica in her sacred duties. This was also the name given to the house of the Flamen Dialis, from which no one could carry out fire except for sacred purposes.

Flaminica, the wife of the Flamen Dialis (see FLAMEN), or priest of Jupiter, among the ancient Romans. She was put under the same restrictions as her husband, and if she died he was compelled to resign his office. She sacrificed a ram to Jupiter on each of the Nundinae (q. v.).

Flaminio (originally Tarrobini), MARCO ANTONIO, an eminent Italian poet, was born at Seravalle, in 1498, studied philosophy at Bologna, attached himself to various ecclesiastics, and died at Rome, Feb. 18, 1550, judge of St. Peter. He was appointed secretary for the Council of Trent, but, being of a friendly disposition towards Luther and his work, he refused to accept the appointment. He wrote several poetical works, especially, In Librum Psalmorum Brevis Explanatio (Venice, 1545). See Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Lit. i, 207; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 282; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefler, Nov. Bing. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Flanders, CHARLES WORTHEN, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Salisbury, Mass., in February, 1807. He graduated at Brown University in 1839; pursued his theological studies with Rev. John Wayland, D.D. (a brother of Dr. F. Wayland), then pastor of the First Baptist Church in Salem; was ordained over the First Baptist Church in Danvers, Nov. 11, 1840, remaining there for nearly ten years, when he took charge of the First Baptist Church at Concord, N. H.; and subsequently was pastor of Baptist churches in Kennebunkport, Me., and Westboro and Beverly Farms, Mass. He died at Beverly, Aug. 2, 1875. (J. C. S.)

Flavianus, the second of that name, bishop of Antioch, A.D. 498-512, was weak and vacillating in moral character, originally a monk at Tilmoggon, in Coele-Syria, later nuncio of the Church of Antioch at the imperial court in Constantinople, and was deposed in consequence of the Monophysite troubles at Alexandria, ending his life in banishment, A.D. 518. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Fleek, FERDINAND FLORENZ, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Dresden, April 5, 1800, and died, doctor and professor of theology, at Leipzig, in 1849, leaving, De Regno Christi (Leipzig, 1826); — De Regno Divino (ibid. 1829); — Otium Theologicum (ibid. 1831); — Wissenschaftliche Reise, etc. (ibid. 1835-38, 2 vols.); — Die Vertheidigung des Christenthums (ibid. 1842); — System der christlichen Dogmatik (ibid. 1847); — Der Fortschritt des Menschengeschlechts (Giessen, 1848). He also edited Testamentum Novum, Vulgatæ Editionis, etc. (Leipzig, 1840). See Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Lit. i, 440; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 363. (B. P.)

Flekeles, ELEAZAR ben David, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Prague in 1754, and died there in 1826, leaving פְּרֵקֵי דְּרַבִּי עֲלֵימֶלֶךְ, a disquisition and criticism of the sect of the Sabbatharians in Prague, (1800); — פְּרֵקֵי דְּרַבִּי עֲלֵימֶלֶךְ, a collection of derashas, in which he vents his ire against the translators of the Bible, especially against the school of Moses Mendelssohn (1787); — פְּרֵקֵי דְּרַבִּי עֲלֵימֶלֶךְ, on the holy names of God in the Scripture (1812). Flemael (Fr. Flémalle), BERTHOLOTT, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Liege in 1614, and was a pupil of Gerard Douffiest, at Liege, whence he went to Italy, and studied the works of the great masters. He soon gained distinction, and was invited to Florence by the grand duke of Tuscany, to do some work. He went to Paris, and painted for the cupola of the Carmelites, Elijah taken up into Heaven, and Elisha Receiving the Mantle of the Prophet. He also painted the Adoration of the Magi, for the sacristy of the Augustines. He returned to his native city in 1647, and was employed in many important works for the churches, the first of which was The Crucifixion, for one of the collegiate chapels, which gained him great reputation. Some of his other principal works are, The Elevation of the Cross; The Assumption of the Virgin; The Conversion of St. Paul; The Raising of Lazarus, and The Crucifixion. He was elected a member, and subsequently a professor, of the Royal Academy at Paris. He died at Liège in 1675. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fleming, Alexander (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of a farmer in Hawkwood, was born July 30, 1747; licensed to preach March 28, 1780; presented by the duke of Hamilton to the living at Hamilton, second charge, and ordained Nov. 17, 1785; appointed one of the king's chaplains in ordinary in Scotland, Sept. 7, 1799, and died May 28, 1830. See Fusti Eccles. Scoti-canae, ii, 261.

Fleming, Alexander (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated at Glasgow University; was licensed to preach Jan. 20, 1801; elected by the parishioners to the living at Neilston, Paisley, in June, and ordained Sept. 27, 1804. The parishioners, in 1826, refused to take the sittings by auction, which led to protracted litigation, ending in an appeal to the House of Lords in April, 1834. The assembly publicly thanked Mr. Fleming, in 1833, for his zeal, labors, and great exertions in the cause. The want of increased accommodation being felt in many other places gave rise to the appointment of a committee of the assembly in May, 1828, for Church accommodation, which merged in May, 1835, into that of the committee for Church extension, and has led to the erection of more than one hundred and fifty additional churches and parishes. Dr. Fleming died June 10, 1845, aged seventy-four years. His publications were numerous, and treated chiefly of Church matters in controversy at the time, one of which related to the building and endowing of churches. He printed An Historical Lecture on Teinds (1835):—a Sermon preached at the admission of Rev. R. Stevenson (1836):—A Letter to Sir Robert Peel (1842):—An Account of the Parish of Neilston. See Fusti Eccles. Scoti-canae, ii, 232.

Fleming, Caleb, D.D., a distinguished English Independent minister, was born at Nottingham in 1698, and studied classical and scientific subjects and mathematics under able teachers in Nottingham and London. The bishops of Winchester and Carlisle made him handsome and liberal offers to enter the Church, but his preference was for nonconformity, and he accepted a pastorate in Bartholomew Close in 1738, with a small salary. He objected to a confession of faith and to the imposition of hands. In 1753 he was appointed to succeed Dr. Foster as minister at Pinner's Hall. Here he labored till his death, July 21, 1779. His published works are mostly of a controversial character, the first issued in 1729, the last in 1775, and they are fifty in number. They show much learning and research, but his doctrines were Socinian in character, and they imbibed his temper and kept him in a continual atmosphere of contention and disputation. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 283.

Fleming, John (1), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of William F., minister of Houston, was licensed to preach April 24, 1734; called in January to the living at Kilmalcolm, ordained June 23, 1737, and died June 30, 1787, aged seventy-five years. He was distinguished for his talents, knowledge, conduct, and piety, which commanded the highest esteem and respect. See Fusti Eccles. Scoti-canae, ii, 251.

Fleming, John (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of Alexander, of Bathgate, was born Jan. 10, 1785; licensed to preach April 22, 1806; called to the living at Bressay in August, and ordained Sept. 22, 1808; transferred to Flisk, Cupar, in 1810, and admitted April 18, 1811; promoted to Clackmannan, Sept. 4, 1832; admitted professor of natural philosophy in the university and King's College, Aberdeen; but in 1843, having become identified with the Free Church, he resigned his position, and two years later became professor of natural science in the Free Church College of Edinburgh. He died Nov. 18, 1857. His writings were chiefly scientific. See Fusti Eccles. Scoti-canae, ii, 251, 494, 697; iii, 424, 697.

Fleming, Patrick, an Irish Roman Catholic ecclesiastic and writer, was born at Louth, April 17, 1599. He was appointed lecturer of divinity at Prague, where he remained until the city was besieged by the elector of Saxony in 1631, when he was murdered. He published Collectanea Sacra, or Lives of Irish and Scotch Saints (1667). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fleming (or Flemmynge), Richard, an English prelate, and the founder of Lincoln College, Oxford, was born at Crofton, in Yorkshire, about 1360, and educated at University College, Oxford. In 1406 he was presented to the prebend of South Newbold, in the Church of York, and in 1407 was proctor of the university. In 1415, being rector of Boston, in Lincolnshire, he exchanged his prebend of South Newbold for that of Langford, in the Cathedral Church of York, and in April, 1420, was promoted to the see of Lincoln. In 1428 he executed that decree of the Council of Constance which ordered that the bones of Wycklif should be taken up and burned. He died at Sleaford, Jan. 25, 1431.

Fleming, Thomas (1), D.D., an Irish prelate, of the family of the barons of Slane, was a Franciscan friar, and for some time a professor of theology in Louvain. He was made archbishop of Dublin, Oct. 23, 1623. In conformity with a proclamation issued by lord Falkland, in April, 1629, the archbishop and mayor of Dublin seized upon several priests in that city in the act of saying mass, their ornaments were taken from them, the images battered and destroyed, and the priests and friars were delivered up to the soldiers. Between the years 1633 and 1640, Dr. Fleming's life appears to have been passed in the unobtrusive exercise of his ecclesiastical duties. In 1640 he presided at a provincial council, which was held at Tycrogher, in the county of Kildare. In 1642 archbishop Fleming, being much annoyed with the affairs of the country, sent the Rev. Joseph Everard to appear as his proxy at the synod of the Roman Catholic clergy, which met at Kilkenny in May of that year. On June 20, 1643, archbishop Fleming and the archbishop of Tuam were the only prelates who signed the commission authorizing Nicholas, viscount Gormanston, Lucas Dillon, Sir Robert Talbot, and others, to treat with the marquis of Ormond for the cessation of arms. In July, 1644, he was present at the general assembly, when the oath of association was agreed upon, whereby every confederate swore to bear true faith and allegiance to the king and his heirs, to maintain the fundamental laws of Ireland, the free exercise of the Roman Catholic faith, and to obey the orders and decrees of the supreme council. In 1649 he was one of those who signed the declaration, at Clonmacnoise, reconciling all former differences. In October, 1650, this prelate, in person, at Galway, signed the document authorizing Dr. Nicholas French, bishop of Ferns, and Hugh Rochfort, to treat and agree with any Catholic prince, state, republic, or person as they might deem expedient for the preservation of the Catholic religion. He died about 1666. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 890.

Fleming, Thomas (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Kirkmichael, was educated at the parish-school of Blairgowrie, at the grammar-school, Perth, and at the universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh. He became tutor to Robert Haldane, of Airthrey, and his brother, who were the founders of the Tabernacle Church; was licensed to preach Nov. 5, 1777; called March 4 to the living at Kirkmichael, and ordained April 29, 1779; transferred to Kenmore July 4, 1780, and presented to the living by the earl of Breadalbane; promoted to Kirkcaldy by George III, in July, 1788; transferred to Lady Yester's Chapel of Ease in Edinburgh, April 17, 1806, and died July 19, 1824, aged seventy years. He was characterized by enlightened piety, holy deportment, the diligent discharge of public and private duty, and the strenuous opposition he gave to infidelity and vice. The benevolent institutions of Edinburgh reaped much advantage from his friendly counsels and aid; he gave particular attention to the affairs of George Heriot's Hospital, the Orphan Hospital, the Edinburgh Education Society, and the Christian Knowledge Society. He published three single Sermons (1790-1809):—Sermons (Edinburgh, 1826):—A Remarkable Agitation of the Waters of Loch Tay (Trans. Royal Soc. Edinb.):—An Account of the Parish of Kirkcaldy:—Memoir of Robert Cathcart, Esq., of Drum. He translated the Shorter Catechism into Gaelic, and assisted in revising the translation of the Scriptures into Gaelic. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 64; ii, 516, 804, 824.

Fleming, William, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Strathaven, studied at Glasgow University; was licensed to preach April 28, 1818; became assistant in succession to the Rev. Dr. Pollock, of Govan, and Dr. Taylor, of St. Enoch's, Glasgow; was presented by George IV., in February, 1826, to the living at Westruther, and ordained May 11; transferred to Old Kilpatrick in August of the same year. Having been elected professor of Oriental languages in Glasgow University, he resigned his benefice Oct. 23, 1832, and died March 3, 1866, aged seventy-four years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 537; ii, 362.

Flemish Version of the Scriptures. This is merely a dialectic variety of the Dutch. It is spoken in East and West Flanders, in Antwerp, and in part of Limburg. It is also spoken in the arrondissements of Brussels and Louvain, in Brabant, and even in parts of the neighboring departments of France. The first printed edition of the Belgic or Flemish Bible appears to have been that published at Delft in 1477, and again at Gouda in 1479. Other editions were printed at Antwerp in 1518 and 1525. In 1526 another translation of the Scriptures into Belgic was made by several learned men, and published at Antwerp. The next edition was that of the Old Test. by William Vosterman, published at Antwerp in 1528; the New Test. was published in 1531, and again in 1533. This edition was followed by others, almost too numerous to be here specified. Many of these editions were afterwards prohibited by the Inquisition, and their continued publication was suspended by the edict of Charles V, in 1546. In spite of this edict, certain divines of the University of Louvain, among others Nicholas von Wingham, a regular canon of Louvain, undertook the revision and correction of the Belgic version according to the last revision of the Vulgate, and this revised edition was published under the sanction of the emperor, at Louvain and Cologne, in 1548. After numerous editions of this version had been issued at Antwerp, it was revised and corrected by the doctors of Louvain, according to the text of the Vulgate, as revised by order of pope Clement VIII. This revised translation was printed by Plantin, at Antwerp, in 1599; again at Cologne in 1604, and at Antwerp in 1626; and it may, perhaps, be regarded as the standard Flemish version. Several other revised editions of this version followed. In 1717, Algidius Wit, a Ghent divine, published another version of the Belgic Scriptures, and about the same time another translation was commenced by Andrew Scurrius, at Gorcum. Two volumes were printed at Utrecht in 1715-17, but the death of the translator, in 1719, put an end to the work, when he had carried it only as far as the Second Book of Kings. It is said to be in the purest dialect of the Flemish. Another Flemish translation, according to the Vulgate, was printed at Antwerp in 1717, and again at Utrecht in 1718. In 1820, in accordance with the wishes of the people, permission was given by the archbishop of Malines to print an edition of the Flemish New Test., translated by Maurenhof. This appeared at Brussels about 1821; an edition of the whole Bible was printed at the same time from the Louvain edition of 1599. In 1837 the British and Foreign Bible Society published an edition of the Flemish Testament under the superintendence of her agent, Mr. W. P. Tiddy, then residing at Brussels. Soon other editions of the Test., and an edition of the entire Bible followed. Of late the British and Foreign Bible Society has undertaken a revision of the Flemish New Test., and in the report for 1877 we read that pastor De Jonghe has, "at the request of the committee, undertaken a new translation of St. Matthew's gospel from the Greek into Flemish, with the assistance of M. Matthysen, of Antwerp. This new version has been ordered, not so much in deference to the wishes of the Belgian Protestant clergy, who make use of the Dutch states-general version, but from a desire not to be restricted in the Flemish to the Louvain translation, which was made from the Vulgate at the end of the 16th century, but to have a version made directly from the original. M. Matthysen is also superintending a new edition of the Louvain Test., in which the orthography will be conformed to that now in general use, and adopted by the Belgian government." Of the revised edition the four gospels and Acts are now circulated. Up to March 31, 1884, the British and Foreign Bible Society had disposed of 248,075 parts of the Flemish Bible version. (B. P.)

Flessa, JOHANN ADAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 24, 1694. He studied at Altdorf, was in 1728 professor at the gymnasium in Bayreuth, and in 1727 court-deacon to the margrave George Friedrich Carl. In 1741 he was called as professor of theology and director of the gymnasium at Altona, and died at Oldenburg, Oct. 11, 1775. He wrote, De Beneficiorum Fundamento in Futurum, ex 1 Tim. 6, 19 (Altdorf, 1716):—Diss. Thes. Theologico-Ecclesiastica (Bayreuth, 1731):—De Illo Paulino ὁ πρὸς οὐρανὸν ad 2 Tim. 2, 15 (ibid. 1733):—De Fatis Babylonis Στοιχειώματα Prophetarum Testibus (Altona, 1748). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 412 sq. (B. P.)

Fletcher, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Leeds, Yorkshire, England, Jan. 10, 1811. He was converted in 1827, licensed in 1829, and was for several years a local preacher in England and America. He joined the New York East Conference in 1852, filling the stations of Summerfield Church, Brooklyn; Birmingham and Bridgeport, Conn.; Seventh Street and Twenty-seventh Street, New York city; Mamaroneck, New York; Meriden, Conn.; Sands Street, Brooklyn; First Church, New Haven; Pacific Street, Brooklyn. He served full terms as presiding elder of Long Island South and New York East Districts. Death closed his successful ministry, April 20, 1880. He was an excellent preacher, and people of mature judgment and scholarship and of cultivated taste, sat under his ministry with delight. See Minutes of Annual Conference, 1881, p. 79.

Fletcher, David, A.M., a Scotch prelate, second son of Andrew, of Dundee, graduated at the University of St. Andrews in 1625; was elected by the town council to the second charge, or collegiate church, at Edinburgh, and admitted May 22, 1635; in 1638 was assaulted and maltreated by several women for refusing to obey some unruly people in the city; was deposed by the commission of assembly, Jan. 1, 1639, for disobeying the General Assembly at Glasgow, and reading and defending the service-book; but restored by the General Assembly in August following; was admitted to the living at Melrose, Feb. 4, 1641; was a member of the commission of assembly in 1645 and 1647; and promoted to the bishopric of Argyll in 1662, yet retaining his benefice in conjunction till his death in March, 1665, aged about sixty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 14, 560.

Fletcher, Giles, an English theologian and poet, nephew of bishop Richard Fletcher, was born about 1588; educated at Cambridge; entered into orders, and became in 1617 rector of Alderton, Suffolk, which position he retained till his death in 1623. Besides some minor effusions, he is thought to have been the author of Christ's Victory and Triumph over Death, a poem of considerable celebrity (Cambridge, 1610, 4to; 1632, 1640, 1783; improved ed. by Grosart, Lond. 1869).

Fletcher, Horace, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Cavendish, Vt., Oct. 28, 1796; graduated from Dartmouth College; studied law, and practiced it in his native village; became a teacher in the academy at North Bennington; was licensed, and in 1843 called to a pastoral charge in the latter place, and so continued until his death at Townshend, Nov. 26, 1871. (J.C.S.)

Fletcher, Joshua, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Kingsbury, Washington Co., N. Y., April 27, 1804; graduated from what is now Madison University in 1829; shortly after was ordained pastor of a Church in Saratoga, where he remained until 1848. His other pastorates were in Armenia and Cambridge, in Southington, Conn., and Wallingford, Vt. He died at Wallingford, May 8, 1882. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 400. (J.C.S.)

Fletcher, Richard, D.D., an English prelate, was probably a native of Kent; graduated from Trinity College in 1563; in September, 1572, was instituted to the prebend of Islington; in 1585 received that of Sutton-Longa, in the Church of Lincoln; in 1589 was promoted by Queen Elizabeth to the bishopric of Bristol; in 1592 was translated to Worcester, and about two years after to the see of London. He died in London, June 15, 1596.

Fleuriau, Louis Gaston, a French prelate, was born in Paris in 1662. After he had been canonist successively of Chartres, abbot of Moreilles, and treasurer of St. Chapelle, he was appointed, in 1698, bishop of Aire, and transferred in 1706 to the episcopal see of Orleans. On his entry into the city he delivered eight hundred and fifty-four debtors from the prison. He died Jan. 11, 1733, leaving Ordonnances Règlements et Aris Synodaux (Orleans, 1736):—Histoire de l'Entrée de Louis Gaston Fleuriau d'Annemontville (Paris, 1707):—Discours Académique (Orleans, ed.). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Floury (Lat. Floriacum), a French town, famous for its Benedictine abbey, was situated in the department of Loiret-on-the-Loire, not far from Sully. The abbey was founded about the year 640, and, after the bones of St. Benedict were transported there in 653, it became very famous. The school founded there by St. Odo was soon known as a seat of learning. The monastery, with its library, was destroyed in 1652 by the Calvinists. See Rocher, L'Histoire de l'Abbaye Royale de St.-Benoit-sur-Loire (Orleans, 1865); Berger, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v. (B. P.)

Floury, André Hercule de, a French statesman and prelate, was born at Lodève, June 22, 1653; studied early at the College of Clermont, in Paris, and afterwards at that of Harcourt; entered into political life, was made bishop of Fréjus about 1707, but left that position in 1715 for the abbey of Tournay, and afterwards for that of St. Stephen, in Caen; in 1726 was made cardinal, and died at Paris, Jan. 29, 1743. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Flexman, Robert, D.D., an English Presbyterian minister, was born at Great Torrington, Devonshire, Feb. 22, 1707-8. He studied for the ministry at Tiverton Academy; in 1730 was ordained at Modbury; next spent five years at Crediton, and four years at Chard, and settled at Bradford, Wilts, in 1739. In 1747 he removed to Rotherhithe, London. In 1783 his health failing, he resigned, and the Church was dissolved, but he continued the morning lecture at St. Helen's. He afterwards preached occasionally as health permitted. His published works were varied. He was a man of prodigious memory, which secured him the task of compiling the general index to the journals of the House of Commons from 1660 to 1697. He published sermons, tracts, and several important biographical sketches of distinguished ministers. He died June 14, 1795. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iv, 361-366.

Flimmer, Johannes, a Lutheran theologian and hymn-writer, was born in 1512. In 1537 he was preacher at Augsburg, in 1553 at Strasburg, and died there in 1578. See Rittelmeyer, Die evang. Kirchenliederdichter des Elsasses (1855); Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, ii, 278 sq. (B. P.)

Flins (or Flinz), in Slavonic mythology, was a manly, bearded figure on a large flint stone (whence the name). The figure is very thin, so that it was held as a skeleton in some places, and thus made this the god of death among the Slavs. From several attributes of the accompanying figure it has been concluded that the black, burned staff indicates a torch, significant of the resurrection. The animal standing by was said to be a lion, because by his loud roaring he would raise the dead.

Flint, Ephraim, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Lincoln, Mass., Nov. 29, 1828. He attended Lawrence Academy at Groton; graduated from Williams College in 1851; the next year was principal of the academy in Westfield, and held the same position in 1855. Meantime (1853-54) he was in charge of Orleans Academy. From 1856 to 1862 he was principal of the high-school in Lee; and thereafter until 1865 occupied the same position in Lynn. Subsequently he was a resident student at Andover, was ordained pastor of the church in Hinsdale, Sept. 19, 1867, and died Nov. 28, 1882. See Cong. Year-book, 1883, p. 22.

Flint, James, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Reading, Mass., Dec. 10, 1779. He studied under the Rev. Eliab Stone, and graduated from Harvard College in 1802; was engaged for a year or two as principal of an academy at Andover; then became a student of theology under the Rev. Joshua Bates, of Dedham. In due time he was licensed to preach; was ordained pastor of the Congregational society in East Bridgewater, Oct. 29, 1806; resigned in 1821; was installed Sept. 19 of that year over the East Society in Salem, and died there, March 4, 1855. His publications consisted chiefly of single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 407.

Flipart, Jean Jacques, a reputable French engraver, was born at Paris in 1723, instructed by his father, Jean Charles, became a member of the Royal Academy, and died in 1789. The following plates, among others, are by him: The Holy Family; Adam and Eve after their Fall; Christ Curing the Paralytic. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Flittner, Johann, a Lutheran theologian and hymn-writer of Germany, was born Nov. 1, 1618. He studied at different universities, was in 1646 deacon at Grimmen, near Greifswalde, and died at Stralsund, Jan. 7, 1678. His hymns are published in Himmlisches Lust-

Gärtlein (Greifswalde, 1661). See Mohnike, Hymnologische Forschungen (Stralsund, 1830), ii, 1 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 442 sq.; iv, 128; viii, 232. (B. P.)

Flora, in Roman mythology, was the goddess of flowers, whose lively festivals were celebrated on April 27. Her first temple was dedicated to her in Rome by the Sabine king Titus Tatius. Her festival, called Floralia, was instituted in the year of the city 516. It was celebrated by plays, dancing, and midnight debauches. The accompanying figure, after an antique statue, may be found in the museum at Naples.

Florence or Worcester, an English monk and chronicler, lived during the end of the 11th and beginning of the 12th century. He acquired a great reputation for learning, and died June 5, 1118. He wrote a Chronicle, which begins with the creation of the world and ends with the year of his death. That part of the work which relates to contemporary events is one of the most valuable of existing authorities. The chronicle was continued from 1118 to 1141 by an anonymous writer. The most accessible edition is a translation, with notes, by Thomas Forester, in Bohn's Antiquarian Library. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Florentina, a Spanish saint, commemorated June 20, was sister of Leander, Isidore, and Fulgentius, and became a nun and superior of the convent near Astigis (Ecija) about the close of the 6th century.

Florentius, a Scotch prelate, was elected to the see of Glasgow in 1202, but was never consecrated. He died at Rome. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 236.

Flores, Alphonso de, a Spanish Jesuit, who died Dec. 11, 1660, is the author of, De Inclyto Agone Martyrii, etc.:—In Cap. xxiv Ecclesiastici. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Flores, Enrique, a Spanish historical scholar, was born at Valladolid, Feb. 14, 1701. He entered the order of St. Augustine, taught theology at the University of Alcalá, and published a Cursus Theologiae (1732-38, 5 vols. 4to). He afterwards devoted himself exclusively to historical studies, and died at Madrid in May or August, 1778. He wrote, Clave Historial (1743):—La España Sagrada (1747-49), a vast compilation of local ecclesiastical history, which obtained a European reputation, and of which twenty-nine volumes appeared in the author's lifetime, and others by later hands at subsequent dates:—and other works of less importance. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Florinus, a presbyter of the Church of Rome, degraded for heresy in the latter part of the 2d century (Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v, 15, 20).

Floriot, Pierre, a French theologian, was born in the diocese of Langres in 1604. He became curate of Lais, a parish near Paris, and finally confessor of the nuns of Port-Royal-des-Champs. He died Dec. 1, 1691, leaving, La Morale du Pater (Rouen, 1672):—Homélies sur les Évangiles (Paris, 1677):—Traité de la Messe (ibid. 1679):—Recueil de Pièces Concernant la Morale Chrétienne (Rouen, 1746). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Floris, Frans, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Antwerp in 1520, and studied sculpture under his uncle, Claude de Vriendt, until he was twenty, when he turned his attention to painting, and entered the school of Lambert Lombard. He afterwards went to Rome and studied there several years. He was favored with the especial patronage of the counts of Hoon and Egmont, and was received into the academy at Antwerp in 1559. His most esteemed work is, The Last Judgment, painted for the Church of Notre Dame, at Brussels, and now in the Museum there; in the Museum at Antioch is his next best work, The Fall of Lucifer. He died in 1570. See Spooner, Biog. Illust. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Flörke, Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Aug. 6, 1874, pastor at Tötenwinkel, near Rostock, is the author of, Die Lehre vom tausendjährigen Reiche (Marburg, 1860):—Vom hochwürdigen Sakramente (Breslau, 1869):—Die letzten Dinge in Vorträgen (Rostock, 1866):—Das Summ-episcopat, seine Bedeutung und sein Fall (Hanover, 1872). (B. P.)

Floss, Heinrich Joseph, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born July 29, 1819, at Wormersdorf, near Rheinbach; received holy orders in 1842; commenced his academical career at Bonn in 1854, and died a professor of theology there, May 4, 1881, leaving, Geschichtliche Nachrichten über die Aachener Heiligtümer (Bonn, 1855):—Die Papstwahlen unter den Ottonen (Freiburg, 1858):—Die Übertragung der heiligen Dreikönige von Mailand nach Köln (Cologne, 1864):—Das kloster Rolandswerth bei Bonn (ibid. 1868). (B. P.)

Flowers, Festival of, a classical festival of the Hindûs, celebrated by the Rajpoots during nine days, in honor of Gauri, the wife of Mahadeva or Jencara. It takes place at the vernal equinox, the ceremonies commencing on the entrance of the sun into Aries, which is the opening of the Hindû year. Clay images are formed of Gauri and Siva, which are immediately placed together. A small trench is then opened in the earth, in which barley is sown. The ground is irrigated, and artificial heat supplied until the grain begins to germinate, when the women with joined hands dance round the trench, invoking the blessing of Gauri upon their husbands. After this the young barley is taken up and presented by the women to their husbands, who wear it in their turbans. Various ceremonies are then performed during several days within the houses, at the close of which the images are richly adorned and carried in a grand procession.

Flügel, Gustav Lebrecht, a German Orientalist, was born Feb. 18, 1802, at Bautzen, in Saxony, and studied theology and philology at Leipsic. He continued his Oriental studies at Vienna under Hammer-Purgstall, and at Paris under De Sacy. In 1851 Flügel was called to Vienna to prepare a catalogue of the Oriental manuscripts of the imperial library. His main work is the Lexicon Bibliographicum et Encyclopædicum a Haji Khalifa Compositum, which he published with a Latin translation and commentary, at the expense of the Oriental Translation Fund of London (Lond. and Leipsic, 1835-58, 7 vols.). He also edited an elegant edition of the Koran (Leipsic, 1834, 1841, 1858), and published Concordantia Corani Arabica (ibid. 1842). Of his other writings we mention, Geschichte der Araber (1832-40, 8 vols.; 2d ed. 1864):—Al-Kindi, genannt der Philosoph der Araber (ibid. 1857):—Mani, seine Lehren und seine Schriften (ibid. 1862):—Die grammatischen Schulen der Araber (ibid. eod.):—Geschichte der Araber bis auf den Sturz des Chalifats von Bagdad (2d ed. 1864), besides contributions to German reviews and cyclopædias. Flügel died at Dresden, July 5, 1870. After his death, Rödiger and Müller published his edition of Kutâb al-Fihrist, of Ibn-al-nadim (1871-72, vols. i and ii). See Dugat, Histoire des Orientalistes (Paris, 1870), ii, 91, 291; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, Flügge, Christian Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 7, 1773, at Winsen, in Lüneburg; studied at Göttingen, where he also lectured after completing his studies; in 1801 took charge of the pastorate of Scharnebeck, in Lüneburg, and died June 21, 1828, leaving, Geschichte des Glaubens (Leipzig, 1794-1800, 3 vols.):—Versuch einer Geschichte der theolog. Wissenschaften (Halle, 1796-98, 8 vols.):—Darstellung des bisherigen Einflusses der Kantischen Philosophie (Hanover, 1796):—Einleitung in die Geschichte der theologischen Wissenschaften (Halle, 1799):—Einleitung in das Studium und in die Literatur der Religions- und Kirchengeschichte (Göttingen, 1801):—Die Himmelfahrt Jesu (Hanover, 1808). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 416 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 5, 509, 529, 562, 604, 634, 779. (B. P.)

Fobes, Perez, L.L.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., Sept. 21, 1742. He graduated from Harvard College in 1762, then taught school, studied theology, and, Nov. 19, 1766, was ordained pastor at Raynham. During the Revolution he was the outspoken friend of liberty, and, notwithstanding his feeble health, volunteered as chaplain in the army in 1777. The president of Brown University, Dr. Manning, having been elected to Congress in 1786, Mr. Fobes was chosen vice-president, and soon after became professor of natural philosophy. These positions, however, did not affect his pastoral charge, and he still resided at Raynham. From 1795 until his death, Feb. 23, 1812, he was a fellow of the university. In 1796 he was called to the supervision of Bristol Academy, to which institution he rendered important aid. The American Academy of Arts and Sciences numbered him among its members. As a preacher, he had more than a common reputation; his sermons were carefully prepared, and were marked by their perspicuous style. In the pulpit his manner was earnest and accompanied by considerable action. His success as a teacher grew out of his rare talent in communicating knowledge. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 645.

Fobian, Mosés, a Jewish writer, who flourished in Greece in the 16th century, published the book of Job with a Neo-Greek translation in Hebrew letters, אִיּוֹב כִּסּוּם הַתְּנִיּוֹת (Constantinople, 1576):—the Proverbs of Solomon in the same manner (ibid. 1548):—the Pentateuch, with a Neo-Greek and Spanish translation (ibid. 1547; Ferrara, 1583). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 285 sq. (B. P.)

Fock, Johann Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 16, 1757, at Neuenmünster, in Holstein. For some time superintendent of the evangelical congregations in Austria and pastor at Vienna, he was called in 1796 to Kiel, where he died, Aug. 23, 1835. He published, Sammlung einiger Kanzelorträge (Vienna, 1791):—Öffentliche Religiöse Vorträge (ibid. 1793):—Anleitung zur gründlichen Erkenntnis der christlichen Religion (ibid. 1794; 6th ed. 1834). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., ii, 93, 178, 205, 208, 221, 273; Zuehold, Bibl. Theol., i, 366. (B. P.)

Focus, the ancient Roman hearth, which was dedicated to the Lares (q. v.) of each family. The domestic hearth was looked upon with such veneration that to swear by the royal hearth was accounted the most sacred oath among the Scythians. On the occasion of religious festivals the hearth was adorned with garlands.

Fodhail, Bex-Aiadh, Abou Ali, a Mohammedan saint and ascetic, was born at Abiwerd (Khorassan) or at Samarcand. He commenced by being a thief on the highway, then he studied the works of Coufa, and settled at Mecca, where he died in the year 187 of the begira (A.D. 803). He is the reputed author of a large number of sentences and replies, some of which may be mentioned here: "God," said he, "multiplies the afflictions of those whom he loves, and the worldly prosperity of those whom he hates;" "Actions of piety which are performed through ostentation are the actions of pagans;" "It is better to be affectionate to one's equals and to try to be agreeable to them, than to spend the night in prayer and the day in abstinences." Fodhail had one day refused the presents of the caliph, Haroun al-Raschid; his companions remarked to him that he ought to have accepted these gifts in order to distribute them among the poor; but he answered, "If this money had been legally acquired, it would have been legal to accept it." Fodhail laughed but once after his conversion, and that was when he heard of the death of his son, "for," said he, "what pleases God, pleases me also." See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Foering, Christian Frederick, an early Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1738, and studied theology under professor Weyberg. His father died in the military service of his country, and his mother brought him, when he was but seven years old, to New York. Afterwards they settled in Philadelphia. He became a school-teacher, then a surveyor, and at last a minister, being licensed in 1770 by the Classis of New York, in the Reformed Dutch Church. He was settled in Germantown, Pa., in 1771; in the German Reformed Church, New York, from 1772 to 1774; and in the Dutch Reformed Church, Hillsborough, or Millstone, N. J., from 1774 to 1779, where he died, March 29 of the latter year. Mr. Foering was of a devout and fervid spirit, and preached in German, Dutch, or English. He was one of the original trustees of Rutgers College. During the American Revolution he espoused the cause of his adopted country with patriotic zeal. See the Millstone Centennial Hist. Discourse, by Rev. E. F. Corwin, one of his successors, p. 47-55; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 83. (W. J. R. T.)

Foinard, Frédéric Maurice, a French theologian, who died at Paris in 1743, is the author of, Explications du Sens Littéral et Spirituel de la Genèse (2 vols.):—Projet pour un nouveau Bréviaire Ecclésiastique (1720):—Breviarium Ecclesiasticum (2 vols.):—Les Psaumes traduits, etc. (1742). See Moréri, Grand Dict. Historique, iv, 110, 230; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Foix, Paul de, a French prelate, was born in 1528; became first a magistrate, and was engaged in royal commissions; but in 1576 was made archbishop of Toulouse, and in 1579 went as ambassador to Rome, where he died about the end of May, 1584. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Foix, Pierre de, cardinal and archbishop of Arles, was born in 1386. Pope Benedict XIII sent him as a legate to the Council at Constance, and he greatly promoted the cause of Martin V, who, after his election, sent him as his legate to the king of Aragon. In 1429 he convened a council at Tortosa, and the then pending differences were harmonized by him. In 1457 he attended the provincial council at Avignon. He died in 1464. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Folcher, John, a Swedish theologian, was a native of Calmar. He studied at Upsal and at Giessen, became master of arts in 1693, licentiate in theology in 1696, professor of philosophy at Calmar in 1698, and of theology at Pernau in 1701. His sympathies with the doctrines of the Pietists involved him in violent controversies, so that he had to flee to Stockholm at the time of the taking of Livonia by the Russians. He then retired to an estate which he possessed in Scania. In 1723 he came back to Stockholm, where he found again the same opposition. He died in 1729, leaving, De Spiritu Animalis (Upsal, 1689):—De G. Fabio Cunc- tatore (Giessen, 1693):—Δογματικά Veri Hominis Christiani, etc. (ibid. 1696):—Streitschriften mit Broems, Gezelius und Humble. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Foley, THOMAS, D.D., a Roman Catholic bishop, was born in Baltimore, Md., March 6, 1822. He graduated from Mount St. Mary's College in 1840, studied theology for six years, was ordained priest, Aug. 16, 1846, served missions in Montgomery County, in a few months was called to St. Patrick's Church, Washington, D. C., in 1848 was appointed secretary to archbishop Eccleston, and in 1851 was made chancellor. In 1864 bishop Spalding of Baltimore selected him as chancellor, and in 1867 as vicar-general. He was appointed to the see of Chicago, Nov. 19, 1869, was consecrated March 27, 1870, and died there Feb. 19, 1879. "In point of person and dignified bearing, Foley was one of the best specimens of a thoroughbred Churchman on this continent. He was a fine pulpit orator, possessed great executive ability, and was beloved by all for his piety and charity." See (N. Y.) Catholic Annual, 1880, p. 41.

Foligno, AGNOLA DE, an Italian nun, was born at Foligno (duchy of Spoleto). She made herself famous by an exalted piety from her early life, but married a nobleman of her native town, yet did not discontinue her religious practices. Being left a widow in the prime of life, she entered a convent of the third order of St. Francis, and connected herself closely with Ubertino de Casal, a monk of the same order, who was famous for his mysticism. According to Ubertino's report, it was Agnola who guided him into the way of salvation, sustaining him by her example and advice. She assisted him also in writing the Arbor Vitæ Crucifixa Jesu (Venice, 1485), a rare and singular book, in which the authors pretend that Jesus himself was the founder of their order. Agnola submitted cheerfully to flagellations and macerations the most painful, saying, "that the surest mark of love is to suffer freely for the one who is loved." She composed a book, giving an account of her various temptations by the evil spirit, published at Paris in 1538, under the title, Theologia Crucis. She died Jan. 4, 1809. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Foliot, Gilbert, a monk of Cluny, was abbot of Gloucester in 1139, and bishop of Hereford in 1148. He was also bishop of London in 1163. He died in 1188, leaving Expositio in Cant. Cantuarum (ed. Junius, 1638). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Foliot, Robert, cousin of bishop Gilbert Foliot, was a native of Devonshire. According to Bale (De Scriptoribus Brit. cent. iii, No. 8), he lived for a long time in France, where he got the surname of Robertus Melodunensis (Robert of Melun). He was first tutor to Becket, by whose favor he succeeded his kinsman in the see of Hereford. He wrote several books, of which that on The Sacrament of the Old Law is the most remarkable. According to bishop Godwin (Lives of the Bishops) Robert de Melun (also bishop of Hereford) was a distinct person from Robert Foliot, and the latter was advanced bishop after the death of Becket. He is also called the archdeacon of Oxford. He died in 1186. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 404.

Fonda, JESSE, an early Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Watervliet, N. Y., in 1786. He was converted in youth, and graduated from Union College with honor, in 1806. The Classis of Albany licensed him to preach in 1809, his theological course having been pursued with some neighboring ministers. He then began a course of systematic and thorough study, which gave high tone to his future ministry. His first settlement was at Nassau, from 1808 to 1813, in connection with the adjacent church of Scholack. His reputation grew so rapidly as a preacher that he was called in the latter year to the First Church of New Brunswick, N. J. Here he sustained himself with marked ability in the presence of the professors and students of the college and theological seminary. In 1817 he removed to the large and flourishing church at Montgomery, N. Y., where he labored until his decease in 1827. Mr. Fonda published several pamphlets upon subjects of current interest, and was the author of a valuable practical volume upon The Sacraments, which elicited considerable discussion as to his views of the nature of the baptism of John the Baptist; viz. that it was not Christian baptism. See Magazine of Ref. Dutch Church, November and December, 1827, ii, 228, 268, 340; Steele, Centennial Discourses; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Fonseca, Aaron and Isaac Dias, two brothers of Portuguese descent, were both strict adherents of orthodox Judaism. When they found that the teachings of the Bible were not in harmony with those of the rabbins, they questioned them with regard to their doubts, which finally had the result that on Feb. 28, 1712, they were both excommunicated from the Jewish community. In the eyes of the Christians they were suspected of being Atheists, and to counteract this suspicion the two brothers appealed to the pastor of the Reformed Church, Hero Siberama, requesting him to examine them. He did so, and openly declared them to be true believers in the Old Test. A more diligent study of the Old Test. in the light of the New brought them to the knowledge of the Messiah, and six months after their excommunication from the synagogue they were received into the Church. The two brothers published, in the Dutch language, in 1714, the reasons for their apostasy from Judaism. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 286; Kalkar, Israel u. die Kirche, p. 64; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Le Roi, Die Evangelische Christenheit und die Juden (Carlsruhe, 1884), p. 415 sq. (R. P.)

Fonseca (Soares), Antonio da (better known by the name of Antonio das Chagas), a celebrated Portuguese theologian, was born at Vidigueira, June 25, 1631. He studied at the University of Evora, and after the death of his father engaged as a simple soldier, but having killed a man in a duel, fled to Brazil. At Bahia he was reformed from a life of licentiousness by reading a treatise of F. Luiz da Granada, and from that time resolved to become a Franciscan. He returned to Europe, and, after some relapses of faith, joined the order of St. Francis of Evora, May 18, 1662. Afterwards he studied theology at Coimbra, established a seminary at Torres-Vedras in 1678, and there died, with the reputation of sanctity, Oct. 20, 1682, leaving the following works, posthumously published: Faiscus de Amor Dicino (Lisbon, 1683):—Obras Espirituales (ibid. 1684, 1687, in 2 parts):—O Padre nosso Commentado (1688):—Expelho do Espirito em que deve ver-se e Compor-se a Alma (1688):—Escola da Penitencia (1687):—Sermoes Genuinos (1690), besides a number of ascetical writings still in MS. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fonseca, Juan Rodriguez de, a Spanish prelate, was born at Toro in 1451. He became successively dean of Seville, bishop of Badajoz, of Cordova, of Valencia and Burgos, and archbishop of Rosana. He accomplished several diplomatic missions. While dean of Seville he was charged with the ordering of the armament destined for the discovery of the New World. Being consulted before on the project of Christopher Columbus, he treated the great navigator as a visionary. He never forgave him for having succeeded, and let pass no occasion for doing him harm, especially after the death of Isabella, when Fonseca, being charged with the management of affairs regarding the New World, pursued with all his hatred the family of Columbus. He was less hostile to Fernando Cortez and to La Casas, who challenged and obtained

In 1520, the dissolution of the council of which this prelate was president. Being a hard man, fanatic and passionate, Fonseca became a great friend of the inquisitor Torquemada. He died at Burgos, March 4, 1524. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Font, BAPTISMAL. The material in the Western Church was, as a rule, stone; frequently porphyry, or other rich marbles. In the Eastern Church the font was usually of metal or wood, and seldom or never possessed any beauty (Neale, Eastern Church, i, 214).

The usual form of the font was octagonal, with a mystical reference to the eighth day, as the day of our Lord's resurrection, and of regeneration by the Spirit (comp. Ambros. Epist. 20, 44). The piscina is sometimes found of a circular form, and is occasionally, though very rarely (as at Aquileia) hexagonal. Gregory of Font in the Baptistery at Aquileia.

Tours (De Glor. Martyr. lib. i, c. 23) speaks of a font in the shape of a cross, in Spain. The form of a sepulchre is stated to have been sometimes adopted, in allusion to the Christian's burial with Christ in baptism (Rom. iv, 4).

The piscina usually formed a basin in the centre of the baptistery, rather beneath the level of the pavement, surrounded with a low wall. It was entered by an ascent and descent of steps. According to Isidore Hispal. (Orig. xv, 4; De Div. Off. ii, 24) the normal number was seven; three in descent, to symbolize the triple renunciation of the world, the flesh, and the devil; three in ascent, to symbolize the confession of the Trinity, and a seventh, "septimus . . . qui et quartus," at the summit of the enclosing wall, for the officiating minister to stand on. But the rule concerning the number was not invariable. At Nocera, the number of steps is five, two in ascent, and three in descent. The descent into the piscina of St. John Lateran is by four steps.

Font, CONSECRATION OF. In the 4th century, the ceremony of blessing the water to be used in baptism was already regarded as of high antiquity (see Basil the Great, De Spiritu Sancto, 27; Ignatius, Ad Ephes. 18; Irenæus, Hæres. i, 21, § 4; Tertullian, De Baptismo, 4; Cyprian, Epist. 70, 71; Sedatus of Thuburbum, Sententia Episc. 18, in Cyprian's Works; Cyril of Jerusalem, Catech. iii, 3; Ambrose, De iis qui Initiuntur, 6). Probably the earliest form extant, which cannot be assumed with certainty to be older than the beginning of the 4th century, is that of the Apostolical Constitutions (vii, 43), in which the priest, after a recitation of the mercies of God, analogous to the preface of the eucharistic office, proceeds, "Look down from heaven, and sanctify this water, and grant grace and power that he who is baptized according to the command of thy Christ may with him be crucified and die, and be buried and rise again to the adoption which is in him, by dying unto sin, but living unto righteousness." Compare Dionysius Areop. Hierarch Eccles. c. 2.

Another ceremony, the pouring in of chrism, generally so as to form a cross on the surface of the water, was probably of later introduction, though it is found at least as early as the 6th century.

Amalarius (De Eccl. Off. i, 25) expressly mentions insufflation as one of the rites in exorcism (q. v.). After the expulsion of the evil spirit by exorcism, he simply says, "munitur aqua crucis signaculo," not distinctly mentioning the pouring in of chrism in the form of a cross.

In the Gregorian Sacramentary (p. 71-73) is mentioned another rite, that of plunging tapers into the water to be consecrated. Two lighted tapers are carried before the bishop to the font; after the benediction, the aforesaid two tapers are plunged into the font, and the bishop "insufflates" on the water three times. After this the chrism is poured into the font, and the children are baptized. The ceremony mentioned by

Consecration of the Baptismal Water by a Taper. (From a Pontifical of the 9th Century.)

Amalarius (De Eccl. Off. i, 25), of plunging the tapers of the neophytes into the font, seems to be distinct from this.

Fontaine, NICOLAS, a French theologian, was born at Paris in 1625. At the age of twenty he joined the Port-Royalists, and soon became intimately acquainted with Nicole, Arnauld, De Sacy, and others. In 1666 he was imprisoned with De Sacy. After his release he lived at different places, and finally died at Melun, Jan. 28, 1709. He wrote, Histoire de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament (Paris, 1670);—Psalmes de David (1674);—Explication du Nouveau Testament (1675, 4 vols.; 1685, 2 vols.);—Vies des Patriarches (1688);—Vies des Prophètes (1693);—Dictionnaire Chrétien (1691, 1712);—Sermons de St. Grégoire de Nazianze (1698, 2 vols.);—Homélies de St. Chrysostôme, sur les Epîtres de St. Paul (7 vols.), besides other works. He is best known by his posthumous work, Mémoires pour Servir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal (Cologne, 1736). Fontana, Carlo, a famous Italian architect, was born in 1638, and died at Rome in 1714. He wrote, Il Tempio Vaticano, etc. (Rome, 1694, fol.);—Descrizione della Capella del Fonte Baptismale nella Basilica Vaticana (ibid. 1697). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 814; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Fontana, Domenico, an eminent Italian architect, was born near lake Como in 1543; studied architecture at Rome, and while there was employed to erect the chapel of the Persepio in Santa Maria Maggiore. The pope, being desirous of raising an obelisk in the square of St. Peter's, collected about five hundred mathematicians, engineers, and learned men, among whom Fontana's plan was approved, and with the assistance of one hundred and forty horses and eight hundred men, he removed this immense mass, weighing about 750,000 pounds. For this undertaking he was created a knight of the Golden Spur, and a Roman nobleman. He afterwards erected other obelisks in Santa Maria Maggiore. He died at Naples in 1607. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fontana, Francesco Ludovico, an Italian prelate, was born Aug. 28, 1750, at Casala Maggiore (duchy of Milan); entered the Barnabite order in 1767; eventually became professor of eloquence in the College of Milan, where he acquired great fluency in the Greek language; in 1804 he accompanied Pius VII to France, and on the return of the pope to Rome was made cardinal, March 8, 1816, placed at the head of the congregation of the Index, still retaining his title as superior-general of the Barnabites. He died at Rome, March 13, 1824. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fontana, Lavinia, an eminent Italian painter, daughter of Prospero Fontana, was born at Bologna in 1552, and studied under her father. She painted a number of works for the Bolognese churches, of which the best are, The Miracle of the Loaves; The Annunciation; and The Crucifixion. She subsequently went to Rome, where she practiced portrait-painting with great success. She died at Rome in 1614. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fontana, Prospero, an eminent historical and portrait painter, was born at Bologna in 1512, and studied under Francucci. His masterpiece is at Bologna, in Santa Maria della Grazie. In the same church is an admirable picture of The Annunciation, by him. He also executed the Descent from the Cross, in the Bolognese Academy. He died in 1597. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fontanés, Ferdinand, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Nîmes, May 15, 1797. He studied at Geneva, and entered the ministry in 1821. While discharging his ministerial duties at his native place, there occurred, in 1824, a vacancy in the theological faculty at Montauban. Fontanés made an application, and passed such an excellent examination that his appointment became a matter of course. Rumors from Nîmes having reached the faculty as to some liberal opinions of the candidate, it was thought best to prepare a theological formula which Fontanés was to sign. But he refused to do this on conscientious grounds. In 1826 he succeeded M. Olivier Desmont at Nîmes, and died there, Jan. 9, 1862. Of his writings we mention, besides his many articles in the Évangéliste: Catéchisme Évangélique (8th ed. 1867):—Histoire Sainte, in questions and answers (4th ed. 1866):—De l'Unité Religieuse dans l'Église Réformée de France (1844):—De la Lutte Engagée dans les Églises Protestantes (1842). Fontinalia, a festival celebrated annually among the ancient Romans on Oct. 13, when the wells were adorned with garlands, and flowers thrown into them.

Foote, Charles Henry, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lenox, Mass., June 17, 1825. He prepared for college at Rochester, N. Y.; graduated from Williams College in 1849; taught one year at the academy at Mendon; studied law one year; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1854; was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery, and afterwards ordained pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of that city. After an earnest and successful pastorate of three and a half years, he removed to the West; in 1866 was installed pastor at Jerseyville, Ill.; next at Cairo, in 1868; over the North Church of St. Louis, Mo., in 1871; over the Walnut Street Church, Evansville, Ind., in 1876, and at Ionia, Mich., in 1879, where he died, June 28, 1880. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 72. (W. P. S.)

Foote, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of the Rev. James Foote, minister of retterclairn, graduated from Marischal College and the University, Aberdeen, March 31, 1798; was licensed to preach July 25, 1804; presented by king George III to the living at Logie, and ordained Dec. 21, 1809; promoted to the third charge at Aberdeen in November, 1824, and admitted June 23, 1825; joined the Free Secession May 24, 1848, and died June 25, 1856, aged seventy-four years. He published four single Sermons (Dundee, 1813; Lond. 1819):—Lectures on the Gospel by Luke (Glasgow, 1838, 6 vols.):—Pastoral Letter to the Congregation of the Free East Church (Aberdeen, 1844):—A Treatise on Effectual Calling (Edinb. 1846):—A Sermon in the Free Church Pulpit (vol. i). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticae, iii, 473, 838.

Foote, William Henry, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Colchester, Conn., Dec. 20, 1794. He entered Yale College in the junior year; spent some time teaching, and then entered and studied for one year in Princeton Theological Seminary. Having been licensed by the Presbytery of Winchester in October, 1819, he preached at various missionary stations in Virginia until June, 1822, when he organized and afterwards became pastor of a church in Woodstock. In November, 1824, he became pastor of the congregations of Mount Bethel, Springfield, and Romney; about 1838 agent of the Central Board of Foreign Missions, laboring within the bounds of the synods of Virginia and North Carolina. While thus engaged, he gathered the materials for his volumes, afterwards published, of Sketches, Historical and Biographical, of the Presbyterian Church in Virginia and North Carolina. In 1845 he returned to his old charge in Romney, and continued till 1861. During the war he was occupied in lower Virginia as agent for Hampden-Sidney College, also in supplying vacant pulpits, and in Petersburg, during Grant's siege, as chaplain to the hospital. He returned to Romney and Springfield (now in West Virginia), and labored till his death, Nov. 22, 1869. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1870; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 27.

Footprints, MONUMENTAL. Sepulchral slabs have been found in the catacombs and elsewhere incised with footprints. The two feet as a rule point the same way, though sometimes, but rarely, they are turned in opposite directions. A slab in the Kircherian Museum bears two pairs of footprints pointed contrary ways, as of a person going and returning (fig. 1). Some of these slabs are certainly Christian, though the fact in other cases is uncertain. A slab given by Bollelli, inscribed with JANUARIA IN DEO at one end, bears the sole of a foot, with IN DEO incised upon it, at the other. Perret gives a slab erected by a Christian husband to his wife, with a pair of footprints incised on it, not bare, as is customary, but shod in shoes or sandals. Sometimes, but more rarely, we find a single foot seen in profile.

The signification of this mark is much controverted. Some regard the footprint as the symbol of possession, denoting that the burial-place had been purchased by the individual as his own. This view is based on a false etymology. The idea that a sense of their loss and a deep regret and affection for the departed was thus indicated is a mere romantic fancy. More may be said for the view, that as such emblems were sometimes dedicated as votive offerings by travellers on their return from a journey, they were intended on a Christian slab to indicate a holy thankfulness for the safe completion of the earthly pilgrimage of the departed. Another, more prosaic, but by no means improbable, interpretation, especially of a single foot, is that it was a thank-offering for recovery from gout or other disease affecting the foot.

The same emblem is frequently found on seal rings. The sole of the foot bears sometimes the name of the owner, e.g. FORVIVIVS (Boldetti, p. 506; Perret, vol. iv, pl. xi, No. 4); JVASVVS (Aringhi, ii, 698; Agincourt, Sculpt. pl. viii, No. 23), from the catacomb of St. Agnes; sometimes a Christian motto or device, e.g. SPES IN DEO (fig. 2) (Perret, u. a. No. 5), and the monogram of Christ (ib. No. 6). In an example given by Perret (vol. iv, pl. xxiii, No. 21), we see the stamp of such a seal bearing the sole of a foot, with PAVLI incised on it, five times repeated on the mortar in which a gilt glass had been imbedded, in the catacomb of St. Sixtus.

Forbes, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was rector of Fettercairn, in Mearns, and was promoted to the see of Caithness, Nov. 12, 1606, where he sat until he was translated to Aberdeen in 1615. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 217.

Forbes, Alexander Penrose, D.C.L., a Scotch bishop, was born in Edinburgh, June 6, 1817. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, the University of Glasgow, and Haileybury College. In 1836 he went to Madras, India, but finding the climate unfavorable to his health, was obliged after two or three years to return to England. He then entered Brasenose College, Oxford, graduated in 1844, was ordained in the English Church, and held an English curacy. In 1846 he became vicar of St. Saviour's, Leeds, and in the following year was appointed bishop of Brechin. Being prosecuted for heresy, on account of some opinions set forth in his primary charge, delivered and published in 1857, he was acquitted with "a censure and an admonition." He died at Dundee, Oct. 8, 1875, leaving treatises on the Nicene Creed, the Thirty-nine Articles, various commentaries and devotional works, discourses, and reviews. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Forbes, George, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, second son of the minister at Leochel, graduated from Marischal College and the university, Aberdeen, March 31, 1797; was licensed to preach July 12, 1803; presented in November following to the living at Strathdon, and ordained March 1, 1804; resigned his cure in November, 1829, and retired from the ministry Jan. 27, 1830. He died suddenly, Feb. 16, 1834, aged fifty-five years. He discharged the duties of his ministry with zeal, and his labors were crowned with eminent success. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 565.

Forbes, John, a Scotch clergyman, third son of William Forbes of Corse, was born about 1566; studied at San Salvador's College, and took his degree from the University of St. Andrews in 1583; was admitted to the living at Alford in 1593. He was commissioned in 1605 to wait upon the king to inform his majesty what the assembly of Aberdeen had done in opposition to the royal pleasure, he having been the moderator. The privy council condemned him to be imprisoned, first in Edinburgh castle, then in the castle at Blackness. In 1606, he, with five others, was tried at Linlithgow on the charge of treason, declining to acknowledge the authority of the privy council, and banished, Oct. 28, 1606, for life. He went to Sedan in 1607, became the minister to the British merchants at Middleburgh, laid the foundation of a Scottish church there in 1611, removed to the church at Delft in 1621, was displaced by order of the British government, and died about 1634. He published, The Saint's Hope, and its Infirmitie (1608):—Two Sermons (eod.):—A Treatise Tending to the Clearing of Justification (1616, 4to):—A Treatise how God's Spirit may be Discerned from Man's Spirit (Lond. 1617):—Four Sermons on 1 Tim. vi (1635, 4to):—Certain Records Touching the Estate of the Kirk in 1605, 1606:—Three Letters to James VI (1851). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 545.

Forbes, Lewis William, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated at the university and King's College, Aberdeen, March 29, 1811; was licensed to preach July 4, 1815; presented to the living at Boharm in June, and ordained Aug. 20, 1816; elected moderator of the General Assembly in May, 1852, and died Jan. 8, 1854, aged sixty years. He occupied a prominent position in the Church in the North, was most exemplary in the discharge of his duties, and much esteemed. He published the sermon he preached at the opening of the General Assembly in 1853, and also An Account of the Parish of Boharm. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 228, 898.

Forbes, Patrick, a Scotch clergyman, son of the Rev. Francis Forbes of Grange, graduated from Marischal College and the university, Aberdeen, in 1798; was appointed schoolmaster of the parish of Boharm, May 1 following; licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Strathbogie, May 3, 1797; presented to the living at Boharm in May, and ordained Aug. 14, 1800; promoted to Old Machar, second charge, April 25, 1816; was elected moderator of the General Assembly in May, 1829, and died Oct. 13, 1847, aged seventy-two years. He published Considerations on the Constitution of the Church of Scotland (Edinb. 1841), and translated Principles of Interpretation of the Old Testament, by J. H. Pateau, in the Biblical Cabinet, vol. viii. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 220, 488, 898.

Forbin-Janson, CHARLES AUGUSTE MARIE JOSEPH, Comte de, a French prelate, was born in Paris, Nov. 3, 1785; early became a politician, but shortly after entered the seminary of St. Sulpice; was ordained in 1811; immediately became grand-vicar of the diocese of Chambéry; was consecrated bishop of Nancy and Toul in 1824; during the political dangers following he took refuge in Canada, but returned to France, and died near Marseilles, July 12, 1844. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Ford, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated from Edinburgh University, April 14, 1743; was licensed to preach Nov. 26, 1746; ordained July 31, 1751, as minister to the congregation at Warrford; presented by the earl of Lauderdale to the living at Lauder; admitted Sept. 27, 1753, and died Sept. 24, 1810, aged eighty-six years. He published two single Sermons (1777-78), and An Account of the Parish of Lauder. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 521.

Ford, Simon, a divine and Latin poet of some notoriety, was born in East Ogwell, Devonshire, in 1619, and educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1651 he was vicar of St. Laurence, Reading, of Northampton in 1659, and in 1685 of Old Swinford, Worcestershire. He died in 1699. He was one of the translators of Plutarch's Morals, printed in 1684, and published a number of sermons, Latin poems, etc., from 1646 to 1696, a list of which will be found in Athen. Oxon. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fordicidia, a festival celebrated annually in the month of March among the ancient Romans. It was instituted by Numa, in consequence of a general barrenness which happened to prevail among the cattle. The name was derived from the sacrifice of a Forda, that is, a cow with a calf.

Fore-jotre, in Norse mythology, was the principal Jote, i. e. the oldest giant, the forefather of the ancient Forjoutnian deities, who ruled over Scandinavia prior to the Asas, and were driven out by Odin. Their history lies so far in the past that little is known of them save their name; but from this we deduce a mythology personifying nature. Fore-jotre had three sons: Æger, the sea; Kare, the air; Loge, the fire; and one daughter: Ilan, theft. This last was the wife of Æger, and by him she had nine daughters: Himing-läfa, the heaven-threatening; Dufa, the deep; Blodugadda, the bloodthirsty; Heffring, the rising; Udur, the falling; Raun, the rustling; Hylgia, the storm; Dröbna, the threatening; Kolga, the flood. Kare, the air, produced Frosta, the frost; the latter produced Snio-hingamble, the icy snow. Loge, the third son of Fore-jotre, married Glod, the flame; and by him she had Einmiria, the coal, and Eisa, the ashes. See NORSE MYTHOLOGY.

Foreman, Andrew, was prothonotary apostolic in Scotland in 1499, in 1501 was promoted to the see of Moray, and together with it held in commendam the priories of Pittenweem in Scotland, and of Cottingham in England. About 1506 he was appointed by king James IV as his ambassador, to procure a personal conference between him and Henry, king of England. In 1514 he was translated to the see of St. Andrews, and in 1517 was also perpetual commendator of the monastery of Dunfermline. He died in 1522. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 35, 146.

Formalists, a sect of thinkers which arose in the 12th century, as a compromise between the doctrines of the Nominalists and Realists. They professed to hold an intermediate place between the two parties, abstracting the forms of things, and assigning to them the place of universals. Duns Scotus is said to have originated formalism, although the elements of the doctrine were to be found in the writings of mediæval philosophers anterior to his time.

Forman, Aaron Parker, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born Nov. 12, 1827, in Ralls County, Mo. He was converted at the age of eleven; graduated from Centre College, Ky., in 1849, with the highest honors of his class, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1853; preached that year in Hannibal, Mo., and in March, 1854, was ordained pastor there. In 1864 he was called to St. Joseph, where he acted with great prudence, fidelity, and zeal. In 1870 broken health compelled him to resign, and travel in Minnesota and Colorado; and after serving in the Price Street Church, St. Louis, Mo., in March, 1872, he became pastor of the Church in Canton, Miss. He died at Courtland, Ala., Oct. 14, 1875. Dr. Forman was a man of great gentleness and amiability of character, combined with unusual firmness and sound judgment; an excellent scholar, a popular preacher, and a beloved pastor. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 178. (W. P. S.)

Formosans, Religion of the. Formosa is a large island in the China Sea, called in Chinese Tai-Wan, 245 miles in length from north to south, and about 100 miles in breadth at the broadest part, containing an area of 14,982 square miles. The religion of the islanders is polytheistic in its character, there being recognised among them a plurality of deities, two of whom are regarded as supreme, one of them residing in the north, and the other in the east. The one is a guardian of men, the other, who is a goddess, the guardian of women. They acknowledge also another deity who resides in the north, and is an evil spirit. There are two gods of war, a god of health, a god of forests, and a god of cornfields. They have also household gods, who preside over the several departments of nature. The worship of the gods, which consists of invocations, sacrifices, and libations, is conducted by priestesses called Juibas, who work themselves up to a frenzy, or fall into a trance, during which they pretend to hold familiar intercourse with the gods. The Formosans acknowledge the immortality of the soul, and always erect a bamboo hut for the dwelling of the spirit of a departed relative or friend. They also hold to future rewards and punishments, but have no idea of the resurrection of the body. An attempt was made by the Dutch in the 17th century to Christianize the island, but without success. They are now in gross heathenism.

Formula, in ecclesiastical phrase, is a profession of faith.

Formacalia, a festival celebrated among the ancient Romans in honor of the goddess of baking, Formaz. It is said to have been instituted by Numa, and the time of its celebration was announced every year by the Curio Maximus.

Fornari, Maria Victoria, an Italian foundress of a religious order, was born at Genoa in 1562. She was married to Angelo Strate, by whom she had five children, who all devoted themselves to the Church. After the death of her husband, she instituted the order of the Celestial Annonciades, which had over a hundred houses in Italy, Germany, and France. The nuns were dressed in white robes, with a light blue shawl. She died Dec. 15, 1617. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fornari, Niccolo, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome, Jan. 28, 1788. He studied with ardor, was received into orders, and devoted himself to instruction in theology. Pope Gregory XVI made him nuncio to Brussels. He was afterwards appointed a chief commissioner of the congregation of studies. Fornari was made cardinal in petto, Dec. 21, 1846, and proclaimed as such Sept. 30, 1850. He was for some time papal nuncio at Paris, where he died, June 15, 1856. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Forrest, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, Sept. 19, 1799. He graduated from Edinburgh University, studied theology, received a call from the Scotch Presbyterian Church of Charleston, S. C., in June, 1832, and being ordained by the Edinburgh Presbytery, was in due time installed pastor. He continued there until his death, which occurred in July, 1879. (W. P. S.)

Forrester, Walter, a Scotch prelate, was first a canon of the Church of Aberdeen, next was made secretary of state, and then promoted to the bishopric of Brechin in 1401, where he was still ruling in 1415. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 168.

Forsete, in Norse mythology, was a son of Baldr, and Nanna, the lovely daughter of Nef. He was the god of peace, union, and friendship; pacifying every quarrel. A beautiful palace called Giltner, resting upon golden pillars, and covered with silver shingles, was his throne, which constituted the most righteous judgment-seat of the world.

Förstemann, Carl Eduard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, secretary at the university library in Halle, who died in 1847, published, Brück's Geschichte der Religionsveränderung (in the Archiv für die Geschichte der Kirchl. Reformation, Halle, 1831):—Urkundenbuch zu der Geschichte des Reichstages zu Augsburg im Jahre 1580 (1833, 2 vols.):—Zehn Briefe Dr. Johann Forster's an Johann Schrudi (Nordhausen, 1835):—Luther's Testamente aus den Jahren 1537 und 1542 (ibid. 1846):—Denkmale dem Dr. M. Luther von der Hochachtung und Liebe seiner Zeitgenossen errichtet (ibid. eod.).—Luther's Tod und Begräbniss im Jahre 1546 (ibid. eod.). See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Forster, Froben, a German philosopher and ecclesiastic, was born Aug. 30, 1709, at Königsberg. He studied at Regensburg, where he also joined the Benedictines, and took holy orders in 1733. In 1744 he was called to Salzburg, but in 1747 was recalled to his monastery, and became its prior in 1750. In 1762 he was made abbot, and died Oct. 11, 1791. He wrote, besides philosophical treatises, De Scriptura Sacra Vulgata Editio (Salzburg, 1748), and edited Alcuini Opera (ibid. 1777, 4 vols. fol.). (B. P.)

Förster, Heinrich, D.D., an eminent Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born Nov. 24, 1800, at Gross-Glogau. He studied at Breslau, and received holy orders in 1825. While chaplain and pastor at Landshtut, his pulpit abilities became known, and he was called, in 1837, as cathedral-dean to Breslau. When bishop Diepenbrock died in 1853, Förster was appointed as "persona gratissima" his successor. At the Vatican council he belonged to the opposition party, but finally yielded, and accepted the dogma of infallibility. Not obeying the so-called May-laws of the Prussian government, he was deposed, in 1875, from his office, and fled to the castle in Johannsburg, in Austro-Silesia, where he died, Oct. 20, 1881. He is the author of, Lebensbild Diepenbrocks (Breslau, 1869):—Predigten (ibid. 1851, 7 vols.; 5th ed. Ratisbon, 1878):—Pastoral Letters (Breslau, 1880, 2 vols.). See Franz, Heinrich Förster, Fürstbischof von Breslau, ein Lebensbild (Breslau, 1876). (B. P.)

Forster, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 25, 1576. He studied at Leipzig, was in 1599 preacher there, in 1601 rector at Schneeberg, in 1609 professor of theology at Wittenberg, and in 1613 general superintendent and president of the consistory at Mansfeld. He died Nov. 17, 1613, leaving, Systema Problematum Theologicorum:—Vindiciae Lutheri:—Comment. in Jesaiam:—Thesaurus Catecheticus:—Comment. in Jeremiam Ejusque Threnos:—Medulla Capituli 53 Jesaiæ Disputationibus 5 Expressa:—Passio Christi Typica ex Paulinis et Prophetis, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Förster, Johann Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Auerstädt, in Thuringia, Oct. 6, 1754. He studied at Leipzig, was in 1782 afternoon-preacher at Naumburg, and in 1794 cathedral-preacher there; in 1800 accepted a call as superintendent to Weissenfels, and died there at the end of that same year. He published a number of ascetical books. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 418 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 182, 207, 213, 224, 252, 331, 366, 394. (B. P.)

Forsyth, John Alexander, LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, son of John Forsyth, graduated from the university and King's College, Aberdeen, in 1786; was licensed to preach Oct. 13, 1790; presented by the king to the living at Belhelvie, in succession to his father, in January, 1791, and ordained Aug. 24 following. He died June 11, 1843, aged seventy-four years. To his knowledge of theology and the pastoral office he added a profound knowledge of chemistry, and was of great service to the British government in the manufacture of gunpowder. He was the discoverer, in 1805, of the percussion-lock, which was afterwards universally adopted, both in the army and by sportsmen; but he never received any public reward. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticæ, iii, 495.

Fortiguerra, Niccolo (1), a Dominican of Sienna, was born in 1180, made bishop of Aleria in 1264, and died in 1270, leaving Postilla in IV Prophetas Majores, in IV Evangelia, in Epistolus Pauli et in Apocalypsin:—Comment. in Dionysium de Divinis Nominibus:—De Duabus in Christo Naturis:—De Calibuto. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fortiguerra, Niccolo (2), an Italian cardinal of the 15th century, who rendered important military and diplomatic service to popes Eugenius IV, Nicholas V, Pius II, and Paul II, and was a liberal patron of learning, died at Viterbo in 1473, aged fifty-five years.

Fortiguerra, Niccolo (3), an Italian prelate and poet, surnamed the Younger, to distinguish him from an ancient member of his family, the cardinal of the same name, was born at Pistoja, Nov. 25, 1674. While still young, he showed quite a disposition for poetry; but after he had been made doctor, in 1695, he went to Rome, and distinguished himself there by his knowledge. He accompanied into Spain the papal legate, Zondadari, and on his return to Rome became honorary chamberlain to Clement XI, canon of Santa Maria Maggiore, and referendary of two chancelleries. About the same time he was admitted into the academy of the Arcades, under the name of Nidulmo Tiseo. In 1715 he improvised a poem in the manner of Berni, Du Pulci, and Ariosto. He died Feb. 17, 1735, leaving several orations, addresses, and other minor pieces, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fortius, Johannes, a convert from Judaism, who lived in the 16th century, is the author of a Hebrew grammar, entitled סדר דקדוק (Prague, 1670):—De Mystica Litterarum Significatione (part of it reprinted in Kircher's Edipus Aegyptiacus, Rome, 1652-54). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 287; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fortlage, Arnold Rudolph Karl, a German philosopher, was born June 12, 1806, at Osnabrück. He first studied theology at Göttingen and Berlin, but, attracted by Hegel's lectures, betook himself entirely to the study of philosophy, which he continued in 1829 at Munich, under Schelling. In the same year he commenced his philosophical lectures at Heidelberg; in 1845 he was at Berlin, and in the following year accepted a call to Jena, where he died, Nov. 8, 1881. Of his works we mention, Die Lücken des Hegel'schen Systems der Philosophie, etc. (Heidelberg and Leipzig, 1832):—Philosophische Meditationen über Platon's Symposium (Heidelberg, 1835):—Aurelii Augustini Doctrina de Tempore (ibid. 1836):—Genetische Geschichte der Philosophie seit Kant (Leipzig, 1852):—Das System der Psychologie als empirischer Wissenschaft aus der Beobachtung des innern Sinnes (ibid. 1855, 2 vols.):—Acht Psychologische Vorträge (Jena, 1869):—Sechs Psychologische Vorträge (1870):—Vier Psychologische Vorträge (1874):—Beiträge zur Psychologie als Wissenschaft aus Spekulation und Erfahrung (Leipzig, 1875), as a supplement to his System. His position concerning the philosophy of religion Fortlage had already defined in the Darstellung und Kritik der Beweise für das Dasein Gottes (Heidelberg, 1840). The belief in God is not a matter of rational persuasion, but rests entirely on moral motives. Religion is essentially a moral state, and only the translation of this state into the idea is the dogma of God's existence. Philosophic speculation had the peculiar fate that it commenced with the secondary factor of the religious consciousness, and found itself, and this against its own will, only towards the end driven back to the other. This turn, so rich in consequences, commenced with Kant—after him the philosophy of religion, instead of advancing, has only been protracted. But Kant, too, needs to be supplemented: the purely transcendental belief, emanating from a moral and religious need, asks for precise points from which it connects with the material world; it necessarily wishes to know the places, where upon entering into the world, it can suppose the efficiency of the character of its moral persuasion, in accordance with reason and experience. This is the gap which Fortlage endeavored to fill out in his lectures on the philosophy of religion. Besides these works he wrote, Das musikalische System der Griechen, etc. (Leipzig, 1847):—the article "Griechische Musik," in Ersch and Gruber's Allg. Encyclopädie, lxxxi, 175-245 (ibid. 1863):—Die Gesänge Christlicher Vorzeit (Berlin, 1844, containing translations of Greek and Latin hymns):—Vorlesungen über die Geschichte der Poesie (Stuttgart, 1839). (B. P.)

Förtsch, MICHAEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 24, 1654, at Wertheim, in Franconia, studied at different universities, was in 1695 professor at Tübingen, in 1705 professor at Jena, and died April 24, 1724. He published, Commentarius ad Ambrosii Libros de Officiis:—Institutio Iuristica de Justitia et Jure:—De Origine, Veritate, et Immutabili Rectitudine Juris Naturalis, etc.:—Vindictæ Doctrina de Divina Scripturæ Sacre Inspiratione:—Dissertationes ad Ezech. iii, 17-19; Hos. v. 6; Mult. xix, 28; x, 22; Rom. i, 4; i, 17; i, 19, 20; viii, 14; viii, 21; Tit. i, 1, 2; Hebr. ii, 10, 11, etc. See Köcher, Schediasma de Fila, Scriptis, ac Meritis Fartschii in Ecclesiam (1725); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fortunatus, an Italian hagiographer, was born at Vercellæ in the beginning of the 6th century. He has been confounded sometimes with Fortunatus Venantius. He merited by his knowledge the surname of the Philosopher of the Lombards, and was elevated to the episcopate; it is not known, however, in what diocese. He was obliged to leave his church, but for what reason is unknown; retired to France, where he bound himself in friendship with St. Germanus, bishop of Paris; and died at Chelles, near Paris, about 569. He wrote the Life of St. Marcellus. The Life of St. Hilary has also been attributed to him. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Fortunatus's (VENANTIUS) Hymns. Fortunatus is the author of the following hymns: Vexilla Regis Prodeunt (q. v.), translated into English ("The royal banners forward go") by Neale, in Medieval Hymns and Sequences (Lond. 1867), p. 6:—Quem Terra, Pontus, Æthera (English translation, "The God whom earth and sea and sky," in Hymns Ancient and Modern):—Pange Lingua, Gloriosi (q. v.):—Cruz Benedicta Nitet (the original is found in Trench, Sacred Latin Poetry, p. 130 sq., and an English translation, "The blessed cross shines now to us," in Lyra Messianica, p. 220 sq.):—Salve, Festa Dies, toto Venerabilis Ego (q. v.):—Agnosce Omne Sæculum, on the nativity of Christ:—Tibi Laus Perennis Author, on baptism. "The poetry of Venantius Prudentius," says Mr. Yule (Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.), "represents the expiring effort of the Latin muse in Gaul. Even the poet himself felt the decadence not merely of language, but of thought, which characterizes his verse,

'Ast ego senans inops . . .
Fæce gravis, ærnoque levis, ratione pigrescens,
Mente hebes, arte carens, usq. rudi,' (Vit. S. Martin, v. 26-28).

and it is difficult to dissent from the severe judgment he has passed upon himself. His style is pedantic, his taste bad, his grammar and prosody seldom correct for many lines together. Two of his longer poems, however, display a simplicity and pathos which are foreign to his usual style. One of these treats of the marriage of Galesinthia, sister of Brunehart, with Chilperic; the other is the elegy upon the fall of Thuringia. For what is of real merit in these two pieces we are in all probability indebted to the genius of Rhadegund rather than to any sudden access of inspiration in the poet himself." See Trench, Sacred Latin Poetry; Daniel, Theatrum Hymnologicum, i, 168 sq.; Bormann, Ueber das Leben des Lateinischen Dichters Fortunatus (Fulda, 1848). (B. P.)

Fortune, in Roman and Greek mythology, "chance." This goddess, called Tyche by the Greeks, was represented at Egira, in Achaia, in a small temple, by the horn of Amalthæa, and a small winged Cupid, which signified that the love-affairs of men were furthered more by fortune than by beauty. Pindar, therefore, called her one of the Parcæ, or goddesses of destiny. The Fortuna of the Romans had temples in various parts of the city, and in several cities of the empire, those at Antium (Horace, Od. i, 85) and Præneste being the most celebrated.

Fortunio, AGOSTINO, Antique Statue of Fortune. an Italian member of the order of the Camakdules, who lived in the 16th century, is the author of, Historiarum Camakduleum Libri 8 (Florence, 1575):—Historiarum Camakduleum pars Posterior (Venice, 1579):—De Origine Ordinis Camakduleum (Florence, 1592). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 714; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Forty Martyrs. (1) This number of soldiers is commemorated on March 9, as having suffered under Licinius in 320, at Sebaste, in Armenia. (2) Another set of forty martyrs is commemorated on May 20, as having suffered in Persia, A.D. 375. (3) Forty virgins are said to have suffered on Dec. 24, under Decius, at Antioch, in Syria.

Foscarari (Lat. Forsherarius), EGIDIO, an Italian Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Bologna, Jan. 27, 1512. He entered the Dominican order, and in 1544 became prior and inquisitor at his native place, and afterwards bishop of Modena. He was imprisoned for heresy by Paul V, but vindicated by Pius IV. He entered the Council of Trent in 1561, in which he assisted Forerius and Leonardo Marini in preparing the catechism, and correcting the missal and breviary. He died at Rome, Dec. 23, 1564. He was frugal, modest, and austere, and devoted much time and money to the poor and to the reclamation of the vicious classes.

Foss, ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. Cyrus Foss, was born at Philipstown, N. Y., March 6, 1830. He spent two years of his youth as clerk in a dry-goods store in New York city; entered America Seminary at the age of seventeen; became highly honored for his scholarly and Christian character; received license to preach; entered the Sophomore class of Wesleyan University at the age of nineteen; supported himself by teaching during vacations; graduated in 1852, and immediately joined the New York Conference. His appointments were: Lenox, 1852 and 1853; Morrisania, 1854 and 1855; Thirtieth Street, New York city, 1856 and 1857; St. Paul's, 1858 and 1859; the next year with Dr. McClintock, Tarrytown, but labored there only a few weeks, when, being appointed to the professorship of Latin and Hebrew in Wesleyan University, he repaired thither, and there continued two years; Poughkeepsie District, 1862 to June, 1865; Thirtieth Street, New York city, July, 1865, to 1867, and finally to Sing Sing, in 1868, where he labored one year, and then retired from the effective ranks and sailed to Europe. In 1869 he preached one month in Florence, Italy, and another in Lausanne, Switzerland. Early in 1870 he left his pleasant Swiss home for a tour through the principal cities of Italy. He returned to Clarena, Switzerland, March 3, thoroughly worn out with fatigue, and prostrated with gastric fever, and after a few days of suffering died. Mr. Foss was pre-eminently independent and original. He was brave and self-reliant, a wise and safe counsellor, generous, yet cautious, patient, painstaking, able, and eminently successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 97.

Fossarii (or Fossôres), the term by which the grave-diggers or sextons of the early Church were designated. The term fossor is of frequent occurrence in the inscriptions of the catacombs. The most common appearance of the term is in the later epitaphs, which testify to the purchase of graves from individuals of this class. The burial of the departed was probably at first a work of Christian charity, performed without fee or reward by their surviving brethren. Afterwards, when the Church had become more numerous, it was carried out at the public expense under the special care of the presbyters of the "titles" of Rome. When Christianity became the established religion, the fossôres evidently established a kind of property in the catacombs, which authorized them to sell graves either to living persons for their own burial, or to the friends of the deceased. This state of things seems to have had a widespread but transient existence. A fossor's pick has been discovered by De Rossi in the cemetery of Callistus, much oxidized, but still recognizable. See Martigny, Dict. des Antiq. Chrétiennes, s. v.

Fresco of Fossor in the Cemetery of Callistus.

He wears a tunic marked with pennon on its hem, carries a pick over his right shoulder, and a lamp in his left hand, and is surrounded by a heap of levers, picks, and other tools employed in his work. Above is the inscription: "Dioegenes Fossor in pace depositus Octavo Kalendas Octobris."

Fosse, CHARLES DE LA, an eminent French painter, was born at Paris in 1640, studied under Charles le Brun, and having gained the prize of the academy, was sent to Italy with the royal pension. On his return to Paris he was immediately taken into the service of Louis XIV, and painted four fine pictures for the apartments of the Tuileries. His next work was a fresco painting in the chapel of St. Eustache, representing Adam and Eve, and the Marriage of the Virgin. In 1693 he was elected a royal academician. The following are some of his best paintings at Versailles: The Sacrifice of Iphigenia; The Infant Moses Saved from the Nile; The Resurrection; The Nativity; The Adoration of the Magi. He died at Paris in 1716. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fosta, in North German mythology, was a goddess worshipped by the Frisians. She stands in close union with Hertha, the goddess of the earth. Both are goddesses of peace, and it is singular that they appear armed. In the temple of Fosta, on Helgoland, she was represented with bow and arrow at her back, a helmet on her head, five arrows in her left hand, and four ears of corn in her right. She was worshipped in Holstein and Denmark.

Poster, EDEN BURROUGHS, D.D., a Congregational minister, grandson of Rev. Eden Burroughs, D.D., of Hanover, N. H., was born at Hanover, May 26, 1813. He studied at Kimball Union Academy; graduated from Dartmouth College in 1837, and spent one year at Andover Theological Seminary. From Aug. 18, 1841, to Jan. 7, 1847, he was pastor in Henniker. After supplying the church in Pelham for several months, he was installed pastor of it, June 21, 1848, and remained until January, 1853; thereafter was pastor of the John Street Church, Lowell, Mass.; in 1861 at West Springfield; and in May, 1866, was reinstalled at Lowell, where he died, April 11, 1882. After 1875 he was assisted by a colleague. Among his publications are the following: Sermons on Baptism (1843);—Duty of Young Men (1850). See Cong. Year-book, 1883, p. 22.

Fothad, a Scotch prelate, was deprived in the first year of his administration of the see of St. Andrews (952), by king Indulfus. He died in 961 or 962. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 6.

Fotherby, MARTIN, D.D., dean of Canterbury, was born at Great Grimsby in 1559, educated at and became a fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1596 was prebendary of Canterbury, and in 1618 bishop of Salisbury. He died March 12, 1619, leaving Four Sermons (1608).—The Clearing of Four Truths against Atheists (1622). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fothergill, GEORGE, D.D., an English divine, was born at Lockholme, in Ravenstonedale, in 1705, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow. He was elected principal of Edmund Hall, Oct. 17, 1751, vicar of Bramley soon after, and died Oct. 5, 1760. His works were published in 1756, 1757, 1758, and some Sermons in 1761 and 1762. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Foullon, JEAN ERARD, a French Jesuit, and rector of the college at Huy, who was born at Liege in 1608, and died Oct. 25, 1668, is the author of, Jonas Typus Hominis a Deo Fugientis.—Compendium Historie Iudæicæ.—Comment. Historici et Morales ad Duos Libros Maccabæorum. See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 825; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v. (B. P.)

Foulques (Lat. Fulco), a French prelate, was born about 850, and educated in the church at Rheims, where he was eventually a canon. He afterwards became abbot of St. Beitun, and in March, 883, archbishop of Rheims. He greatly improved the diocese, but at length became so deeply involved in the political convulsions of the times that he was assassinated in 900. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Foulques (surnamed the Great), a French writer of sacred history, was born in the first part of the 11th century. He was the thirty-first abbot of Corbie; assisted as such at the Council of Rheims in 1049, and at the Council of the General States in 1065, at Corbie. He is noted for his long contest for the privileges of his Church against two bishops of Amiens. He died in 1095. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fountayne, JOHN, D.D., an English clergyman, was born at Merton, near Doncaster, about 1714. He was educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow; and was successively prebendary of Salisbury, canon of Windsor, and dean of York. Twice in his life, if not oftener, he might have been advanced to the episcopal bench, but declined it. He died Feb. 14, 1802. He was exemplary in the discharge of every relative and social duty; hospitable, benevolent, and a lover of good men. See The (Lond.) Christian Observer, February, 1802, p. 144.

Fouquet (or Foucquet), LOUIS, a French prelate, who died in 1703, bishop and count of Agde, and master of the royal oratory, became involved in trouble, and finally retired from his diocese. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fournier (baron de la Contamine), MARIE NICOLAS, a French prelate, was born at Gex (Ain), Dec. 27, 1760; educated in Paris; became professor of theology at Orleans; after the Revolution went to Paris as a preacher; was appointed (1805) chaplain, afterwards almoner to the emperor, and bishop of Montpellier, July 15, 1806; was nominated, in 1817, for the archbishopric of Navarre, but was not confirmed, and died at Montpellier, Dec. 29, 1834. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fowler, Charles James, LL.D., a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach by the Aberdeen Presbytery in 1828; elected minister of the church at Roxburgh Place, Morningside, Edinburgh, and ordained Aug. 7, 1834; transferred to St. Luke's, Glasgow, Feb. 22, 1837; promoted to Ratho, Dec. 22, 1842, and died at Torquay, England, March 16, 1866. He published The Right Improvement of Divine Judgments (a sermon, 1851);—lectures on The Evidences of Revealed Religion, on Infidelity, and on Sabbath-Schools:—A Preface to Watson's Apology for the Bible. See Fasts Eccles. Scotticæ, i, 131; ii, 45.

Fowler, Joseph, an eminent English Wesleyan minister, was born at Little Horton, near Bradford, Yorkshire, May 18, 1791. He was educated at the Bradford Grammar-school, converted under the preaching of John Crosse, vicar of Bradford, and in 1811 admitted into the ministry. In 1848 he was elected secretary of the conference, and it was owing to failure of health that he was not elected president in 1849 or 1850. He died, after acute suffering, in the Chapel-house, City Road, London, March 17, 1851, being the only preacher who has died there since Wesley. Joseph Fowler was a able preacher, a judicious superintendent, an unwearied pastor, and a large-hearted friend. He was the leader of the liberal section of the conference. See Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 324 sq.; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1851, p. 400, 918; 1852, p. 242; Minutes of the British Conference, 1851; Wesl. Takings (Lond. 1841), i, 351.

Fowler, Philemon Halsted, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1814. He received his preparatory education at the academy in his native place; graduated from Hobart College, Geneva, in 1832, and for one year was tutor in that institution; was licensed by the Albany Presbytery, Oct. 15, 1835; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1836; served as pastor elect the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C.; and in 1839 was installed in Elmira, N. Y., where he remained until 1850. In 1851 he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Utica, where he labored till 1874. In 1866 he was made a member of the Joint Committee on Reunion, on the part of the New School General Assembly; in 1869 was elected moderator of the General Assembly. He died Dec. 19, 1879. Dr. Fowler was the author of a number of published sermons and small volumes, his largest work being his History of Presbyterianism in Central New York (1877). He was a member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, a trustee of Hamilton College, and a director of Auburn Theological Seminary. He was widely known and honored for his personal qualities. He preached Christ with great directness and fidelity. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 23.

Fowler, Robert, D.D., an Irish prelate, was prebendary of Westminster, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of bachelor of arts in 1747, master of arts in 1751, and in 1771 was promoted to the see of Killaloe and Killeenora. In 1773 he was ordered by the House of Lords to preach before them at Christ Church on Oct. 2; translated to the see of Dublin, Dec. 22, 1778; in 1782 was one of twelve spiritual peers who protested against the bill for the relief of the Dissenters; in 1789 concurred with fourteen others in protesting against the memorable address of the Irish House of Lords to the prince of Wales. He died at Bassingbourne Hall, near Dunmow, in Essex, Oct. 10, 1801. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Bps. of Dublin, p. 347.

Fowler, William Chauncey, LL.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Killingworth (now Clinton), Conn., Sept. 1, 1793. He graduated from Yale College in 1816, and then spent a year as private tutor in a family in Fauquier County, Va.; resumed his position as rector of the grammar-school in New Haven, beginning also the study of theology under Professor Fitch. In 1819 he was appointed tutor in the college, and Aug. 31, 1825, was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church in Greenfield, Mass. In 1827 he was dismissed, to accept the professorship of chemistry and natural history in Middlebury College, Vt., where he remained until 1838, and then went to Amherst College, Mass., as professor of rhetoric. He resigned this position in 1843, but continued to reside in Amherst till 1858, when he removed to Durham, Conn., and died there, Jan. 15, 1881. From the time of his resignation as professor, he was engaged in preparing various works for the press. In 1845 he edited the university edition of Webster's Dictionary. He next prepared three volumes, composing a series of English grammars, entitled The English Language in its Elements and Forms. In 1858 he published Memorials of the Chauncys; in 1863 The Sectional Controversy; in 1866 a History of Durham; in 1872 a Treatise on Local Law in Massachusetts and Connecticut; and later several collections of essays. In 1850 he was elected to the Massachusetts legislature from the town of Amherst. He represented the 18th district of Connecticut in the state senate in 1864. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1881.

Fox, CHARLES M., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, of the diocese of Illinois, was rector of St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1870. He died Sept. 4, 1871. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1872, p. 127.

Fox-worship, a species of idolatry practiced only among the Japanese, who seem to be in doubt as to whether the fox is a god or a devil. If a Japanese feels himself in need of supernatural aid, he sets out a platter of rice and beans as an offering to his fox, and if on the following day some of it has disappeared, this is looked upon as a favorable omen. There are in Japan two species of foxes, very much like the ordinary foxes of Europe and America, and, from the immunity they enjoy, they are great nuisances. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Fraction, a technical name for the act of breaking the bread in the celebration of the holy eucharist. There are three kinds of fraction in use at present; though only the first of them is essential to the sacrament, and can be traced with certainty to the infancy of the Church: (1) a fraction illustrative of the words of institution, and therefore a direct imitation of our Lord's action; (2) purely symbolical fractions after the consecration has been completed; (3) the necessary fraction for the distribution of the bread among the communicants. For the illustration of each of these in the various rituals, see Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Frähn, Christian Martin, a famous German Orientalist, numismatician, and historian, was born at Rostock, June 4, 1782, where he also pursued his Oriental studies. In 1807 he was appointed professor of Oriental languages at Kasan, and in 1815 chief librarian and director of the Asiatic Museum at St. Petersburg, where he died, Aug. 16, 1851. He published, among other works, Recensio Numorum Muhamedorum (St. Petersburg, 1826), to which must be added his Opuscula Postuma (ed. by Dorn, ibid. 1855-77, 2 vols.):—Ibn Foss-lun und anderer Araber Berichte über die Russen älterer Zeit (ibid. 1823):—Topographische Uebersicht der Ausgrabungen von alten arabischen Geld in Russland (ibid. 1841):—Curarum Ezeget. et Crit. in Nahumum prophet. Specimen (Rostock, 1806):—De Chusaris (St. Petersburg, 1822). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Franceschini, Baldassare (called il Volterra-no), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Volterra in 1611, and studied under Matteo Roselli and Gio. de San Giovanni. Among his great frescos is the cupola of the Cappella Niccolini, in the church of Santa Croce at Florence; and in the vault of a chapel of Santa Maria Maggiore is a picture of Elius, which is considered a grand production. He died in 1689. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Franceschini, Car. Marc' Antonio, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Bologna, April 5, 1648, and was instructed in the school of Gio. Battista Galli. The principal works of this master at Bologna are a ceiling in the Palazzo Ranuzzi; The Death of St. Joseph, in Corpus Domini; St. Francis of Sales Kneeling before the Virgin and Infant, in La Madonna di Galeria; a fine picture of The Annunciation, at the Institute. At Rimini, in the Church of the Augustines, is a fine picture of St. Tommaso Giving Alms to the Poor. Franceschini died Dec. 24, 1728. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Francesco, MEXICO, an Italian convert from Judaism, who lived at Mantua in the 17th century, is the author of, מנחת כהן, or Epistola in Lingua Hebr., Chald., Syriaco, etc. (Mantua, 1630; transl. into Germ. by Chrys. Dudulens, Nuremberg, s. a.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 287; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 951. (B. P.)

Franchi, Antonio, a reputable Italian painter, was born at Lucca, July 14, 1634, studied under Baldassare Franceschini, and settled at Florence. He painted a number of works for the churches, among which his picture of Christ Giving the Keys to St. Peter, in the parochial church of Caporngano, at Lucca, is considered his masterpiece. He died July 8, 1709. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Franchi, Guglielmo, an Italian convert from Judaism, of the 16th century, is the author of שש לבין שש לבין, or a Hebrew grammar in the Italian language (Bergamo, 1591, and often):—Alphabetum Hebraicum, or a Hebrew reader (Rome, 1596). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 287; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, s. v.; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. iii, 237. (B. P.)

Francklin, Thomas, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1721, and in June, 1750, was chosen Greek professor of Cambridge. He was preferred to the livings of Ware and Thundrich in 1757, and to that of Brasted in 1776. He died in 1784. He published, separately, translations from Phalaris, Cicero, Sophocles, and Lucian (1749-81). See Chalmers, Biographical Dictionary, s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Franco, Alfonso, an eminent painter of Messina, was born in 1466. His best pictures were in Messina, a Taking Down from the Cross, in the Church of San Francesco di Paolo, and the Dispute of Christ with the Doctors, in San Agostino. He died in 1524.

Franco, Battista (called il Semele), an eminent painter and engraver, was born at Venice in 1498. He went to Rome and studied the works of Michael Angelo. He painted in fresco the choir of the Metropolitan Church at Urbino; and a picture in oil representing the Virgin and Infant, between St. Peter and St. Paul. There are several easel pictures from the life of Christ in the cathedral at Osimo. The following are some of his works; Moses Striking the Rock; Abraham Meeting Melchisedec; Abraham about to Sacrifice Isaac; The Israelites Gathering Manna in the Desert; St. Jerome Holding a Skull; The Virgin and Infant with St. John; St. John the Baptist; The Adoration of the Shepherds, with Angels in the Clouds. He died in 1561. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

François, Claude, a French ecclesiastic, was born at Paris in 1559, and made his profession at the abbey of the Benedictines of St. Vaunes, March 21, 1589. In 1606 he aided in effecting a radical reformation within his congregation, revised the principal articles, and became a deputy to Monte-Cassino to consult the constitutions of that monastery. In 1610 he was sent to Paris to secure the approval of the new regulations by the ecclesiastical superiors and Louis XIII, and frequently served as president of his congregation. He died at St. Michel, Aug. 10, 1632, leaving several works relating particularly to the affairs of his order, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Frank, a name common to several Lutheran hymn-writers, of whom we mention the following:

1. MICHAEL, was born March 16, 1609, and died Sept. 24, 1667. His hymns are collected in Geistliches Harffenspiel (Coburg, 1657), and Geistlicher Lieder erstes Zwölff (ibid. 1662). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 435 sq.

2. PETER, a brother of Michael, was born Sept. 27, 1616, studied at Jena, was preacher in 1645, and died July 22, 1675. See Koch, ut sup., p. 441 sq.; Ludovici, De Hymnis et Hymnopolis Hennebergicis, p. 21; Wezel, Hymnographia, i.

3. SEBASTIAN, oldest brother of the three, was born Jan. 18, 1606, and died April 12, 1668. He suffered very much from the miseries of the Thirty Years' War. See Ludovici, De Hymnis, etc.; Winterfeld, Der evang. Kirchengesang, ii, 468-472 (Berlin, 1845); Koch, ut sup., p. 431 sq. (B. P.)

Frankel, Karl Christian Lebrecht, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 24, 1796, and died May 1, 1879, at Halle, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, De Diei Dominici Apud Veteres Christianos Celebratione (Halle, 1826); —Geschichte der Hallischen Reformation (ibid. 1841). Besides, he published sermons, for which see Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 617; ii, 36, 174; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol., i, 373 sq. (B. P.)

Fränkel, David (1), a Jewish author of Germany, born at Berlin in 1779, was director of the Jewish schools at Dessau, and died in 1865. He published, Zeitschrift zur Beförderung der Kultur und Humanität unter der jüd. Nation (1806-1840); —Gemeinnützige Blätter für Wissenschaft, Schule und Leben (Dessau, 1835); —Die Lage der Juden in der ältern und neueren Zeit (ibid. 1808). With M. H. Bock he translated the Pentateuch and Joshua into German (ibid. 1815). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 291. (B. P.)

Fränkel, David (2) ben-Naftali Hirsch, a Jewish rabbi, who was born at Dessau in 1707, and died at Berlin in 1767, is the author of a commentary on several treatises of the Jerusalem-Talmud. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 290 sq. (B. P.)

Frankel, Zacharias, a Jewish theologian, was born at Prague, Oct. 18, 1801. He studied in the University of Pesth, and received the degree of doctor of philosophy in 1831. In the spring of 1832 he was intrusted with the district-rabbinate of Leitmeritz, in Bohemia, and in the temple at Teplitz, his seat of office, the service received a new cast, owing to the German sermon which he was the first to introduce in the Bohemian synagogue. In 1836 he was called to Dresden as chief rabbi for Dresden and Leipsic. At Dresden, Frankel battled for justice at the bar of public opinion, and secured for the Jews the right of citizenship by his Die Eidesleistung der Juden in theologischer und historischer Bedeutung (Dresden, 1840; 2d ed. 1847), followed by Der gerichtliche Beweis nach mosaisch-talmudischen Rechte (Berlin, 1841), which promoted the cause of his Prussian co-religionists. In 1854 Frankel was called to Breslau to organize the Jewish theological seminary, whose director he became. He died at Breslau, Feb. 13, 1875. In the Christian world he is known as the author of, Vorstudien zur Septuaginta (Leipsic, 1841); —Ueber den Einfluss der Palästinischen Exegese auf die Alexandrinische Hermeneutik (ibid. 1851); —Ueber Palästinische und Alexandrinische Schriftforschung (Breslau, 1854). Of other works we mention, Hodegetica in Mischnam Libroque cum ea Coniunctos (in Hebrew, Leipsic, 1859); —Addimenta to the preceding work (also in Hebrew, ibid. 1865); —Grundlinien des mosaisch-talmudischen Eherechtes (Breslau, 1859); —Entwurf einer Geschichte der Literatur der nachtalmudischen Responsen (ibid. 1865); —Introductio in Talmud Hierosolymitanum (Hebrew, ibid. 1870); —Targum der Propheten (ibid. 1872). He also intended to publish a new edition of the Jerusalem-Talmud, with notes; of this, however, only two treatises, Berachoth and Peah, were printed (Vienna, 1874). In connection with other learned Jews, he published Zeitschrift für die Religiösen Interessen des Judenthums (Berlin, 1844-46, 3 vols.); and in 1851 he commenced his Monatschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, which is still continued by Grätz and Frankel. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 294; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol., i, 374; Morais, Eminent Israelites of the 19th Century (Philadelphia, 1880), p. 81 sq. (B. P.)

Frankenberg, Abraham von, a German nobleman, an adherent of Jacob Böhme, was born June 24, 1593. He studied at Breslau, where he became acquainted with Böhme's writings. The latter's philosophy influenced him so much that he now betook himself entirely to mystic contemplations, and in order to do this with greater effect, he retired to his country-seat. He died June 25, 1652. For his writings and hymns see Arnold, Ungarteische Kirchen- und Ketzer-Historie, ii, 410 sq.; Wezel, Hymnographia, iv; Weimarisches Jahrbuch, 1854, p. 157-160; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 287 sq. (B. P.)

Frankfurter, Naftali, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born Feb. 13, 1810, at Oberndorf, in Würtemberg; studied at Heidelberg and Tübingen, was rabbi at Braunsbach, accepted in 1840 a call to Hamburg, and died there, April 13, 1866, leaving, besides Sermons, Stillstand und Fortschritt (Hamburg, 1841); —Die Verantwortlichkeit des Volkstheaters im jetzigen Israel (ibid. 1844). In connection with Berthold Auerbach he published Gallerie der ausgezeichneten Israeliten (Stuttgart, 1838). See Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, i, 278 sq.; Allgemeine Zeitung des Judenthums, 1866, col. 266; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 296. (B. P.)

Frankland, Benjamin, A.B., one of the men representing the scholarship of the English Wesleyan Connection, was born at St. Ives, Cornwall, in May, 1819. He was a descendant of Dr. Benjamin Frankland, eminent as the great Puritan schoolmaster of his time (see Dr. Halley's Puritanism in Lancashire, etc.), the son of Rev. Benjamin Frankland, and brother of Rev. W. Joseph Frankland. He was educated at the Woodhouse Grove School (1829-33), and the University of Dublin (1837 sq.); and was for ten years tutor at Woodhouse Grove, and six months master at Wesley College, Sheffield. He was converted when eighteen years of age, entered the ministry in 1845, and throughout his various circuits, from Diss, in 1845, to Islington, London, in 1863, his ministry was greatly prized, especially by the thoughtful and cultivated, and his personal character won profound and affectionate esteem. In 1864 he succeeded J. Gilchrist Wilson as assistant editor of the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine and other connectional publications, and on the death of the lamented Thornton, in 1865, the entire duties of editorship devolved on him, shared however, in 1868, by the appointment of a colleague, Benjamin Gregory. This position he held until his unexpected death after a short illness, Jan. 17, 1876. Besides his scholarly contributions to the Magazine, Frankland wrote, Outlines of Literary Culture (Lond. 1853, 12mo):—Intuitionism (ibid. 1861, crown 8vo):—Of Israel, but not Israel (Exeter, 1859, 12mo):—The Wesleyan Conference (Lond. 1852, 8vo). See West. Meth. Magazine, 1876, p. 192, 742, 844; Minutes of the British Conference, 1876, p. 19.

Frankland, Thomas, an English divine, was born in Lancashire in 1633, and was educated at and became a fellow of Brazenose College, Oxford. He became a preacher, afterwards a physician, and died in 1690. His published works are, The Honors of the Lords Spiritual Asserted (1681):—The Annals of King James I and King Charles I (ed.). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Franzoni, Luigi, an Italian prelate, was born at Genoa, March 29, 1789; studied under the direction of Zanobi Bennucci; was ordained priest in 1814; became first an urban missionary, bishop of Turin in 1831, and died March 26, 1862. He was an avowed champion of Ultramontaniam, for which he was imprisoned in 1850, and took refuge in Lyons. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fraser, Edward, a talented colored Wesleyan preacher, was born a slave in the island of Barbadoes. He was in youth so appreciated by his master that he was given a good education and made his confidential clerk. Converted in Bermuda, becoming a local preacher and called into the ministry in 1827, he was given his liberty at the request of the British Wesleyan Conference, and labored in several of the West Indian islands. As a preacher, he was thoughtful, calm, dignified, clear in exposition and powerful in application. He moved with dignity and grace among the people of his charge, training the young, comforting the sick, and relieving the poor. On perplexing questions his well-balanced mind and clear, logical views made him powerful among his brethren. He was for eighteen years district secretary. For the cause of missions and education he twice visited England, where the memory of his noble pulpit and platform deliverances are still remembered. At the annual missionary meeting in Exeter Hall, London, in his visit of 1837-38, he delivered a powerful address. He died at Grateful Hill, Jamaica, in 1872, aged seventy-four years. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1872, p. 41; Smith, Hist. of West. Methodism, iii, 366, 367; Everett, Wesleyan Centenary Tablets, ii, 14.

Fraser, James, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, graduated from the university and Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1771; was licensed to preach Feb. 8, 1779; presented to the living at Drumoak in November, 1785, ordained June 15, 1786, and died Jan. 31, 1828, aged seventy-two years. He published An Account of the Parish of Drumoak, and edited Lectures on the Pastoral Character of Principal George Campbell (1811). See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 498.

Fraser, Paul, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, a native of Inverness, graduated from the university and King's College, Aberdeen, April 30, 1756; was ordained by the Presbytery of Lorn, Sept. 2, 1761, as missionary at Glencoe, from which he was removed to that of Fort William; was admitted minister of the parish of Craignish in 1765; transferred to the second charge, Inverary, May 28, 1789, admitted June 17, and died "Father of the Church," Oct. 2, 1827, aged ninety-five years. For a time he held the chaplaincy of the 98th Foot regiment, and the 5th regiment of Fencibles. He published An Account of the Parish of Inverary. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 4, 6.

Fratzsch, Heinrich Wolfgang, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born at Erfurt, Nov. 12, 1694, studied at Halle, was in 1720 magister at Erfurt, in 1738 professor, accepted in 1744 a call as general-superintendent of the duchy of Coburg, and died July 14, 1757. He wrote, De Jernia et Vaticinio Ejus (Halle, 1712):—De Necessitate et Utilitate Lectionis Script. Sacra in Fontibus (Erfurt, 1738). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Frauenstädt, Christian Martin Julius, a German philosopher, was born April 17, 1813, at Bojanowo, in the duchy of Posen. He studied theology and philosophy at Berlin and published, in 1838, Die Freiheit des Menschen und die Persönlichkeit Gottes, which was followed in 1839 by Die Menschwerdung Gottes nach ihrer Möglichkeit, Wirklichkeit und Notwendigkeit. In his Studien und Kritiken zur Theologie und Philosophie (Berlin, 1840), he examined the philosophy of religion of Steffen, and with his Schelling's Vorlesungen in Berlin (ibid. 1842), he placed himself in opposition to the Philosophie der Offenbarung. In 1846 he made the acquaintance of Schopenhauer, and became his most ardent admirer. In 1848 he published his Ueber das wahre Verhältniss der Vernunft zur Offenbarung (dedicated to Schopenhauer), followed by other works in which he advocated more or less the system of his friend, whose works he also edited (Leipzig, 1873-74, 6 vols.; 2d ed. 1877). Frauenstädt died at Berlin, Jan. 13, 1879. See Brockhaus, Conversations-Lexikon (13th ed.), s. v.; Zuehold, Bibl. Theol. i, 377. (B. P.)

Fravashia, certain fetishistic spirits worshipped by the early inhabitants of Media.

Fravitta (Phravittas, Flavita, or Flavianus), twenty-third bishop of Constantinople, A.D. 489, is said to have acquired his position by a remarkable fraud, having been originally a presbyter of the Church of St. Thecla, in the suburbs of that city. He died within four months, and the trick was exposed.

Fraser, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was abbot of Melrose, and promoted to the see of Ross in 1485. He was witness to an agreement between the community of Linlithgow and the priory of St. Andrews in 1497, and was one of the king's privy council in 1506. He died Feb. 5, 1507. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 189.

Fraser, John (2), D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland in 1803. He was a descendant of the celebrated Scotch Fraser family, which gave so many distinguished officers to the British army. At the age of seventeen he sailed to the United States and entered the woods of Maine as a lumberman. In 1831 he joined the New York Conference, and began his itinerant career on the shores of lake Champlain. For twenty-five years he continued to preach in that region, then embraced in the Troy Conference. His appointments were Middlebury, Poultney, and Grand Isle in Vermont; Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Lansingburg, and two terms as presiding elder in New York. In 1856 failing health induced him to remove to Ohio, where he joined the Ohio Conference, and was stationed as presiding elder three years each in Columbus and Zanesville. In 1866 he was transferred to the Southern Illinois Conference, and stationed first at Alton, then at Brighton, and last at Lebanon, where he died, Feb. 17, 1871. Dr. Frazer was a man of the purest character, a scorner of all hypocrisy and double-dealing; thoroughly read in theology, was powerfully fluent, and an eminently successful revivalist. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 231.

Frazer, William, a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of St. Andrews in 1279, and was consecrated at Rome by pope Nicholas III, June 14, 1280. About the same time he was lord chancellor and witness to king Alexander III. In 1288 he was chosen to be one of the regents of the kingdom, and after the death of queen Margaret he yielded a forced submission to Edward I of England. He died at Arville, Sept. 18, 1297. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 20.

Freda was a god of war among the Frisians, who was worshipped with another similar figure, Weda, which caused the Romans to make a comparison with Castor and Pollux. They appear armed, with wings projecting from their shoulders.

Frédégair (Lat. Fredegarius), a French ecclesiastical historian of the middle of the 7th century, has left a chronicle of France, and of Burgundy in particular, from Gregory of Tours to his own time (published as a sequel to the works of the former, Basle, 1568, 8vo, and later).

Freder, Johannes (1), a Lutheran theologian and hymn-writer of Germany, was born Aug. 29, 1510, at Cöslin, in Pomerania. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1537 called to Hamburg, in 1547 to Stralsund, in 1649 to Greifswalde, and in 1556 to Wismar, where he died, Jan. 25, 1562. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, i, 421 sq.; Mohnicke, Johannes Frederus Leben und geistliche Gesänge (Stralsund, 1840); Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 377. (B. P.)

Freder, Johannes (2), son of the preceding, was born at Hamburg, Jan. 6, 1544. He studied at Wittenberg and Rostock, was professor of theology at the latter place, and died in 1604. He edited Dav. Chytræi Summa Doctrinæ de Veru Dei Agnitione:—Explicatio Articulorum Symboli Apostolici de Filio Dei:—Liber de Spir. Sanct. Divinitate. He wrote, Theses de Prædestinatione Hominum in Christo ad Vitam et Salutem Eternam. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Möller, Cimbrii Litterati. (B. P.)

Frederick III of Saxony (usually styled the Wise), was born at Torgau, Jan. 17, 1463, and succeeded his father Ernest as elector, in 1486. He is chiefly known as the founder of the University of Wittenberg, and the friend of Luther, whom he carried off for safety to the Warburg; but he had not the courage to establish the reformed faith in his dominions. He became administrator of the empire in 1519, and declined the imperial crown. He died May 5, 1525. See the literature by Klüppel, in Mitt-Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v. See LUTHER.

Frederick III of the Palatinate (called the Pious), was born Feb. 14, 1525, succeeded his father, John II, in 1556, as palatine of Simmern, and Otto Henry as elector-palatine in 1559. In 1537 he married a Lutheran princess, and adopted the Reformed faith, which in 1560 he introduced into his dominions, despite an effort in 1566 to secure an imperial edict against him. He died Oct. 26, 1576. See the literature in Mitt-Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v. See REFORMATION.

Fredet, Pierre, D.D., a Roman Catholic priest, was born at Sehasat, France, about 1801; educated at Clermont; became a member of the Society of St. Sulpice, and came to Baltimore in 1831, where, till his death, Jan. 1, 1856, he was attached to St. Mary's Seminary. He is said to have been a diligent and thorough student, and a voluminous writer. See Hough, Amer. Biog. Notes, p. 149. (J. C. S.)

Frédol, BÉRENGER DE (called the Elder), a French prelate, was born at the château de la Vêrune about 1250; became successively canon at Béziers, Narbonne, and Aix, bishop of Béziers, Oct. 28, 1294, and cardinal in 1305. He was employed by the pope in several literary and diplomatic functions, and died at Avignon, June 13, 1323, leaving a few works on canon law, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Freeman, Bernardus, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Westphalia, and licensed there; came to America in 1700; was refused by the Church at Albany for want of education; became a missionary to the Mohawks (1700-5); preached at various places on the western end of Long Island, and died in 1743. He was a man of great natural ability, and the author of several works in the Mohawk language, for which see Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 265.

Freeman, George W., D.D., missionary bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the south-west, was born at Sandwich, Mass.; taught a large boarding-school in Warronton, N. C.; was ordained rector of Christ Church, Raleigh, where he remained for many years; then of Emmanuel Church, New Castle, Del.; consecrated bishop Oct. 26, 1844, in Philadelphia, Pa., and died at Little Rock, Ark., April 29, 1858, aged sixty-nine years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1858, p. 240.

Free-thinking Christians, a sect which arose in London in 1796, professing to be a Christian Church founded on the principles of free inquiry. They were originally a body of Universalists, who separated from their congregation by rejecting the doctrine of the trinity, the atonement, and many other doctrines held by orthodox Christians generally. Their next step was to dispense with the sacraments, and deny the immateriality of the soul. Finally, they rejected the Scriptures, and abolished all forms of worship, though still holding their meetings on the Sabbath as a matter of convenience. They assembled for purposes of discussion and debate on religious and social questions.

Fregoso, FEDERIGO, an Italian prelate, was born at Genoa about 1480; early took religious orders; became bishop of Gubbio in 1507; fled on account of political troubles to Rome, but returned to Genoa in 1513; was of great service in the civil war ensuing; made cardinal in 1539, and died at Gubbio, July 13, 1541.

Freia, in Norse mythology, was the most excellent among the Asas next to Frigg, the wife of Odin, being daughter of the dark Niord and the shady Skade. Freia was the goddess of the moon, in the ancient Scandinavian religion of nature. Later she was the goddess of love. She favors suitors, and finds great pleasure in songs, which she teaches to the scalds. She loves spring and flowers, and is gracious to the elves. In order to secure greater swiftness she makes use of a pair of falcon wings, which she allows other deities to use. The glittering necklace which the dwarfs presented to her is called Brising. Freia was married to Odur, and had two daughters by him: Hnos (beautiful) and Gersemi (attractive). Some time after, Odur made a journey, and as he did not return, Freia sought him, travelling through many countries, and assuming different names: Mardöl, Horn, Geflon, Syr, Vanadys; but it was all useless. She therefore shed bitter tears, which were changed into gold. Her journey made her known in all lands, and she was worshipped under various names. In North Germany, Denmark, Friedland, and Saxony, she retained the name Freia. She was represented with helmet, armor, bow, and sword, above in male, below in female dress. Odin receives valiant warriors into Valhalla; Freia receives all virtuous and lovely women into her heavenly dwelling, Folkvangur. She herself loves mostly to stay in her hall, Searmuer, and has melancholy thoughts about her departed husband, Odur. The Swedes dedicated a number of temples to her, among which that at Upsala was the most celebrated. Her name is connected with the German verb "freien," to woo, and the sixth day of the week, Friday, is named after her.

Freind, ROBERT, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1667; educated principally at Westminster; elected to Christ Church, Oxford, in 1686; engaged in the famous controversy about the epistles of Phalaris, and died in 1751, leaving some Latin and English poetry, for which see Bentley, Nichols's Collection. He also published a Sermon, preached before the House of Commons (1711), and Cicero's Orations (1724). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Freir (or Frey), in Norse mythology, was the son of Niord; the latter became one of the Asas, after showing his power to perform wonders. Freir's mother was Skade. His sister Freia represents the moon, and correspondingly he represents the sun. Freir is called the most excellent of the Asas. He rules over the rain and sunshine, and must be invoked for fruitful years and for peace. He presides over wealthy people, gives to maidens their lovers, and restores to women their husbands, when taken in battle. Freir once seated himself on the throne Hlidskialf, from which he could look over the whole world. This throne was designed only for Odin, and Freir was immediately punished for the liberty he took by becoming enamoured of a Jote maiden, namely, the beautiful Gerdur, daughter of the mountain-giant, Gymer, and of Aurboda. When he came home, he neither ate nor drank, nor said anything. A consuming melancholy fell upon him, and no one dared to talk with him. Even his father Niord asked his servant, Skirner, to find out what was the trouble. Freir said he loved the beautiful Jote maiden, and could not live without her any longer. Skirner then went out to woo Gerdur for him, after he had asked Freir for his trusty sword, which had been made by dwarfs, and possessed the singular faculty of killing of itself after it had once been drawn. Freir gave it to him, and thus, when he was attacked by the powerful Beli, he was forced to slay him with the horns of a reindeer. Skirner brought back the favorable answer that after nine nights Gerdur would appear to him. Then Freir said, "I cannot wait so long, for a single night is longer than a whole month." Gerdur is the northern light personified. Freir lives with her in Alfheim. As god of the sun, he also possesses the gold-colored boar, Gullinbursti. Besides this he owns the horse Blodughofi. He also has a skilful air-vessel, called Skidbladnir, made by dwarfs, the sons of Yfvald. Oaths are given in Freir's name, in which case usually a boar is sacrificed to him, and a ring dipped in its blood, which is held by the swearer, who says: "So help me, Freir, Niord, and the mighty Asas!"

Freitag, AUGUSTINE M., a Redemptorist preacher, was born in Hanover, of Lutheran parentage, in 1836. At the age of sixteen he joined the Roman Catholic Church, and commenced his preparatory studies for the priestly office at Göttingen. After coming to America, he completed his studies at Cumberland, Md., and joined the Redemptorists. He was ordained priest in 1863, and assigned to duty in New York city. After serving there for some years he was transferred to Boston, Mass. In 1882 he returned to New York city, became assistant-rector of St. Alphonsus's, and died there July 26 of the same year. (B. P.)

Fréminet, MARTIN, an eminent French painter, was born at Paris in 1567. He produced a fine picture of St. Sebastian, at Paris, when very young; afterwards visited Rome and studied the works of Michael Angelo; spent fifteen years in Italy, then returned to Paris in the reign of Henry IV, who appointed him his painter, and employed him in the chapel at Fontainebleau, the ceiling of which represents subjects from the Old and New Testaments, among them Noah and his Family Entering the Ark, and The Annunciation. He died at Paris, June 16, 1619. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Frémont, CHARLES, a French monk, was born at Tours in 1610; entered the order of Grammont at the age of eighteen, and conceived the idea of bringing back the monks to the rigor of their primitive rule. Despite his superiors, through the protection of cardinal Richelieu, he succeeded in establishing the ancient discipline, not only in the house of Thiers, in Auvergne, which citizens had founded for him in 1650, but also in six or seven other houses, which had become nearly ruined. He died in 1689, leaving La Vie, la Mort et les Miracles de Saint-Etienne, Confesseur, Fondateur de l'Ordre de Grammont (Dijon, 1647). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

French Version of the Scriptures. The British and Foreign Bible Society, since its inception of Bible-work in France and the French-speaking countries, circulated the translations of Martin, Osterwald, and De Sacy; the latter for the use of Roman Catholics. In 1869 the same society published a revised edition of Osterwald's New Test. The object of this edition was to bring it as far as possible into conformity with the original editions, and to do away with the needless alterations which have been introduced by various printers or editors. On the same basis the Old Test. was published in 1871. In 1875 the Rev. Arnold Bovey addressed a communication to the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Germany, the subject of which was the present condition and character of the French Protestant versions. In how far Mr. Bovey's suggestions were carried out we do not know, but in the report for the year 1877 we read: "The committee have been busy throughout the year in remedying certain minor defects in several of the French editions, in order to make them more perfect and more uniform. Several new versions of the Scriptures in French have been urged on the committee, but they did not see their way to the adoption of any of them; they hope, however, that the present activity in Bible translating and revision may lead to the production of a version more accurate and more acceptable to the French people than any which they now possess." From the annual report published in 1884 it appears that the Société Biblique de France had undertaken a revision of Osterwald, and that this revised recension has also been adopted by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The report reads thus: "The committee have resolved to adopt the recently revised version of Osterwald. The revision of the New Test. was completed by Mons. Frossard in 1869. A conference of pastors at Paris appointed a commission to examine the version, and they expressed the wish in the following year that the Société Biblique de France should publish it. In 1868 a committee, consisting of MM. Bruston, H. Kruger, W. Monod, and M. Byse began the revision of the Old Test. In 1877 the number of revisers was raised from four to thirteen, namely, professors Bois, Bruston, Chapuis, and Coussivart, and pastors Le Savoureux, Kruger, Monod, Laufer, Bornand, Byse, Favet, Frossard, and Monnier. All the books of the Old Test. were revised at least twice, the greater part three times, and some (Psalms, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Amos, etc.) four times. The direction of the work was intrusted to pastor Frank Vermeil, with whom were associated MM. Matter and Frossard. In 1879 the publication commenced. Since then 17,000 of the 8vo and 16mo Bibles have been sold, and 150,000 copies of the revised New Test. since its publication. The basis of the revision of the New Test. was the Textus Receptus. The committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in taking up this latest revision of Osterwald's version, have the hearty approval of the Société Biblique de France."

The British and Foreign Bible Society has also undertaken since 1879 the printing of De Sacy's Bible, collated with the folio of 1759, and with alternative readings from the originals for all passages liable to misconception.

Outside of the Bible societies, there were published La Sainte Bible, Texte de la Vulgate, Traduction Française en regard, avec Commentaires Théol., Moraux, Philol., Histor., etc., Révisés d'Après les Meilleurs Travaux Anciens et Contemp. (Paris, 1869-82, 16 vols.). In this Bible work, the commentaries of German, French, English, and American scholars have been made use of. Thus, Alexander's Commentary on Isaiah, Lyman Abbott's New Test., The Speaker's Commentary, the works of Alford, Wordsworth, Ellicott, and even Smith's Dict. of the Bible have been perused. Besides this work of Roman Catholics, we must mention the Protestant Bible work by Reuss, La Bible. Traduction Nouvelle avec Introductions et Commentaires (Paris, 1874-81, 16 parts). The different parts have the following titles, besides the Préface et Introduction Générale et Table Générale des Matières: I. Histoire des Israélites Depuis la Conquête de la Palestine jusqu'à l'Exil (Livres des Juges, de Samuel et des Rois); II. Les Prophètes, 2 vols.; III. L'Histoire Sainte et la Loi (Pentateuque et Josué), 2 vols.; IV. Chronique Ecclésiastique de Jérusalem (Chron., Ezra, Neh.); V. Poésie Lyrique (Le Psautier, les Lamentations, le Cantique des Cantiques); VI. Philosophie Religieuse et Morale des Hébreux (Job, les Proverbes, l'Ecclésiaste, l'Ecclésiastique, la Sagesse, Contes Moraux [Jonas, Tobit, Susanne, Pages du Roi Darius], Baruch, Micaïse); VII. Littérature, Politique, et Polémique (Ruth, Maccabées, Daniel, Esther, Judith, le 3me Livre des Maccabées, l'Histoire du Bel et du Serpent, l'Épître de Jérémie); VIII. Histoire Évangélique (Synopse des Trois Premiers Évangiles); IX. La Théologie Johannique (Évangile et Épîtres); X. L'Histoire Apostolique (Actes des Apôtres); XI. Les Épîtres Pauliniennes, 2 vols.; XII. Les Épîtres Catholiques; XIII. L'Apocalypse.

Last, but not least, we mention the new translation of the Old Test. from the Hebrew text by the Rev. Dr. Louis Segond, published at Geneva in 1874 (2d ed. Nancy, 1877; 3d ed. Geneva, 1879), and the new translation of the New Test. from the Greek, published in 1879. His work has been accepted by the University Press, Oxford, England. This version is regarded as a decided improvement upon all others, and as worthy of national official use. In 1878 appeared La Bible Annotée par une Société de Théologiens et de Pasteurs, fasc. 1 (Ancien Testament, les Prophètes I), Neufchâtel. (For a review of this part comp. Diestel, in Schürer's Theol. Literaturzeitung, 1879, col. 217). (B. P.)

French, John W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Maryland, graduated from the General Theological Seminary of New York, was for some years rector in Washington, D. C.; in 1857 was chaplain at the Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.; in 1866 was appointed professor of moral philosophy in the same institution, and continued there until his death, July 7, 1871. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1872, p. 127.

French, William, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1786, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. In 1820 he was master at Jesus College, and canon of Ely in 1832. He died in 1849, leaving New Translations of the Proverbs of Solomon (1831);—New Translations of the Book of Psalms (1842). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Frensdorff, Solomon, a Jewish writer, and professor at the Israelitish teachers' seminary in Hanover, who died in 1880, is the author of, Fragmente aus der Punctations- und Accentlehre der hebräischen Sprache (Hanover, 1847);—Die Massora Magna nach den ältesten Drucken (ibid. 1875, of which only the first part, Die Massora in alphabetischer Ordnung, was published). He also edited the masoretic work, מסורה ואכלה (ibid. 1864), a description of which is given under Oclak ve-Oclak in this Cyclopædia. (B. P.)

Frenzel, a name common to several German authors, of whom we mention:

1. ABRAHAM, was born in November, 1656, at Kosel, studied at Wittenberg, and died April 15, 1740, at Schönan, near Bernstadt. He wrote, De Originibus Lingua Sorobice, libri 12 (Bautzen, 1693-96);—De Diis Slavorum et Soroborum in Specie (published in Hoffmann's Scriptores Rerum Lusaticorum, 2 vols.);—De vocabulis Propriis Sorobici Pagorum (published also in Hoffmann's work). Besides, he left in manuscript a Dictionary of the Wendish Language, works on the manners of the people of Upper Lusatia (extracts from which were published by Muka under the title Frenzeliana, in Cuopria Macij Serbakeje, Bautzen, 1880-82). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

2. MICHAEL, born Feb. 2, 1628, studied at Leipsic, was pastor at Kosel, and died June 29, 1706. He translated the New Test. into the Wendish language, also the Psalms, and Luther's catechism. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

3. MICHAEL, Jr., brother of Abraham, was born Feb. 14, 1667, studied at Wittenberg, and died as deacon at Hoyerswerda, Feb. 11, 1752. He wrote Dissertatio de Idolis Slavorum (Wittenberg, 1691).

4. SOLOMON GOTTHOLD, son of Michael, Jr., who was born in 1701, and died deacon at Hoyerswerda, March 22, 1768, is the author of a Wendish Catechism (Lübau, 1738). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. For the family Frenzel see Schubert, Chronik der Geschlechter Frenzel und Schleier (Dresden, 1843). (B. P.)

Fresco, or wall-painting in water-colors, was very common in the early ages of the Christian era, and was gradually introduced into sacred places, especially churches and the catacombs, portions of it still remaining. The subjects are usually Scriptural, though sometimes purely ideal. (See illustration on p. 417.) For the details see Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v. See PAINTING.

Fresnoy, CHARLES ALPHONSE DU, a very eminent French painter, was born in Paris in 1611, and studied in the school of François Perrier, after which he visited Italy. In 1656 he returned to his native city, where he painted, among other works, a fine picture of St. Margaret, for the church of that name. He died in Paris in 1665. He was occupied during a long period of his life in preparing for publication his admirable poem on art, De Arte Graphica, which was issued after his death. See Spooner, Ing. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Freudentheil, WILHELM NICHOLAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stade, in Hanover, June 5, 1771. He studied at Göttingen; was in 1792 professor of literature and history at Zelle; in 1796 sub-rector; in 1805 con-rector; in 1809 rector at Stade; in 1816 was called as deacon to Hamburg; in 1828 was pastor at the Church of the Holy Ghost, and was honored in 1841 by his alma mater with the theological doctorate. He died March 7, 1853. Besides his Commentatio de Codice sacro more, etc. (Göttingen, 1791), he contributed some fine specimens to German hymnology. See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Frey, Jean Jacques, an eminent Swiss engraver, was born at Lucerne in 1681, and after acquiring the elements of his art in his own country, went to Rome, where he studied for some time under Arnold van Westerhout. The following are some of his many plates: The Holy Family; St. Jerome; St. Joseph Presenting Cherries to the Infant Christ; St. Andrew Kneeling before the Cross; St. Bernard; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Archangel Michael. He died at Rome in 1752. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Freyenmoet (or Frymuth), JOHN CASPAR, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Switzerland in 1720, came to America in his youth, and lived at what is now Port Jervis, N. Y., then the centre of the Dutch churches situated on the Delaware river—Minisk, Walpeck, Smithfield, and Mahackemack—which sent him to Holland to be educated for the ministry and ordained as their pastor. He returned in 1741, and ministered to them until 1756. His great popularity as a preacher, and his deep piety and zeal, created an active strife for his services between the churches referred to and those in Ulster County. He removed to Columbia County in 1756, and continued until his death, in 1778, the acceptable and useful minister of the churches of Kinderhook, Claverack, Livingston Manor, Red Hook, and Schoodack. He favored the ordination of ministers in this country, and was a conservative in the early Coetus party, but indignantly withdrew when they proposed to organize a classis. His social qualities were of a high order, and his prudence and skill in settling delicate ecclesiastical cases brought him into frequent request upon official commissions. See Slauson, Hist. Discourse at Port Jervis; Zabriskie, Centennial Discourse at Claverack; Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Freytag, GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH, a German theologian and scholar, was born at Lüneburg, Sept. 19, 1788, and educated in philology and theology at the University of Göttingen. From 1811 to 1813 he acted as theological tutor there, then went to Königsberg as sub-librarian; in 1815 became a chaplain in the Prussian army, in which capacity he visited Paris; afterwards resigned his chaplaincy, and remained in Paris to prosecute his Oriental studies under De Sacy. In 1819 he was appointed professor of Oriental languages at Bonn, and continued in that position until his death, Nov. 16, 1861. Besides publishing a compendium of Hebrew grammar (Kurzgefasste Grammatik der hebräischen Sprache, 1835), and a treatise on Arabic versification (Darstellung der Arabischen Verskunst, 1838), Freytag edited two volumes of Arabic songs (Hamase Carmina, 1828–52), and three of Arabic proverbs (Arabum Proverbia, 1838–43). His principal work, however, was his Lexicon Arabico-Latinum (1830–37), which rapidly superseded the earlier lexicons. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Fricco, in Norse mythology, was the third god with Odin and Thor, who were worshipped in the great temple at Upsala (then the capital of Sweden). According to the latest researches he is one with Freir.

Friday, the Mohammedan weekly Sabbath, commencing at the preceding sunset. The Mohammedans regard it as the chief of all days. The public services, which occupy only a portion of the day, the rest being devoted to business and recreation, commence at noon, and besides the usual prayers there are additional ceremonies performed, including the reading and reciting of parts of the Koran from the reading-desk, and the delivery of sermons from the pulpit by the Imams.

Friderici, Jeremias, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Leipsic in 1696, studied in the same city and became master of arts, catechist, and preacher, and died there, Sept. 6, 1766. He wrote, De Illoa Propheta (Leipsic, 1715):—De Daniele (ibid. 1716):—De Zacharia (ibid. 1718):—De Ezechiele (ibid. 1719):—De Deo, Patriarcha Jacobi (ibid. 1729):—Sixtini Amicæ Parænesis (ibid. 1730). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Friderici, Johann Christoph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 25, 1780, at Tempelburg, in Pomerania, studied at Halle, and was for some time military chaplain. In 1760 he was called to the pastorate at Neustadt-Magdeburg, and in 1768 to Göttingen. In 1770 he was appointed general superintendent and first pastor at Clausthal, but five years later he accepted a call to Hamburg, where he died, Aug. 12, 1777. Besides a number of sermons, he published Specimen Inaugurale Theologicum de Virtute vere Christiana (Kiel, 1776; Germ. transl. by Thies, Hamburg, 1779). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 448 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Frideswida (Fredeswitha, Frithsawith, etc.), an early English saint, is said to have been a king's daughter, who fled to Oxford to escape marriage, and founded a convent there about the time of Bede. She died about 785, and is commemorated on Oct. 19.

Fried-Allek, in the mythology of the Laplanders, is that one of the three supreme gods who superintended Friday. He was the companion of the sun, and allowed no works on that day; sacrifices, however, could reconcile him.

Friedemann, Friedrich Traugott, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born March 30, 1793, was in 1820 rector at Wittenberg, in 1823 rector at Brunswick, in 1828 director at Weilburg, and died in 1839. He wrote, De Summa Christianæ Doctrinæ (Wittenberg, 1821; transl. by Fried. Beck, Leipsic, 1823):—Christlich-religiöse Anregungen (Weilburg, 1837). See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Friedlieb, Philipp Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Stralsund, Sept. 10, 1663, wrote, Theologia:—Angelologia:—Anthropologia:—Christologia:—Ecclésiologia:—Medulla Theologiae Thetica, Polemica et Moralis:—Theologia Biblica seu Exegetica:—Phosphorus Biblicus, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Witte, Diarium Biographicum. (B. P.)

Frimel, Johannes (1), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Breslau, in Silesia, Nov. 2, 1606. He studied at different universities, was deacon at Wittenberg in 1631, preacher in his native city in 1647, and died Feb. 5, 1660. He wrote, Probu Fidei Evangelica:—De Calo Beatorum:—De Legitima Vocatione Lutheri:—De Verbo Dei Scripto. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 759. (B. P.)

Frimel, Johannes (2), son of the foregoing, born at Wittenberg, Nov. 20, 1632, studied at different universities, was deacon at Breslau in 1660, archdeacon in 1676, and died Nov. 13, 1688. He wrote De Bonæ Conscientiæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Frind, Anton Ludwig, a Roman Catholic historian, was born Oct. 9, 1823, at Hainspach, in Bohemia. In 1847 he received holy orders, was in 1851 catechist, in 1852 professor at the gymnasium in Leitmeritz; in 1859 was made director of the gymnasium at Eger, and in 1869 canon of the chapter at Prague. In 1879 he was transferred to the episcopal see of Leitmeritz, and died Oct. 28, 1881. His main work is Kirchengeschichte Böhmens (Prague, 1864–78, 4 vols., the last volume coming down to the year 1561). Besides, he published, Katholische Apologetik für gebildete Christen (3d ed. ibid. 1877):—Geschichte der Bischöfe und Erzbischöfe von Prag (ibid. 1873):—Der heilige Johannes von Nepomuk (ibid. 1879). Frisch, Johann, a Lutheran theologian, who died while preacher at Altona in 1692, wrote, Disputatio Theologica de Waldensibus (Wittenberg, 1659):—Historischer Tugentier, oder Anweisung dessen, was sich in der Christenheit angetragen (ibid. 1675). See Thiesens, Hamb. Gelehrten Geschichte; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Frisch, Johann David, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born Aug. 21, 1676, was in 1701 deacon at St. Leonhard, in Stuttgart, in 1714 preacher, in 1720 general-superintendent, in 1726 member of consistory, and died Jan. 8, 1742. He wrote, Neuklingende Harfe Davids, or a commentary on the Psalms:—De Origine, Tris et Terræ Palæstinorum. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Theol. i, 304. (B. P.)

Frisch, Johann Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 26, 1715. He studied at Leipsic, and died there as pastor of St. George's, Nov. 4, 1778. He wrote, Commentatio Philologica de ἀντιφάσι Nulla, etc. (Freiburg, 1740):—De Vero Sensu et Genuina Ratione Legis Divinæ, Deut. xxi, 10 (Leipsic, 1744):—De Muliere Peregrina apud Hebræos (ibid. eod.):—De Levi cum Mathæo non Confundendo (ibid. 1746):—Apoclyptischer Catechismus (1773). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 304; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 566. (B. P.)

Frisch, Samuel Gottlob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 22, 1765, at Freiberg. He studied at Leipsic, was for some time deacon at Mutschen, in Saxony, morning preacher at Freiberg, and after 1822 court preacher at Dresden, where he died, April 21, 1829. Of his publications we mention, Lucæ Commentarium de Vita, Dictis Factisque Jesu et Apostolorum (Freiberg, 1817; reprinted in Rosenmüller's Commentationes Theologicæ, i, 272 sq.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 450 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 87; ii, 94, 163, 204. (B. P.)

Frisius, SIMON, an eminent Dutch engraver, was born at Leeuwarden, in Friesland, about 1580. He is regarded as the first who brought etching to perfection. The following are some of his principal works: The Descent of the Holy Ghost; The Assumption of the Virgin; The Virgin Suckling the Infant. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fritsch, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Quedlinburg, Feb. 3, 1772. He studied at Halle, and was in 1795 preacher at his native place. In 1804 he was appointed first preacher of St. Benedict's; in 1817 he received the degree of doctor of theology from the Königsberg University; in 1821 was made superintendent, and died Jan. 1, 1829. He published some homiletical works, for which see Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 456 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 496, 863; ii, 36, 46, 56, 67, 123, 153, 296; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 386. (B. P.)

Frison, PIERRE, a French historian and theologian, was born in the diocese of Rheims, in the latter part of the 15th century. He was a Jesuit for some time, and taught in the colleges of that society; but left it to enter the University of Paris, where he was made doctor in 1623. He was admitted to the College of Navarre in 1624, and became in 1635 grand-master of it. He died in July, 1650 or 1651, leaving, La Moyens pour Discerner les Bibles Françaises Catholiques (Paris, 1621);—Gallia Purpurata (ibid. 1638), against which Baluze wrote his Anti-Frizonus (Toulouse, 1652). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Frituli, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Foro-Julienne), was held A.D. 796 (not 791), as Pagi shows, under Paulinus, patriarch of Aquileia, whose letter to Charlemagne, formerly miscollocated with the synod of Alino, A.D. 802, assigns three causes for its meeting: (1) the orthodox faith; (2) ecclesiastical discipline; and (3) recent outrages, probably by the Huns. The first of these is explained in his speech, which is an elaborate apology for the reception into the Western creed of the clause "and the Son," which Charlemagne had attacked, and the pope vindicated, the second Nicene Council two years before for not having in theirs; Paulinus himself endeavoring to prove both right. The resemblance between parts of this speech and the Athanasian creed has been remarked, and is very close. Besides it is observable that all priests are required to commit to memory the entire exposition of "the Catholic faith," with which he concludes: while, for everybody else, the learning by heart of the Creed and the Lord's Prayer is prescribed. Of the canons, the 1st threatens simony; the 2d drunkenness; the 4th and 5th deprecate secular employments and amusements for the clergy. By the 10th, a divorced person is forbidden to marry again till the former partner dies; and by the 13th all are inhibited from working on Sundays and holidays. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antig. s. v.; Landon, Manual of Councils, s. v.

Fro, in Norse mythology, is a deity of the second grade, worshipped by the Goths and Danes as the ruler of the winds. He received bloody, often human, sacrifices, which he himself instituted. According to other accounts, black animals were sacrificed to him by the Danish king, Hadding, which later were replaced by human sacrifices; they are called Froablot. Others make Fro the same with Freir (q. v.).

Froeligh, SOLOMON, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Red Hook, N. Y., in 1750. He studied theology with Dr. Theodorick Romeyn and Rev. J. H. Goetschius, and was licensed to preach in 1774. His first pastoral charge was on Long Island, in the churches of Jamaica, Newtown, Oyster Bay, and Success (1775-76). He was an ardent patriot during the Revolutionary War, and was compelled to flee from his congregations when the British occupied Long Island. From 1776 to 1780 he supplied the churches of Fishkill and Poughkeepsie, and at the end of the war was pastor at Hillsborough and Neshanic, N. J. In 1786 he removed to the united churches of Hackensack and Schraalenbergh; was appointed by the General Synod lecturer in theology in 1792, and in 1797 professor of theology, an office which he held until 1822. The churches over which he was last settled had long been in difficulties, which were not quieted by his coming among them; and, in 1822, he seceded, with four other ministers in the North, Messrs. Brokaw, Palmer, Toll, and Wyckoff, who had previously been suspended for contumacy, and they organized what was called "The True Reformed Dutch Church." A small number of disaffected congregations and ministers afterwards joined them. In 1823 Dr. Froeligh was suspended by the General Synod from his professorship and from the ministry, for schism and contempt of ecclesiastical authority, and for promoting divisions in the Church. His own letters proved that he had for many years contemplated this secession. After this he continued to minister to the two churches which had seceded with him, as their pastor, until his decease, Oct. 8, 1827. For a full history of these events, see Annals of the Classics of Bergen, by Benjamin C. Taylor, D.D., p. 188-238; also autobiographical notes incorporated in Rev. C. T. Demarest's Lamentation over Rev. Solomon Froeligh, D.D. Dr. Froeligh was neither very learned nor gifted with genius, but was a man of unquestioned ability and respectable attainments in the old theology. In his early ministry he was useful and blessed with considerable success. See also Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.; Minutes of General Synod, 1823; Memoir, by Peter Labagh, D.D., p. 129-135. (W. J. R. T.)

Frohberger, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 27, 1742, at Wehlen, near Pirna, in Saxony. He studied at Halle and Leipsic, and was in 1774 preacher at Rennersdorf, near Herrnbut. In 1820 he retired from the ministry, and died Jan. 29, 1827. He published some ascetical works, for which see Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 461 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 774; ii, 130; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 389; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 289 sq. (B. P.)

Frohne, JOHANN ADOLPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 11, 1652. He studied at Jena, where he also lectured for some time. In 1678 he accepted a call as rector to Lemgo, was in 1680 preacher there, and succeeded his father in 1691 as preacher at Mühlhausen. In 1692 he went to Giessen, and presented for the degree of theologiae licentiat, De Fide ut Dispositione Meritoria ad Justificationem contra Pontificios. In 1698 he received the theological doctorate, and died Nov. 12, 1713. He published, Gründlicher Beweis des geistlichen Priesterthums (Mühlhausen, 1708, against which Eilmar wrote his Gründliche Erörterung der Lehre von dem geistlichen Priesterthum, 1704);—Recht des geistlichen Priesters (written against Eilmar, 1705);—Theologia Definitiva (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1707). See Walch, Bibl. Theol. ii, 765 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Fromman, ANDREAS, a German philosopher, was born at Coburg, Aug. 11, 1591, and died March 26, 1666. He wrote, Dissertationes 6 de Stultitia Atheismi, ad Psa. xiv:—De Metu Pauli ad 2 Cor. xi, 3;—De Fide Pontificiorum Explicata et Implicata, Formata et Informi. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Frommann, Erhard Andreas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 8, 1722. He studied at Coburg and Altdorf, was in 1756 professor of Greek and Oriental languages at Coburg, and died Oct. 1, 1774. He wrote, De Cultu Deorum ex ὁνομαστικῇ Illustri (Altdorf, 1745);—De Hermeneutia Veteris Ecclesiae (ibid. 1747);—De Syntaxi Linguae et Præcipue Ebraica (ibid.

cod.):—De Lingua Profunda ad Esa. xxxiii, 19; Ezech. iii, 5, 6 (ibid. 1748):—De Opinata Sanctitate Linguae Ebraicae (Coburg, 1756):—De Sacris Judaeorum (ibid. 1759):—*An Variae Lectiones ad Codicem V. Frommann, Georg Carl, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 9, 1809, at Lauten, near Coburg. He studied theology at Jena, Bonn, and Berlin, with Bleek, Nitzsch, Schleiermacher, and Neander for his teachers. He commenced his theological lectures at Jena, and his Darlegung des johanneischen Lehrbegriffs, published in 1833 in the Studien und Kritiken, proved him to be a worthy pupil of his teachers. In 1837 he was appointed professor of theology, and in 1839 published his Darlegung in an extended form, in consideration of which the Rostock University honored him with the doctorate of theology. In the same year he was called as pastor to St. Peter's, in St. Petersburg, where he labored for twenty-five years, accompanied with great blessing. In 1865 he resigned his position, and made Berlin his residence, where he lectured as honorary professor. In 1868 he was recalled to St. Petersburg as general superintendent, but in 1876 was paralyzed, and returned as an invalid to Jena, never to resume again his work. He died Dec. 5, 1879. He also wrote, De Disciplina Arcani, quae in Vetere Ecclesia Christiana Obtinuisse Fertur (Jena, 1833). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 390. (B. P.)

Fronteau, Jean, a French archaeologist and controversialist, was born at Angers in 1614. After completing his studies in his native city, he took the habit of a regular canon in the abbey of Toussaint, at Angers. He was called to Paris in 1634, and engaged to teach philosophy, and then theology, at the abbey of St. Genevieve, and was made chancellor of the University of Paris. Being suspected, however, of Jansenism, he was exiled to the diocese of Angers in 1661, but soon called back to Paris, where he remained until his death, April 17, 1662. He wrote, Summa Totius Philosophiae (Paris, 1640):—Thomas à Kempis Vindicatus (ibid. 1641):—De Jure Episcoporum (1659):—Φιλορηγία Veterum (1640). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fröreisen, Isaac, a Lutheran theologian and professor of theology at Strasburg, who died June 5, 1632, is the author of, De Aug. Confess. Materia, Fundamento et Forma, etc.:—Scutum Catholicae Veritatis pro Inveniendâ Verâ in his Terris Militante Ecclesia:—Dissertationes contra Weigelianos:—Apologeticus contra Carolum Suchanum Calvinistam:—Vindiciae Synopticae pro Sacro Genesio Codice contra Bellarminum:—De Angelis Bonis, ad Muth. iv. 11:—De Aedificio Spirituali ad 1 Cor. iii, 11-13. Frosch, Johann, the reformer of Augsburg, originally belonged to the Carmelites. In 1516 he was made licentiate of theology at Wittenberg, under the presidency of Luther, and in 1517 prior of the Carmelite monastery at Augsburg. When Luther openly broke with the Church of Rome, Frosch, too, began to preach the pure gospel at Augsburg, and in 1522 he was appointed by the city council as evangelical preacher. In 1527 he held a disputation with the Anabaptists at Augsburg, and in 1531 was dismissed by the council because it leaned towards Zwinglianism. Frosch went to Nuremberg, and died there in 1533. See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenlieds, i, 405; ii, 475. (B. P.)

Frossard, Benoît Daniel Emilien, a French theologian, youngest son of Benjamin Sigismund (q. v.), was born June 26, 1802, at Paris. At the age of fifteen he was sent to England, where he came into direct relationship with some distinguished members of the Friends, who made a lasting impression upon him. Having returned to France, he studied theology at Montauban, and presented as his thesis for the degree of bachelor of divinity, Accord entre le Récit de Moïse sur l'Âge du Genre Humain et les Phénomènes Géologiques. In 1825 he was called to Nîmes, and in 1847 was appointed director of the seminary which was to be established beside the theological university at Montauban. In 1848 he resigned his position, and made his home at Bagnères-de-Bigorre, at the foot of the Pyrenees, where he died, Jan. 25, 1881. His great zeal for the Protestants scattered about the Pyrenees was so effective and so laborious that he was styled "the apostle of the Pyrenees." He wrote, L'Ami de la Famille:—Les Archives Écologiques:—La Vie Réelle:—Le Livre des Faibles:—Le Catéchisme Biblique. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 391. (B. P.)

Frothaire, a French prelate, was born in the second part of the 8th century. He was educated at the monastery of Garze, became abbot of St. Evre, at Toul, and bishop of that city in 813. During the revolt of Bernard, he proved himself faithful to the cause of Louis le Débonnaire, and took an important part in several councils which judged the rebel bishops. He left twenty-one letters, which were published by André Duchesne, in his Historia Francorum Scriptores, ii. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fructuosus, an early martyr, commemorated Jan. 21, was bishop of Tarragona in the 3d century, and burned alive during the Diocletian persecution. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Frymuth. See FREYENMORT.

Fryxell, Andries, a Swedish historian, was born Feb. 7, 1795, at Hasselskoj, in Dalsland. In 1822 he was teacher, in 1828 rector of the Marien school at Stockholm, in 1833 professor, and in 1836 pastor at Sunne, one of the largest parishes of Sweden. In 1840 he was received into the Stockholm Academy, and in 1845 made doctor of theology. He died March 21, 1881. He is known as the author of Berichte aus der Schwedischen Geschichte, of which more than forty volumes have been published since 1823. (B. P.)

Fuchs, Adolph Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 27, 1758, at Neuenkirchen, in Mecklenburg-Strelitz. He studied at Göttingen, was in 1778 con-rector at the gymnasium in Prenzlau, in 1781 rector of the cathedral-school at Ratzeburg, and in 1810 superintendent of the Güstrow diocese. He died April 13, 1828, leaving Der Brief Pauli an die Römer (Stendal, 1789):—Progr. in qua Ratione ad Reliquos de Libri Hagiographorum (Rostock, 1797). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 466 sq. (B. P.)

Fuchs, Gottlieb Daniel, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Stuttgart in 1783, is the author of Bibliothek der Kirchentersammlungen des 4 und 5 Jahrhunderts (Leipsic, 1780-1784, 4 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 659. (B. P.)

Fuchs, Karl Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who was born in 1762 at Heidelberg, and died at Munich in 1842, is the author of, Annalen der Protest. Kirche im Königreich Bayern (Nürnberg, 1819-23):—Allgemeine Uebersicht des Zustandes der Protest. Kirche in Bayern, etc. (Auspach, 1830);—Die Einführung der Kirchenvorstände (Nürnberg, 1822):—Die Evangelische Kirche, ihre Bekenntnisse und Gottesdienstlichen Handlungen (ibid. 1829):—Annalen der Protest. Kirche im Königreich Bayern (Munich, 1839-43). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 785; ii, 20, 72, 77, 79, 100, 195; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 392 sq. (B. P.)

Fuchten, JOHANN, a Protestant theologian, was born at Antwerp, Nov. 26, 1568, became pastor at Ill-desheim in 1602, and died at Helmsstädt, Nov. 26, 1622, professor and doctor of theology. He edited, Paschasis Ralberti Testimonia SS. Patrum de Genuino Eucharistiae Intellectu Usque:—Ejusdem Libri II de Spiritu S.:—Sancti Augustini Sententia ex Omnibus ejus Operibus a S. Prospero Excerptis, etc. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 911. (B. P.)

Fuga, FERDINANDO, an eminent Italian architect, was born at Florence in 1639, and studied under Gio. Battista Fugini. In 1725 he was sent to Naples by cardinal Giudire, to erect a chapel in his palace. He also erected the Church della Morte, in the Strada Giulia. He died at Florence, Feb. 7, 1782. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Führich, JOSEPH VON, a Bohemian painter, was born at Kratzau in 1800. His admiration for the pictures in the wayside chapels of his native country led him to attempt a sketch of The Nativity for the Christmas festival in his father's house. He became the pupil of Bengler in the Academy of Prague in 1816, and in 1826 went to Rome, where he added three frescos to those executed by Cornelius and Overbeck in the Palazzo Massimi. In 1831 he finished the Triumph of Christ, now in the Raczyński Palace at Berlin. In 1834 he became custos, and in 1841 professor of composition in the Academy of Vienna. After this he completed the monumental pictures of the Church of St. Nepomuk, and (1854-61) the vast series of wall-paintings which cover the inside of the Lerchenfeld Church at Vienna. In 1872 he was pensioned, and made a knight of the order of Francis Joseph. He died March 13, 1876. "Führich has been fairly described as a 'Nazarene,' a romantic religious artist, whose pencil did more than any other to restore the old spirit of Dürer and give new shape to countless incidents of the gospel and scriptural legends." His principal works are his illustrations of Tieck's Genesara, The Lord's Prayer, The Triumph of Christ, The Road to Bethlehem, The Succession of Christ, according to Thomas à Kempis, The Prodigal Son, and the verses of the Psalter. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed., s. v.

Fuhrmann, WILHELM DAVID, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Soest, May 15, 1764, was in 1806 preacher at Hamin, and died Jan. 20, 1838. He is the author of, Handbuch der theol. Literatur (Leipzig, 1818-21, 2 vols.):—Handbuch der neuesten theol. Literatur (Barmen, 1835):—Handwörterbuch der christl. Religions- und Kirchengeschichte (Halle, 1826-29, 3 vols.):—Christliche Glaubenslehre in alphabetischer Ordnung (Leipzig, 1802):—Christliche Morallehre für den Kanzelgebrauch in alphabetischer Ordnung (ibid. 1797-1803, 5 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 6, 293, 538; ii, 56; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 395. (B. P.)

Fulborn, STEPHEN DE, an English prelate of the 13th century, was born at Fulborn, Cambridgeshire. In 1274 he became bishop of Waterford and lord treasurer of Ireland; hence he was preferred archbishop of Tuam, and was also chief-justice of Ireland. He is reported to have given to the Church of Glastonbury, England,

"indulgences of an hundred days," probably, as Fuller suggests, so many days to all in his province who went on a pilgrimage to that place—"an over-papal act for a plain archbishop." He died in 1288, and was buried in Trinity Church, Dublin. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 228.

Fulcran, saint and bishop, was a native of Lodeve, archdiocese of Narbonne, France, in the 10th century, and from his childhood exhibited marked piety. He was educated by Theodoric, bishop of Lodeve, who ordained him. On the death of Theodoric, the city elected Fulcran to be his successor, and he was consecrated at Narbonne by archbishop Imerick, Feb. 4, 949. His zeal and humility endeared him to his flock, as did also his abundant charity in time of famine. For a harsh word ("The man deserves to be burnt") spoken of a bishop who had fallen into heresy, and whom he heard was actually burned by the people, he was filled with remorse, twice went to Rome to do penance, tore the clothes from his back, bade his companions beat him through the streets with thorn branches, and made his confessions in the Church of St. Peter. When near his death, multitudes poured to Lodeve to receive his blessing. Fulcran died in 1006. He is celebrated in the Gallican martyrology (Feb. 18), and his life has been written by bishop Bernard Guido, compiled from ancient notices and lives of this saint, published by Bollandus. See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 294.

Fulford, FRANCIS, D.D., a Canadian prelate, was born at Sidmouth, England, in 1803, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow in 1825. He held prominent positions in the Church of England, and in 1850 became lord-bishop of Montreal and metropolitan of Canada. He died in Montreal, Sept. 9, 1868. His writings include Sermons:—Progress of the Reformation:—and other works.

Fulke of STAMFORD, was born in Somersetshire, made treasurer of St. Paul's, London, and then by papal bull declared archbishop of Dublin in 1256. He died in his manor of Finglas in 1271, and was buried in St. Mary's chapel, of the Church of St. Patrick. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 94.

Fulla (or Volla), in Scandinavian mythology, was a goddess, the sister and companion of the goddess Freia.

Fuller, Nicholas, a learned English divine, was born at Southampton in 1557, and educated at a free school in the same place, and at Hart Hall, Oxford. He became rector of Allington, Wiltshire, prebend of Salisbury, and rector of Bishop Waltham, Hampshire. He died in 1622. His works are Miscellanea Theologica, lib. iii (Heidelberg, 1612):—Miscellanea Sacra (1622). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Fuller, Richard, D.D., an eminent Baptist minister, was born at Beaufort, S. C., April 22, 1804. He studied under Rev. Dr. Brantly, entered Harvard University in 1820, but on account of ill-health left it during his junior year, and became a lawyer in his native state. In 1832 he was converted, under the preaching of Rev. Daniel Barker, joined the Baptist Church, was ordained the next year pastor at Beaufort, and in 1847 removed to Baltimore to take charge of the Seventh Baptist Church. In 1836 he visited Europe, and during his pastorate at Beaufort was engaged in a controversy with bishop England on the Roman Catholic claims, as well as with Dr. Wayland on the slavery question. He died in Baltimore, Oct. 20, 1876. Dr. Fuller was an eloquent preacher, an admirable pastor, and a noble specimen of Christian manliness and power. Besides Letters on the above controversies and several Sermons, he published an Argument on Close Communion (1849), and was one of the editors of the Baptist Hymn-book. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. s. v.; Drake, Dict. of Amer. Biog. s. v.; Life, by Cuthbert (N. Y. 1879).

Fulrad (Lat. Folredus), an early French prelate, the son of wealthy parents in Alsace, became fourteenth abbot of St. Denis, in Paris, about 750, and was for many years ambassador of kings and popes, who conferred upon him the most special privileges. He died in 784. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fulton, WILLIAM, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, officiated, after his ordination, in Fremont, O.; about 1859 removed to Chicago, Ill.; and in 1860 to Cedar Rapids, Ia., where he became rector of Grace Church; in 1864 of All-Hallow's parish, Snow Hill, Md.; in 1870 of Spring Hill parish, Salisbury, where he died, Dec. 6, 1877, aged forty-nine years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Fumel, JEAN FELIX HENRI DE, a French prelate, was born at Toulouse in 1717; studied at St. Sulpice; was consecrated bishop of Lodève in 1750; distinguished himself by his episcopal ability, his ardent charity, and his attachment to the authority of the Church, and died Jan. 2, 1790. He wrote several funeral orations. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Funeral Service, that part of the liturgy which the Church of England appoints to be read at the burial of the dead. It is said to have been of very great antiquity, and was used both in the Eastern and Western churches. This service is read over all the dead indiscriminately, with the exception of those who die unbaptized, of self-murderers, and those who die under the sentence of the greater excommunication.

Furies (Eumenides or Diræ), mythical personages, either daughters of Nox and Acheron, of Terra and the blood of Saturn, of the Earth and Darkness, of Eris, that is, Contention, or of Jupiter. Their names were Alecto, Megæra, and Tisiphone. Some add a fourth, called Lyssa; though others recognise but one Fury, called Alraastia, daughter of Jupiter and Necessity, and the avenger of all vice. Their office was to force persons guilty of crimes committed in secret to confess their guilt. They punished their incorrigible subjects with insanity. They were represented as of vast size, old, squalid, and terrible to behold. They wore a dark robe with a serpent as a girdle. The uncultured age took pains to connect everything horrible with these frightful forms: eyes emitting flame, snake-hairs, claw-hands, with viper scourges. Their dwelling-place is an iron palace in the infernal region, where they torture those who arrive in Tartarus without being reconciled to the gods. With the progress of civilization the myths of these deities had many changes; the bloody pictures disappeared, and in their place were substituted the Eumenides (q. v.)

Furinalia, an annual festival celebrated by the ancient Romans in honor of the obscure goddess Furina. It was observed towards the end of July, and the services were conducted by a flamen.

Furini, FRANCESCO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1604, and studied in the schools of Passignano and Roselli, and then went to Rome. Among his finest works was a picture of The Three Graces, in the Palazzo Strozzi. He painted a number of large works for the churches, the best of which are at Borgo San Lorenzo, near Florence, representing St. Francis Receiving the Stigmata, and the Conception of the Virgin. He died in 1649. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Fürst, JULIUS, an eminent Hebrew scholar of Germany, was born May 12, 1805, at Zerkowo, in the duchy of Posen. He studied at different universities, and after having taken his degree as doctor of philosophy, took up his abode at Leipsic, where he commenced his lectures at the university in 1839. In 1864 he was made professor, and died Feb. 9, 1873. He published, Lehrgebäude der aramäischen Idioms (Leipsic, 1835):—Perlenschnüre aramäischer Gnomen und Lieder (1836):

—Concordantia Librorum Sacrorum Veteris Testamenti (1837-40):—Hebräisches und Chaldäisches Handwörterbuch (1857-61, and often; English translation by S. Davidson, Lond. 1864; 3d ed. 1867):—Geschichte der bibl. Literatur (1867-70, 2 vols.):—Der Kanon des Alten Testaments (1868, 2 vols.):—Kultur- und Literaturgeschichte der Juden in Asien (vol. i, 1849):—Geschichte des Karäerthums (1862-65, 3 vols.):—Bibliotheca Judaica (1848-63, 3 vols.). See Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, ii, 285; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 396 sq.; Etheridge, Introduction to Hebrew Literature, p. 483; Morais, Eminent Israelites of the 19th Century, p. 89 sq. (B. P.)

Fürstenthal, JACOB RAFAEL, a Hebrew scholar, was born in 1781, and died at Breslau, Dec. 16, 1855. He published, Selichoth, or the penitential prayers, with a German translation and Hebrew commentary (Breslau, 1823-24, 2 vols.):—he also translated into German Pakuda's (q. v.) חובת הלבבות, or, Duties of the Heart (ibid. 1835):—Maimonides' More Nebuchim (only the first part, Krotoschin, 1839):—Aboab's Menorath ha-maor (ibid. 1843). A very valuable work of his is Rubbinische Anthologie (Breslau, 1834). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 307 sq., where a complete list of his works is given. (B. P.)

Fürstenberg, Ferdinand von, a German prelate, was born at Bilslein, in Westphalia, Oct. 21, 1626. Dedicated to the Church from infancy, he became canon of Hildesheim, and finally camerarius segreto of pope Alexander VII. He was chosen bishop of Paderborn, April 20, 1661, and took possession the following October. He administered his diocese with a remarkable spirit of equity, encouraged public instruction, caused new school buildings to be erected, attended to a careful distribution of instruction, preached successfully in behalf of various missions, and raised for this object 101,740 thalers. In 1678 he became bishop of Munster, after having been the coadjutor of his predecessor, also vicar-general of the pope for the countries of the North. He died June 26, 1683, leaving some poems and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fürstenberg, Franz Egon von, a German prelate, was born at Strasburg, May 27, 1662. He was minister to the elector of Cologne, Maximilian Henry. His attachment to Louis XIV led him to contribute to the formation of the Ligue de Rhin, contracted in view of the peace between the king and several electors of Germany. In 1661 he induced the elector of Cologne to leave to the disposal of the king of France the places of Nuiz and of Kaiserwerth. He was appointed bishop of Metz in 1658, but in 1663 resigned this position for that of Strasburg. He devoted himself to recovering from the hands of the Lutherans certain domains which formerly belonged to the Church of Strasburg. This prelate died April 1, 1682, a little after the re-establishment of the Catholic faith in the Cathedral of Strasburg, and after the recall of the canons in accordance with the submission of Strasburg to the king of France. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fürstenberg, Wilhelm Egon von, surnamed Prince William, brother of Franz, was born in 1629. Like his elder brother, he was counsellor to the elector of Cologne, Maximilian Henry, and declared himself a partisan of France. Incensed at this, the emperor removed him, Feb. 13, 1674, then imprisoned him successively at Vienna and at Neustadt. Fürstenberg did not regain his liberty until after the peace of Nimeguen. Called to the bishopric of Metz in 1663, he resigned the following year. He was appointed bishop of Strasburg on the death of his brother in 1682. He then committed to the Jesuits the direction of a seminary and college founded by him. In 1686, through the representation of the French government, he received from pope Innocent XI the hat of a cardinal. He was elected coadjutor of Maximilian

Henry, elector of Cologne, Jan. 7, 1688; but the court of Rome, then at variance with the court of France, did not ratify this election, and another candidate, prince Clement of Bavaria, bishop of Ratisbon, superseded him. In compensation for this he received of Louis XIV the abbey of St. Germain-des-Près, where he went to dwell. He died at Paris, April 10, 1704. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Fuss (Lat. Fusius), ADAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 28, 1580, studied at Jena and Leipzig, and died in 1648. He published, Compendium Dictionarium Hebr. Germanicum (Leipsc, 1632):—Horologium Schickardi Germ. (ibid. eod.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 310; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Füssli, JOHANN CONRAD, a Reformed theologian of Germany, who was born at Zurich in 1707, and died in 1775, is the author of, Thesaurus Historiæ Heelæicæ (Zurich, 1735):—Nachricht von der Zürchischen Uebersetzung des Josephus (ibid. 1736):—Comment. ad Rom. r. 13 (ibid. 1738):—Diss. Apologetica pro Davide Bge Adr. Obrectationes P. Buelii (ibid. 1741):—Beiträge zur Erläuterung der Reformations-Geschichte des Schweizerlandes (ibid. 1741-53):—Epistolæ ab Ecclesiæ Heelæicæ Reformatioribus vel ad eos Scriptæ (ibid. 1742):—Dissertatio de Fanaticis Sec. xi in Italia (Berne, 1761):—Neue und unparteiische Kirchen- und Ketzer-Historie der mittlem Zeit (Frankfort, 1770):—De Genuina Albigensium et Waldensium Distinctione (in the Misc. Lips. part 10). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 576, 747, 810. (B. P.)

Puttafahf, in the mythology of the South Sea islands, is the mightiest among the gods of the sea, whom the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands worship. Many sacrifices of fruits and flowers are given to him and his wife Faikuwa.

Fyfe, ROBERT A., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born of Scotch parents, Oct. 20, 1816, at Saint-Philippe, near Montreal. He studied at Madison University, N. Y., and graduated at the Newton Theological Institution in 1842; was ordained at Brookline, Mass., and was pastor in Perth, Can., the same year. In 1843 he removed to Montreal to take a position as professor in the college there; next year became pastor of a Church in Toronto; in 1848 was again pastor in Perth; about 1850 removed to Warren, R. I.; in 1853 to Milwaukee, Wis.; in 1855 to Toronto again, over the Bond Street Church; in 1860 was elected president of the Canadian Literary Institute at Woodstock, and died there, Sept. 4, 1878. Few Baptist ministers in Canada have accomplished more for the denomination which he so ably represented than Dr. Fyfe. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Fylfot (or Fytfoot), i. e. fourfooted, a term used to describe a mystical cross, made from the combination, in a cruciform arrangement, of four Greek gammas, thus (fig. 1), or thus (fig. 2); occasionally the small γ was employed, thus (fig. 8). It was also called Gammatum (Γαμματιον), the Greek term for this mystical device. Its use formed a part of the ancient Secret Discipline in the primitive Church. See GAMMADIA.

Funeral Pall, a covering for the coffin during the procession to church, during the service in church, and until the coffin is afterwards placed in the grave. Anciently palls were either of violet or black, adorned with a cross, and sometimes richly embroidered with flowers, heraldic devices, or figures of saints.

Fylla, in Norse mythology, was one of the Asas who live with Frigga, in Wingolf, in the palace Fensaler. She is very beautiful, Funeral Pall of the 16th Century. has long, flowing hair, and delicate color of skin. A golden band on her forehead characterizes her as a goddess, and she is the confidential adviser of the wife of Odin, as well as her private maid.

a pensile lamp of similar form, for a church, made of different metals—gold, silver, brass, and electrum. These lamps were frequently embossed, or decorated in bass-relief, and ornamented with lilies, heads of gryphons or lions, or even fashioned in the form of these animals. Like the corone used for lighting, they very often had crosses attached to them.

Gabbai, ISAAC IBN-, a Jewish writer, who flourished at Leghorn at the beginning of the 17th century, is the author of כנה נחמה, or, a commentary on the Mishna (Venice, 1614, and often). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 311; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gabbai, MEIR IBN-, a Jewish writer of Italy, in the 16th century, is the author of, דרן אמונות, a cabalistic work, which treats of the ten sephiroth (Padua, 1563; latest edition, by Goldberg, Berlin, 1850):—עבדה הקדש, also מראה אלחים, a cabalistic-philosophical work (Mantua, 1545):—הולעת יעקב, cabalistic explanations of the Jewish prayers (Constantinople, 1560). See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 107 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 311 sq. (B. P.)

Gabriel, FESTIVAL OF, is celebrated by the Greek Church on March 26, in honor of the archangel Gabriel.

Another holy day, called the Festival of Sts. Gabriel and Michael, is held in honor of the two archangels, on Nov. 1, by the Greek Church.

Gabriel (surnamed Severus), a Greek prelate, born in Monembasia in 1577, was ordained bishop of Philadelphia, at Constantinople, by the patriarch Jeremiah. Seeing that his church contained few Greeks, he withdrew to Venice, where he was bishop of the Greeks living there. His writings were published by Simon, under the title, Fides Ecclesiæ Orientalis (in Greek and Latin, 1671). They comprise two treatises, one relating to the sacraments, the other entitled Apologia, published for the first time at Venice in 1600. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gabrielli, a heretical prelate, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He belonged to the Roman branch of the Gabrielli family. Actions both foul and strange have been imputed to him, such as making sacrifices of human blood at the reunions of his friends. Francis Picchitelli, called also Cecco Foligname, had been sent to assassinate the marquis of Buffalo, but the emissary being seized, exposed his accomplices, among them Gabrielli, who was confined in a convent of Monte Cassino, and deprived of his income. Afterwards he was conducted to the château of Perugia by the order of Innocent XI. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gabrielli, Giovanni Maria, an Italian cardinal, was born at Citra-da-Castello, Jan. 10, 1654, and died Sept. 17, 1711. He is known as the apologist of cardinal Sfondrati's works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gabrielli, Giulio, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome, Aug. 20, 1748; became bishop of Sinigaglia, and cardinal-priest, Feb. 23, 1801, and on March 27, 1808, pro-secretary of state under Pius VII. On account of his incessant recriminations, Gabrielli was arrested by order of Napoleon, and on June 17 was superseded by cardinal Pecca. After the removal of the pope, Gabrielli went to France, and was banished to Saumur. In 1813 he was permitted, with several other cardinals, to accompany the pope to Fontainebleau. He afterwards returned to Rome, where he was likely to be elected pope, but died in 1822. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gabrino, Augustino, an Italian fanatic, was born at Brescia, and lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was chief of a sect of fanatics called the Chevaliers of the Apocalypse. He declared his intention of defending the Catholic Church against the anti-christ whose reign he believed to be approaching. He gave as ensigns to his followers a sabre and staff of command in the form of a cross, a sparkling star, and the names of three angels, Gabriel, Michael, and Raphael, upon their clothing. They numbered about twenty-four, mostly artisans. On Palm Sunday of 1694, Gabrino rushed, sword in hand, upon the ecclesiastics, claiming their homage. He was accordingly imprisoned as a madman. A number of his proselytes were arrested upon the confessions of one of them, and the rest dispersed. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gack, Georg Christoph, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Hof, in Bavaria, in 1793, and died at Sulzbach in 1851. He wrote, De Presbyteriorum Constitutione, etc. (Sulzbach, 1823):—Geschichte des Herzogthums Sulzbach (Leipzig, 1847). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 19, 215; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 399. (B. P.)

count of the present condition of this interesting site, see Merrill, East of the Jordan (N. Y. 1881), p. 145 sq.

Gadsden, Christopher P., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was assistant minister in Charleston, S. C., for many years, until 1859, when he became rector of St. Luke's Church in that city. He was a member of the standing committee of his diocese, a member of the board of missions to the colored men and freedmen of South Carolina, and a deputy to the General Convention. He died July 24, 1871, aged forty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1872, p. 127.

Gaelic Version of the Scriptures. This language is spoken in the Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland. It was not till the year 1767 that a New Test. in the Gaelic tongue was provided for the Scotch Highlanders in the translation of the Rev. James Stuart of Killin. The work was published at the expense of the Society in Scotland for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The first edition consisted of 10,000 copies, and a larger edition of 21,500 copies was issued by the same society in 1796. The next step of the society was to obtain a Gaelic version of the Old Test. To facilitate the work, the Old Test. was divided into four parts, two of which were allotted to the Rev. Dr. John Stuart, of Luss, the son of the translator of the New Test.; a third part, also, afterwards fell to his share, although it had in the first instance been executed by another hand. The remaining fourth part, consisting of the prophetic books, was translated by the Rev. Dr. Smith, of Campbelltown, and, on its completion, was found to differ altogether in style and execution from the other portion of the Bible translated by Dr. Stuart. The whole version was completed for the press in 1801. In consequence of many complaints concerning the discrepancy in style between the prophetic and the other books, the society resolved in their next edition to subject the prophetic books to a thorough revision, that they might be rendered conformable to the other parts of the version. This plan was effected in 1807, and 20,000 copies of the Old together with the New Test. were printed at Glasgow, under the care of the Rev. Alexander Stewart, of Dingwall. In the same year the British and Foreign Bible Society published, in London, an edition, consisting of 20,000 Bibles and 10,000 Testaments, but not being sufficient to satisfy the urgent demands for more copies, from time to time other editions followed. The total number of Gaelic Bibles and Testaments printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society up to March 31, 1884, was 160,126. This number, however, does not include a supply of 50,500 Bibles and Testaments furnished to the Highlanders by other societies between 1810 and 1829. See Bible of Every Land, p. 158. (B. P.)

Gaetano, Antonio, an Italian prelate, was born in 1566. He was archbishop of Capua, for several years nuncio at Vienna and Madrid, and died in 1624. He was learned, and handled satire with much ability. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gaetano, Bonifacio, an Italian prelate, was bishop of Cassano in 1599, vice-legat of Urban, cardinal in 1606, archbishop of Tarentum in 1613, and finally legat of Romagna. He died June 29, 1617, leaving some sermons. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gagarin, Ivan S., a Jesuit, was born in Russia in 1814. For some time he held an appointment in the Russian diplomatic service, and joined his order in 1848. Afterwards he devoted a good deal of attention to the differences between the Eastern and Western churches, and published as the result of his studies a considerable number of books and brochures in the French language, the best known of these being, Le Clergé Russe:—Les Églises d'Orient:—Le Pape:—L'Église Russe et les Ruscobles:—Les Jésuites en Russie. He co-operated with some of his countrymen in founding the excellent Slavonic library in Paris, known as the Musée Slave, which, since the expulsion of the Jesuits from France, in 1880, has been located in the Rue de Sévres. Gagarin died at Paris, July 20, 1882. (B. P.)

Gadara (Um-Keis). (From Thomson's Central Palestine and Phœnicia.)

Gagliardi, Achille, an Italian Jesuit, who died at Modena, July 6, 1607, is the author of Breve Compendio Intorno alla Professione Christiana:—De Disciplina Hominis:—Explicatio Institutii Societatis Jesu:—Meditationes pro Omnibus Hominum Statibus. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gagliardi, Paolo, a canon at Brescia, where he died, Aug. 16, 1742, is known as the editor of Veterum Brixia Episcoporum Philasterii et Gaudentii Opera (Brixen, 1788):—Gaudentii Sermones (Padua, 1720; Augsburg, 1757). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 875, 906. (B. P.)

Gagnatius. See CAGNAZZO.

Gagnée (Gagni or Gaigny), JEAN DE (Lat. Gugnues), a French theologian, was born in Paris. Having been made treasurer at the College of Navarre, he commenced, about 1524, the study of theology, which he was called to teach in 1529. He then translated the Livre des Sentences. In 1531 he became rector of the university, and was made doctor of theology. Being called to the court of Francis I, he copied rare manuscripts in the royal library. Having become almoner and preacher of the king, Gagnée made use of his influence for the maintenance of the privileges of the university. He died in 1649, leaving, Commentarius Primasii Uticensis in Epistolam S. Pauli (Latin and French; Paris and Lyons, 1587):—a translation from Latin to French of the Sermons of Guerrie, abbot of Igny:—Davidici Psalmi (Paris, 1547):—Paraphrasis in Epistolam ad Romanos (ibid. 1553, 1633):—Scholium in Evangelia quatuor et in Actus Apostolorum (ibid. 1552, 1631, and in the Biblia Maxima of John de la Haye, ibid. 1648):—Hendeca Syllabus de Sanctissimo Christi Corpore in Eucharistia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gahan, WILLIAM, D.D., an eminent Roman Catholic divine, was born in Dublin, Ireland, June 5, 1732. On Sept. 18, 1749, he joined the hermits of St. Augustine in Dublin, and the year after was sent to the convent of the order at Louvain, to complete his ecclesiastical studies at the university. Here he was promoted to the priesthood, May 25, 1755. He returned to Ireland and was made curate of the Church of St. Paul, Dublin, where he was in labors abundant. He died there, Dec. 6, 1804. His best known writings are, Sermons:—History of the Church:—The Christian Guide to Heaven:—Catholic Devotions. See Cath. Almanac, 1875, p. 50.

Gaillard de LONJUMEAU, a French prelate, was the person who conceived the idea of a grand dictionary of universal history, the execution of which he confided to Moréri, his almoner. For the compilation of this work he made numerous researches in various countries, and especially in Rome, in the library of the Vatican. It was to Gaillard de Lonjumeau that Moréri dedicated the first edition of this work, undertaken in the province, and published at Lyons in 1674. Gaillard was bishop of Apt from 1673 to 1693. He died in 1695. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gaillard, Georg, a Carmelite of Cologne, who died in 1687, is the author of Sacrificium Vespertinum Tripartitum, etc. (Cologne, 1682):—Trifidus Marianum, etc. (ibid. 1683, 1687). See Harzheim, Bibl. Colonensis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gain (de Montaignac), FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born Jan. 6, 1744, at the chateau of Montaignac. He was at first almoner of the king and grand vicar of Rheims, and in 1782 became bishop of Tarbes. He was strongly opposed to the innovations of the assembly, and retired to Spain in 1790. Nevertheless, in 1791 he came to Tarbes to protest in a public sermon against the new order of things, and to explain his refusal of the oath. The French conquests obliged him to flee to Portugal, and at the time of the concordat he resigned, Nov. 6, 1801. He died near Lisbon in 1806, leaving fifty-seven writings upon ecclesiastical matters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Galatino, PIETRO DI, a Franciscan of the 16th century, professor of theology and philosophy at Rome, is the author of De Arcanis Catholica Veritatis, etc. (Ortona di Mare, 1518, and often):—Opus de Theologia:—Commentaria in Apocalypsin:—De Ecclesia Catholica Institutione, Deformatione et Reformatione:—Ostium Apertum seu de recta Sacra Scriptura Interpretatione, etc. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 814; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. i, 971; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Galberry, THOMAS, a Roman Catholic bishop, of the order of St. Augustine, was placed in the see of Hartford, Conn., March 19, 1876. He zealously continued the work of his predecessors till the summer of 1878, when, his health failing, he set out for a convent of his order near Philadelphia. He became so ill in the cars that he was removed to a hotel in New York, where he died, Oct. 17 of the same year. See De Courcay and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 5, 7.

Gale, George Washington, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in North East, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1789. He graduated from Union College in 1814, studied theology one year thereafter at Princeton Seminary, was licensed by Hudson Presbytery in September, 1816, and ordained pastor at Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1819, where he remained till 1823. In 1827 he founded the Oneida Manual Labor Institute at Whitesborough, and in 1832 Knox College, at Galesburg, Ill. He died there, Sept. 13, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 296; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 18; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Gale, Nahum, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Auburn, Mass., March 6, 1812. He studied at Phillips Academy, Andover, graduated from Amherst College in 1837, and four years after from the East Windsor Theological Seminary. He was ordained at Ware, June 22, 1842, of which church he was pastor until 1851, when he became professor of ecclesiastical history and the pastoral charge in the East Windsor Seminary, retaining that position until 1858. On Sept. 1 of that year he was installed pastor of the Church at Lee, and died in Newburyport, Sept. 18, 1876. Among his published works are, Pilgrims' First Year in New England (1857):—Memoir of Rev. Bennett Tyler, D.D. (1859):—Conversion Through Personal Effort (1866):—Prophet of the Highest (1873). See Cong. Quarterly 1877, p. 416.

Galen, CHRISTOPH BERNHARD MATTHÆUS VAN, a German prelate and general, was born in Westphalia in 1604. Having completed his studies, he travelled in various parts of Europe, entered as colonel the service of the elector of Cologne, and made, from 1637 to 1647, several campaigns against the French and Swedes. At the treaty of peace at Münster, he accepted a canonship in that city, afterwards obtained the provostship, and in 1650 was elected bishop-prince. The inhabitants objected to some of his regulations, and he was obliged to adopt special measures to compel their obedience. In 1664 he was chosen one of the general directors of the army of the empire against the Turks. Returning to his bishopric, he allied himself in 1665 with Charles II, king of England, against the people of Holland, but Louis XIV interposed between the belligerent parties.

In 1672 Galen took arms against the states-general, but Leopold I of Germany obliged him to make a treaty with them in 1674. This bishop, fierce and war-loving, died at Huy, Sept. 19, 1678. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Galeati, DOMINICO, an Italian prelate, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He was bishop of Kurvo, and wrote Ecclesiastica in Matrimonium Potestas, adversus Jo. Launoii Doctrinam, etc. (Paris, 1677), which was followed by a reply from Launoii. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Galesni (Lat. Galesinius), PIETRO, a learned Italian ecclesiastical antiquary and apostolical notary, who died about 1590, devoted most of his time to researches in ecclesiastical history. He endeavored to correct and illustrate the Roman Martyrology, by remodelling it and adding a number of new facts concerning the saints. He wrote the Lives of the Saints of Milan (1582), and a Commentary on the Pentateuch (1587). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Gallozon, GATIEN DE, a French theologian, was born at Angers, Oct. 27, 1658. Having received the degree of doctor of civil and canon law at the age of twenty, he entered into orders; in 1688 was made canon and chorister at St. Martin of Tours; shortly after official and grand vicar; but his close attention to his duties threw him into a dangerous illness. He returned to Angers and there recovered his health. Persuaded that the sparing of his life was a miracle, he consecrated himself more wholly to the service of God. In 1707 he was appointed bishop of Agathocles and coadjutor of the bishop of Babylon. He started for Persia, and died there soon after his arrival at Ispahan, Sept. 27, 1712. He wrote some works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gallissum is the name given to the catechumenal oil in the Greek Church. It is considered as sanctified by drops of Meirun or holy chrism (q. v.) which are mixed with it.

Galliei, ALESSANDRO, an eminent Florentine architect, was born in 1691. He resided seven years in England, and on his return to Tuscany was appointed state architect by Cosmo III. He was invited by Clement XII to Rome, where he erected three superb monuments of art, the façades of S. Giovanni de' Fiorentini and S. Giovanni Laterano, and the Corsini chapel in the latter edifice. He died in 1737. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Galla, Saint, was a daughter of Symmachus, a Roman noble, who died in the former part of the 6th century; she became a widow while very young, and took the veil at St. Peter's monastery. She is commemorated Oct. 5.

Galla Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. The Galla language is spoken by the Gallas (q. v.). While Dr. Krapf resided in Shoa, between the years 1839 and 1842, he translated the gospels of Matthew, Luke, and John, the epistle to the Romans, and the book of Genesis. The gospel of Matthew and five chapters of the gospel of John were printed in Roman letters, the copies being designed for distribution among the Galla tribes around Shoa, where the Church Missionary Society contemplated the establishment of a mission. The opposition of the Abyssinian priesthood led, however, to the abandonment, in 1844, of the Shoa mission, and the station was accordingly transferred to the Wanika country, whence it was hoped that opportunities for a wider dissemination of the Bible than that originally contemplated by the society might accrue. But these hopes have been doomed to be disappointed. Of late the translation of the Bible into the Galla language has again been taken up by the Rev. Dr. Krapf, and among the translations published, the British and Foreign Bible Society announced, for the year 1876, the New Test.

in Galla, printed in Amharic characters. Besides the New Test. there are also printed the books of Genesis and Exodus, the latter having left the press in 1877. For the study of the language, see Tutachev, Dictionary and Grammar of the Galla Language (Munich, 1844-45). (B. P.)

Gallæus, SERVATIUS, a Reformed preacher of Holland, who died near the end of the 17th century, is known as the editor of Lactantius's works, published at Leyden in 1660; he also edited the Sibylline Oracles (Amsterdam, 1687-88), and wrote Dissertationes de Sibyllis Earumque Oraculis (ibid. 1688). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 908. (B. P.)

Galland, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Hull. He was converted at the age of fifteen, under the ministry of W. E. Miller, and being designed for the ministry of the Church of England, was sent to Cambridge, where he graduated as master of arts. He entered the Methodist ministry, but still prosecuted his studies. He was one of the advanced liberal members of the Conference, but, with independence of thought, he deferred to the peace and unity of the Church. With unbending principles, he was tender and charitable towards others; with great vigor of intellect, he was simple, frank, and ingenuous; with an anxious desire for the freedom of the Church, he had a fixed concern for Christian order. He was a leader in the institution of that body and of its spiritual government, and ably advocated all its great interests. His ministry, which began in 1816, was evangelical, ardent, and powerful; and he was withal a diligent and faithful pastor. He died suddenly at Hull, May 12, 1843, aged forty-nine years. Galland was wealthy and liberal. As a pulpit expositor of Scripture, he was, perhaps, without an equal in his day. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1843; Stevenson, City-Road Chapel, p. 266; Smith, Hist. of West. Meth. iii, 85, 229, 244, 350, 355, 412, 419, 478, 479; Everett, West. Centenary Takings, vol. ii, sketch 9.

Gallardo, MATTEO, a reputable Spanish painter, resided at Madrid in 1657. There is a picture of Christ, and several of the Virgin, by him, which are highly commended. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Galle, PHILIP, an eminent Dutch engraver, was born at Haarlem in 1537, and early established himself at Antwerp. The following are some of his prints: Solomon Directing the Building of the Temple; a set of prints of subjects from the Old and New Test.; Abraham Sacrificing Isaac; Christ with the Two Disciples at Emmaus. He died in 1612. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gallebart, JOANNES DE, a Roman Catholic theologian, who died at Douay in 1625, doctor and professor of theology, is known as the editor of Canones et Decreta Concil. Trid. (Cologne, 1620). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 319. (B. P.)

Galli, priests of Cybele (q. v.) among the ancient Romans, who received the worship of this goddess from the Phrygians. They were selected from the lowest class of society, and were allowed at certain times to ask alms from the people. The chief priest among them was called Archigallus.

Gallican Councils: councils held in France, but at some place unknown.

I. A.D. 855, at Poitiers or Toulouse, possibly. St. Hilary, writing to the Easterns, A.D. 360, says he, five years before, with the bishops of France, withdrew from the communion of the Arian bishops Ursacius and Valens, and of Saturninus of Arles, who had espoused their cause. The opening chapters of his work addressed to Constantius are thought to have emanated from this council.

II. A.D. 876. There seems a reference to one such in a law of that year, dated Treves, of the Theodosian code; but it is not known where or for what object.

III. A.D. 444, in which Hilary of Arles presided, and Chelidonius of Besançon, where this council may have met, therefore, was accused of being husband of a widow, and deposed. On appealing, however, to St. Leo he was restored, as having been condemned on a false charge. Both their letter to him and his answer are preserved among his epistles.

IV. A.D. 678, at some place unknown; when St. Leodegar or Leger, bishop of Autun, was degraded as having been accessory to the death of king Childeric II five years before.

V. A.D. 678 or 679, against the Monothelites; as appears from the reference made to it by the Gallican bishops subscribing to the Roman synod under pope Agatho, preserved in the 4th act of the 6th council, but they do not say where.

VI. A.D. 796, at Tours possibly, where Joseph, bishop of Mans and a suffragan of Tours, was deposed for cruelty.

VII. Three more councils may be grouped under this head, usually called Councils of Auvergne, but this name is misleading, as it means the town formerly so called, not the province. When the town changed its name to Clermont, councils held there subsequently were styled by its new name, while the earlier retained its old. We save confusion, therefore, by classing them under Gallican. Of these the first met Nov. 8, A.D. 585, in the second year of king Theodebert, and passed sixteen canons, to which fifteen bishops, headed by Honoratus, metropolitan of Bourges, subscribed; his suffragan of Auvergne subscribing second. Their canons deprecate lay influences in the appointment of bishops, and lay interference between bishops and clergy. No furniture belonging to the Church may be used for private funerals or marriages. The appointment of Jews as judges, and marriages between Jews and Christians, are denounced. Presbyters and deacons marrying are to be deposed. In a collective note to king Theodebert, the bishops entreat that neither the clergy, nor others, living in his dominions may be robbed of their rightful possessions, and in their fifth canon they declare all spoiliations of Church property null and void, and the spoilers excommunicated wherever it occurs. Several other canons are given to this council by Burchard. The second, A.D. 549, was attended by ten bishops, but only to receive the canons passed at the 5th Council of Orleans. The third, A.D. 588, was occupied solely with a dispute between the bishops of Rhodes and Cahors.

Gallifiet, JOSEPH, a French theologian, was born in 1663, near Aix (Provence). He entered the Jesuit order, became rector, then provincial, of the College of the Trinity, at Lyons, where he had completed his studies, and was regarded as the principal promoter of the devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus. In 1723 he became assistant to the general of the Jesuits at Rome. He died about 1740, leaving several works on devotion, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gallim. Lieut. Corder suggests (Tent-Work in Palest. ii, 336) as a representative of this site the present Beit-Jala, doubtless meaning the place of that name a few miles south of Jerusalem (see ZERLAH); but the passage in Isaiah (x, 30) requires a position north of that city.

Galloche, LOUIS, a reputable French historical painter, was born at Paris in 1670, and studied under Louis Boullogne. He was a member of the Royal Academy. Among his works are the Departure of St. Paul from Miletus, in the Church of Notre Dame; The Good Samaritan, and The Resurrection. He died in 1761. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gallonius, ANTONIUS, a priest of the congregation of the oratory, was a native of Rome, and died there in 1605. His works were numerous, but he is chiefly known by his Trattato degli Instrumenti di Martirio, etc. In 1591 he published his History of the Virgins:—The Lives of Certain Martyrs (1597).

Gallucci, Angelo, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Macerata in 1598, became a famous preacher, professor of eloquence in the College of Rome, and died Feb. 28, 1674, leaving some Sermons and other works, for which see Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Gallucci, Tarquinio, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Sabina in 1574, became professor of rhetoric, and finally rector of the Greek College in Rome, and died there July 28, 1649, leaving some commentaries on classical works.

Gallus, Saint (1), sixteenth bishop of Clermont-Ferrand, was born in that city (Auvergne) about 489, of patrician parents. In order to escape marriage, he took refuge at the monastery of Cornon (Cronon or Cour-nom), and there embraced the monastic life. St. Quintianus, then bishop of Auvergne, ordained him deacon, kept him near himself, and drew him into literary pursuits. Later, Thierry, king of Austrasia, attracted Gallus to his court. Here he remained until 527, when St. Quintianus died, and Gallus was elected to succeed him. He distinguished himself by his gentleness and charity. Being uncle of St. Gregory of Tours, he took charge of the education of his nephew. St. Gallus assisted at the first two councils of Clermont-Ferrand, Nov. 8, 535 and 549, as well as at the second, third, fourth, and fifth of Orleans—June 23, 533; May 7, 538; Aug. 31, 541; and Oct. 28, 549. The hagiographers affirm that he possessed the gift of miracles. By his prayers he arrested the flames which threatened the destruction of the city, and at another time delivered the citizens from the fearful ravages of disease. He died about 553, and his body is preserved in the Church of Notre Dame du Port, at Clermont-Ferrand. He is honored by the Church July 1. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gallus, Saint (2), twenty-third bishop of Clermont-Ferrand, lived in the 7th century. He was elected in 650, and is honored as a saint in his diocese on Nov. 1. He wrote a Lettre Adressée à Saint Didier, évêque de Cahors, which Usher falsely attributes to St. Gall of Hibernia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gallus, Nicolas (properly Hahn), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Köthen, June 21, 1516. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1542 deacon at Ratisbon, which place, however, he had to leave on account of the Interim (q. v.). He went to Wittenberg to occupy the pulpit of Cruciger, who was prevented from discharging his ministerial functions by sickness. From Wittenberg Gallus went to Magdeburg, but returned again to Ratisbon in 1553, and died there in 1570. In connection with Flacius (q. v.), Gallus opposed the Interim and Oslander, and defended his Church against the intrusion of all and every error. See Salig, Vollständige Historie der Augsbургischen Confession, ii, 1008 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Herzog-Plitt, Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Gallus, Robertus, a French mystic, lived at Orange in 1291. He derived his name from his French origin, and was provincial of a monastic order. According to Ouden, he was very pious, but of little note. He believed himself endowed with the gift of revelation, and wrote several works in this line. The only one which has come down to us was published at Paris in 1513, at the house of Henry Stephens, under the editorship of Le Fevre of Etaples, and is entitled Liber Trium Virorum (namely, Hermas, Uguelin, and Robert Gallus himself), et Trium Spiritualium Virginum (the princesses Hildegard, Elisabeth, and Mechtilde). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gally, HENRY, D.D., an English divine, was born at Becketham, Kent, in August, 1696, and was educated at Benet College, Cambridge. In 1724 he was chosen lecturer of St. Paul's Covent-garden, and in the same year was instituted to the rectory of Wavendon or Wanden, in Buckinghamshire. The king preferred him to a prebend in the Cathedral of Gloucester in 1728, and three years later to one in Norwich. He died Aug. 7, 1769. He was the author of two sermons on the Misery of Man, preached in 1723:—The Moral Character of Theophrastus, translated from the Greek, with notes:—A Critical Essay on Characteristic Writing:—Sermon before the House of Commons. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Galon (also called Guallo, Gualla, or Gualo), GIACOMO, an Italian prelate, was born at Vercelli prior to 1150. He was canon-regular at Paris, and occupied from 1178 to 1185 the episcopal see of his native city. He distinguished himself by his zeal and virtue, and pope Innocent III accorded to him, in recognition of this, the cardinalate. Galon had charge of a mission in Languedoc, where he displayed great intolerance towards the Albigenses. He afterwards went to England on a diplomatic mission. Later, pope Honorius III sent him to the emperor Frederick II, to secure aid for the Christians in Palestine against the Mussulmans. Galon died at Vercelli in 1227. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Galura, BERNHARD, prince-bishop of Brixen, was born Aug. 21, 1764. He was for some time preacher at Freiburg, made suffragan bishop and vicar-general at Feldkirch in 1820, in 1829 consecrated prince-bishop of Brixen, and died in 1856. He wrote, Dis. de Traditione altero Revelationis fonte (Freiburg, 1790):—Die Ehre der heiligen Messe (4th ed. Augsburg, 1827):—Biblische Geschichte der Welterlösung durch Jesum den Sohn Gottes (ibid. 1806):—Die ganze Katholische Religion (ibid. 1796-99, 5 vols.):—Gebet- und Betrachtungsbuch für Christen (6th ed. 1836, etc.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 61, 403, 456, 678; ii, 241, 259, 267, 272, 346, 352, 368, 386. (B. P.)

Galvam (or Galvao), FRANCISCO FERNANDO, a Portuguese orator, was born at Lisbon in 1554. He entered the ecclesiastical ranks, and acquired great renown as a preacher. He was regarded as a classical writer in Portugal. To the vigorous study which gained for him the title of doctor of theology, he added the gift of a powerful memory. He died in 1610. His works have appeared under the following titles: Sermoes do Doutor Francisco-Fernando Galvão Arceidiago de Cerveira (Lisbon, 1611):—Sermoes dos Festas dos Santos (ibid. 1613):—Sermoes dos Festas do Christo (ibid. 1616). He had as editor a writer of merit, Amados Vieira. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Galvam (or Galvao), JOÃO, count of Arganil, was a warlike Portuguese prelate, born at Evora in the 15th century. He was the son of Ruy Galvao, secretary of Alfonso V, and succeeded his father. He became prior of the convent of the Augustines, and in 1451 accompanied princess Leonora, as she went to be married to the emperor Frederick III. On his return, in 1461, he became bishop of Coimbra. Alfonso V sent him ten years later to Africa. At Arzilla and Tangier he fought so valiantly that the king conferred upon him the title of count of Arganil, which title ever afterwards belonged to the bishop of Coimbra. The archbishopric of Braga being vacant, Galvao was called to it by Sixtus IV in 1480. He died Aug. 5, 1485, at a very advanced age. He left in manuscript, Jornada da Emperatriz Dona Leonor. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gamaches, PHILIPPE DE, a French theologian, was born in 1568. The faculty of theology made him doctor in 1598, and the same year he became professor of positive theology in the Sorbonne. He acquired a high reputation for profound learning and incorruptible independence of judgment. He died at Paris, July 21, 1625. His commentaries upon Thomas Aquinas, published under the title, Theologia Scolastica, Speculativa, Practica (Paris, 1627), were highly esteemed. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gamaliel BEN-JEHUDAH (surnamed Bathraah, i. e. the Last) terminated the long dynasty of the house of Hillel. Though styled patriarch, yet his power was hardly more than nominal. The Jewish population of Palestine had lost their preponderant influence by dispersion; and the stronger the foreign synagogues became, the less were they disposed to appeal to the patriarchal see, though its existence was still regarded with a certain complacency. But the thing itself was now to end. The emperor Honorius had inhibited the transfer of contributions from the West to the patriarchal coffers at Tiberias; and Gamaliel himself, under the charge of contumacy, in the erection of synagogues contrary to the imperial law, by an edict of Theodosius was stripped of his secular title of "prefect" in the year 415 (Cod. Theod. vi, 22). It may be that this is the same Gamaliel whom Jerome mentions (Epist. 57, § 3) as an enemy of Hesychius. Gamaliel died without an heir, and thus, with his death, this shadow of dignity, which he retained in Jewish circles, entirely passed away. See Etheridge, Introduction to Jewish Literature, p. 139 sq.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v. (B. P.)

Gamaliel, a Scotch prelate, was an Englishman by birth, consecrated by Roger, archbishop of York, and promoted to the see of the Isles in 1181. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 298.

Gambara, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, an Italian prelate, nephew of Uberto, was born at Brescia, Jan. 17, 1533. He was son of Giovanni Brunero II, count of Prato Albuino, who rendered great service to the house of Austria, and distinguished himself among the Latin poets of his time. Giovanni, after having been educated at Perugia and Padua, was sent to the court of Charles V. He afterwards returned to Rome, performed various offices under Julius III and Pius IV, and was made cardinal in 1561. Pius V appointed him bishop of Viterbo. He died at Rome, May 5, 1587. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gambara, LATTANSIO, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Brescia in 1541, and was instructed in the school of Girolamo Romanino. His greatest and most studied production is his fresco in the dome of the cathedral at Parma, representing subjects from the life of Christ. Some of his other admired works are, Cain Slaying Abel; Moses and the Brazen Serpent; Samson and Delilah; Judith with the Head of Holofernes; Jael and Sisera; The Taking Down from the Cross. He died in 1574.

Gambara, UBERTO, an Italian prelate, was born at Brescia, near the close of the 15th century. He was the son of Gian. Francesco, count of Prato Albuino, who abandoned the side of the Venetians after the battle of Chiara in 1509, and joined the French in order to save the city of Brescia, his native place. This desertion irritated the Venetians against him, but they were appeased through the intervention of pope Leo X, a particular friend of the count. This pontiff called the young Uberto to himself, and sent him as nuncio to Portugal. Clement VII sent him to solicit, in 1527, the aid of the king of England against Charles V. Gambara acquitted himself with success in this mission, and on his return was appointed bishop of Tortona. Paul III made him cardinal in 1539, and confided to him the legations of Parma and Placentia. In this position Gambara adroitly favored the designs of the Farnese, and afforded them much aid, by placing them in possession of these principalities. He died at Rome, Feb. 14, 1549. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gamelia, the name applied to a sacrifice among the ancient Greeks, which the parents of a girl about to be married were accustomed to offer to Athena (q. v.), on the day before the marriage. In time the word came to be applied to marriage solemnities in general.

Gameline, a Scotch prelate, was archdeacon and lord-chancellor of St. Andrews in 1250. He was made bishop of St. Andrews in 1255, on St. Thomas's day, and consecrated on St. Stephen's day of the same year. Here he continued until his death in 1271. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 18.

Gammadia (γαμμαδία, for γαμματία), a cruciform ornament, embroidered on the borders or woven into the texture of ecclesiastical vestments, both in the West and East. It takes its name from being composed of four capital gammus (Γ) placed back to back, thus ΓΓ forming a voided Greek cross. The gammus ΓΓ were also sometimes placed face to face, so as to constitute a hollow square, in the centre of which ΓΓ a cross was inscribed. Vestments so decorated ΓΓ were known by the name of polytauria (πολυταυρία). See Fyfe.

Ganapatyas, the worshippers of Ganesa (q. v.). They can scarcely be considered as a distinct sect, Ganesa being worshipped by all the Hindûs as having power to remove all difficulties and impediments. Hence, they never commence a journey or engage in any important work without invoking his protection. Some, however, pay this god more particular devotion, and therefore may be considered as specially entitled to be called Ganapatyas.

Ganesa, a Hindû deity, was the son of Siva and Parvati. He is considered the god of prudence, who removes all hindrances, and corresponds to the Greek Hermes, or the Roman Mercury, the great teacher and presiding deity of authors. Ganesa is always addressed as "that god upon whose glorious forehead the new moon is painted with the froth of Ganga." He is generally represented sitting cross-legged, with four arms and hands, and having the head and proboscis of an elephant. Ganesa had formerly six classes of worshippers; in the present day he cannot boast of any exclusive adoration, although he shares a kind of homage along with all the other gods. See PULKAR.

Ganga Sagor, a sacred island among the Hindûs, situated at the union of the great western or holiest branch of the Ganges with the Indian ocean. It is low, flat, and swampy, yet it is one of the most celebrated places of pilgrimage in India, on account of the peculiar sacredness of the waters at this point. On the island stands a ruinous temple dedicated to Kapila, the founder of the Sankhya system. This temple is usually occupied by a few disciples of Kapila, and crowds repair thither twice every year, at the full moon in November and in January, to perform obsequies for the benefit of their deceased ancestors, and to practice various ablutions in the sacred waters. As many as 300,000 pilgrims have resorted to this sacred spot from all parts of India in a single year.

Gangas, the idolatrous priests of the inhabitants of Congo, in western Africa. They acknowledge one Supreme Being, but worship also a number of subordinate deities who preside over the different departments of nature. These priests teach the people to worship their deities by various rites and ceremonies, but chiefly by donations of food and clothing, which they appropriate to their own use. They make the people believe that they can bring down blessings upon them, avert judgments, cure diseases, and dispel witchcraft.

Ganganf, THEODOR, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 1, 1809, at Bergen. In 1833 he received holy orders, in 1836 joined the Benedictines at Augsburg, was in 1842 professor of philosophy and philology at the Augsburg Lyceum, in 1848 rector of the same, and died Sept. 15, 1875. He was a follower of Günther's philosophical system, and wrote, Die Metaphysische Psychologie des heil. Augustin (1844-47):—Augustin's Principien über das Verhältniss von Glauben und Wissen (1851):—Augustin's Lehre von Gott dem Dreieinigem (1865). (B. P.)

Ganinnases (from Singhalese gana, an assembly), a name applied in Ceylon to the novices as well as the priests among the Buddhists.

Ganj Bakshis, a division of the Sikhs (q. v.) in Hindustan, who are said to have derived their name from their founder. They are few in number and of little importance.

Gannett, EZRA STILES, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Cambridge, Mass., May 4, 1801. He was educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, and Harvard College, where he graduated in 1820. He then spent three years in the Cambridge Divinity School, and was ordained colleague-pastor with Dr. William E. Channing, June 24, 1824. He remained in that charge until his death, Aug. 28, 1871. He founded The Scripture Interpreter, edited for some years The Monthly Miscellany, and was joint editor with Dr. Alván Lamson (1844-49) of The Christian Examiner. He also published numerous discourses.

Gänsbacher, JOHANN BAPTIST, a German composer of church music, was born at Sterzing, in Tyrol, in 1778. He was educated under various masters until 1802, when he became the pupil of the celebrated Abate Vogler. Through this connection he became acquainted with Weber and Meyerbeer, and a friendship sprung up among the three young musicians which was dissolved only by death. Gänsbacher was director of the music of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Vienna, from 1823 until his death, July 13, 1844. His compositions consist chiefly of church music, including not less than seventeen masses, besides litanies, motets, offertories, etc. He also wrote several sonatas, a symphony, and one or two minor dramatic compositions. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Gansbert, a French monk, and celebrated reformer of various monasteries, was born in the early half of the 10th century, of a noble family. The record of the foundation of the abbey of Bourgueil, in 991, mentions him as the abbot of St. Julien of Tours at that period. He was also simultaneously abbot of Bourgueil-en-Vallée, of St. Pierre de la Couture, at Mons, of Maillegais, and of Marmoutiers. The Histoire Littéraire de la France states that he reformed these monasteries, and that he established a great number of charters, which we are unable to mention. About 1000 he went to Rome, and obtained of pope Sylvester the confirmation of the privileges of St. Julien. In 1001 he engaged in important discussions with a certain knight named Gautier, upon the subject of the immunities of Bourgueil. The same year he received of queen Bertha various manors. He died at Bourgueil, Sept. 27, but there is much uncertainty about the year, some making it 1006, others 1007. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gantesviler, JOHANN JACOB, a Lutheran theologian, born at Basle in 1631, was professor at Herborn in 1650, in 1665 at Hanau, in 1678 at Duisburg, and died March 25, 1691. He wrote, Mysterii Urin et Thumim Delineatio (Hanau, 1674):—Scrutinium Theologicum de Loquela Angelorum (Duisburg, 1682). See Strieder, Hessische Gelehrten Geschichte; Miscell. Duisburg, i, 550; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gaon (גאון, excellence) is the academic title of the Jewish presidents of the colleges of Sora (q. v.) and Pumbeditha (q. v.). The title originated, according to the Jewish historian Grätz, cir. A.D. 658. When Ali, the son-in-law and vizier of Mohammed, was elected caliph (A.D. 655), and the Islamites were divided into two parties, one for and the other against him, both the Babylonian Jews and the Nestorian Christians decided in his favor, and rendered him great assistance. Ali rewarded rabbi Isaac, then president of the college of Sora, with the title "Gaon." Accordingly, the word is either of Arabic or Persian origin, and properly belonged to the presidents of the Sora college, who alone bore the appellation at the beginning. The president of the subordinate sister college at Pumbeditha was called the head of the college, ריש מדינה, by the Babylonians, and the appellation Gaon, whereby the presidents were sometimes styled, obtained at first among the non-Babylonian Jews, who were not thoroughly acquainted with the dignities of the respective colleges in Babylon. It was only after the year 917, when Pumbeditha became of equal importance with Sora, and especially when, after the death of Saadia (q. v.), the college at Sora began to decay altogether, and Pumbeditha continued alone to be the college of the doctors of the law, that the presidents of its college, like those of Sora, were described by the title of Gaon. The period of the Gaonim comprises the time from A.D. 658 to 1040, and is divided into that of the First Gaonim, from A.D. 658 to 760, and that of the Later Gaonim, from A.D. 760 to 1040. The only literary productions of the First Gaonastic Period are the She'eloth of rabbi Acha of Shabcha, which combine all the different characteristics of the study of the rabbis, viz., Halacha, Midrash, Talmud, and Responsa, arranged according to the sections of the Pentateuch, explaining their respective laws and observations by means of extracts from the Babylonian Talmud, and original compositions in the favorite form of questions and answers (שאלות). To this period also belongs the beginning of the Neo-Hebrew poetry, or the so-called Piut (פיוט), a term obviously taken from the Greek, and the poet was, in like manner, called peitan (פיוטן, ποιητής). Now these piutim (פיוטים), written either in the form of the acrostic or arrangement of words, strophes, and lines, or rhyme (חרוז) or metre (מקצב), are to be found in the Machzorim or synagogue rituals of the different countries, and consist of Keroboth (קריבות), i. e. that part of the morning service which comprehends the first three benedictions for the morning prayer; Penitential Prayers (תפילות); Elegies (קניות); Hosannas (חושענות); Petitions (בקשות), etc.

Of the literati among the later Gaonim, we notice Mar Zemarai I, ben-Paltoj, of Pumbeditha (872-890), the author of a Talmudic lexicon called "Aruch," which however, is not the same as the Aruch of Nathan ben-Jechiel (q. v.). Zemarai's lexicon has not yet come to light. Excerpts were published by Rappaport, from the collection made by Saccuto in the Hebrew essays and reviews, called Bikkure ha-ittim (Vienna, 1830), xi, 81 sq. Other excerpts were published by Geiger in Zeitschrift d. D. M. G. (Leipsic, 1858), xi, 144. Zemarai is also supposed to be the author of the chronological account of the Tana'im and Amora'im (סדר הנאים), which was edited by Luzzatto in the Hebrew Essays (Prague, 1839), iv, 184. Contemporary with Paltoj was Nachshon ben-Zadok (q. v.) of Sura, A.D. 881-889. Another writer of this period was Simeon of Kahira or Misr, in Egypt, who composed a compendium of the most important halachoth from both Talmuds, with the title Great Halachoth (חלכות גדולות), about the year 900. To this period also belongs Ibn Koreish (q. v.) and Saadia (q. v.). With the latter's death the last sunset light of the Soranic academy had passed away, and about the year 948 the school had to be closed. In order to secure its further existence, four young men were sent out, never to return again, to interest their rich co-religionists in this old school of learning. The young men fell into the hands of a Spanish corsair. Among these captives was Moses ben-Chanuch (q. v.). While the Soranic school was closed, that of Pumbeditha was presided over before its final close by two men, Sherira Gaon (q. v.) and Hai ben-Shirira (q. v.).

With the exception of the authors we have named already, the great mass of the Gaonastic literature is anonymous. We mention the Midrash Epa (מדרש אספה), on part of the book of Numbers; the Midrash Haskem (מדרש השכם); the chronicle, entitled History of the Maccabees of Joseph ben-Gorion, which is a translation of an Arabic book of the Maccabees, the Tarich al-Makkabiin, Jusuf ibn-Gorgon. This book, says Dr. Grätz, was afterwards translated by an Italian Jew, who, by his additions to it, displayed great skill in his Hebrew style, and which translation is generally known under the title, Josippon (q. v.). Besides the Josippon or Pseudo-Josephus, we must mention an ethical midrash, entitled Tana deb' Eliahu, or Seder Eliahu (סדר אליהו חנה דבי אליהו), the Midrash Tanchuma or Tanchuma Jelandenu. Garafolus, GABRIEL, an Augustinian monk of Italy, who died at Spoleto in 1483, wrote Adversus Hereses:—Adversus Fratricellos:—Sermones in Evangelia. See Ughelli, Italia Sacra; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Garcaeus, JOHANNES, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 13, 1530, at Hamburg. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1557 professor of theology and pastor at Greifswalde, in 1562 superintendent and first preacher at Brandenburg, and died Jan. 22, 1575. He wrote, De Erigendis Figuris Cali (Wittenberg, 1556):—De S. Laurentio Martyre (ibid. 1562):—De S. Joanne Baptista (ibid. eod.):—De Magis ex Oriente (ibid. eod.):—De S. Martino Episcopo Turonensi (ibid. 1563):—Confessio Orthodoxa de Spiritu Sancto (1565):—De Infanticidio Herodis (ibid. eod.):—Collatio summi Pontificis V. et N. T. (Leipsic, 1574). See Thiesse, Hamburg Gelehrten-Lexikon; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Garcin (de Tassy), JOSEPH HÉLIODORE SAGESSE VERTU, a famous French Orientalist, was born Jan. 20, 1794, at Marseilles. In 1817 he went to Paris, where he studied under Sylvestre de Sacy. The latter especially interested him in the vulgar Arabic spoken by the Mussulmans of India, and to this he devoted himself entirely. A chair for Hindustani was especially created for him at the college in Paris; he succeeded Talleyrand as member of the Academy of Inscriptions, in 1838, and after Mohl's death, in 1876, he was made president of the Asiatic Society. Garcin de Tassy died Sept. 2, 1878. He published, Rudiments de la Langue Hindoustani (Paris, 1829; with appendices, 1843):—Rudiments de la Langue Hindouï (ibid. 1847):—Les Ouvres de Wali, Célèbre Poète du Dekkan (with a translation, 1834):—Les Aventures de Kamrup (ibid. eod.):—an edition of the Pend-Numeh of Saadi, "Mantik ul-Atair" (Le Language des Oiseaux):—Doctrines et Devoirs des Musulmans (from the Arabic, 1827-40):—Poésie Philosophique et Religieuse des Persans (1857):—Rhétique et Prosodie de l'Orient Musulman (1878). (B. P.)

Gardiner, John, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1756. He was educated at Tiverton, whence he went to the University of Glasgow, where he studied civil law. He then entered himself in the Middle Temple, with a view to qualify for the bar. An irresistible impulse induced him to exchange the law for the Church, and in consequence he repaired to Wadham College, Oxford. In 1781 he took possession of the vicarage of Shirley and rectory of Brailford, in the county of Derby, the presentation to which had been purchased by his father, with whom he afterwards resided for some years at Wellington, performing gratuitously the duty of curate in that parish. In 1789 he undertook the same office at Taunton, and there continued till his father, in 1796, purchased for him the Octagon Chapel at Bath, where he officiated till his death in 1838. He also served as a magistrate for the county of Somerset. Dr. Gardiner published a number of occasional Discourses (1798-1811), and a volume of Sermons (Bath, 1802, 8vo). See The Christian Remembrancer (Lond.), Sept. 1838, p. 568; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gardiner, John Sylvester, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Haverford-West, South Wales, in June, 1765. At the age of five years he was sent to America to the care of his grandfather, then a resident of Boston, where he attended school, and after three or four years returned to his father, who was attorney-general on the island of St. Christopher, W. I. Shortly after, John was sent to England, where, from 1776 to 1782, he was a pupil of the famous Dr. Parr. After this he visited his father in the West Indies, and in 1783 went to Boston, which became his permanent home. Partly under the tutorship of his father and partly under that of Judge Tudor, he studied law, but abandoned it to enter the ministry, officiating as lay-reader at Pownalboro', Me., and studying theology. He was ordained deacon in New York city, Oct. 18, 1787, and presbyter, Dec. 4, 1791. For a while he preached at St. Helena, Beaufort, S. C., and then was elected, in 1792, assistant to Dr. Parker, rector of Trinity Church, Boston. A meagre support compelled him to teach school. He was chosen rector of the church, April 15, 1805, vice Dr. Parker, made a bishop. After many years of service his health became impaired, and he made a voyage to Europe to recuperate, but died at Harrowgate, England, July 29, 1830. He was a member of the Anthology Club, which published the Monthly Anthology and Boston Review. Among his literary remains are a large number of published Sermons, Addresses, etc. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 363.

Gardiner, Richard, an English divine, was born at Hereford in 1591, educated at the school there, and at Christ Church, where he was canon in 1629. In 1630 he was chaplain to Charles I. He died in 1670. He published several Sermons (1659). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Garibald (Lat. Gariobaldus, Gaiavaldus, Goibaldus, Heribaldus, etc.), appointed bishop of Ratisbon by St. Boniface, A.D. 789, is commemorated Jan. 8. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Garlande, Étienne, a French prelate, was priest, archdeacon of Paris, chancellor of the kingdom, and at length seneschal. Forced, at the end of seven years, to resign these functions, as they were incompatible with the ecclesiastical calling, he transferred them to Amaury of Montfort, count of Evreux, without the consent of the king, who seized his chateau at Livry as a punishment, but afterwards consented, about 1129, to receive Garlande and Amaury into his favor, on condition that they should resign their claims to the office of seneschal. Garlande died in 1150, at Orleans, where he had consecrated his nephew, Manasses, bishop. See Hoefler, Nov. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Garnet, Henry Highland, D.D., a colored Presbyterian minister, was born in New Market, Kent Co., Md., April 15, 1815, of parents who escaped from slavery, in 1824, to New Hope, Pa., and the next year came to New York city, where the lad went to school, and at the same time served as a cook. In 1831 he entered a high-school; in 1835 went to Canaan Academy, N. H.; next year to Oneida Institute, N. Y.; in 1840 settled as a teacher in Troy; studied theology under Dr. Beman; was licensed to preach in 1842, and the next year installed pastor of the Liberty Street Presbyterian Church in that city. The same year he delivered an eloquent speech in Buffalo, before the Liberty Party convention. He addressed the state legislature in January, 1844, and in 1846 he presided at the Delevan Temperance Union, at Poughkeepsie. About this time the late Gerrit Smith appointed him an agent for the purpose of distributing a large gift of lands in this state among colored men. In 1850 Dr. Garnet was invited to lecture in England, made an address in Exeter Hall, and was elected a delegate to the Peace Congress held at Frankfort-on-the-Main. At its conclusion he travelled through Bavaria, Prussia, and France. In 1852 he was sent by the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland as a missionary to Jamaica, West Indies. While there he received a unanimous call to the pulpit of the Shiloh Presbyterian Church, then at Prince and Marion Streets, New York, and soon became the leader of the colored population in that city. In 1861 he revisited England, as the president of the African Colonization Society, but soon returned, and volunteered as chaplain to the colored troops at Riker's Island. He early took an active interest in the poorer people of his race, and organized several charitable societies which care for all the colored people who try to support themselves. Dr. Garnet was the first colored man who, on any occasion, spoke in the national capitol, where he preached on Sunday, Feb. 12, 1865, in the hall of the House of Representatives. In April of that year he was called by the Fifteenth Street Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C., and accepted the call, staying there several years. Again he returned to his former church, the Shiloh, and was its pastor until the autumn of 1881, when he accepted the appointment of United States minister and consul to Liberia. He died at Monrovia, Africa, Feb. 13, 1882. See The (N. Y.) Tribune, March 11, 1882.

Garnham, Robert Edward, an English divine, was born at Bury St. Edmunds, May 1, 1753, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was ordained deacon March 3, 1776, and soon after entered into the curacies of Nowton and Great Welnatham. He was ordained priest, June 15, 1777; in 1793 became college preacher at Cambridge, and in November, 1797, was advanced into the seniority, but resigned in 1789. He died June 24, 1802. His writings were numerous, but all anonymous.

Garnier, Jean, a French Reformed theologian, was born at Avignon in the beginning of the 16th century, and died at Cassel, in January, 1574. He succeeded Pierre Bruly, or Brulius (q. v.), as pastor of the French Church in Strasburg, which was founded by Calvin in 1538. He rejected with disdain the Interim (q. v.), which Charles V was about to introduce in Strasburg in 1549. He left the city, but returned in 1552, to leave it again in 1555. In 1559 he was appointed professor of theology at Marburg, and three years later court-preacher at Cassel. He published Confession de la Foy Chrétienne de Strasbourg (Strasburg, 1549, 1552; transl. into English, Lond. 1562);—De Epistola Pauli ad Hebræos Declamatio (Marburg, 1559). See Strieder, Hist. Litt. de la Hesse; Haag, La France Protestante, vol. v; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Dardier, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Garretson, John, D.D., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Six-Mile Run, N. J., Nov. 9, 1801. He graduated from Union College in 1823, and from the New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1826; was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick, and became missionary to Kinderhook Landing (Stuyvesant) and Columbiaville, N. Y., the same year; at Middleburg in 1827; at Schraalenburg, N. J., in 1833; at Brooklyn, N. Y., organizing the Central Church there, in 1836; at Belleville, N. J., in 1837; corresponding secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions in 1849; pastor at Canastota, N. Y., in 1859; at Owasco Outlet in 1861; at Esopus in 1865; also stated supply at St. Remy; at Lawrenceville, Pa. (Presbyterian), in 1866; at Cortlandtown, N. Y., in 1869; then two years without a charge, until he became rector of Hertzog Hall in 1874, where he died in 1875. He was clear and discriminating as a preacher, wise in counsel, and of broad and well-wrought plans for the advancement of the Church. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 280.

Garrison, WILLIAM LLOYD, a leading abolitionist, was born at Newburyport, Mass., Dec. 12, 1804. His mother was early left a widow, and poor, so that the son, after various attempts at learning a trade, was at length apprenticed to a printer in his native town, where he soon began to write for the journals, and in 1826 became proprietor of the Free Press. This not succeeding financially, he started in 1827 the National Philanthropist, in the advocacy of moral reforms, and in 1831 the Liberator, a fierce opponent of slavery, which was continued till the act of emancipation during the civil war. He was often in personal peril by the violence of the friends of slavery. He visited England several times in furtherance of his principles, and was received there with great enthusiasm. He died May 24, 1879. He published Sonnets and Other Poems (1848), and a selection from his Speeches and Writings (1852).

Garth, the greensward or grass area between, or within, the cloisters of a religious house.

Garth, HELVICUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 18, 1579. He studied at Marburg and Strasburg, and died at Prague, Dec. 5, 1619. He wrote, De Invocatione Sanctorum:—De Judice Controversiarum:—Comment. in Nahum et Habakuk:—Theologia Jesuitarum Præcipua Capita:—De Articulis Controversiæ Inter Lutheranos et Calvinianos:—Acta et Post-Acta Colloquii Pragensis:—De Providentiâ Dei in Vocatione Doctorum et Ministrorum Ecclesiæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Witte, Memorias Theologorum. (B. P.)

Gartland, FRANCIS XAVIER, a Roman Catholic bishop, was born in Dublin in 1805; ordained in Philadelphia in 1832; consecrated bishop of Savannah, Ga., Nov. 10, 1850, and died of yellow fever in that city, Sept. 20, 1853. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S. p. 167.

Gärtner, Herr VON, an eminent German architect, was born at Coblenz in 1792, and while young visited Italy, France, and Spain. He afterwards settled at Munich, and was appointed by Louis I professor of architecture in the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in that city. In 1822 he was appointed director of the state manufactory of porcelain and glass paintings. He erected a number of edifices at Munich, among which were the university, the triumphal gate, the clerical seminary, and the Church of St. Louis. After the departure of Von Cornelius to Berlin, Von Gärtner became director of the Academy of Fine Arts, having formerly been nominated chief architect and inspector-general of the plastic monuments. He died in 1847.

Garuda, the sacred bird of Vishnú (q. v.), as the eagle was the bird of Jupiter. Garuda was worshipped by the Vaishnavas (q. v.) in the golden age of Hindú idolatry.

Gaspari, JOHANN BAPTIST VON, a German historian, was born in 1702, and died at Vienna in 1768. He wrote, De Tridentinis Antiquitatibus:—De Protestantium Germanorum in Catholicos Gestis:—Breviarium Vitæ S. Theodori Episc. Salisburgensis (published by his brother Lazarus, Venice, 1780). See L. Gaspari, Della Vita, Degli Studii e Degli Scritti di Gio. Batt. de Gaspari (Venice, 1770); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gasparin, AGÉNOR, Comte de, an eminent layman of the French Protestant Church, was born at Orange (France), July 12, 1810. He studied law at Paris and took an active part in French politics, and in 1842 he represented Bastia in the House of Deputies. Religious subjects, however, engrossed a large share of his attention. In 1848 he published Intérêts Généraux du Protestantisme Français, and in 1846 Christianisme et Paganisme (2 vols.). In 1848 he attended the general synod of the Reformed churches of France, and maintained with Frederick Monod the necessity of a well-defined creed for that Church. The last twenty-three years of his life he spent in Switzerland, and there he wrote his Les Écoles du Doute et l'École de la Foi:—Un Grand Peuple qui se Réveille (1861):—L'Amérique devant l'Europe (1862), directed against slavery. He also delivered lectures on religious topics, and in every way promoted the cause of religion. He died May 8, 1871. Some of his works were also translated into German, and of his L'Amérique devant l'Europe an English translation was published in New York (3d ed. 1863). See Maville, Le Comte Ag. de Gasparin (Geneva, 1871); Borel, Le Comte Ag. de Gasparin (Paris, 1879; Engl. transl. N. Y. 1880); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 400. (B. P.)

Gass, JOACHIM CHRISTIAN, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 26, 1766. He studied at Halle, was in 1795 military chaplain, in 1807 preacher at Berlin, in 1810 professor of theology at Breslau, and died there, Feb. 19, 1831. A friend and pupil of Schleiermacher, Gass also represented the theology of his master. As a member of consistory, he took an active part in the ecclesiastical affairs of his province. He wrote, Erinnerung an den Reichstag zu Speier in Jahre 1529 (Breslau, 1829):—Jahrbücher des Protestantischen Kirchen- und Schulwesens von und für Schlesien (1817-20, 4 vols.):—Ueber das Wesen der Kirchenzucht (1819):—Ueber den Religionsunterricht in den obern Classen der Gymnasien (1828):—Ueber den christl. Cultus (1815). See Schleiermacher, Briefwechsel mit Gass (Berlin, 1852); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Gasser, VINCENT, a Roman Catholic prelate, was born in the Tyrol in 1809. In 1836 he was professor of theology at Brixen, member of parliament in 1848, bishop of Brixen in 1856, and prince-bishop in 1859. He died in 1879. He was the head of the Tyrolean Ultramontanists, and allowed the Jesuits to use their influence in the universities and schools. (B. P.)

Gastaldi, GERONIMO, an Italian prelate, was born at Genoa in the early part of the 17th century, of an ancient Genoese family. He embraced the ecclesiastical calling, and went to Rome. In 1656, Gastaldi, already a prelate, was designated for the perilous position of general commissary of the hospitals, and was afterwards appointed general commissioner of public health, and so faithfully did he perform his duties that he secured the archbishopric of Benevento, the cardinalate, and the legation to Bologna. Several monuments erected at his expense at Rome and Benevento attest his charity and munificence. He gave his observations concerning contagious diseases in a work which was published at Bologna in 1684, the year previous to his death, suggesting certain precautions and remedies. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gastaud, FRANÇOIS, a French theologian, was born at Aix about 1660. He entered the congregation of the Oratorio at the age of fourteen, but after five years withdrew, having studied philosophy at Marseilles and theology at Arles. He was ordained priest, and for several years preached at Paris with great success. His brother, a distinguished advocate, having died about 1700, abbé Gastaud, after two years of study, was appointed counsellor to the parliament of Aix, and obtained a license to practice from the court of Rome. He also succeeded well in this, and in 1717 gained an important suit against the Jesuits. This affair, together with his predilection for the Jansenists, made enemies who attacked him, and whom he repulsed with great violence. Being banished to Viviers in 1727, and recalled in about eight months, he was again banished in 1731 to the same place, where he died in 1732. Some of his principal works are, Homélies sur l'Épître aux Romains (Paris, 1699):—La Politique des Jésuites Démasquée (without date). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gastromancy (from gastro, the belly, and mantra, divination), a mode of divination practiced among the ancient Greeks, by filling certain round glasses with pure water, placing lighted torches round them, then praying to the deity in a low, muttering voice, and proposing the question which they wished answered. Certain images were now observed in the glass, representing what was to happen.

Gataker, THOMAS, a divine of the 16th century, son of William Gataker, was born at Gatacre Hall, Shropshire. He studied law at the Temple, London, during the reign of Mary, and was often present at the examination of persecuted people. Their hard usage and patience influenced him in their favor, which his parents perceived, and immediately sent him to Louvain to reinstate him in the Catholic faith. This did not seem to have the desired effect, although afterwards he appears to have become reconciled to his father. He studied theology, was educated at Oxford, became pastor at St Edmund's, Lombard Street, London, and died in 1593, leaving a learned son of the same name. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 56.

Gates, HOLY, the name given to the folding gates in the centre of the iconostasis, or screen, which, in the modern Greek churches, separates the body of the church from the holy of holies. The holy gates are opened and shut frequently during the service, part of the prayers and lessons being recited in front of them and part within the adytum.

Gath. In the Quarterly Statement of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," Oct. 1880, p. 211 sq., there is an extended paper on the site of this important city, which Mr. Tre-lawney Saunders strongly argues was located at Khurbak Abu-Gheith, at the head of Wady el-Hesy (here

Gatian, Saint, apostle of Touraine, was born at Rome, according to the ancient annalists. His arrival among the Gauls took place, according to Gregory of Tours, under the consulate of Decius and Grotus, i. e., in 250 or 251. When he presented himself at the metropolis of Lyons he did not find the pagans, for the most part, very docile. He preached during the day in the city or in the country round about, choosing to address the lower class, and at night concealed himself from the violence of enemies. The city of Tours revered him as the chief of its bishops. He labored for fifty years to diffuse the Christian faith, and at the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 20, 301, the Church of Tours was founded. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog., s. v.

Gatti, Bernardo (called Sokuro), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Cremona, and was a scholar of Correggio. Some of his best works are his Repose in Egypt, in St. Sigismund's, at Cremona; Christ in the Manger, at St. Peter's, in the same city; and the Dead Christ, in the Magdalene, at Parma. A great number of his works have been taken to other countries, particularly to Spain. He died in 1575. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gatti, Giovanni Andrea, a Sicilian prelate, was born at Messina in 1420. He entered the Dominican order, and, while young, taught in their convent at Messina, excelling all his contemporaries in philosophy and theology, civil and canonical law, belles-lettres and eloquence, Greek, and especially familiar with Latin and Hebrew. To his extensive knowledge was added a very remarkable memory. From Messina he went to Rome as professor. Florence, Bologna, and Ferrara enjoyed successively his lectures, which had become celebrated throughout all the scholastic world. He was among the most familiar friends of Bessarion, who caused him to be appointed, in 1468, commendatory abbot of two Benedictine convents in Sicily. According to Fontana, he had already performed the functions of inquisitor in the diocese of Messina. Ferdinand I conferred upon him the bishopric of Cefalu, and employed him in various missions to the holy see. The sovereign pontiff promised him the bishopric of Catania by apostolic letters of Dec. 18, 1477; but king Ferdinand objected, and Gatti resigned it. He returned to Cefalu and devoted himself to the administration of his diocese. Feeling that death was near, he resigned his functions in 1483, and went to end his days at the convent of Messina, where he commenced his religious life. He died in 1484, and was interred in the Cathedral of Messina. Mongitore attributes to him some works, which are preserved in MS. at the monastery of St. Dominic, Palermo. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gattola, ERASMUS, an abbot of Monte Cassino, was born at Gaeta in 1662, and died May 1, 1734. He wrote Historia Abbatia Casinensis, etc. (Venice, 1784, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 712; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gaucher, Saint, was born at Meulan, Normandy, in 1060. At the age of eighteen, under the direction of Ragner, he resolved to devote himself to prayer and to the austerities of penitence in solitude. Upon the invitation of Humbert, canon of Limoges, he went to Limousin, and there dwelt in a hermitage in the forest of Chavaignac. At the end of three years he obtained from the canons of St. Étienne of Limoges authority to build a monastery in a place known as Salvatius, called el-Muleshah), which falls into the Mediterranean between Gaza and Hebron; whereas Lieut. Conder gives substantial reasons for rejecting this location, and in favor of Tell es-Safek, the Blanche-Garde of the Crusaders. This place is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 440).

to the austerities of penitence in solitude. Upon the invitation of Humbert, canon of Limoges, he went to Limousin, and there dwelt in a hermitage in the forest of Chavaignac. At the end of three years he obtained from the canons of St. Étienne of Limoges authority to build a monastery in a place known as Salvatius, later as Aureil, which was conducted according to the regulation of St. Augustine. Shortly after Gaucher established a monastery for women, near this. Aureil, becoming celebrated for its sanctity and for the miracles of St. Gaucher, became the retreat of St. Stephen of Muret, St. Lambert (founder of the Abbey de la Couronne, afterwards bishop of Angoulême), and St. Faucher. Gaucher, at that time an octogenarian, returning from Limoges, where he had held an assembly concerning the affairs of his convent, a false step caused him to strike his head violently against a stone, which place is still called Le Pas de St. Gaucher, and where a chapel was erected. This accident caused his death three days later at Aureil (1140), whither he had been carried. He was canonized by pope Celestin III, and his remains placed in a shrine by Sebrand, bishop of Limoges, Sept. 18, 1194. In Limousin and Normandy his festival is celebrated April 9. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gaudenzio, PAGANINI, a Roman Catholic theologian of Italy, was born at Poschiavo, in the canton of Grisons, about 1595. In 1627 he was professor at Pisa, and died Jan. 3, 1649. He wrote, De Dogmatibus et Ritibus Veteris Ecclesie Hæreticorum:—De Dogmatum Origine cum Philosophia Platonis Comparatione:—Della Morte di S. Giovanni Evangelista Discorsuale, and other works. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 899; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gaudied, with large beads. Every decade or tenth large bead in the rosaries representing a Paternoster is a gaud; each smaller bead stands for an Ave Maria.

Gaudiósus, Saint, bishop of Tarazona, in Arragon, under king Gundemar, was noted for his bold profession of the orthodox faith. He died in 530, and is commemorated on Nov. 3.

Gauditz, GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian, was born in Saxony, Nov. 17, 1694. He studied at Leipsic, was magister in 1717, catechist in 1721, pastor of St. Thomas in 1741, doctor of divinity the same year, and died Feb. 20, 1745, leaving, Disputationes de Epistolis Christi impioyis:—De Justificatione Dei coram Homínibus:—De Christo Ezegeta:—Dus Leben Ahabs, Königs in Israel, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gauffer, LOUIS, an eminent French painter, was born at Rochelle in 1761, and studied under Taraval. In 1784 he carried off the grand prize of the Academy for his picture of the Syrophœnician Woman. He went to Rome with the royal pension, and produced several pictures which greatly increased his reputation. Among his other works are The Roman Matrons Sending their Jewels to the Senate, The Angels Appearing to Abraham, and Jacob and Rachel. He died at Florence, Oct. 20, 1801. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gaulli, GIOVANNI BATTISTA (called Baciccio), an eminent Italian painter, was born in 1639, and was instructed in the art in Genoa, after which he went to Rome, where he studied the works of the best masters. The ceiling of the Church del Gesù, at Rome, is his most celebrated performance, representing St. Francis Xavier taken up to heaven. The following are some of his principal pictures: The Madonna and Infant; The Death of St. Saverio. He also gained reputation by painting the angels in the dome of St. Agnes. He died in 1709.

Gault, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French prelate, was born at Tours, Dec. 29, 1595. He and his elder brother, Eustache, having in view the ecclesiastical calling, pursued their studies at Le Flèche, then at Paris, and finally at Rome. After a sojourn of eighteen months in the latter city they returned to France, and entered the congregation of the Oratorio. Jean received the order of priesthood at Troyes, and directed successively the houses of his order at Langres, Dijon, and Le Mans. He was also charged with various apostolic missions to Spain and Flanders. His brother, who had shared all his religious labors, was appointed bishop of Marseilles, but died, March 18, 1639, before receiving his bulls from Rome, and Jean was appointed to succeed him. The latter showed remarkable zeal for the reform of his diocese, for the relief of the poor, for the restoration of captives, and for the conversion of galley-slaves. A premature death removed him from his diocese, May 25, 1643. The clergy of France demanded his beatification at Rome in 1645. Eustache Gault was the author of a book entitled Discours de l'État et Couronne de Suède (Le Mans, 1638). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gaulter, JOHN, an eminent English Wesleyan minister, was born at Chester, March 21, 1764. He was converted by remarkable providences, and called to the ministry by Wesley in 1785. He was president of the conference in 1817. In 1835 he was laid aside by a stroke of paralysis, and died at Chelsea, London, June 19, 1839. He had a vigorous understanding, a remarkably retentive memory, and a vivid imagination. In 1812 Gaulter revised and republished Rev. David Simpson's Plea for Religion and the Sacred Writings. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1839; Stevenson, Hist. of City Road Chapel, p. 560 sq.

Gaultier, JACQUES, a French Jesuit, was born in 1562, and died at Grenoble, Oct. 14, 1636, professor of theology and Hebrew. He wrote, Tabula Chronographica Status Ecclesie Catholice:—Anatomia Calvinismi:—Index Controversiarum ad Evangelia Accommodata. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gaupp, Carl Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, and professor of theology, who died at Berlin in 1863, is the author of Die Römische Kirche (Dresden, 1840):—Die Union der Deutschen Kirchen (Breslau, 1843):—Die Union in der Kirche (ibid. 1847):—Praktische Theologie (Berlin, 1848, 2 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 401. (B. P.)

Gaupp, Jacob, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 13, 1767, at Hirschberg, and died at Liegnitz, in Silesia, Aug. 19, 1828. He wrote, Beiträge zur Befestigung des Reiches der Wahrheit in Predigten (Breslau, 1798):—Predigten (Glogau, 1801):—Briefe eines Menschenfreundes an bekümmerte und leidende Mitmenschen (ibid. 1800-9, 3 vols.):—Religiöses Erbauungsbuch einer christlichen Familie (Leipsic, 1812). Gauthier, François Louis, a French theologian, was born at Paris, March 29, 1696. He was rector of Savigny-sur-Orge, and performed for fifty-two years the pastoral functions with great zeal and charity. He died at Paris, Oct. 9, 1780, leaving, Reflexions Chrétiennes sur les huit Béatitudes (Paris, 1783). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gauthier, Jean Baptiste, a French theologian, was born at Louviers in 1685. He was for a long time connected with Colbert, bishop of Montpellier, whose instructions and mandates he published. After the death of that prelate he settled at Paris. He died Oct. 30, 1755, near Gaillon, leaving a large number of works, directed especially against the Jesuits and infidels. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gauthier, Nicolas, a French controversialist, was born at Rheims in the last quarter of the 16th century. Having renounced the Church of Rome, he went to Sedan for the study of theology; but suddenly left that place and the Protestant Church, and wrote, Descouverte des Fraudes Sedanaises (Paris, 1618):—Réponse à l'Avertissement de J. Cappel (Rheims, 1618):—Les Livres de Babel Huguenote (ibid. 1619). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gautier DE COUTANCES (Lat. de Constantia or de Constantia), a prelate of Normandy, was born about 1140. Little is known of his life prior to 1173, when he was vice-chancellor of England and canon of Rouen. He was regarded with favor by the king of England, who, in 1177, confided to him a mission to the count of Flanders, and in 1180 sent him with an embassy to the court of the young king, Philip Augustus. Gautier, who added to his other ecclesiastical honors the canonship of Lincoln and the archdeaconship of Oxford, greatly desired the bishopric of Lisieux, but did not obtain it. A vacancy, however, occurring, he was made bishop of Lincoln, and soon after passed to the metropolitan see of Rouen. From this time the name of the archbishop of Rouen is continually mingled with the politics of the day. In 1188 he agreed to accompany king Henry II on the crusade. In return for services rendered to prince Richard, Gautier was invested with the regency of the kingdom, Oct. 8, 1191. After an absence from his diocese of four years, in which time he had obtained the liberty of the king, who had been a prisoner in Germany, he had to appease some difficulties between the canons and citizens of Rouen. In 1194 the churches of Normandy suffered greatly from the war between the kings of France and England. Gautier defended vigorously the ecclesiastical rights, and sent an interdict to Normandy, which, however, he was unable to sustain. In 1200 he had charge of promulgating, conjointly with the bishop of Poitiers, the interdict sent by Peter of Capua against the king of France. In 1204, Philip Augustus becoming master of Normandy, Gautier solemnly delivered to him the attributes of the ducal crown. He died Nov. 6, 1207. There remain to us only a few letters of Gautier, scattered among the cotemporary annals. It was said that he also wrote a history of the crusade of Richard, but nothing remains of it. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gautier DE MORTAGNE (Lat. Walterus de Mauri(t)ania), a French theologian, was born at Mortagne, in Flanders, in the early part of the 12th century. He taught rhetoric at Paris, in one of the schools established upon the St. Genevieve mountain. But he soon gave up belles-lettres for theology and philosophy, and taught these two sciences at Rheims, Lyons, and other places. From 1136 to 1148 he had as disciple Jean de Salisbury. In 1150 he was canon of Laon, and became successively dean, and bishop of that church. He died at Laon in 1173. He wrote five short theological treatises in the form of letters, which occupy twenty pages in the Spicilegium of D'Achery. The more interesting of these letters is addressed to Abelard, who claimed to explain philosophically the mysteries of Christianity. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gauslin, a French prelate, natural son of Hugh Capet, became abbot of Fleury after the death of Abbon in 1005. He sent to Brittany the monk Felix to reform the monasteries. At the death of Dagbert, bishop of Bourges, in 1020, he was raised to the dignity of prelate in this vacancy; but the opposition of the inhabitants hindered him for a long time from taking possession of his see, and only through the intervention of the pope, Benedict VIII, he entered upon these duties in 1014. In 1022 he was at the Council of Orleans, which condemned the heresiarch Stephen, and in 1024 at the Council of Paris, where he debated the question of the apostleship of St. Martial. He died in 1030. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gavardo, Niccolo, a Roman Catholic theologian, who died at Rome, June 12, 1715, is the author of, Theologia Ex antiqua juxta Doctrinam S. Augustini (Naples, 1683-96, 6 vols.):—Questiones de Hierarchia Ecclesiarum Militantis (ibid. 1690):—Philosophia Vindicta ab Erroribus Philosophorum Gentilium (Rome, 1701, 4 vols.). See Argelati, Bibl. Mediol.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gay, Ebenezer (1), D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Dedham, Mass., May 4, 1718; graduated from Harvard College in 1737; was ordained pastor of the First Church in Suffield, Conn., Jan. 13, 1742; and died in March, 1796. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 537.

Gay, Ebenezer (2), a Congregational minister, was born in Suffield, Conn.; entered Harvard College, but transferred his membership to Yale, from which he graduated in 1787, and of which he was tutor from 1790 to 1792; was installed as colleague pastor with his father over the First Church in Suffield; and retired from the active ministry several years before his death, which occurred in February, 1837, aged seventy-one years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 1, 537.

Gayatri, the holiest verse of the Vedas (q. v.). It is addressed to the sun, to which it was daily offered up as a prayer, in these words: "Let us meditate on the adorable light of the divine sun; may it guide our intellects. Desirous of food, we solicit the gift of the splendid sun, who should be studiously worshipped. Venerable men, guided by the understanding, salute the divine sun with oblations and praise" (Colebrooke, Translation). The substance of this prayer is thus given by professor Horace Wilson: "Let us meditate on the sacred light of that divine sun, that it may illuminate our minds."

Gaza. Full descriptions of this ancient and still important city may be found in Porter's Handbook for Syria, p. 271 sq.; and Bäderer's Palestine, p. 312 sq. The latest is that of Conder (Tent-Work, ii, 169 sq.):

"This ancient city, the capital of Philistia, is very picturesquely situated, having a fine approach down the broad avenue from the north, and rising on an isolated hill a hundred feet above the plain. On the higher part of the hill are the governor's house, the principal mosque (an early Crusading church), and the bazaars. The green mound traceable round this hillock are probably remains of the ancient walls of the city. Gaza bristles with minarets, and has not less than twenty wells. The population is now eighteen thousand, including sixty or seventy houses of Greek Christians. The Samaritans in the 7th century seem to have been numerous in Philistia, near Jaffa, Ascalon, and Gaza. Even as late as the commencement of the present century, they had a synagogue in this latter city, but are now no longer found there. There are two large suburbs of mud cabins on lower ground, to the east and northeast, making four quarters to the town in all. East of the Seral is the reputed tomb of Samson, whom the Moslems call 'Aly Merwan' or 'Aly the enslaved.' On the northwest is the mosque of Hâshem, father of the prophet. The new mosque, built some forty years since, is full of marble fragments from ancient buildings, which were principally found near the sea-shore. The town is not walled, and presents the appearance of a village grown to unusual size; the brown cabins rise on the hillside row above row, and the white domes and minarets, with numerous palms, give the place a truly Oriental appearance. The bazaars are large and are considered good." (See illustration on following page.)

dervishes called Bactashites (q. v.) salute every one they meet. They are applied allegorically to the divine love. See CANTICLES.

Gazith (גִּזִּית, hewn, i. e. of squared stones), a place in which the Jewish Sanhedrim sat. It was a building erected of hewn stone after the second temple was finished, half of it being within the court and half within the chéel, and, therefore, half of it was holy and half common. See SANHEDRIM; TEMPLE.

Gazophylacium (γαζοφυλάκιον), the treasury outside the Church, among the early Christians, in which the oblations or offerings of the people were kept. The word also denotes the chest in the temple at Jerusalem in which the valuable presents consecrated to God were kept; and it was sometimes applied to the apartments of the temple used for storing the provisions for sacrifice and the priests' portion. See CHURCH; TEMPLE.

Gazzaniga, FRANZ PETER MARTIN, a Roman Catholic theologian, who lived in the second half of the 18th century at Vienna, is the author of, Prælectiones Theologicae (Vienna, 1775-79, 5 vols.):—Theol. Dogmatica in Syst. Reducta (Ingolstadt, 1786):—Theol. Polemica (Vienna, 1778-79, 2 vols., Mayence, 1783). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 306, 342. (B. P.)

Gebauer, CHRISTIAN AUGUST, a German hymnist, was born Aug. 28, 1792, at Knolesdorf, in Saxony. He was professor at Bonn in 1828, and died at Tübingen, Nov. 18, 1852. He published, Blüthen religiösen Sinnes (Heidelberg, 1821; 8d. ed. 1843):—Luther und seine Zeitgenossen (Leipzig, 1827):—Simon Dach und seine Freunde (Tübingen, 1828):—*Erbauliches und Beschauliches aus Gern. Gebhard, John G., an eminent German and Dutch Reformed minister, was born at Waldorf, Germany, Feb. 2, 1750. He received his classical education at the University of Heidelberg, and completed his theological studies at Utrecht, in Holland, where he was licensed in 1771. The same year he emigrated to America, and officiated in the German churches of Whitpain and Worcester, Pa., for three years. In 1774 he removed to New York city, as pastor of the German Church, and in 1776 accepted the call of the Dutch Reformed Church of Claverack, Columbia Co., where he continued until his death, Aug. 16, 1826. Mr. Gebhard mastered the Low Dutch tongue in three months so as to be able to preach in it. He founded the Washingtonian Institute of Claverack in 1777, and was its principal for many years. He was a spirited, earnest, and pathetic preacher, a good theologian, a leader in educational movements, a great lover of peace, a sagacious, prudent adviser, having full control of himself, and large influence over a wide region of country. He threw the whole weight of his character and office into the cause of his adopted country during the Revolutionary war. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 293; Zabriske, Claverack Centennial; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.; Magazine of the Ref. Dutch Church, Oct. 1826, p. 232. (W. J. R. T.)

Gebser, AUGUST RUDOLPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 19, 1801, in Thuringia. In 1823 he commenced his academical career at Jena, was in 1828 professor of theology, in 1829 professor, superintendent, and first cathedral preacher at Königsberg, and died at Halle, June 22, 1874. He wrote, De Expositione Sacrae Scripturae, Præsertim Novi Testamenti e Libro Zöndervesti (Jena, 1824):—De Oratione Dominica (Königsberg, 1830):—Der Brief des Jacobus übersetzt und ausführlich erklärt (Berlin, 1828):—Commentatio de Primordiis Studiorum Fancitorum Anabaptistarum (Königsberg, 1830):—*Bibliotheca Latina Vet. Gederah (or Gederothaim) of Joshua xv, 36. Lieut. Conder regards this as agreeing with the position of the ruin Jedireh, nine miles south of Ludd (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 43). But this is perhaps better suited to the requirements of Gederah (Josh. xv, 41), which Conder (Tent-Work, ii, 336), locates at Katrak, in Wady Surar.

Gedicke, LAMPERTUS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Gardelegen, in Saxony, Jan. 6, 1683. He studied at Halle, was military chaplain in 1709, and died at Berlin, Feb. 21, 1735. He wrote, Præe Veritates Oder Grundsätze der christl. Religion (Berlin, 1717):—Historischer Unterricht von dem Reformationswerke Lutheri (ibid. 1718):—Erklärung der Lehre von der wahren Gegenwart des Leibes und Blutes Christi (ibid. 1722):—Christliche und bescheidene Verteidigung der Lutherischen Lehre (1724):—Amica Collatio de Estimatione Rationis Theologica cum Henr. van Bashuyzen (1726). Geiger, ABRAHAM, a Jewish rabbi of Germany, was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, May 24, 1810. He studied at Heidelberg and Bonn, and won the prize for an essay on a question proposed by the Bonn philosophical faculty, On the Sources of the Koran, which was printed in 1833 with the title, Was hat Mohamed aus dem Judenthum aufgenommen? In November, 1832, he was invited to fill the rabbinical chair at Wiesbaden, which he quitted in 1838 for Breslau. In 1863 he was elected chief rabbi in his native town, which appointment he held until 1869, when he was called to Berlin, where he died, Oct. 23, 1874. As early as 1835, Geiger published his Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift für jüdische Theologie, which was discontinued in 1847. In 1862 he began the Jüdische Zeitschrift, a periodical devoted to Jewish literature, but important also for the Christian student. In addition to this he published monographs on Maimonides, on the exegetical school of the rabbis in the north of France, on Elijah del Medigo, and on many other learned Jews of the Middle Ages. He contributed also to Hebrew periodicals numerous articles on Rabbinical literature, as well as to the Journal of the German Oriental Society, chiefly on Syrian and Samaritan literature. His Reading-book on the Mishnah is full of grammatical and lexicographical notes of the highest importance for the appreciation of the particular dialects of the Mishnah and the Talmud. His main work, however, Urschrift und Uebersetzungen der Bibel (1857), which advocates the theory that the Sadducees derived their name from the high-priest Zadoc, contains the results of twenty years' study, and is still very important for Biblical criticisms, especially in reference to the Samaritan text of the Pentateuch, and to that of the Septuagint. Geiger, from the very outset of his career, belonged to the party who were anxious to reform the Jewish synagogue in accordance with the necessities of the age, without, however, entirely breaking with the traditions of the past; and though a reformer of the Reformers, yet in his Das Judenthum und seine Geschichte (1865-71, 8 vols.), Geiger shows himself a narrow-minded and bigoted Jew, by making Jesus a follower of rabbi Hillel, and by asserting that "Jesus never uttered a new thought." After his death, Ludwig Geiger, a son of Abraham, published Nachgelassene Schriften (Berlin, 1875-77, 5 vols.), containing some older essays, formerly published, and other material from Geiger's manuscripts. Geissel, JOHANNES VON, a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born Feb. 15, 1796. In 1818 he received holy orders, was in 1819 professor and religious instructor at the gymnasium in Speier, in 1822 member of the chapter, in 1836 dean, and in 1837 bishop of Speier. In 1842 he became the coadjutor of the archbishop of Cologne, in 1846 his successor, and died Sept. 8, 1864. Geissel was one of the main promoters of Ultramontanistic ideas in Germany, especially in Prussia, and the pope acknowledged his endeavors by making him cardinal in 1850. Geissel's writings and addresses were published by Dumont (Cologne, 1869-76, 4 vols.). See Remling, Kardinal von Geissel, Bischof von Speier und Erzbischof von Köln (Speier, 1873); Baudri, Der Erzbischof von Köln, Johannes Kardinal von Geissel und seine Zeit (Cologne, 1882). (B. Geissenhainer, FREDERICK W., D.D., a Lutheran minister, son of Rev. Frederick W. Geissenhainer, a distinguished Lutheran preacher, was born at New Hanover, Montgomery Co., Pa., June 28, 1797. He came to New York city with his father, at an early age, and was licensed as a minister in 1818. His first pastorate was at Vincent, Chester Co., Pa., where he remained ten years. Fourteen years following he was pastor of St. Matthew's Church (English), in Walker Street, New York city. The congregation of Christ Church at length became the possessor of the property of St. Matthew's, and took that name. Dr. Geissenhainer then founded a new organization, and established the Church known as St. Paul's. The preaching was in a hall on Eighth Avenue; but the church was erected in 1842, on the corner of Sixth Avenue and Fifteenth Street, mainly through the liberality of Dr. Geissenhainer himself. It was a large and handsome stone structure. The organization began with eleven poor families, but speedily increased to 1500 communicants. During the last three years of his life he was aided by an assistant minister. As a preacher, he was terse, vigorous, and powerful, having complete control of the English and German languages. He died in New York city, June 2, 1879. See Lutheran Observer, July 4, 1879.

Gelder, ARNAULD VAN, an eminent Dutch painter, was born at Dort in 1645, and acquired the elements of design under Samuel van Hoogstraeten, but afterwards went to Amsterdam and entered the school of Rembrandt. Among his principal historical works are a picture at Dort, representing Solomon on his Throne, Surrounded by his Soldiers; at the Hague, A Jewish Synagogue. His master-piece was a picture at Dort, representing Bathsheba Entreating David to Leave his Kingdom to Solomon. His last work was the Sufferings of Christ. He died at Dort in 1727. Geldersman, VINCENT, a reputable Flemish painter, was born at Mechlin in 1539. Among his best works is a picture of Susanna and the Elders, and a Descent from the Cross, in the cathedral at Mechlin.

Gelent, NICOLAS, bishop of Angers, was born about 1220. In 1260 he succeeded Michael de Villoyreau, and during each of the thirty years of his episcopacy he held synods, whence emanated the statutes which D'Achery has collected in his Spicilegium, and which are of interest as giving a knowledge of the customs of that period, and of the abuses of all kinds which the episcopal authority strove in vain to repress. Gelent died Feb. 1, 1290. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gelhouen (or Gheylouen), ARNAULD, a Dutch theologian, was born at Rotterdam, and lived at the close of the 15th century. He was canon of the Augustinian order, at the monastery of Volpert, where he died in 1442. He wrote a moral treatise, entitled Γνωστὸν αὐτὸν, Sive Speculum Conscientia (Brussels, 1476), which was the first book issued from the press of the Frères de la Vie, who introduced the art of typography at Brussels. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gélu, JACQUES, a French prelate, was born in the diocese of Treves about 1370. He studied at Paris, where his talents attracted the attention of the duke of Orleans, the brother of Charles VI, who took him into his service. After the assassination of his master by the duke of Bourgogne, Gélu entered the service of the king, was in 1407 president of the parliament of the Dauphiné, and in 1414 archbishop of Tours. He attended the council at Constance, and was also present at the conclave held in 1417. In 1420 he went to Spain, being intrusted by the dauphin with a mission. In 1421 he left Naples, retired to his episcopal seat, and died Sept. 17, 1432. When, in 1429, he was asked by the court of France concerning the validity of the revelations of Jeanne d'Arc, he spoke very favorably of her divine mission, and remarked that God has revealed himself more than once to virgins, as, for example, to the sibyls. See Martène, Thesaurus III; Boulliot, Biogr. Arden. (1830), i, 430; Paumier, in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gematría, a word borrowed from the Greek, either corresponding to γέμερπια or γαμαρτία, denotes, among the Cabalists, a rule according to which the Scripture was explained. The idea of this rule was, since every letter is a numeral, to reduce the word to the number it contains, and to explain the word by another of the same quantity. Thus, from the words,

"Lo! three men stood by him" (Gen. xviii, 2), it is deduced that these three angels were Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, because שלשה אנשים, and lo! three men, and אלהי מרכאל גבריאל ורפאל, these are Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, are of the same numerical value, as will be seen from the following reduction to their numerical value of both these phrases:

י ה נ ח ט ז ב ר ג ד ה ו

5+300+30+300+5+50+5+6=701

ל ו ט ר כ א ל נ ב ר י א ל

30+1+10+200+2+8+30+1+20+10+40+6+80

א ל א ט א ר י

+1+30+1+80+200+6=701.

From the passage, "And all the inhabitants of the earth were of one language" (Gen. xi, 1), it is deduced that all spoke Hebrew; שפה being changed for its synonym לשון, and חקדש=5+100+4+300=409, is substituted for its equivalent אדום=1+8+400=409. Or the word צדק in the passage, "For behold, I will bring forth my servant, the Branch" (Zech. iii, 8), must mean the Messiah; for it amounts numerically to the same as מנחם "Comforter" (Lam. i, 16)=188. So יבא טילה in the passage, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come," amounts numerically to the same as טיה=358; hence Shiloh must be the Messiah. See CABALA. (B. P.)

Gembicki, LAURENCE, archbishop and grand-chancellor of Poland, was born about 1550. He commenced his studies at Posen, and completed them at Ingolstadt. He was sent as ambassador to Rome to pope Clement VIII. Returning to Poland, he was made bishop of Kulm or Chelmo, and in 1609 became grand-chancellor of the crown. In 1613 he obtained the bishopric of Kufavia, and in 1616 was made archbishop of Gnesen, and primate of the kingdom, the highest ecclesiastical dignity in Poland. He died in 1624, leaving Exhortatio ad Principem Wladislaum, cum a S. R. M. Omnium Inclite Regni Poloniae Ordinum Consensu, etc. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Gems, in Ecclesiastical Art. Precious stones were Gem of Red Jasper, representing the Good Shepherd, with two Dogs, and the inscription IAHN (perhaps for Jah is his name).

Gem of Red Jasper, representing a saint (perhaps Agnes) kneeling before an executioner.

Gnostic Gem of White Chalcedony, representing portrait of Christ.

Dove, with olive-twig in beak, perched upon a wheat-sheaf (an emblem of the Church), having for supporters a lion and a serpent.

employed in very early times for a great variety of ecclesiastical purposes, some articles, such as chalices, etc., being made wholly of stones more or less precious, and others, such as altars, etc., being decorated therewith. The most artistic purpose, however, was their use for seals, especially by engraving emblems of a religious character, chiefly taken from Scripture, particularly the fish, the dove, the lamb, a ship, or some other emblematic device. Occasionally a historical subject is attempted. The monogram of Christ almost always appears on them.

GEMS, THE THREE SACRED, among the Buddhists, are Buddha, the sacred books, and the priesthood. Their worship is universal among the Buddhists, and they constitute the sacred triad in which these people place all their trust. The assistance they derive from the triad is called sarana (protection), which "is said to destroy the fear of reproduction, or successive existence, and to take away the fear of the mind, the pain to which the body is subject, and the misery of the four hells." "By reflecting on the three gems, scepticism, doubt, and reasoning will be driven away, and the mind become clear and calm. See Hardy, Eastern Monachism, p. 166, 209.

GENCE, JEAN BAPTISTE MODESTE, a French ascetic writer, was born June 14, 1755, at Amiens, and died at Paris, April 17, 1840. He was keeper of the archives, and inspector of the national printing department. He published, Dieu l'Être Infini (Paris, 1801):—Éditions ou Traductions Françaises de l'Imitation de Jésus-Christ (published in the Journal des Curés, Sept. 14, 20, 28, 1810):—Considération sur la Question Relative à l'Imitation de Jésus-Christ (1812):—also Notice Biographique des Pères et Auteurs Célèbres par Bourdaloue (Versailles, 1812), contributed to the fifth edition of the Dictionnaire de l'Académie Française, and edited with Mons. Generation, ETERNAL, is a term used as descriptive of the Father's communicating the divine nature to the Son. On this subject we excerpt the following remarks from Buck's Dict. of the Bible, ed. Henderson:

"The Father is said by some divines to have produced the Word, or Son, from all eternity, by way of generation; on which occasion the word generation raises a peculiar idea: that procession which is really effected in the way of understanding is called generation, because, in virtue thereof, the Word becomes like him from whom he takes the original; or, as St. Paul expresses it, the figure or image of his substance; i. e. of his being and nature. Hence it is, they say, that the second person is called the Son; and that in such a way and manner as never any other was, is, or can be, because of his own divine nature, he being the true, proper, and natural Son of God, begotten by him before all worlds. Thus, he is called his own Son (Rom. viii, 3), his only begotten Son (John iii, 16). Many have attempted to explain the manner of this generation by different similitudes; but as they throw little or no light upon the subject, we shall not trouble the reader with them. Most modern divines believe that the term Son of God refers to Christ as mediator; and that his sonship does not lie in his divine or human nature separately considered, but in the union of both in one person (see Luke i, 35; Matt. iv, 3; John i, 49; Matt. xvi, 16; Acts ix, 20, 22; Rom. i, 4). It is observed that it is impossible that a nature properly divine should be begotten, since begetting, whatever idea is annexed to it, must signify some kind of production, derivation, and inferiority; consequently, that whatever is produced must have a beginning, and whatever had a beginning was not from eternity, as Christ is said to be (Col. i, 16, 17). That the sonship of Christ respects him as mediator, will be evident, if we compare John x, 30, with John xiv, 28. In the former it is said, 'I and my Father are one;' in the latter, 'My Father is greater than I.' These declarations, however opposite they seem, equally respect him as he is the Son; but if his sonship primarily and properly signify the generation of his divine nature, it will be difficult, if not impossible, according to that scheme, to make them harmonize. Considered as a distinct person in the God-hand, without respect to his office as mediator, it is impossible that, in the same view, he should be both equal and inferior to his Father. Again, he expressly tells us himself that 'the Son can do nothing of himself; that the Father sheweth him all things that he doth; and that he giveth him to have life in himself' (John v, 19, 20, 26). These expressions, if applied to him as God, not as mediator, will reduce us to the disagreeable necessity of ascribing either to the creed of Arius, and maintain him to be God of an inferior nature, and thus a plurality of Gods, or of embracing the doctrine of Socinus, who allows him only to be a God by office. But if this title belong to him as mediator, every difficulty is removed. Lastly, it is observed, that though Jesus be God, and the attributes of eternal existence ascribed to him, yet the two attributes, eternal and son, are not once expressed in the same text as referring to eternal generation. This doctrine, held by systematic divines, according to which our Lord was the Son of God, with respect to his divine nature, by communication from the Father, who on this account is called πηγή θεότητος, the Fountain of Deity, is of considerable antiquity. It was customary for the fathers, after the Council of Nice, to speak of the Father as ἀγνός, and to ascribe to him what they termed generatio activa; and of the Son as γεννητός, to whom they attributed generatio passiva. According to them it was the essential property of the Father eternally to have the divine nature of or from himself, so that, with respect to him, it was undervived; whereas it was the property of the Son to be eternally begotten of the Father, and thus to derive his essence from him. To this mode of representing the relations of these two persons of the Trinity, as it respects their essence, it has justly been objected, that it necessarily goes to subvert the supreme and eternal Deity of the Son, and to represent him as essentially derived and inferior; a doctrine nowhere taught in the Scriptures. Some prefer saying that it was not the divine nature that was communicated to the Son, but only distinct personality; but this can scarcely be said to relieve the difficulty. In regard to this and all similar subjects, the safest way is to abstain from all metaphysical subtleties, and rest satisfied with the Biblical mode of representation. That Christ is the Son of God in a sense perfectly unique, and that he was from eternity God, are truths which the Scriptures clearly teach, but wherein, in that sense, his filiation consisted, is a subject on which they are entirely silent. Every attempt to explain it has only furnished a fresh instance of darkening counsel by words without knowledge."

Genesisia (γενέσια, birthday-gifts), were offerings mentioned by Herodotus, and probably consisting of garlands, which the ancient Greeks were accustomed to present at the tombs of their deceased relatives on each annual return of their birthdays.

Genesius, Saint, twenty-fifth bishop of Clermont, in Auvergne (A.D. 656-662), belonged to a family of distinguished rank among the nobles of Auvergne. He renounced the advantages of his birth in order to enter upon the ecclesiastical calling. His learning and his piety caused his elevation to the episcopal see of his province, left vacant by the death of the bishop Proculus. After five years he resolved to embrace the monastic life, and accordingly set out for Rome in the disguise of a simple pilgrim. His miracles betrayed his retreat. He returned to his church, and performed his duties with extraordinary wisdom and devotion. He applied all his power against the heresies of Novatian and Jovinian, founded the abbey of Moulieu, as well as the hospital of St. Esprit, at Clermont, and the Church of St. Symphorien, where he was interred, and which from that time bore his name. He is honored June 8. The Bollandists have published his deeds, and combated the authenticity of other acts collected by various authors. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Genesius, Saint, thirty-eighth bishop of Lyons, was prior of the celebrated abbey of Fontenelle, founded in the 7th century. He employed himself in repairing several monasteries, among which were those of Corbie and Fontenelle. On being made archbishop of Lyons, he showed great ability in that office, but finally retired to the abbey of Chelles, where he died in 679. He is honored Nov. 8. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Genethlia (γενέθλια, birthday-feasts), the festivals among the early Christians held on the anniversary of the death of any martyr, terming it his birthday (q. v.), as being the day on which he was born to a new and higher state of being.

Genga, Bartolomeo, an eminent Italian architect, son of Girolamo Genga, was born at Urbino in 1518, and was instructed by Vasari and Ammanati, after which he visited Rome. He erected the church of San Pietro, at Mondovi, which surpasses, says one master, any other edifice of its size in Italy. He died at Malta in 1558. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Genga, Girolamo, an Italian painter and eminent architect, was born at Urbino in 1476, and studied successively under Luca Signorelli and Pietro Perugino. Most of his works have perished, but mention is made of some historical subjects in the Petrucci palace at Siena: The Resurrection and The Assumption. As an architect he gained considerable eminence, and was more employed in this capacity than as a painter. At Pesaro he restored the court of the palace, built the Church of San Gio. Battista, and erected the façade of the cathedral. He died in 1551. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Genius, in Roman mythology. The belief in invisible protecting spirits, or beings who care for the welfare of single persons, is found among many people and nations, but nowhere was the doctrine of genii so perfect as in Rome; there there was a distinct belief in deities, who were given to every man from the time of birth. These deities were worshipped partly on general festive days, partly each for himself. Thus a genius was especially a protecting spirit of man. This belief extended still further; every important work and object had its genius or genii.

GENIUS OF THE EMPEROR. In the early centuries of the Church, one of the tests by which Christians were detected was, to require them to make oath "by the genius or the fortune of the emperor;" an oath which the Christians, however willing to pray for kings, constantly refused, as savoring of idolatry. Thus Poly-carp was required to swear by the fortune of Cæsar; and Saturninus adjured Speratus, one of the martyrs of Scillia, "at least swear by the genius of our king;" to which he replied, "I do not know the genius of the emperor of the world."

Ancient Bas-relief, representing various Genii.

The Genius of Eternity carrying to Heaven the Deified Figures of Antoninus Pius and his Wife Faustina. (From a Monument at Rome.)

Minucius Felix reprobates the deification of the emperor, and the heathen practice of swearing by his "genius" or "dæmon;" and Tertullian says that, although Christians did not swear by the genius of the Cæsars, they swore by a more august oath, "by their salvation." We do not, says Origen, swear by the emperor's fortune, any more than by other reputed deities; for (as some at least think) they who swear by his fortune swear by his dæmon, and Christians would die rather than take such an oath.

Gen-Ko, a Buddhist monk, was born at Sak-Syon about A.D. 1132. He introduced a new Buddhist doctrine into Japan, which soon attracted a great number of disciples. A woman of the court of the mikado was converted to this religion, which circumstance provoked great excitement, and a sentiment of hatred, mingled with an impetuous desire for vengeance in the heart of the mikado. Gen-Ko was banished, one of his most ardent disciples put to death, and others persecuted. He died A.D. 1212. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gensel, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Annaberg, Dec. 2, 1702. He studied at Wittenberg, Leipsic, and Jena, was preacher in his native place in 1727, superintendent in 1748, and died Sept. 6, 1762. He published, Observationes Sacre (Leipsic, 1733; 2d ed. 1750):—Diss. ad Locum Pauli 2 Cor. xii, 4 (1749):—De Revelationibus et Revelationum Modis (eod.). See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priester; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Genseler, WILHELM AUGUST FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 7, 1793. In 1814 he was con-rector at the lyceum in Saalfeld, in 1817 second court-preacher and professor at the gymnasium there, in 1821 first court-preacher at Coburg, in 1826 general superintendent there, and died in 1847. He wrote, Vita Joannis Aquila (Jena, 1816):—Christliche Amsreden an feulichen Tugen gehalten (Coburg, 1820):—Die Säcularfeier der augsburgischen Confession (ibid. 1830):—Geistliche Reden bei verschiedenen Amtsverrichtungen (Leipsic, 1836):—Die Herzogliche Hofkirche zu Ehrenburg in Coburg (Coburg, 1838). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 416; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 803; ii, 149, 167. (B. P.)

Gentile, LUIGI PRIMO, a reputable Italian painter, was born at Brussels in 1606; acquired the elements of design and then visited Italy, where he gained a high reputation. He resided at Rome for thirty years, and was admitted to the Academy of St. Luke in 1650. Among his works are the picture of St. Antonio, in San Marco, at Rome; also The Na- tivity and St. Stefano, in the Cappuccini at Pesaro. One of his best productions is a picture of The Crucifixion, in the chapel of the Trinity, in the Church of St. Michael at Ghent. He died at Brussels in 1657.

Genuflection (bending of the knee) indicates a temporary rather than a permanent act of adoration; even as it describes a bending of one knee and not of both.

Gensken, KARL ERNST BERNHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 5, 1811, at Rostock. From 1836 to 1846 he was pastor at Molin, and afterwards at Schwarzenbach, where he died, Nov. 9, 1882. He wrote, Ueber die vornehmsten Einwürfe wider das Werk der Bibelerbreitung (Schönbürg, 1839):—Festpredigten (Lüneburg, 1841):—Das gute Recht unserer kirchlichen Symbole (Leipsic, 1851):—Erklärung des kleinen Katechismus Martin Luthers (4th ed. Lüneburg, 1860):—Entwürfe zu Beichtreden (Leipsic, eod.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 417. (B. P.)

Geoffrey OF COLDINGHAM, an ecclesiastical Anglo-Norman historian, lived at the commencement of the 13th century. A monk at Durham, he obtained the position of sacristan in the priory of Coldingham, in Scotland. He wrote A Short History of the Church of Durham, from 1152 to 1214, which work was first published by Wharton. Raine has given a more complete edition in his Historia Dunelmensis Scriptores Tres (1839). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffrey (or Stephen) OF LLANDAFF, was brother of Urban, and was consecrated bishop of that see in 1107. He wrote a Life of the Welsh saint Telivous, or Teilo, and is said to have composed the register of the Church of Llandaff, published by Rev. W. J. Rees, for the Welsh Manuscript Society, in 1840. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Geoffroi BABION, a French ecclesiastical writer, lived at the commencement of the 12th century. He was one of the most celebrated scholastics, or master professors, of the school of Angers. He succeeded in this office Marbode, who was ordained bishop of Rennes in 1096. Little is known of his life, excepting that under his direction the school of Angers flourished, and that he still lived in 1110. There is no foundation for the belief of Pits, that Geoffroi was English. There is a commentary preserved in the abbey of Cîteaux with this inscription, Gaufridi Babuini super Matthæum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi DE BAR (Lat. Gaufridus de Barro), a French prelate, was born in the early part of the 13th century. Doctor of theology, canon, archdeacon, and, after 1273, dean of the Church of Paris, he was appointed cardinal by pope Martin IV, March 23, 1281. He died at Rome, Aug. 21, 1283. For mention of his writings, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi DE BEAULIEU, a French hagiographer, was born near the commencement of the 13th century. He entered the Dominican order, and more than twenty years performed the functions of almoner, confessor, and intimate counsellor to Louis IX, whom he accompanied in the crusade of 1248, sharing his captivity, and with whom he returned to France in 1254. He also took part in the crusade of 1270, and assisted at the last moments of Louis IX. Returning to France, he wrote, by order of pope Gregory X, the life of the saintly king. He died about 1274. Geoffroi was not a polished historian; he was a religious hagiographer, who kept within the bounds of collecting the religious customs, the prayers, the confessions, the austerities of the monarch, and all the acts of piety and charity which gained for him the title of saint. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi COU DE CERF (Collum Cervi), a French

prelate, was born in the latter half of the 11th century. He embraced the religious life, and was successively prior of St. Nicaise of Rheims, and abbot of St. Medard of Soissons. When Abelard was confined in this abbey, Geoffroi loaded him with kindness, and the illustrious philosopher caused the remembrance to be handed down to posterity. Geoffroi revived the love and culture of letters in the convents of the order of St. Benedict, preaching in all the re-establishment of monastic discipline. In 1131 he was elected bishop of Chalons, at the wish of St. Bernard, his friend. Nine years later he assisted at the Council of Sens, and, in spite of his affection for Abelard, he could not but adhere to the judgment passed against him by this assembly. He died May 27, 1143. Of three letters written by him, the first is found in the Bibliotheca Cluniacensis of Duchesne, the second in the Spicilegium of D'Achery, and the third in the Miscellanea of Baluze. For other works see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi d'Eu, a French prelate, was born at Eu near the close of the 12th century. He pursued his studies at the University of Paris, where he first took the degree of doctor of theology, then that of doctor of medicine. He was appointed canon of the Church of Amiens, and in 1222 was raised to the episcopal see of that city. He patronized the celebrated architect, Robert de Luzarches, and caused the work on the cathedral of Amiens to be completed in 1288. Geoffroi died at Amiens, Nov. 25, 1236. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi de Lèves, a French prelate, was born in the latter half of the 11th century. After the death of Yves, bishop of Chartres, the chapter of this Church elected Geoffroi to succeed him. Count Thibault, indignant at this election, concerning which he had not been consulted, drove the new bishop from the city, and pillaged the houses of the canons who had given him their votes. Robert of Arbrisselles appeased the count, and Geoffroi, a peaceable possessor of his bishopric, was consecrated at Rome by Pascal II, in 1116. He assisted at several councils, and distinguished himself by his eloquence. He had a contest with Geoffroi of Vendôme, relative to the privileges of this abbey. If we may credit Abelard, the bishop of Chartres was the only one, at the Council of Soissons, in 1121, who did not approve the rigor of which he was the object. Nevertheless, twenty years later, he signed the condemnation of this philosopher. In 1127 he accompanied Étienne de Senlis, bishop of Paris, to Rome, and in 1132 he received the authority of legate, in which position he was obliged to combat the partisans, in Aquitania, of the antipope Anacletus, and, with the aid of St. Bernard, succeeded in restoring to the subjection of pope Innocent, duke William, whom the bishop of Angoulême had involved in the schism. He received from the holy see various missions for the extirpation of schism and heresy, and always conducted himself in an irreproachable manner in the exercise of these functions. He died Jan. 24, 1149. Some of his letters and charters have been collected in the Gallia Christiana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi du Loroux, a French prelate, was born at Le Loroux (Loratorium), a town of Touraine, near the close of the 11th century. He distinguished himself by his knowledge of theology, and it is believed that he publicly taught this science at Poitiers. In 1131 St. Bernard wrote to engage him to publicly take the part of Innocent II against Anacletus. In 1136 he was elected bishop of Bordeaux. Allied in friendship with Gilbert de La Porree, bishop of Poitiers, he attempted to preserve him at the Council of Rheims, in 1148, from ecclesiastical censure. Two years before he had presided, as legate of the holy see, at the Council of Beaugency, where the divorce of Louis the Younger and Eléonore was published. He died at Bordeaux, July 18, 1158. Five letters of his remain, addressed to Suger, and collections by Duchesne, Scriptores, iv, 500-506, etc. Some manuscript sermons are attributed to him, and a commentary on the first fifty Psalms of David, which appears to belong to Geoffroi de Vendôme. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi de Péronne, a French theologian of the 12th century, was one of the twenty-nine persons commendable for their birth and knowledge, whom Bernard, on his voyage to Flanders about 1146, decided to embrace the religious life at Clairvaux. Geoffroi became, later, prior of this abbey, and refused the bishopric of Tournay. He still lived in 1171. For mention of his works, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi de Vendôme (Lat. Gaufridus Vindocinensis), a French cardinal, was born at Angers in the latter half of the 11th century, probably of one of the important families of Anjou. Being placed while very young in the monastery of La Trinité de Vendôme, he there distinguished himself by his firmness of character and the extent of his knowledge, so that he was promoted from the rank of novitiate to the dignity of abbot, Aug. 21, 1098. The year following he went to Rome, where Urban II made him a cardinal, with the title of St. Priusque. In 1094 he was at Saumur among the prelates charged by the pope with acquitting Foulques of Anjou. In 1095 he assisted at the Council of Clermont, and in 1097 was found at the Council of Saintes. In 1115 Geoffroi engaged in a quarrel with the abbot of St. Aubin of Angers. The legate Umbald called him, in 1126, to the Council of Orleans, but he responded to him that an abbot of Vendôme, vassal of the holy see, obeyed the orders of the pope, and not those of a bishop or any other apostolic mandatory. He was endowed with brilliant qualities, and would have occupied the highest positions in the Church had he been less imperious and sullen. He died at Angers, March 26, 1132. His writings were collected and published, in 1610, by P. Sirmond. This collection offers five books of letters, six treatises upon various dogmatic subjects, hymns, and sermons. The matter which he most often treated of was that of investitures. A Commentaire sur les Psaumes is unpublished. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi (or Godefroi) de St. Victor, a French ecclesiastical writer of the 12th century, was canon of the abbey of St. Victor, at Paris, but information concerning his life is wanting, except that he taught literature and philosophy for a long time before retiring to the cloister. Some regard him as the same person as a sub-prior of St. Barbe, bearing the same name, and of whom several letters were published by D. Martene. Various works of the canon of St. Victor exist in manuscript at the Imperial Library; for further mention see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geoffroi du Vigéois, a French chronicler of the 12th century, was born at Clermont d'Excideuil (Périgord) about 1140. He was educated at Limoges, and there received the monkish consecration in 1159, was ordained priest at Benevent, abbey of Marche du Limousin, in 1167, by Gerand, bishop of Cahors, and appointed prior of Vigéois, in Lower Limousin, June 14, 1178. The details of his life are found only in his history, and in a most important one upon the history of Périgord and Limousin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Geomancy (from γη, the earth, and μαντεία, divination), one of the four kinds of divination (q. v.) mentioned by Varro.

George is the name of numerous early ecclesiastics, among whom we specify: (1) The second patriarch of Alexandria by that name, A.D. cir. 611; (2) first patriarch of Antioch by that name, A.D. cir. 645; (3) patriarch of the Nestorians, A.D. 660; (4) second patriarch of Antioch by that name, A.D. cir. 680; (5) the forty-fourth bishop of Constantinople, and first patriarch of that name, A.D. 678-683.

George Amyruza, an ecclesiastical writer, was born at Trebizond near the commencement of the 15th century. He was esteemed by John Palæologus II, emperor of Constantinople, whom he accompanied to the Council of Florence in 1439. On his return to Trebizond, he performed historical duties for David, the emperor. After the taking of Trebizond by the Turks, in 1461, he was in favor with the sultan, Mahomet II, and obtained an important place in the aeraglio. He died about 1465, having embraced Mohammedanism. He wrote a work entitled, Ad Demetrium Nauplia Ducem, etc., directed against the union of the two churches, from which Allatius has given extracts in his De Consensu Utriusque Ecclesie. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George of Cyprus (afterwards called Gregory), patriarch of Constantinople, was born in the early part of the 13th century. He occupied an important position at Constantinople at the time of the accession of Andronicus Palæologus the elder, in 1282. He was a man of learning and eloquence, and revived the Attic dialect, which had for a long time fallen into disuse. Under the reign of Michael Palæologus, father of Andronicus, he was in favor of the union of the Greek and Latin churches, which Michael greatly desired. But the accession of Andronicus, who was opposed to this union, modified his sentiments. At the death of Joseph, Andronicus was called to the vacant see. The emperor, desiring to put an end to the existing troubles concerning the procession of the Holy Ghost, and a schism caused by the deposition of Arsenius, patriarch of Constantinople in 1266, wished to place a layman in the position; therefore George was rapidly advanced through the various degrees of monk, deacon, priest, and consecrated patriarch in April, 1283, under the name of Gregory. The Armenians at first refused to recognize him, and at length were excommunicated by him. He severely prosecuted the adherents of John Beccus, or Veccus, ex-patriarch, and zealous advocate of the union of the Greek and Latin churches, which sentiment appeared particularly dangerous to Gregory. He expressed his opinions upon this subject in a book, entitled, Ἐχθρῆσι τοῦ τόμου τῆς πίστεως, which excited so much opposition that he was obliged to abandon his see in 1289, and accordingly retired to a monastery. He died the following year, and his death is believed to have been caused by chagrin. For mention of numerous other works, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George (Saint), surnamed MTHATSMIDEL, abbot of Mitha-Tsminda, was born in Thrialet about 1014. He was at the age of seven years consecrated to the monastic life. Carried to Constantinople by the Greeks, who took him prisoner in 1021, he remained there twelve years, and obtained a thorough knowledge of the sciences and the Greek language. Returning to Georgia, he entered a monastery, from which he went forth privately to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and afterwards to Mt. Athos, where in seven years he translated a large part of the Bible into the Georgian language. The remainder of his life was spent in analogous occupation. He composed a life of St. Euthymius, some theological treatises, and translated a large number of works of the Greek fathers. About 1061 he became abbot of the Georgian convent of Mt. Athos, called Mitha-Tsminda, which he repaired with the funds furnished by the emperor Constantine Monomachus. King Bagrad IV offered him the bishopric of Mingrelia, but he declined, and even abandoned the office of abbot, retiring to a monastery in Taurus. In 1059, king Bagrad put him in charge of the education of his son, George II. St. George died about 1072. His festival is celebrated June 28 or 29. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George of NICOMEDIA, a Byzantine theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 9th century, was keeper of the archives of the great church of Constantinople. He was the friend and correspondent of Pho-tius, and became archbishop of Nicomedia. Several of his homilies and three of his hymns are found in the Novum Auctarium of Combefis, vol. i. Combefis confounded the author with George the Pisidian. Among the unpublished works of George we mention a chronicle, but it is difficult to distinguish between this and the chronicles of the other Georges. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George THE SINNER (Ἀμαρτωλός), a Byzantine chronicler, lived near the middle of the 9th century. He wrote a chronicle which extended from the creation down to the reign of Michael III, son of Theophilus and Theodora. This man must not be confounded with other Georges who also wrote chronicles, as George Cedrenus, George Syncellus, George of Nicomedia, and George the Monk. The chronicle of George was copied by Cedrenus, Theophanus, and Michael Glycas. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George (Keorkh) I, patriarch of Armenia, succeeded Soghomon A.D. 792. He died in 795, and was succeeded by Joseph II. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George II, patriarch of Armenia, was born at Karnhi. Educated in the patriarchal palace, he was raised to the patriarchate in 876, after the death of Zachary III. He was a prudent man, who governed well his Church. He was one of the principal signers of the petition addressed to the caliph, requesting the title of king for the prince Achod, governor of Armenia. Being sent as ambassador by Sempad, successor of Achod, to Afshin, the Arab general who came to invade Armenia, he was retained as a captive, and did not regain his liberty until near the conclusion of the treaty, and by means of a ransom. He died in 897. He is the author of a letter addressed to John, a Syrian patriarch, in which he exposes the rites of the Armenian Church. His successor was Machdats II (Elivardzetsi). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

George III was born at Lorhi, and occupied the patriarchal see of Armenia from 1071 to 1073. When Gregory II had abdicated, in order to retire to the Black Mountain, in the Taurus, George, who had been his secretary, was elected patriarch. Irritated because a great number of priests still addressed Gregory II as the true patriarch, he treated with great severity those who denied the regularity of his election. Being deposed in 1078, he retired to Tarsus, where he soon after ended his days. Gregory II took the place which George III had occupied for two years. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Georgel, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French ecclesiastic and diplomatist, was born at Bruyères, Lorraine, Jan. 19, 1731. He entered the Jesuit order, taught, with some success, rhetoric and mathematics, in the colleges of Pont-à-Mousson, Dijon, and Strasburg, and later became secretary to Rohan, ambassador to Vienna. In 1774 he became vicar-general, and administered the diocese of Strasburg. He afterwards retired to Freiburg, and occupied himself in editing his Mémoires, until the grand-prior of Malta called him to his aid. He refused a bishopric, preferring the office of vicar-general of Vosges, and a quiet dwelling in the little village of Bruyères, where he died, Nov. 14, 1818, leaving six volumes of memoirs in MS., published by his nephew (Paris, 1817 or 1820). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Georges (or Georgen), an ecclesiastic of the diocese of Metz, was vicar of the parish of St. Eucaire of that city, in 1788. He died about 1848, while holding the position of grand chorister of the cathedral of Nancy. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Georges, Dominique, a French theologian, was born at Cutri, near Longwy, Lorraine, in 1613. He completed his course of philosophy at the College of the Jesuits at Pont-à-Mousson, entered orders, and was appointed, in 1637, curate of Circourt. Some time after he returned to Paris, went into the community of St. Nicolas-du-Chardonnet, and later into the abbey of the reformed Cistercians. At the age of forty years he was placed in charge of the abbey of Val Richer. In 1664 he was sent with the abbot of La Trappe to Rome, to solicit a general reform of the order of Cîteaux. On his return he established this reform in his abbey at Val Richer, which was a course of such extreme austerity that many were unable to follow it, and he was obliged to modify it. He died Nov. 8, 1693. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Georgi, CHRISTIAN SIGMUND, a Lutheran theologian, was born at Luckau, July 20, 1701. He studied at Wittenberg, and commenced his academical career in 1723, was professor of philosophy in 1736, professor of theology in 1743, and was honored with the doctorate of divinity in 1748. He died Sept. 6, 1771, leaving De Chalkaesyriam, Rabbinismis et Perismis (Wittenberg, 1726):—De Ebraismis, Novi Test. (ibid. 1726-27):—De Dialecto Novi Testamenti (ibid. 1730):—De Idiomaticis Novi Test. (ibid. eod.):—De Puritate Novi Test. (ibid. 1731):—De Latinismis Græcæ Novi Fœderis (ibid. 1732):—Vindicia Novi Testamenti ab Ebraismis (eod.):—Hierocriticus Novi Testamenti (1733):—De ספרים ad Varios Vet. et Novi Test. Locos Illustrandos (1734), etc. For a full list of his writings, amounting to seventy-two, see Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Georgio, ADOLPH A S., a Piarist, was born in 1681, in Moravia. In 1695 he joined his order, was its general in 1724, and died as bishop of Raab, Nov. 24, 1748. He wrote, כר אלקים, i. e. teacher and witness (Frankfort, 1711; a work written in Hebrew for the conversion of the Jews, which he had formerly published in Latin at Vienna, 1709):—Die Psalmen Davids mit einer Erklärung und Phrasologie des Hebräischen Textes (Vienna, 1737). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Georgius, Ambinias, a Capuchin preacher, who died at Paris in 1657, is the author of Tertullianus Redicurus (Paris, 1646-50, 3 vols.):—Theologia Pauli Trina (ibid. 1649-50, 3 vols.). See Bernard à Bononia, Bibl. Capuccinorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Georgius, Dominicus, the younger, librarian to cardinal Imperialis, and chaplain to pope Benedict XIV, died at Rome, Aug. 20, 1747. He wrote, De Antiqua Italia Metropolitibus (Rome, 1722):—De Liturgia Romani Pontificis (1731, 2 vols.):—De Monogrammate Christi (1738):—Annalium Ecclesiasticorum Cass. Ba omii (Lucca, 1740):—Vita Nicolai V Pont. Mazini ad Fidem Veterum Monumentorum, etc. (1742):—Martyrologium Adonis Archiepiscopi Viennensis (1745). Georgius, Ignatius, a Benedictine, who flourished in the first half of the 18th century, is the author of Paulus Apostolus in Marri (Venice, 1730). See Baumgarten, Merkwürdige Bücher, viii, 157; Walch, Bibl. Theol. iii, 454; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 569. (B. P.)

Gerald, abbot and bishop of Mayo, is believed to have been of Saxon lineage, and to have accompanied Colman from Lindisfarne in 664. He is commemorated on March 13.

Geraldini, ALESSANDRO, a Neapolitan prelate, first bishop of Hispaniola, afterwards San Domingo, then Hayti, was born in 1455 at Amelia (Umbria). He belonged to a noble family, and devoted himself to the service of Spain. His brother having been sent on a mission to Francis II, duke of Brittany, Alessandro accompanied him, and remained in France until September, 1488. On his return to Spain he was appointed tutor of the princesses, and obtained aid for Christopher Columbus for his voyage of discovery. He was afterwards charged with several diplomatic missions. He first obtained the bishopric of Volterra, then of Monte Cervino (1494). In 1520 he was appointed to the bishopric of Hispaniola. He immediately repaired to his new diocese, where he employed himself with true evangelical zeal until his death, which occurred in 1525. For mention of his works, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard of DOUAY, third son of Wantur III, lord of Douay, lived in the 13th century. He was priest and canon of the Church of Senlis, and bishop of Chalons-sur-Marne. He met at Douay, Oct. 17, 1206, with the bishops of Arras and Tournay, in order to remove the body of St. Amé, which the three bishops bore upon their shoulders from the Church of St. Amé of Douay to a small hill situated on the outskirts of a city upon the road to Arras. He was one of the benefactors of the abbey of Cheminon, to which he left a goodly number of manuscripts. He resigned his bishopric in 1215, and retired to the abbey of Toussaint, near Chalons, where he died some years later. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard (Saint) of HUNGARY, was born in the Venetian States, and while very young entered a monastery. By the permission of his superiors he set out for Jerusalem to visit the Holy Sepulchre, and passing through Hungary, the king, St. Stephen, touched by his piety, gave to him the bishopric of Chonad. He distinguished himself by his apostolic zeal and his great strictness. After the death of St. Stephen he suffered great persecution, and was at last assassinated by order of a nobleman of the country. In Roman martyrology he is styled the apostle of Hungary. His death occurred Sept. 24, 1047. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard of LIÈGE, a Dominican, was born about 1220. He aided in the establishment of the Fête-Dieu, and died about 1270. He wrote several religious works. De Doctrina Cordis gained great popularity, as attested by the large number of manuscripts. It was published several times, and translated into French by W. Caoult (Douay, 1601; Lyons, 1608). His Sermons and De Testamento Christi, with others of his writings, are forgotten. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard (Saint) of TOUL, was born in 935, of a patrician family. While very young he entered the chapter of St. Peter of Cologne, his native city, in order to pursue his studies, and at the age of twenty-eight was promoted to the episcopal see of Toul. Consecrated at Treves in 968, and enthroned the same year, he led an upright, charitable, and studious life, and devoted himself very closely to the instruction of the numerous pupils under his care. He labored throughout his diocese, scattering the word of God, and aiding those of his subjects who were impoverished by war or pestilence. He spent as little time as possible at the imperial court, notwithstanding the wish of Otto II to the contrary. He visited Rome, and in company with twelve persons who travelled on foot in procession, went from Toul to the tomb of the apostles Peter and Paul, the principal object of their devotion. On his return to Rome he found the nobility had risen up against the episcopal power, which he had committed to the hands of his brother. Gerard died April 22, 994, was canonized fifty-seven years afterwards, and pope Leo IX, Oct. 22, 1051, removed his remains. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard of ZUTPHEN (or DE ZERBOLT), a Dutch ascetic writer, a disciple of Gerard Groot, was born in 1367, and reared in the society of the Brothers of Common Life. He died in 1398, leaving two treatises: De Reformatione Virium Animæ, and De Spiritualibus Associationibus (Paris, 1492; Cologne, 1579; and in the Bibliothèque des Pères, Cologne, 1618). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerard, JOHN. See GERHARD, JOHANN.

Gerards, MARK, a reputable Flemish painter, engraver, and architect, also an illuminator and a designer, flourished about 1560. He went to England about 1580, and was appointed painter to queen Elizabeth. As a designer, he executed a set of fourteen plates on the Passion of Christ. He died in 1598. He is said to have been an able architect, but none of his works are mentioned.

Gerasimus, a celebrated anchorite of Palestine towards the middle of the 5th century, was a native of Lydia, who embraced the views of Theodosius of Jerusalem, but was restored to the true faith by Euthymius. He founded a large laura near the Jordan, characterized by extreme austerity, and died there, March 5, A.D. 475.

Geraud, Suinat, born at Aurillac about 855, of one of the most powerful families of Auvergne, was lord of the southern part of Upper Auvergne, and his domains extended nearly to Perigord and Aquitania. He devoted himself to the study of sacred books, and finally desired to withdraw to a cloister and devote all his wealth to the Church of Rome, but was deterred from this by Gansbertus, bishop of Cahors. In 894 he founded, at Aurillac, a convent, under the control of the Benedictines, and attempted in vain the building of a cathedral. His piety led him to undertake numerous pilgrimages to the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul. He is said to have made seven voyages to Rome, and to have traversed Upper Italy. Returning from one of these journeys, he died at St. Cirgues, near Figeac, Oct. 8, 909, having freed all his slaves. His kindness and benevolence gained for him a great reputation, and legends attribute to him a great number of miracles, performed both during his life and after his death. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerber, CHRISTIAN, a German theologian, was born at Gömnitz, March 27, 1660. He studied at Zeitz and Leipsic, and having completed his education at Dresden, became pastor of Ioth-Schönberg in 1685, and at Lockwitz in 1690. He continued his studies, at the same time practicing medicine. His last years were full of religious controversies. He died March 24, 1731. His principal works are, Histoire der Kirchen-Ceremonien in Sachsen (Dresden, 1723):—Histoire der Wiedergeborenen in Sachsen (ibid. 1725, 1726, 4 parts):—Geheimnisse des Reiches Gottes (2 parts). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 627; ii, 364; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenbundes, iv, 275 sq. (B. P.)

Gerberoy, RICHARD DE, a French prelate, was in 1192 dean of the church at Amiens, and in 1204 became bishop of that see. It was during his episcopacy, in 1206, that the head of John the Baptist is reputed to have been conveyed from Constantinople to Amiens by a crusader named Wallon de Sartou. He died in 1210. One of his contemporaries, Richard de Fournival, attributes to him various works, among others, a book entitled De Quatuor Virtutibus et de Ave Maria, which appear to be lost. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerbet, OLYMPE PHILIPPE, a French prelate, was born in 1798. He lent his aid to the journal L'Avenir until it was censured by Gregory XVI, and wrote for L'Université Catholique, a monthly review, founded by M. Bonnetty, a series of articles on the philosophy of religion which were quite noteworthy. He was for a long time vicar-general of M. de Salinis (bishop of Amiens), was appointed bishop of Perpignan, Dec. 19,

1853, consecrated June 29 of the following year, and died in 1864. He became known to the public as one of Lamennais' assistants in editing the journal L'Avenir in 1830; but before that time he had already published Des Doctrines Philosophiques sur la Certitude dans ses Reports avec les Fondements de la Théologie (Paris, 1826). In 1831 he published, Corp d'Éil sur la Controverse Chrétienne, and Considérations sur le Dogme Général de la Piété Catholique. More important is his L'Esquisse de Rome Chrétienne (1844-50, 3 vols.). See L'Université Catholique (1833-34); Lamennais, Affaires de Rome (Paris, 1835); Arboux, in Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Gerbì, EVANGELISTA, a Franciscan of Pistoja, who died at Rome, Feb. 3, 1593, is the author of, Della Conversione del Peccatore (Florence, 1578):—Il Cinque Giorni della Creazione (1579):—Breve Esposizione del Salmo Lxxii (1579):—Sermoni xv sopra il Salmo ciz (Rome, 1583):—Lezioni xii sopra Abucuc Profeta (1585):—Lezioni sopra la Cantica (1589). Gere, JOHN AVERY, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Chester, Mass., April 8, 1799. He was converted in 1820; joined the Baltimore Conference in 1823; and in it, as well as in the East Baltimore and Central Pennsylvania Conferences, served the most responsible appointments. He was a delegate four times to the General Conference, viz., 1840, 1844, 1852, 1872. He died at Shickahiny, Pa., June 3, 1874. Mr. Gere was fearless, yet humble, a man of prayer and power, strong in intellect, and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 31; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Geree, JOHN, a Puritan divine, born in 1600, was minister of St. Alban's in 1645, in 1649 of St. Faith's, London, and died in Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, in February of same year. He published, Vindicia Ecclesie Anglicanæ (1644), some Sermons, etc. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gerhard, KARL THEODOR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Breslau, Sept. 17, 1773. In 1800 he was pastor at his native place, and remained there until his death, Nov. 25, 1841. He published, Predigten (Breslau, 1835, 2 vols.):—Gebete am Morgen und Abend (1839). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 136, 257, 373; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 419. (B. P.)

Gerhardt, DAVID GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born May 9, 1734. He studied at Halle, was preacher at Breslau in 1759, pastor primarius and professor in 1778, member of consistory in 1780, and died Aug. 30, 1808. He wrote, De Auctoritate Archæologie (Halle, 1757):—Dictum Johanneum 1 Epist. 5, 7 (Breslau, 1764), besides a number of Sermons. See Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, p. 62 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 271; ii, 290. (B. P.)

Gerhäuser, JOHANN BALTHASAR, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 24, 1766, and died at Dillingen in 1823, a professor of theology and director of the clerical seminary there. He wrote, Ueber die Psalmen (Munich, 1817):—Charakter und Theologie des Apostels Pauli (Landshut, 1816). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 81, 294. (B. P.)

Gerizim, MOUNT. We extract some further particulars from Bäder's Syria and Palest. p. 334.

"Mt. Gerizim rises to a height a little less above the sea-level than Mt. Ebal (which is 2956 feet high). It is composed almost entirely of nummulitic limestone (tertiary formation). The summit consists of a large plateau, extending from north to south, at the north end of which are the ruins of a castle. The building, as a castle, was probably erected in Justinian's time, although the walls, five to ten feet thick, consisting of drafted blocks, may possibly belong to a still older structure. The castle forms a large square, and is flanked with towers. On the east side are remains of several chambers, one of which has a Greek cross over the door. Near the burial-ground to the north-east rises the Moslem wely of Skeik Ghānim, and on the north side of the castle there is a large reservoir. Of the church which once stood here, the lowest foundations only are extant. It was an octagonal building with an apse towards the east, having its main entrance on the north, and chapels on five sides. To the south of the castle are walls and cisterns, and there is a paved way running from north to south. Some massive substructions a little below the castle, to the south, are shown as the stones of the altar which Joshua is said to have erected here (viii, 30-32). In the centre of the plateau the Samaritans point out a projecting rock as having once been the site of the altar of their temple. Over the whole mountain-top are scattered numerous cisterns and smaller paved platforms, resembling the places of prayer on the area of the Haram at Jerusalem. The whole surface bears traces of having once been covered with houses. Towards the east there are several paved terraces. At the south-east corner, the spot where Abraham was about to slay Isaac is pointed out. Near it, to the north-west, there are some curious round steps. The summit commands a noble prospect: to the east lies the plain of El-Mukhna, bounded by gentle hills, with the village of Askar lying on the north side, and that of Kefr Kullin on the south; farther to the east is Rājib. The valley to the south is Wady Awarfeh, to the east, in the distance, rise the mountains of Gilead, among which Neby Osha towers conspicuously. Towards the north the Great Hermon is visible, but the greater part of the view in this direction is shut out by Mt. Ebal. Towards the west the valleys and hills slope away to the blue band of the distant Mediterranean."

Mt. Gerizim, from the North-east.

The following description of this memorable site is from the most recent and trustworthy account (Conder, Tent Work in Palest. i, 62 sq.):

"South of Nāblus rises the rocky and steep shoulder of Gerizim. The mountain is L-shaped; the highest ridge (3848.5 feet above the sea) runs north and south, and a lower ridge projects westwards from it. The top is about 1000 feet above the bottom of the valley east of Shechem. As compared with other Judean mountains, the outline of Gerizim is very fine; the lower part consists of white chalk, which has been quarried, leaving huge caverns visible above the groves which clothe the foot of the hill. Above this formation comes the dark-blue nummulitic limestone, barren and covered with shingle, rising in ledges and long slopes to the summit. The whole of the northern face of the mountain abounds with springs, the largest of which, with ruins of a little Roman shrine to its genius, was close to our camp.

"In ascending to the summit of the western spur of Gerizim, by the path up the gully behind our camp, the contrast was striking between the bright green of the gardens, dotted with red pomegranate blossoms, and the steel-gray of the barren slope. Sliding eastwards and gradually ascending, we first reached the little dry stone enclosures and the oven used during the Passover. There are scattered stones round, but no distinct ruins of any buildings; the place is called Lōzeh or Laz, but the reason of this appears to have escaped notice. The title is of Samaritan origin, and is due to their view that Gerizim is the real site of Bethel or Luz, the scene of Jacob's vision.

"The highest part of the mountain is covered by the ruins of Justinian's fortress, built A.D. 533, in the midst of which stands Zeno's church, constructed in A.D. 474. The foundations alone are visible, showing an octagon with its entrance on the north, and remains of six side chapels: the fortress is a rectangle, 180 feet east and west, 230 north and south, with towers at the corners; that on the south-west being now a little mosque dedicated to Sheikh Ghanim, who is, according to the Samaritans, Shechem the son of Hamor. The fortress walls are built of those constantly recurring drafted stones which are often loosely described as Jewish or Phœnician masonry, though the practiced eye soon discriminates between the original style of the temple at Jerusalem, and the rude rustic bosses of the Byzantines and Crusaders.

"A large reservoir exists, north of the castle which is called El Kūfah in Arabic, and below this a spur of the hill projects, artificially severed by a ditch and covered with the traces of a former fortress. This is perhaps the station of the Roman guards, who thus prevented the Samaritans from approaching Gerizim, for it commands the north-eastern ascent to the mountain.

"Of the ancient Samaritan temple, probably the only relics are the remains of massive masonry known as the 'Ten Stones' (Asherah Bulatāt), near the west wall of Justinian's fortress. They are huge blocks rudely squared, forming one course of a foundation, the north-west corner of which was laid bare by captain Anderson's excavation in 1866. There are two courses, and the lower one contains thirteen stones; this course, however, was not formerly visible, and the Samaritans considered ten stones alone to be buried, and to be those brought from Jordan at the time of Joshua—thus supposing some supernatural agency sufficient to carry such huge blocks up a steep slope 1000 feet high, to say nothing of the journey from the Jordan. Under these stones, as before noticed, the treasures of the old temple are supposed to lie hidden.

"South of the fortress is one of those flat slabs of rock which occur all over the summit. It shelves slightly down westward, and at this end is a rock-cut cistern. The whole is surrounded by a low, dry-stone wall. This is the Sacred Rock of the Samaritans, and the cave is traditionally that in which the tabernacle was made. At the time of my second visit some peasants were using the Sacred Rock as a threshing-floor. Rude stone walls extend on every side, and farther south there is a curious flight of steps leading down east. They are called the 'seven steps of Abraham's altar,' and just beneath them, on the edge of the eastern precipice at the southern extremity of the plateau, there is a little trough cut in the rock resembling the Passover oven. This the Samaritans suppose to be the site of Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac, for their version of the story reads 'Moreh' instead of Moriah, and makes Gerizim the scene of the patriarch's trial."

Full archaeological details may be found in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (ii, 187 sq.). See SAMARITANS, MODERN.

Gerkrath, Ludwig, a Roman Catholic theologian and philosopher, who died at Braunsberg, Jan. 1, 1864, is the author of a monograph on Francis Sanchez (Vienna, 1860), and De Connezione qua Intercedit Inter Cartesium et Paschalium (Braunsberg, 1862). (B. P.)

Gerlac, Peterssen (Lat. Gerlacus Petri), a Dutch ascetic writer, was born at Deventer, in Overijssel, in 1377. While very young he entered the house of the regular canons of Windesheim, near Deventer, where he took his vows, and although offered higher positions, he refused all except that of sacristan. He died in 1411. He distinguished himself by his piety, his life being one of prayer and meditation. A work was published some time after his death, entitled, Aker Thomas de Kempis (Cologne, 1616), and under the title of Gerlaci Soliloquia Divina, in a collection entitled, Sacra Ora- tionis Theologia, of Pierre Poret. John de Gorcum translated it into Flemish, and published it at Bois-le-Duc in 1618 and 1621. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerlach, Gottlob Wilhelm, a German professor of philosophy, was born Nov. 4, 1786, at Osterfeld, near Zeitz. For some time private lecturer at Wittenberg, he was called, in 1818, as professor of philosophy to Halle, and died Oct. 5, 1864. He wrote, Grundriss der Religionsphilosophie (Halle, 1818);—Grundriss der philosophischen Tugendlehre (ibid. 1820). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 286, 288. (B. P.)

Gerlach, Stephan, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Knittlingen, Dec. 26, 1546, studied at Tübingen, was in 1578 professor of theology there, and died Jan. 30, 1612. He wrote, Comment. in Epistolam Paulinam:—Disp. contra Jesuitas et Calvinianos:—De Contemplatione Cœnis Domini, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Adam, Vita Eruditorum. (B. P.)

Gerland (or Garland), a French theologian, was born in Lorraine about 1100. He was invested with a canonship about 1180, and employed as schoolman in the collegiate church of St. Paul at Besançon. He was a very superior scholar for his time, and especially won admiration in discussions. He fell into the heresy of Berenger. From 1148 he disappears from history, and it is supposed that he died about 1150. Dom Rivet (Hist. Lit. vii, 156) has confounded this Gerland with another Gerland, bishop of Girgenti. His most important work is, Candela Studii Salutaris, or according to other manuscripts, Candela Evangelica, which under this last title was published at Cologne in 1527. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerling, Christian Ludwig, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 11, 1745, at Rostock. In 1769 he was university preacher in his native place, in 1771 professor of theology, in 1777 pastor primarius at Hamburg, and died Jan. 13, 1801. He wrote, De Cognitione Dei Rerumque Divinarum Analogica (Göttingen, 1769):—De Concordia Rationis et Fidei (ibid. 1770):—Abriß der Vorlesungen über die Dogmatik (ibid. 1771):—Diss. Inaug. Selecta (ibid. 1776). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Germain, Michel, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, who died Jan. 29, 1694, is the author of, Tradition de l'Eglise Romaine sur la Prédestination (Cologne, 1687, 2 vols.), and in connection with Mabillon he published Museum Italicum (Paris, 1687). German Councils (Concilium Germanicum), i. e. councils celebrated in Germany, but at places unknown.

I. A.D. 743, probably, being the first of five said to have met under St. Boniface, by his biographer, but great obscurity hangs over their date, number, and canons, to say the least. In the preface to this council it is Carloman, mayor of the palace, who speaks, and its seven canons, besides running in his name, form the first of his capitularies. Certainly, the first of them, constituting Boniface archbishop over the bishops of his dominions, cannot have been decreed but by him. True, there is a letter from Boniface to pope Zachary, requesting leave for holding a synod of this kind, which was at once given; and in another, purporting to be from Boniface to archbishop Cuthbert, three sets of canons are quoted as having been decreed by the writer, of which these form the second. Still, even so, when and where were the other two sets passed?

II. A.D. 745, at Mayence possibly, where Aldebert and Clement were pronounced heretics, and Gervilion of Mayence deposed, to be succeeded by Boniface.

III. A.D. 747, at which the first four general councils were ordered to be received. Possibly the tenth of the letters of pope Zachary may relate to this.

IV. A.D. 759, at which Othmar, abbot of St. Gall, was unjustly condemned.

German Ebenezer Society, a body of Lutheran dissenters, who emigrated from Prussia to America some years ago, and settled near Buffalo, N. Y. They number somewhat more than one thousand souls, and hold their property in common. They are exceedingly careful as to religious observances, and very strict in keeping the Sabbath.

German Evangelical Association of the West, a sect of German Protestants in America corresponding to the United Evangelical Church of Germany. It was instituted at St. Louis, Mo., May 4, 1841, by seven ministers of the United Church of Germany. The object in view in forming this body is stated in the first paragraph of the revised statutes as follows: "The object of the association is, to work for the establishment and spread of the Evangelical Church in particular, as well as for the furtherance of all institutions for the extension of the kingdom of God. By the Evangelical Church we understand that communion which takes the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Test., as the Word of God, and our only infallible rule of faith and practice, and commits itself to that exposition of the Scriptures laid down in the symbolical books of the Lutheran and Reformed churches, chiefly the Augsburg Confession, Luther's Catechism, and the Heidelberg Catechism, so far as these agree; and where they differ, we hold alone to the relevant passages of Scripture, and avail ourselves of that freedom of conscience which prevails on such points in the Evangelical Church." It will thus be seen that the main purpose is to unite in one body the Lutheran and the German Reformed churches.

German Version of the Scriptures. By way of supplement we add the following. It is a well-known fact that, during his life, Luther made changes and corrections in each new edition of the Bible translation he published. His last edition, that of 1545, was by everybody acknowledged to contain some errors, and among these was the omission of twelve whole verses. The issue in 1546, one year after his death, contained a number of changes from that of a year earlier. For nearly two centuries Luther's translation was published only by private individuals, who could and did introduce a number of changes and deviations from the last edition of the translation. The result was that, gradually, the Christians of Germany became convinced that a return to the authentic shape of Luther's own translation should be made. The first movement in this direction was made by the Canstein Bible Institute, founded in 1712 at Halle. This institute in many, but not in all, places restored the original text of Luther, and was followed by the various Bible societies. Finally, in the year 1857, the German Bible societies decided to go to work in a systematic manner towards the attainment of this object. The Canstein Institute took the lead, and the German ecclesiastical authorities co-operated and aided in the work. A twofold object was proposed; first, to put the orthographical and grammatical features of the translation into modern shape; and secondly, which was the main thing, to restore a harmonious text. The first of these tasks was intrusted to the hands of Dr. Frommann, of Nuremberg, the greatest authority on the language of Luther's day. For the second object, two committees of theologians were appointed, one for the New Test., which did its work in 1865 and 1866, and published it in 1867, and one for the Old Test., which worked from 1871 to 1882. The leading scholars of Germany, as Nitzsch, Twisten, Riehm, Beyschlag, Köstlin, Meyer, Brückner, Schlottmann, Tholuck, Kamphausen, Kleiner, Bertheau, Delitzsch, Thinius, Diestel, Grimm, and others, constituted these committees. The result of years of scholarly toil was published at Halle, under the title, Die Bibel, oder die ganze Heilige Schrift des Alten und Neuen Testaments nach der deutschen Uebersetzung Dr. Martin Luthers. Erster Abdruck der im Auftrage der deutschen evangelischen Kirchenkonferenz Revidirte Bibel (Sogenannte Probelibell), in 1883. This book is now in the hands of the churches for criticisms, which were to be sent in by the fall of 1885; but the time has been lengthened by the Prussian authorities one year. Then the revision will receive its final shape, and will eventually be published by all the Bible societies of the German empire. In order to facilitate the examination of the work, the revisers have printed in "fat" or spaced letters, i. e. German italics, all those passages where Luther's original version differs from the modern editions, and also where the committees have made an entirely new rendering. The former class of passages are distinguished from the latter by having small hyphens before and after them. Like the revised English Test., this Probelibell is criticised by the wise and unwise, and has already created not a small library of essays on the subject of revision. Some are dissatisfied on dogmatical grounds, others because the revisers did not act more radically. The last word has not yet been spoken.

Various other German translations have been given in commentaries and separately, but they are all of private authority. (B. P.)

Germanus, a Scotch prelate, was probably the first bishop of the Isles, and was appointed by St. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, in 447. To him the cathedral church of the Isle of Man, within the precincts of Peel Castle, is dedicated. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 295.

Germanus, archbishop of Patras, one of the promoters of the Greek insurrection, was born about 1771 at Dimizana, in Arcadia, and died in 1827. He was secretary and deacon to the metropolitan of Argolis, then to Gregory V, patriarch of Constantinople, and finally to the archbishop of Cyzicus. In 1806 he became archbishop of Patras. When Ali Pasha provoked the insurrection of the Greeks, Germanus put himself at the head of the insurgent party, and ever since his name has been connected with the history of that period. In the interest of Greece he went in 1822 to Italy. He sought the protection of the great powers then assembled at the Verona Congress. When the provisional government was created, Germanus was appointed minister of religious affairs, and held this office till his death. See Pouqueville, Histoire de la Régénération de la Grèce; Philimon, History of the Greek Insurrection; Goudas, Contemporary Biographies (Athens, 1872, the last two works written in Greek); Moshakis, in Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. Germer, FRIEDRICH HEINRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Holstein, Sept. 29, 1776. He was rector at Glückstadt in 1802, court preacher at Augustenborg in 1809, and died in 1859. He published, Beitrag zur allgemeinen Hermeneutik (Altona, 1828):—Die pan-harmonische Interpretation der heiligen Schrift (Leipsic, 1821):—Die hermeneutischen Mängel der sogenannten grammatisch-historischen Interpretationen (Halle, 1834):—Ueber die Vernachlässigung der Hermeneutik in der protestantischen Kirche (ibid. 1837):—Kritik der modernen Exegese (ibid. 1839):—Die alte Strüßfrage: Glauben oder Wissen? (Zurich, 1856). Germer (St.) DE FLAY (Germanus of Flaviacum), in the district of Beauvais, is said to have been born of a noble Frankish family at Giviarandra or Warandra, on the Itha, about A.D. 610. He married a noble lady, and founded a monastery near Flaviacum; but retired, cir. A.D. 648, to the monastery of Pentallum, near Rouen, of which he became abbot. Later he withdrew to a cave near the Seine, where he was ordained presbyter, but finally returned to Flaviacum, over which he presided till his death, Sept. 24, 658. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Germon, Bartholomæus, a Jesuit of Orleans, was born June 17, 1663, and died there, Oct. 2, 1718. Besides his De Veteribus Hæreticis, Ecclesiastic. Codicum Corruptoribus (Paris, 1718), he made himself known by his controversy with Mabilon, against whose work, De Arte Diplomatica, he wrote. See Le Long, Bibl. de la France; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 92; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Germonio, Anastasio, an Italian canonist and jurist, was born in Piedmont in March, 1551. He belonged to the ancient and noble family of Cena. For some reason unknown he ceased his studies at the age of thirteen, and did not resume them until he was twenty-two. He studied civil and ecclesiastical law at the University of Padua, under John Manuce and Pancirole. He then went to Turin, where he received the doctorate at the hand of Pancirole himself. He was soon after called to the chair of canonical law. Germonio accompanied Jerome, archbishop of Turin, to Rome, and enjoyed great consideration at the pontifical court under popes Sixtus V, Urban VII, Gregory XIV, Innocent IX, and Clement VIII. He was charged with compiling and annotating the Decretals. Duke Charles Emmanuel recalled him to Piedmont, and appointed him, in 1608, archbishop of Taranto, and some years later sent him as ambassador to Philip III, king of Spain. Germonio died while on this mission, at Madrid, Aug. 4, 1627. He wrote a number of works, and published one edition at Rome in 1623. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerner, HERRIC, a Danish prelate, was born at Copenhagen, Dec. 9, 1629. He studied in Holland and England, and became, at first, pastor at Berkerød. When this city fell into the hands of the Swedes, Gerner took to flight, then entered into an arrangement with Stenwinkler for retaking the fortress of Cronenberg. He was captured by the Swedes, and finally condemned to death, but escaped by the payment of a large ransom. At the establishment of peace in 1660, Gerner resumed his pastoral duties. In 1693 he was appointed bishop of Viborg in Jutland. He died in 1700. Among his works we notice Hætiol, translated into Danish (Copenhagen, 1670). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerner, Lucas, a Protestant theologian, was born at Basle, Aug. 19, 1625. He was professor of theology at his native place, and died Feb. 9, 1675. He wrote, Diss. in Confessionem Helveticam:—Syllabus Controversiarum Theologia:—Prælectiones in Prophetiam Danielis:—De Sacra Cena ad 1 Cor. x, 15-17:—De Justificatione:—De Adoptione Fidelium Divina:—De Glorificatione. Gerondi, JONAH ben-Abraham (surnamed ha-Chamid, i. e. "the Pious"), a Jewish rabbi of the 13th century, who died at Toledo in 1263, is the author of אגרת התשובה, or, a treatise on repentance and asceticism (Cracow, 1586, and often):—שערי תשובה, on repentance (Constantinople, 1511):—ס' היראה, on the fear of God (ibid. eod.); Judeo-German translation, Freiburg, 1583):—דף הנשים, on the precepts to be observed by women (Cracow, 1609):—אסור וזהיר, on things allowed and prohibited (Ferrara, 1555):—פירוש על פירי אבות, a commentary on the Pirke Aboth (edited after a MS. by Dolizki, Berlin, 1848). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 327 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 113. (B. P.)

Gerondi (or Gerundensis), MOSES. See NACHMANIDES.

Gerontius, a Latin prelate, lived in the 4th century of the Christian era. He was deacon of Milan under St. Ambrose. One day he related that he had seen in a dream the female demon, Onoscelis (ὄνοσκει XII.—15 λίγ, a spectre with ass's legs). Ambrose heard of this and condemned him to do penance. Instead of obeying, Gerontius went to Constantinople, made friends at court, and obtained the bishopric of Nicomedia. Ambrose protested against this ordination, and urged Nectarius, patriarch of Constantinople, to depose the new bishop. Although Nectarius did not do this, two years later it was accomplished by Chrysostom, who visited Asia in 399. The inhabitants of Nicomedia, whose love he had gained by his pleasing manners and his charity, complained bitterly at this, and the result was that the number of enemies of the patriarch was augmented, and Gerontius figured at the synod of 403 as one of the accusers of Chrysostom. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gerontius, a heretical archimandrite of Palestine, about the middle of the 5th century, was finally expelled from his monastery, and spent the rest of his days in homeless misery. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gerrard (called Gerard of St. John), an old Dutch painter, was born at Haarlem about 1460, and entered the school of Albert van Ouwater. In the Church of St. John, at Haarlem, he executed pictures of the Crucifixion, the Descent from the Cross, and the Resurrection, which were esteemed superior to any productions of the time. He died in 1488. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gersdorf, CHRISTOPH GOTTHELF, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Dec. 12, 1834, is the author of Beiträge zur Sprach-Charakteristik der Schriftsteller des Neuen Testaments (Leipzig, 1816). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 132. (B. P.)

Gershom BEN-JEHUDA (commonly called Rabbenu Gershom, or the Ancient, also Maor hag-Golah, i. e. "the light of the Exile") was born in France about the year 960, and died in 1028. He is the reputed founder of the Franco-German rabbinical school, in which the studies of the Babylonian college were earnestly revived. He is the founder of monogamy among the Jews, and wrote a commentary on the Talmud, and some hymns and a penitential prayer, which are extant in the Machzor, or Festival Ritual of the Jews. Jud.* i, 328; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 114; Grätz, Gesch. der Juden, v, 364 sq.; Braunschweiger, Geschichte der Juden in den Romanischen Staaten, p. 32 sq.; Jost, *Gesch. d. Gershon, Chaphet BEN-MOSES, a Venetian rabbi, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, was endowed with precocious erudition, and died at about the age of seventeen. He wrote Jad Charosim (Venice, 1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gershon BEN-SALOMON, a Spanish rabbi, native of Catalonia, who lived in the latter half of the 13th century, was the father of rabbi Leon da Bañolas (Rabag), and wrote Shaar Hash-Shamayim (first printed at Venice, 1547; in four parts). The first treated of the four elements; the second, of astronomy; the third, the heavens and earth, according to the principles of Averroes; the fourth, of theological matters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 329.

Gerson, Christianus, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage, Aug. 1, 1569, at Recklinghausen, in the then electorate of Cologne. He received his rabbinical education at the seats of learning in Fulda and Frankfort-on-the-Main. For a long time he supported himself and his family by instructing in Hebrew. While at Essen, a poor Christian woman brought her New Test. to him, which she pawned. Out of curiosity he commenced reading that book, which finally resulted in his conversion. He left his family and went to Brunswick, where he applied to the duke Heinrich Julius, begging that through his influence he might be instructed in the full truth of the Christian religion, and be baptized. He was received into the Church of St. Martin, at Halberstadt in 1600, and took the name of Christianus. He remained a considerable time at Halberstadt, and then went to the University at Helmstadt, aided by a munificent stipend from the duke. At the university he instructed the students in Hebrew and rabbinical literature, corresponded with Buxtorf and Wagenseil, and even received a call from the king of Denmark to Copenhagen, as teacher of Hebrew and rabbinical literature at the university. In 1612 he was ordained, was appointed deacon, and afterwards pastor at Berg, in the principality of Anhalt, and died Sept. 25, 1627. Gerson's son, whom the Jews had concealed for five years, also became a Christian, while his wife, who resisted the truth, was divorced from him in 1605 through the consistory of Wolfenbüttel. Gerson is the author of Jüdischer Talmud. Der fürnehmste Inhalt des Talmuds und dessen Widerlegung (Goslar, 1607; 6th ed. 1698, transl. into Danish and French): —פירוש der talmudische Jüdenschrift (Helmstadt, 1610). See Fürst, *Bibl. Gerson, Jean, a French theologian, brother of Jean Charlier, was born at Gerson about 1384. He went, as did his brother, to pursue his studies at Paris, at the College of Navarre, where he was admitted to the number of students of theology in 1404. His love of solitude led him to enter the order of Celestins. He took the vows in 1409, at the monastery of the Holy Trinity, at Limay, near Mantes. After having performed the duties of sub-prior in various communities of his order, he was found at a convent in Lyons, where he gave a refuge to his older brother. This token of attachment was due to the chancellor, who sincerely loved him. Jean Gerson was at the time of his death prior of the house of Lyons, and carried with him to the tomb the reputation of a saint. He died in 1434, leaving, Epistola ad R. P. Anselmum, Celestinum, de Operibus Joannis, Cancellarii, Fratris sui, in vol. i of the works of chancellor Gerson. The homonymy of these two brothers caused Tractatus de Elevatione Mentis in Deum, etc., to be attributed to one of them, but it belonged to Jean Nyder, a German Dominican, who died in 1440. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gersonides, MAGISTER LEO. See RALBAG.

Gervais, prior of St. Generic, in the diocese of Mans, and a French historian, lived in the 13th century. All that is known of him is that, at the request of Robert of Thorigny, who became abbot of Mont St. Michel, he wrote a History of the Counts of Anjou and of Maine. After remaining for a long time unpublished, it was inserted in the Recueil des Historiens de la France, xii, 532, from a manuscript in the Imperial Library, belonging to the monastery of St. Victor. Gervais de St. Generic is often confounded with Gervaise of Canterbury. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gervaise, NICOLAS, a French missionary and prelate, brother of François Armand, was born at Paris about 1662. He chose the ecclesiastical calling, and before the age of twenty had attached himself to the mission at Siam. Here he remained four years, and became acquainted with the language, religion, customs, literature, legislation, and history of that people. On his return he published the result of his observations. He brought to France two sons of the king of Macassar, and after presenting them at court, gave them as far as possible a French education. He was afterwards rector of Vannes. The provost of Suèvre-pres-

Mer yielded to him his charge, which position Gervaise held for a long time, and during this time he published a great part of his works. Annoyed with the idea of proselytism, in 1724 he went to Rome, and obtained the title of bishop of Horren. Soon after his consecration he gathered together a number of clergymen, embarked with them for Central America, and commenced his labors upon the shores of the Aquira, one of the tributaries of the Orinoco. But they were assailed and massacred by the Caribs, Nov. 20, 1729. He left several works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gerwyn, Saint. See BERWYN, St.

Géry, André Guillaume, a French monk and orator, was born at Rheims, Feb. 17, 1727. He entered the congregation of St. Genevieve in 1742, taught philosophy and theology in the colleges of his order, preached with success at Paris, and became successively rector of St. Leger at Soissons, and of St. Irenæus at Lyons. He was elected general superior of his order in 1778. His long intimacy with two prelates not in subjection to Rome, MM. De Fitz-James and Montazet, led to his being suspected of Jansenism. He died in October, 1786. His sermons were collected and published at Paris in 1788. He also wrote Dissertation sur le Vritable Auteur de l'Imitation de Jésus-Christ (Paris, 1758). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gesenius, August, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born in 1718, was in 1744 professor of Greek at Helmstadt, in 1748 general superintendent and first preacher, and died Jan. 6, 1773. He wrote, Prunus in Capite Inimici (Göttingen, 1740): —Christum Decoro Gentis suæ Accommodasse (Helmstadt, 1744): —Historia Passionis Jesu Christi Harmonica (Wolfenbüttel, 1745): —Opiniuncula de חכמי סאלי ad 2 Sam. xxii, 5 (1746): —In Verba Christi Marc. iv, 12, et Luc. viii, 10 (eod.). Gess, Wolfgang Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, born at Stuttgart, Jan. 24, 1751, was in 1787 deacon, in 1799 superintendent at Neustadt, in 1814 general superintendent at Heilbronn, and died Oct. 3 of that year. He published, Briefe über einige theologische Zeitmaterien (Stuttgart, 1797): —Merkwürdigkeiten aus dem Leben und Schriften Hinemars, etc. (Göttingen, 1806): —Worte des Trostes und der Erbauung bei Begräbnissen (Stuttgart, 1799). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 397, 578, 917; ii, 388. (B. P.)

Gessel, Bernhard Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born April 6, 1811, at Dantzic, studied at Königsberg, where Herbart especially attracted him. In 1839 he was called as military preacher to Thorn, in West Prussia, and died there, March 14, 1881. Gessel belonged to the Liberals of the Protestant Church. He wrote very little. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 435. (B. P.)

Gessner, Georg, a Swiss theologian, was born in 1764 at Diebendorf, near Zurich. He was for some time professor at his native place, in 1828 superintendent, in 1837 resigned his position, and died in 1839. He published, Nikodemus oder die Lehre Jesu vom geistigen Gottesreiche (Zurich, 1814): —Der sichere Gang durchs Leben (Stuttgart, 1826): —Schickale der Wahrheit unter den Menschen (1818–20): —Christliches Handbuch (Zurich, 1817): —Der Christen-Glaube in seiner Fruchtbarkeit (Stuttgart, 1835). Geyser, SAMUEL GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 12, 1740, at Görlitz. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1771 professor of theology and Oriental languages at Revel, in 1777 at Kiel, and died June 15, 1808. He wrote, Dissertationes Tres de usu Patrum (Wittenberg, 1765):—Poetae Graeci Antiquiores, Interpretis Sacrarum Litterarum Magistri (ibid. 1768):—De Dubitationibus contra Historiam Reditus Jesu Christi (Kiel, 1778):—Aphorismi Ethici in usum Scholarum (ibid. 1789). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Gezelius, Georgius, a Swedish biographer, was born in 1736. Like others of his name, he devoted himself to the ecclesiastical calling, became archdeacon of Lillkyrka in Norway, and later almoner to the king of Sweden, Gustavus III. He died May 24, 1789. With several learned men of his country, he wrote, Färsök till en Biographisk Lexikon (Stockholm and Upsal, 1776). In 1780 he added a supplementary volume. This work was revised and published without the name of the author, under the title, Biografisk Lexikon (Upsala, 1838). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gezelius, Joannes (1), a Swedish prelate, was born Feb. 3, 1615, in the parish of Gezala, from which he derived his name. He was professor of theology at Dorpat, Livonia, which at that time belonged to Sweden. Promoted successively to various dignities in the Church, he was appointed in 1664 bishop of Abo, in Finland, where he died, Jan. 20, 1690. He commenced a Swedish commentary upon the Bible, which he left incomplete. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gezelius, Joannes (2), a Lutheran bishop of Sweden, son of the foregoing, was born in 1647 at Dorpat. In 1674 he was professor of theology at Abo, in 1684 superintendent at Narva, in Esthonia, succeeded his father in 1690 as bishop of Abo, which position he resigned in 1713, and died April 10, 1718. He wrote, Nomenclator Adami ad Genes. ii, 19, 20 (Abo, 1667):—De Instinctu Sacrificandi in Gentilibus (1670):—De Deificatione Jesuæ contra Sathanum, ex Zachar. iii, 1, 2 (1676):—Fasciculus Homileticarum Dispositionum (1693):—Decisiones Cusum Conscientia (1689). He also completed a commentary upon the Bible, which was commenced by his father. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 185. (B. P.)

Gezer. This locality has recently been discovered in Tell Jezer (Mound of Jezer), lying near the village of Abû Ghôsh. The following account of it is from Conder (Tent Work in Palest., i, 11 sq.):

"The origin of the title [Gezer, i. e. cut off, or isolated] is at once clear, for the site is an outlier—to use a geological term—of the main line of hills, and the position commands one of the important passes to Jerusalem. As is the case with many equally important places, there is not much to be seen at Gezer. The hillside is terraced, and the eastern end occupied by a raised foundation, probably the ancient citadel. Tombs and wine-presses, cut in rock, abound, and there are traces of Christian buildings in a small chapel, and a tomb, apparently of Christian origin.

"Beneath the hill on the east there is a fine spring, which wells up in a circular ring of masonry; it is called 'Ain Yerdeh, or the 'Spring of the Gatherings,' and its existence is a strong argument in favor of the antiquity of the neighboring site.

"A most interesting and curious discovery was made in 1874 at Gezer. M. Ganneau was shown by the peasant a rude inscription deeply cut in the flat surface of the natural rock. It appears to be in Hebrew, and to read 'Boundary of Gezer' [supposed by him to mark the limits of this as a Levitical city], with other letters, which are supposed to form the Greek word Alkiou. M. Ganneau has brought forward an ingenious theory that Alkiou was governor of Gezer at the time this boundary was set, and he supports it by another inscription from a tomb on which the same name occurs. This theory might seem very risky, were it not strengthened by the discovery of a second identical inscription close to the last, containing the same letters, except that the name Alkiou is written upside down. In both, it is true, the letters are hard to read, being rudely formed, but they are deeply cut, and of evident antiquity, while it can scarcely be doubted that the inscription is the same in both cases. M. Ganneau attributes them to Maccabean times; it is curious that they should thus occur in the open country, at no definite distance from the town, and unmarked by any column or monument. Altogether they are among the many archaeological puzzles of Palestine, and their origin and meaning will probably always remain questionable."

A full description of the locality and ancient remains, with a topographical map, may be found in the Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, ii, 417 sq.

Ghajat, ISAAC IBN-. See IBN-GIATH, ISAAC.

Ghase, one of the three kinds of Mohammedan ablutions. Three rules are observed in its performance: 1. Those who do it must resolve to please God. 2. The body must be thoroughly cleansed. 3. The water must touch the whole skin, and all the hair of the body. The somas (q. v.) requires five additional circumstances: 1. That the Bismillah (q. v.) be recited. 2. That the palms of the hands be washed before the vessels are emptied in the washing-place. 3. That before the prayers some lustration should be made with peculiar ceremonies. 4. That to cleanse the surface of the body the skin should be rubbed with the hand. 5. That all this be continued to the end of the ablution.

Ghat, a flight of steps leading down from a Hindû temple to the waters of the Ganges or other sacred stream. It is often constructed at great expense, and highly ornamented, being regarded as the most sacred part of the building.

Ghazi Khan, a holy Mussulman, who first subdued the country of Dinapore, India, to the Moslem power. His integrity and humanity gained him the worship, not only of the Moslems, but even of the Hindûs themselves, who often perform long pilgrimages to his tomb at Sheraghat.

Ghazipore was the favorite residence of Ghazi Khan (q. v.). The place is remarkable for a sect of Brahmins who reside in it, practicing religious ceremonies in great secrecy. They resemble in their faith and practice the ancient Pythagoreans. They hold to the doctrine of the emanation of the soul, and many others different from the ordinary Hindûs, but keep the knowledge of their religious forms a profound secret.

Gheyn (or Ghein), JAMES, the elder, an eminent Flemish designer and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1565, and was instructed by his father. The following are some of his prints: The Life and Passion of Christ; The Four Evangelists; The Adoration of the Trinity; Christ Preaching to the Jews; The Annunciation; A Repose in Egypt. He died in 1615. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Ghiberti, LORENZO, a Florentine painter, and very eminent statuary, was born in 1378, and instructed by Starnina. About 1398 he went to Rimini, and was much engaged in painting on one of the doors of the baptistery of San Giovanni. His masterpiece was the Offering up of Isaac. He completed three statues of St. John the Baptist, St. Matthew, and St. Stephen, for the Church of San Michele; two bas-reliefs for the baptistery of the cathedral of Siena. All these works are still preserved. The reliquary of St. Zenobius and the two doors are, to this day, among the finest specimens of the art in Italy. He died in 1455. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Ghongor, in Lamaism, is one of the supreme gods of Thibet. He is a mighty protector of the earth, the sacred doctrines and morals, but because of his cruelty he is counted among the eight frightful Burchanes. He has a horrible head with open mouth, three large flaming eyes, and coral-strings made of skulls hanging about his neck. He carries in his six arms all kinds of murderous instruments, and rides an elephant.

Giabarians, a Mohammedan sect who denied the free agency of man, and taught that God is the author of all the actions of man, whether good or bad.

Giacobazio, Clemente, an Italian prelate, nephew of Domenico, was born in the latter half of the 15th century. He became canon of St. Peter of the Vatican, bishop of Massano, secretary of Paul III, and auditor of the sacred palace. In 1536 he was made cardinal, with the title of St. Anastasius, and soon after sent on a mission to Charles V. Called in 1539 to the legateship of Perugia and Umbria, he, in the performance of these duties, died at Perugia, Oct. 7, 1540. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giacobazio (Lat. Jacobatius), Domenico, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome in 1448. Destined to a religious calling, he studied particularly canonical law and ecclesiastical history. He became auditor of the rota, and was successively bishop of Lucera, of Massano, and of Grosseto. After having served the Church under Sixtus IV, Innocent VIII, Alexander VI, Pius III, Julius II, and Leo X, he was appointed by the last-named pope, cardinal, with the title of St. Bartholomey de Insula, in 1517. At the death of Adrian VI, he would have been elected pope but for the French party. He died at Rome, July 2, 1527. He wrote, A Treatise on Councils, in Latin, which is not highly esteemed on account of its inexactness. This treatise forms the last volume of the collection of Labbe. The first edition appeared at Rome in 1538. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giacomelli, Michel Angelo, titular archbishop of Chalcedon, was born in 1695, at Pistoja. He was for some time librarian to cardinal Fabroni, and then to cardinal Colligola. He died in 1774. He wrote, Tract. Benedicti XIV de Festis Jesu Christi (Padua, 1745):—S. Gior. Grisostomo del Sacerdozio Libri VI Volgarizzati (Rome, 1757):—Omilia di S. Crisostomo (ibid. 1758):—Philonis Episcopi Enarratio in Canticum Canticatorum (ibid. 1772). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 617. (B. P.)

Giatino, Giovanni Battista, a Jesuit and professor at Rome, was born at Palermo in 1601, and died Nov. 19, 1682. He translated into Latin Pallavicini's Istoria del Concilio de Trento (Antwerp, 1670, 8 vols. fol.), and published Orationes Sacrae XXIV. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 667; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gibbethon is identified by lieut. Conder (Tent Work, ii, 337) with Kibbich, the position of which he does not indicate, and by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 61) with "the ruin Geibula, north of Jaffa."

Gibbon, Johann, a Jesuit, and rector of the Jesuit college at Treves, was born in 1544, at Whinton, England, and died Dec. 8, 1589. He wrote, Disputatio de Sanctis et de Communionis Eucharistia sub una Specie:—Confutatio Virulentis Disputationis Georgii Schon:—Concertatio Ecclesie Catholicae in Anglia. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gibbons, Orlando, an eminent English composer of church music, was born at Cambridge in 1583, and at the age of twenty-three was appointed organist of the Chapel Royal. He died in 1625. He composed the tunes for George Wither's translation of Hymns and Songs of the Church, and many other pieces of church music. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Gibbons, Richard, a learned English Jesuit, who was born at Winchester in 1549, and died in 1632, published F. Riberae Com. in Duodecim Prophetas Minores (1612), and several other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gibeah of Benjamin. Lient. Conder strongly impugns (Quar. Statement of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," April, 1874, p. 61) the identification of this place with Tuleil el-Ful, but this view is retained by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 118).

Gibel, Abraham, a Lutheran theologian, who died in 1629 at Burg, pastor primarius, is the author of, De Genuina Lexicographia Chaldaica Constitutione (Wittenberg, 1606):—Grammatica Linguae Hebr. (1603):—Artificium Accentuum (ed.):—Strigilis 120 Errorum Bellarmini (1605):—Explicatio Loci Jerem. xxxiii, 16. Gibeon. A full description of this place, especially of the numerous rock-hewn tombs in its vicinity, is given in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey, iii, 94 sq.

GIBEON, POOL OF (2 Sam. ii, 13). The following interesting account of the waters in the vicinity of Gibeon is given by lieut. Conder (Quar. Statement of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," October, 1881, p. 255 sq.):

"El-Jib, the modern village, occupies the north end of a detached hill some 200 feet high, surrounded by broad, flat corn valleys on every side. The inhabitants state that the old city stood on the south part of the hill; and here, in the sides of the natural scarps which fortify the site, we visited and explored some twenty rock-cut tombs. There are eight springs on the hill, the largest, or the last, being one of the finest supplies of water in this part of Palestine. One of the springs is called el-Dirkah (corresponding to the בִּירְכָה or 'pool' of the above passage), and flows into a rock-cut tank measuring eleven feet by seven, the water issuing from a small cave. This place is south-west of the village, and close to the main road east and west through Gibeon. The pool is cut in the face of a cliff, and has a wall of rock about three and a half feet high on the west. Above it grows a pomegranate tree, and near it are tombs in the cliff.

The Pool in Gibeon.

Gibeon. (From Thomson's Central Palestine and Phœnicia.)

"It is possible, however, that the great spring ('Ain el-Bel) is the place intended in the episode of Job's encounter, as it wells up in a chamber some thirty feet long and seven feet wide, reached by a descent of several steps, and there is said to be a passage with steps leading up from the back of the cave to the surface above. As the water is some five feet deep, and the passage is now stopped up, we did not attempt to enter it. It is clear, however, that a door of some kind once existed at the present entrance to the cave, and it would appear that the inhabitants of Gibeon were thus able to close their spring below, and to obtain access to it from above within the city. The spring in question, like many of the famous fountains in Palestine, is held sacred by the Fellahin. An earthenware lamp is occasionally lighted in the chamber. Close by is a little rock chamber with a rude masonry wall."

Giberti, GIOVANNI MATTEO, bishop of Verona, was born at Palermo in 1495, and died in 1543. He was one of those prelates who, before the Council of Trent, showed a serious interest in the reform of the Church, drawing his inspiration from Pietro Caraffa, with whom he was intimately acquainted. Thus Giberti insisted upon a better preparation and stricter examination of the clergy, and though his efforts were of no avail on account of the opposition from the clergy, yet he exercised considerable influence on Carlo Borromeo (q. v.). Giberti wrote, Constitutiones Gibertinae:—Costituzioni per le Monache:—Capitoli di Regolazione Fatta sopra le Stepe:—Monitiones Generales:—Capitoli Della Società di Carità:—Edicta Selecta:—Lettere Scelte. See Ballerini's biography of Giberti, in the introduction to the latter's works, which were published under the title, J. M. Giberti Opera (Verona, 1733, 1740); Kerker, in the Tübinger Quartalschrift, 1859, fasc. 1; Reumont, Geschichte der Stadt Rom, vol. iii⁴; Denrath, in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. Gibieuf, a French theologian, was born at Bourges in the latter half of the 16th century. He was educated by the cardinal de Berulle, studied theology, and received the degree of doctor at the Sorbonne in 1612. The previous year he had, with four other priests, under the direction of Peter de Berulle, then also a simple priest, formed the nucleus of the congregation of the Oratorio. His general, who had introduced into France the order of Carmelites, made Gibieuf his vicar-general. He was at the same time commendatory of Juilly, a house then occupied by the canons regular. The laxity which characterized these monks led him to seek their reform from the cardinal De la Rochefoucauld. The house of Juilly was united with that of St. Genevieve, and later to the congregation of the Oratorio. It is claimed that, owing to modesty, he refused the bishopric of Nantes. He died at the seminary of St. Magloire, of which he was first superior, June 6, 1650. He wrote, De Libertate Dei et Creaturæ (Paris, 1630):—La Vie et les Grandeurs de la Très-Sainte Vierge (ibid. 1637):—Catéchèses de la Manière de Vie Purifiée (posthumous, ibid. 1653). He was allied with the most learned and distinguished men of his time. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gibon is the name of a remarkable idol-temple in Japan. It is a large but narrow building, in the middle room of which stands a huge idol surrounded by many others of smaller dimensions. Around this temple are thirty or forty smaller temples, all arranged in regular order.

Gibson, EDWARD THOMAS, M.R.A.S., M.S.B.A., an English Baptist minister, was born at Falmouth, Nov. 11, 1818. He was educated at the naval school at Greenwich, and when about fourteen years of age entered the navy, which, however, he speedily relinquished. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and some years afterwards began study for the ministry at Bradford Baptist College. In 1854 he became pastor of the church at Guilborough, Northamptonshire. In 1859 he accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Crayford, Kent, which he served for eighteen years. Failing health forced him to resign his charge, Oct. 7, 1877. He died at Brockley, Jan. 21, 1880. He was a diligent student, especially of the Oriental languages, of several of which he possessed a surprising knowledge. He contributed some translations to Spurgeon's Treasury of David. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1882, p. 303.

Gickniahores, hermits of the Armenian Church (q. v.), who pass their lives in meditation on the tops of the rocks.

Giddinge, GEORGE P., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector in Quincy, Ill., for a number of years previous to 1857. In that year he became rector in Booneville, Mo., remaining there until 1859, when he removed to Palmyra as principal of a female school. He died May 1, 1861. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1862, p. 92.

Giese, GOTTLIEB CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, born Nov. 21, 1721, at Crossen, in Brandenburg, was preacher in 1745 at Kesselsdorf, in Silesia, in 1755 deacon at Görlitz, in 1774 archdeacon there, and died Dec. 28, 1788. He wrote, Historische Nachricht von der Bibelübersetzung Martin Luthers (Aldorf, 1771):—Von Luthers Verdiensten und seiner Gehülfen um die Katechismen (Görlitz, 1782). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 167; ii, 213. (B. P.)

Gieseler, GEORG CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lahde, May 1, 1760. In 1791 he was pastor at Petershagen, near Minden, where the famous church-historian, Johann Karl Ludwig Gieseler (q. v.), was born. In 1803 he was first preacher at Warther, near Bielefeld, and died March 14, 1839, a doctor of theology. He wrote, Das Abendmahl des Herrn. Ein liturgischer Versuch (Bielefeld, 1835). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 9; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 438; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gifford, Andrew, D.D., an eminent English Baptist minister, was born at Bristol, Aug. 17, 1700, being the son of Rev. Emanuel Gifford, Baptist pastor there. He was converted in early life; studied at an academy in Tewkesbury, and under the direction of Rev. Dr. Ward of Gresham College; he was settled at Nottingham about two years, and then removed to his native place as assistant to Rev. Bernard Firkett. In December, 1729, he removed to London as pastor of the Little Wild Street Church. For many years Mr. Gifford acted as chaplain in the family of Sir Richard Ellys. In 1734 he visited Edinburgh, where he was honored with the freedom of the city. In 1757 he was appointed assistant librarian of the British Museum, which position he held until his death, June 19, 1784. His private collection of coins was one of the most curious in Great Britain. His attendance at the museum did not render him inattentive to his pastoral duties. For a period of twenty-four years he preached, in connection with several ministers of the Independent denomination, once a month, the Sabbath evening lecture at St. Helen's Church. As a preacher, he was full of animation. See Rippon, Memoir; Amer. Bupt. Magazine, new series, v, 363. (J. C. S.)

Gifford, Richard, an English clergyman, was born in 1725, and was rector of North Okeendon, Essex, in 1772. He died in 1807. He wrote remarks on Kenning's Dissertation on the Tree of Life in Paradise:—Outlines of an Answer to Dr. Priestley's Disquisitions on Matter and Spirit. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Giftschütz, FRIEDRICH, a Roman Catholic professor of theology, who was born in 1748, and died at Vienna, June 5, 1788, is the author of, Vorlesungen über die Pastoraltheologie (Vienna, 1785; 5th ed. 1811). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 34. (B. P.)

Giggäus, ANTON, of Milan, who died in 1632, is the author of, R. Salom. Aben Esra's et R. Levi Ben-Gerson Commentaria in Proverbia Salomonis Latine Conversa (Milan, 1620):—Thesaurus Linguae Arabicæ (ibid. 1632, 4 vols.):—Institutiones Linguae Chaldaicæ et Thurgumicæ. See Argelati, Bibl. Mediolanensis; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

GIL OF SANTO IRENO (Lat. Egidius Lusitanus), one of the propagators of the Dominican order, was born in the diocese of Visco in 1184. He was the son of don Rodrigo Pelago, governor of Coimbra, and one of the grand officials of the crown. He completed his studies at Coimbra, and while still young possessed two priories and three canonships in the chapters of Braga, of Coimbra, and of Ydanha. He neglected theology, and devoted himself to physics and medicine; went to Paris to perfect himself in these sciences, and there received the degree of doctor. In 1224 or 1225 he resigned all, entered the Dominican order, became a model of Christian virtue, and rapidly reached the highest honors of his order. In 1249, at a convocation of his order at Treves, he resigned his provincialship of Spain. He used his influence in re-establishing harmony between the king, don Sancho II, and his brother, the young Alfonso. He died at Santarem, May 14, 1265. Some churches of Portugal honor him as a saint, and the bishops of Viseu have fixed his festival on the Sabbath after the Ascension. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gilbee, EARLE, D.D., an English divine, was descended from a highly respectable family in Kent. He was educated at the Charter-House, where for a considerable time he was a head scholar. From thence he entered University College, Oxford, where he graduated in due course. His first exercise of the ministry was in London, where he served a Church for some years. In the year 1795 he was instituted to the living of Barby, in Northamptonshire, which he held till his death, Oct. 2, 1818. He distinguished himself as a diligent, faithful, and successful minister of Christ. He was a firm friend of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and much rejoiced in witnessing the establishment of an auxiliary institution in the county of Northampton in 1812. Dr. Gilbee was a man whose piety was deep, and whose benevolence endeared him to all who needed his help. It was his meat and drink, whether in the pulpit or out of it, to lessen human misery and produce happiness. See The (Lond.) Christian Observer, February, 1814, p. 65.

Gilbert, Saint, a member of the noble family of Auvergne, was first abbot of a monastery which bore his name in the diocese of Clermont. He passed his youth at the courts of Louis the Gross and Louis the Younger, and was reckoned among the bravest and most pious knights of his time. After preaching in behalf of the second crusade, he accompanied the king to the Holy Land. The unfortunate results of the expedition threw a profound sadness into the heart of Gilbert, who attributed it to the sins of the crusaders. He resolved to consecrate himself entirely to a monastic life, with the approval of his wife and daughter. Having consulted the bishop of Clermont and the abbot of Dilo, he gave half of his goods to the poor, and reserved the remainder for building two monasteries, one for men and the other for women. The latter was established at Aubeterre, under the invocation of St. Gervais and St. Protais. His wife, Petronille, assumed the management, and at her death his daughter, Ponce, succeeded her. Gilbert retired to a place named Neuf Fontaines. He there constructed a monastery, was elected abbot, and ruled with great wisdom. On one side of the monastery was a large hospital for the sick and infirm. He died June 1, 1152, and at his request was interred in the hospital cemetery. The third abbot caused his remains to be transferred to the church. Robert of Auxerre published the life of St. Gilbert in his Chronique. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gilbert (1), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunkeld for about twenty years, but when he took his seat is unknown. He was bishop there in 1220, and also in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of king Alexander II. He died in 1236. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 79.

Gilbert (2), a Scotch prelate, was elected to the see of Galloway in 1235, and was probably consecrated with the High Church of York the same year. He died in 1258. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 272.

Gilbert (3), a Scotch prelate, was a native of Galloway, and was promoted to the see of the Isles in 1321. He probably died in 1326. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 301.

Gilbert, surnamed CRISPINUS, a Benedictine of Normandy, who died in 1114, is the author of, Altercatione Synagoga et Ecclesie:—Comment. in Esaiam et Jeremiam:—Homilie in Canticum Canticorum:—De Cassa Diaboli. See Baleus De Scriptoris Britannicis; Pit-

ms. De Scriptoribus Angliæ; Oudin, De Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gilbert of HOLLAND, flourished A.D. 1200, a scholar and divine, took his name from a district in Lincolnshire. He was invited by St. Bernard to live with him at Clairvaux, became his scholar, continued Bernard's sermons, writing forty-six in a style scarcely discernible from Bernard's. Abbot Trithemius, the German, speaks of Gilbert as a learned and eloquent author. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 286.

Gilbert, bishop of LONDON, who died in 1134, is the author of, Glossæ in Vetus et Novum Testamentum:—Comment. in Jobum, Threnos Jeremiæ et Aliquot Psalmos:—Homiliæ in Cantica Salomonis:—Comment. in Prologos S. Hieronymi super Bibliâ, which works are still in MS. On account of his great learning, Gilbert was styled Universalis. See Oudin, De Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gilbert of WESTMINSTER, a scholar of the first part of the 12th century, was first a monk, then abbot of Westminster. He gave himself up to the study of divinity under the guidance of Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, attained to great knowledge of the Scriptures, studied in France, visited Rome, and on his return is reported to have had a disputation with a learned Jew, which afterwards he reduced to the form of a dialogue, and, publishing it, dedicated it to St. Anselm. He died in 1117, and was buried in Westminster. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 424.

Gilbert Island Version of the SCRIPTURES. This version is designed for the people of Gilbert islands, Micronesia. In 1869 the first parts of this version, which was prepared by the Rev. Hiram Bingham, of Honolulu, were published by the American Bible Society. The version of the entire New Test. was published in 1872, which proved to be a great boon to that benighted people, for soon a new edition was needed, which was published after a careful revision by the original translator in 1878. (B. P.)

Gildersleeve, BENJAMIN, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Norwalk, Conn., Jan. 5, 1791. He graduated from Middlebury College, Vt., in 1814; the same year removed to Georgia, and began to teach in Mount Zion Academy; in 1817 he entered Princeton Seminary, and remained there a little over one year; in 1819 commenced editing a paper called The Missionary; in 1820 was ordained by Hopewell Presbytery, at Athens, Ga.; in 1826 removed to Charleston, S. C., and became editor of The Christian Observer, which post he held until 1845; then he removed to Richmond, Va., where he was sole editor of The Watchman and Observer, and then co-editor of The Central Presbyterian. During his residence in Richmond he preached wherever he found an open door, especially in the Virginia penitentiary. He died June 20, 1875. At seventy-five blindness began to come upon him, and he then applied himself to the memorizing of large portions of Scripture and the best hymns, that he might be able to continue his ministry long after his eyesight was gone. In all places where he could find hearers he was abundant in labors. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 8.

Gile, SAMUEL, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of major Ezekiel Gile, was born at Plaistow, N. H., July 23, 1780. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1804; studied theology under Rev. Jonathan French; was ordained pastor of the Church in Milton, Mass., Feb. 18, 1807; and died in October, 1826. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 580.

Gillilan, GEORGE, a minister of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, was born in Scotland, Jan. 30, 1813. He was educated at the Glasgow College and at the United Secession Hall. His first call was to a congregation at Schoolwynd, Dundee, where he continued his pastoral labors until his death, Aug. 13, 1878. In 1842 he began to write sketches of the principal characters of the day, for newspapers, and they were afterwards printed in book form under the title of The Gallery of Literary Portraits. This was followed by two other series of the same character. In 1850 he published The Bards of the Bible, which has been severely criticised for its grandiloquent style. He edited an edition of Bryant's Poems, and among his other works are, The Book of British Poets, Ancient and Modern, and The Martyrs, Heroes, and Bards of the Scotch Covenant. He also published, The Grand Discovery:—History of a Man:—Christianity and our Era:—A Discourse on Hades:—and Five Discourses on the Abuse of Talent. He finally edited a splendid library edition of the Popular Poets of Britain, with notes. (W. P. S.)

Gill, Alexander, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in London in 1597, and was educated at Trinity College, Oxford. In 1635 he became head master of St. Paul's school. While usher of St. Paul's he had charge of the education of John Milton. He died in 1642. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gill, Henry, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Tiverton, Devonshire, in 1823. He was led to an early decision for Christ; entered Hackney College in 1844, and at the close of his curriculum, in 1848, became pastor at Haverhill, Suffolk. In 1864 he accepted an invitation from the committee of the Bible Society to visit its auxiliaries in North America. This mission occupied him more than eighteen months, in which he proved himself admirably adapted for the work. On his return to England, he was appointed one of the London district secretaries, his chief duties being connected with the Sunday-schools of all denominations in and around the metropolis. He died at Lewisham, Nov. 4, 1870. Dr. Gill was industrious, affectionate, acceptable, and successful in all his labors. In addition to a few tracts and pamphlets, he published, Early at the Temple, and The True and Beautiful. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 311.

Gillane, JOHN, was consecrated a bishop in the Episcopal Church of Scotland in 1727, and bishop of Dunblane in 1731. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gilles de ROYE (Lat. Egidius de Roya or Roia), a French chronicler and theologian, was born at Roie, Picardy. While very young he entered the ranks of the Cistercians, and was sent to Paris to complete his studies. He received the degree of doctor of theology, and taught for nineteen years in various colleges of the order of St. Bernard. He was then appointed abbot of Royanmont, Picardy. At the age of sixty he resigned these functions, and retired to the convent of the Dunes, Belgium, where he remained eighteen years, devoting his time to meditation and study. He died at the abbey of Sparmaile, near Bruges, in 1478. He wrote, Opus Vastum Chronodromi seu Chronici, an abridgment of the history of John Brandon, a monk of Dunes, remaining in manuscript. Gilles de Roie carried it down to 1463, and it was continued by Adrian of Budt, of the same convent, down to 1479. Andrew Schot discovered it about twenty years later, and it was published by Sweert (Frankfort, 1620). He also left some commentaries upon the Master of Sentences. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gilles, JEAN, a French prelate, was born in Normandy. He studied theology and law at Paris, and became chanter of the metropolitan church there. Almost alone among the high clergy of France, Gilles refused to acknowledge Clement VII (Robert of Geneva). He abandoned his benefice, and retired to Italy to Urban VI, who made him provost of Liege and auditor of the Rota. He was afterwards sent by the sacred college as nuncio to Rheims, to Treves, and to Co-logne. In 1405 Innocent VII made him cardinal, with the title of St. Cosmo and St. Damian. He assisted at the conclave, Nov. 30, 1406, which elected Gregory XII, but abandoned that pontiff when he discovered that the latter held his own interests as paramount to those of the Church, and that he rejected the means proposed for the termination of the schism (1408, 1409). Gilles returned to France, where he died about 1418. He left some fragmentary writings. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gillespie, Thomas, father of the Relief Church in Scotland, was born at Clearburn, near Edinburgh, in 1708. He received a careful religious training, was educated at Edinburgh, Perth, and Northampton, licensed to preach in 1740, and ordained in England in January, 1741. In August following he settled as pastor of Carnock, where he continued with unwearied diligence and much success till 1752, when he was deposed from the Church of Scotland. He, however, continued actively engaged in preaching, first, in the churchyard of Carnock, beside the church which had so often echoed to his voice; but he was soon obliged to leave this spot and betake himself to another, from which he was speedily driven, and at last was compelled to take his position on the public highway, where, during the whole summer and autumn, he proclaimed the Gospel to immense multitudes of people. In the following September he removed to Dunfermline, where, in 1753, the Relief Church was founded. He continued with unabated zeal till his last sickness, which soon closed his life, Jan. 19, 1774. Mr. Gillespie was a man of truly apostolic excellence. Conscience was the power that bore away in his soul. His intellectual abilities were excellent, but his goodness was his greatness. See United Presbyterian Fathers, p. 217; Fasts Eccles. Scoticae, ii, 580.

Gillet, Eliphalet, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Colchester, Conn., Nov. 19, 1768. After graduating from Dartmouth College in 1791, he taught school in Wethersfield. Under the direction of Rev. Dr. Spring, he studied theology at Newburyport. In August, 1795, he was ordained pastor of the Church in Hallowell, Me. At his own request he was dismissed from this charge in May, 1827. He died there, Oct. 19, 1848. Dr. Gillet was the pioneer of Congregationalism in that section of the state. When the Maine Missionary Society was organized in 1807, he was chosen its secretary, which office he filled until the close of his life. The cause of home missions had in him an earnest friend. His mind was of a superior order, and was highly cultivated. Addicted to metaphysical discussions, he was a ready, logical, and keen debater. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 377.

Gillet, Louis Joachim, canon and librarian at the abbey of St. Genevieve, in Paris, was born July 28, 1680. In 1717 he was pastor at Mahon, in the Malo bishopric, but resigned his position in 1740. He died Aug. 28, 1753, leaving Nouvelle Traduction de l'Histoire de Joseph (published after his death, 4 vols., 1756). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 157. (B. P.)

Gillett, Ezra Hall, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Colchester, Conn., July 5, 1823. He graduated from Yale College in 1841, and from Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., in 1844. He remained a resident licentiate until 1845, when he was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Harlem. He continued in this charge, an efficient and successful pastor, until 1870, when he accepted the appointment of professor in the New York University, and occupied that position until his death, Sept. 2, 1875. Dr. Gillett wrote, besides frequent articles for the periodical press, a Life of Huss (1861):—History of the Presbyterian Church (1864):—Moral System (1876). (W. P. S.)

Gillette, Abram Dunn, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Cambridge, Washington Co., N. Y.,

Sept. 8, 1807. He studied in the preparatory department of Hamilton Institution, graduated from Union College, was ordained in Schenectady, and in May, 1831, became pastor of the Baptist Church in that place, where he remained four years, then removed to Philadelphia, and became pastor of the Sansom Street Church. In 1839, the Eleventh Street Church (Philadelphia) having been formed under his leadership, he became its pastor, holding that office until 1852, when he accepted a call to Calvary Church, as it is now called, in New York city. In 1864 he removed to Washington, D. C., and was pastor of the First Church in that city five years. He then went to England, where he delivered a series of lectures to the students of Mr. Spurgeon's college, and, for a time, was the stated supply of a Church near London. For two years after his return (1872-74), he was corresponding secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society. From 1874 to 1879 he was pastor at Sing Sing, N. Y., which was his last regular pastorate. He died at his summer home, Bluff Head, on the shore of Lake George, Aug. 24, 1882. Dr. Gillette was the author of several memorial volumes, and frequently contributed to various journals. See The Watchman, Aug. 31, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Gillette, Charles, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Granby, Conn., in 1813. He graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, in 1838; soon after became one of the professors in the Virginia High School, near Alexandria; and afterwards a student in the theological seminary in that city. He was ordained in 1842, and in October of that year was sent out as a missionary to Texas; established himself at Houston, and successfully labored there and in the regions adjacent until the close of 1851. During the next five years he had charge of the diocesan school and of St. Paul's College. In 1856 he accepted the rectorship of St. David's Church, Austin, from which he removed to St. Paul's Church, Steubenville, O. He died in 1869. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. Jan. 1870, p. 624.

Gillot, Jacques, canon of St. Chapelle, at Paris, who died in January, 1619, originally dean of the Church at Langres, is the author of Instructions et Missives des Rois tres Chrétiens de France (Paris, 1607; new and enlarged edition by P. Dupuy, 1654). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 668; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Giloh. Lieut. Conder thinks (Memoirs to the Ordnance Survey, iii, 813) that this may be represented by the ruined site Jalu, which the Map lays down at three and a quarter miles north-west of Helbron; but he admits that we should not expect a location so far north.

Gimle, in Norse mythology, is heaven, or the most charming of all regions of the spirit world. As the ancient Scandinavians considered warlike plays and drinking the greatest of all joys, so also this imperishable heaven is furnished with weapons and golden drinking-horns. It is the eternal dwelling-place of Allfadr, the seat of all the good and pious, who there partake of undisturbed blessedness. At the destruction of the world, Walhalla, the ordinary seat of the deities, Asgard, and all that belongs to it, will be destroyed; even the still higher heaven, Aundlang, and the next highest seat of the light-spirits, Vidblain, will perish; but Gimle, extending high above all these, will not even be touched by the frightful Ragnarok (destroyer), but will stand with the eternal god, to receive the valiant warriors and the slain asas.

Ginnunga-gap, the gulf of delusion, a vast, void abyss, which the ancient Scandinavians believed to be the primeval state of the material creation. Into this capacious gulf, light as imponderable ether, flowed from the south the envenomed streams of Elivagar (q. v.), and the farther they retired from their source the more the temperature became reduced, and at last the fluid mass congealed in Ginnunga-gap.

Ginzell, JOSEPH AUGUSTIN, a Roman Catholic theologian of Austria, was born in 1804 at Reichenberg, studied at Vienna, was in 1834 professor of ethics, in 1843 professor of Church history and canon law at the clerical seminary in Leitmeritz, Bohemia, and died June 1, 1876. He wrote, Legatio Apostolica Petri Aloysii (Würzburg, 1840):—Geschichte der Kirche (Vienna, 1846–47, 2 vols.):—Die canonische Lehrweise der Geistlichen (Ratisbon, 1852):—Handbuch des neuesten in Oesterreich geltenden Kirchenrechtes (Vienna, 1857, 2 vols.):—Geschichte der Skoenapostel Cyrill (Leitmeritz, eod.):—Bischof Hurdalek (Prague, 1873):—Kirchen-historische Schriften (Vienna, 1872, 2 vols.). See Zachold, Bibl. Theol. i, 440 sq.; Literarischer Handwörter für das Katholische Deutschland, 1876, col. 288. (B. P.)

Giocondo, GIOVANNI, an eminent Italian architect and engineer, was born at Verona in 1435, went to Rome when quite young, and studied with great attention the models of antiquity. After the death of Bramante, at Rome, he was declared architect of St. Peter's. By this work, and many others, he gained great fame. He died at a very advanced age. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Giöll, in Scandinavian mythology, was a river which separated the land of shades from earth. It was crossed by a bridge of gold.

Giona, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. See BATTISTA.

Giordano, LUCA (called Fa Presto), an eminent Italian painter, was born at Naples in 1682, and was instructed in the school of Giuseppe Ribera. He spent some time at Rome, where he improved rapidly. There is a picture by him in the palace at Madrid, representing The Nativity, which, from its excellence, is often taken for a production of Raphael. In 1692 he was appointed painter to the king of Spain. He executed the sacristy of the cathedral at Toledo; the vault of the royal chapel at Madrid. In 1702 he went to Naples, where he had so many commissions that he could scarcely fulfill them. He painted an altar-piece in the Church of the Ascension, at Naples, which is considered one of his best works. Probably no artist ever produced as many pictures as he did. He died at Naples, Jan. 12, 1705. The following are some of his excellent productions: Elijah calling Fire from Heaven; The Virgin and Infant Jesus; St. Joseph and St. John; Magdalen Penitent; The Adulteress before Christ; Christ Disputing with the Doctors; St. Anne Received into Heaven by the Virgin. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Giorgi, ANTONIO AUGUSTINO, an Italian philologist, was born in 1711 at Santo Mauro, near Rimini. He entered the order of St. Augustine in 1727, and became procurator-general of his order, which position he occupied for eighteen years. He destroyed the old scholastic routines which controlled the schools directed by the Augustinians. His zeal for the maintenance of a pure faith led him to take part in various theological discussions, and near the close of his life he sustained a lively controversy against P. Paulin, of St. Bartholomew, concerning the religion of the Brahmins. He taught theology in various places, especially at the grand college of Rome, whither he was called by pope Benedict XIV. This pontiff charged him with making the apology for the History of Pelagianism of cardinal Noris. Being satisfied with the manner in which this was executed, he confided to the author the direction of the Angelican library, and admitted him to the number of learned men whom he consulted upon ecclesiastical affairs. Giorgi had studied eleven languages, among which we may mention Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Samaritan, and Syriac. But his erudition was more varied than profound. He died at Rome, May 4, 1797. He wrote a number of works, for which see Hoefler, Notiz. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giorgione. See BARBARILLI.

Giotto, ANGIOLOTTO (called Ambrogio and Giotto di Bondone), a famous ancient Italian painter and architect, was born at Vespignano, near Florence, in 1276. One of his earliest works is a picture of The Annunciation, which is considered very beautiful. He was highly honored, and his works were in great demand. The noble families of Verona, Milan, Ravenna, Urbino, and Bologna were eager to possess his works. In 1316 he was employed at Padua to paint the chapel of the Nunziata all' Arena. In 1325 he was invited to Naples by king Robert, to paint the Church of Santa Chiara, which he decorated with subjects from the New Test. and the Mysteries of the Apocalypse. He was also distinguished in the art of mosaic, and executed the famous Death of the Virgin, at Florence. As an architect he erected the bell-tower of Santa Maria del Fiore. He died at Florence, Jan. 8, 1336. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Giovanni (BATTISTA) DI TOLEDO, an eminent Spanish sculptor and architect, flourished about 1550. He visited Rome for improvement, and acquired great reputation. He was invited to Naples by the viceroy, don Pietro di Toledo, who appointed him state architect. He erected the Church of San Giacomo degli Spagnuoli. This work gained for him such a reputation that Philip II appointed him architect of all the royal works of Spain. He removed to Spain in 1559, and began the erection of the Escorial three years later. He continued to superintend this work until his death in 1567.

Giovanni DI MATTEO (or Matteo di Giovanni), an eminent Siennese painter, flourished from 1450 to 1491. He painted first in his native city in fresco. His masterpiece was the Murder of the Innocents, a subject which he repeated both at Siena and at Naples. Some of his paintings are still to be found in the collections of noble houses at Siena.

Giovanni DI PAOLO, a reputable painter of Siena, flourished about 1457. There are some of his works in the churches at Siena. His Descent from the Cross, in the Osservanza, painted in 1461, is considered good.

Giovanni DA PISA, an eminent Italian sculptor and architect, the son of Niccolò da Pisa, flourished during the early part of the 14th century. He erected the public cemetery at Pisa, at Naples the façade of the cathedral, and at Siena the tribune of the cathedral. He executed many works at Arezzo, Orvieto, Perugia, Pistoja, and elsewhere.

Girac, FRANÇOIS (Barreau de), a French prelate, was born at Angoulême in 1732. Destined from his infancy for the ecclesiastical calling, he was appointed successively vicar-general of the diocese of Angoulême, dean of the cathedral, and sent by the ecclesiastical province of Tours to the assembly of the clergy in 1765. His uprightness and conciliatory spirit led to his being called soon after, in 1766, to the bishopric of St. Briec, and three years later to that of Rennes, where he remained until the Revolution. Being then forced to go into exile, he attached himself successively to prince de Metternich, and Stanislas Poniatowski, last king of Poland. Returning to France, Girac, who counted thirty-five years in the episcopacy, sent in his resignation, in view of his long labors and feeble health, and accepted a canonship in the chapter of St. Denis. He died Nov. 29, 1820. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Girard la Pucelle (Lat. Giraldus Puella), professor of ecclesiastical law at Paris in the 12th century, and bishop of Coventry. He took a lively part in the contests which St. Thomas of Canterbury sustained against the king of England, and after a life full of agitation, having for a long time resided at Cologne, he went to England, was appointed bishop, and died soon after, in 1184. Many of his contemporaries bestow great praise upon his knowledge of theology, philosophy, and jurisprudence; but none of his works remain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Girard, François, a French ecclesiastic, was born about 1736 at La Guillotière (at that time dependent upon Dauphiny, and still one of the suburbs of Lyons). He established himself in Paris, where he was appointed, in 1781, rector of the parish of St. Landry. At the commencement of the revolution he showed great enthusiasm for the new ideas, and was one of the first rectors of Paris to submit to the civil constitution of the clergy. These patriotic sentiments gave him a kind of popularity, which, after the suppression of his church, in 1791, caused his election to one of the episcopal vicarages of bishop Gobel. Two years later the convention appointed him to assist Marie Antoinette in her last moments, and to conduct her to the scaffold. Appointed canon of the Church of Notre Dame, at Paris, after the restoration of Catholic worship, at his own expense he repaired the chapel and gave an annuity for its preservation. He died at Paris, Nov. 7, 1811. An anonymous treatise, entitled Instruction sur la Constitution Civile du Clergé, etc., published at Paris in 1791, is cited by Barbier in his Dict. des Anonymes, No. 8721, and given to an author named Gérard. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Girard (de Ville-Thierry), Jean, an ascetical writer of Paris, where he died in 1709, is the author of, Le Véritable Pénitent:—Le Chemin du Ciel:—La Vie des Vierges:—Des Gens Mariés:—Des Veuves:—Des Religieux:—Des Religieuses:—Des Riches:—Des Pauvres:—Des Saints:—Des Clercs:—Le Chrétien Étranger sur la Terre:—Traité de la Flatterie:—Traité de la Médisance:—Vie de Jésus-Christ dans l'Eucharistie:—Le Chrétien dans la Tribulation:—La Vie de S. Jean de Dieu. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Girard, Stephen, an American philanthropist, was born at Bordeaux, France, May 21, 1750. He began life as a sailor at the age of thirteen, and ten years later became a master and captain. He settled in Philadelphia, Pa., in May, 1777, and began his eminently successful mercantile career. During the prevalence of the yellow fever in Philadelphia in 1793, 1797-98, raging with unwonted violence, Mr. Girard devoted himself personally, fearless of all risks, to the care of the sick and the burial of the dead, not only in the hospital, of which he became manager, but throughout the city, supplying the sufferers with money and provisions. Two hundred children, whose parents died of the fever, were in a great measure intrusted to his care. In 1812 he purchased the building and a large part of the stock of the old United States bank, and commenced business as a private banker, with a capital of $1,200,000, which was afterwards increased to $4,000,000. During the war of 1812 he rendered valuable services to the government by placing at its disposal the resources of his bank, and subscribing with unexampled liberality to its loans. He died Dec. 26, 1831. He contributed liberally to all public improvements, and erected many handsome buildings in the city of Philadelphia. He was profuse in his public charities, but exacting to the last fraction due him. Notwithstanding his extraordinary attentions to the sick, he never had a friend. He was a freethinker in religion, and an ardent admirer of Voltaire and Rousseau. Although he was uneducated, his success in business had been such that his property at the time of his death amounted to about $9,000,000. Of this vast estate he bequeathed only $140,000 to his relatives. The remainder was devoted to various public charities, including hospitals, asylums, schools, etc.; $500,000 to the city of Philadelphia; $300,000 to the state of Pennsylvania; and his principal bequest, which was

$2,000,000, besides certain other property, together with a plot of ground in Philadelphia, for the erection and support of a college for orphans. The most minute directions were given in regard to the buildings to be erected, and the admission and management of the inmates. He required that the pupils be instructed in the purest principles of morality, but they must be left free to adopt such religious tenets as their matured reason may lead them to prefer. No ecclesiastic, minister, or missionary of any sect whatever is allowed to hold any connection with the college, or even be admitted to the premises as a visitor. The officers and instructors of the institution are eighteen in number, and the inmates about five hundred.

Girardet, JEAN, a reputable French painter, was born at Luneville, Dec. 13, 1709, instructed in the school of Claude Charles, and after spending some time there went to Italy, where he remained eight years studying the works of the great masters. There are many of his works at Metz, Verdun, and other cities of Lorraine. His Descent from the Cross, in one of the churches at Nancy, is considered his best production. He died at Nancy, Sept. 2, 1778. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Girardon, FRANÇOIS, an eminent French sculptor, was born at Troyes (Champagne), March 16, 1628, studied with care the statues in the churches of Troyes, and produced a picture of The Virgin, which was much admired. In 1657 he was admitted to the Academy at Paris; in 1659 was appointed professor; became director in 1674, and chancellor in 1695. There are many of his productions in France. The mausoleum of cardinal Richelieu, in the Church of the Sorbonne, was considered his masterpiece. He died in 1716. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Giraud, PIÉRRÉ, a French cardinal, was born at Montferrand, Aug. 11, 1791. Belonging to an ancient family, he was designed for the magistracy, but at the age of fifteen went to the seminary of Clermont to study philosophy, and while there developed a taste for belles-lettres and ancient classics. In October, 1812, he entered the seminary of St. Sulpice, where he studied theology and the sacred Scriptures. Three years later he was ordained priest. In 1818 he was sent as a missionary to Auvergne. He was rector of the cathedral of Clermont in 1826, when he was invited to preach during Lent at the Tuileries. A royal ordinance appointed him to the see of Rodez, Jan. 9, 1830. He was one of the signers of a criticism concerning certain propositions taken from the Arcier, and sent to the court of Rome by the archbishop of Toulouse. He was appointed archbishop of Cambrai, Dec. 4, 1841. He was made cardinal, June 11, 1847, and Jan. 4, 1849, went to Gaeta, where Pius IX was a refugee. It was supposed with some reason that he was commissioned by MM. de Falloux and Drouyn de Lhuys to induce the pope to accept the hospitality of France. He died at Cambrai, April 17, 1860. The works of Giraud have been collected and published several times. The third edition appeared in 1862. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Girdle, ECCLESIASTICAL (ζώνη, baleus, or cingulum), a cord of linen, silk, worsted, or other material, with tassels at the extremities, by which the alb is bound round the waist of him who assumes it. It is fastened on the left side. When putting it on, the cleric says the following prayer, or one equivalent to it in terms: "Præcinge me, Domine, zona justitiæ, et constringe in me dilectionem Dei et proximi." This cincture is as old as the days of St. Gregory the Great; formerly ample in size, and broad, and often adorned with gold and gems. In the 6th century it was first reduced to its present narrow dimensions. It represented the cord with which our Lord was bound; and alludes to Luke xii, 85; Eph. vi, 4; 1 Pet. i, 13.

Girdle of St. Austin, FRATERNITY OF THE, a devotional society of the Roman Church. The girdle which they wear is made of leather, and they allege that it was worn by the Virgin Mary, John the Baptist, and many patriarchs and prophets.

Girdle of St. Francis. See FRANCIS, ST., FRATERNITY OF THE GIRDLE OF.

Girdlestone, CHARLES, a minister of the Church of England, was born March 6, 1797, and graduated at Oxford in 1818. He became successively fellow of Balliol College, university examiner, vicar of Sedgely (Staffordshire) in 1826, rector of Alderley (Cheshire) in 1837, of Kingswinford (Staffordshire) in 1847, and died April 28, 1881, at Weston-super-Mare. He was a voluminous writer on theological subjects, from the Low-Church point of view, and published, among other religious works, A Family Commentary on the Bible (1832-42):—The Book of Psalms, according to the two authorized translations, in parallel columns, with marginal notes (1836):—Christendom Sketched from History in the Light of Holy Scriptures (1870). (B. P.)

Girodet-Trioson, ANNE LOUIS, an eminent French painter, was born at Montargis, Feb. 5, 1767, studied under David, and at the age of twenty gained the prize of the Academy for his picture of Joseph's Meeting with his Brethren. He gained great eminence in France by his picture of The Deluge. Many of his works are in the private collections of France. He died at Paris, Dec. 9, 1824. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Giron (Garcias de Loyasa), DON PEDRO, a Spanish prelate and scholar, was born at Talavera in 1542. He was the son of Pedro Giron, member of the Council of Castile. He pursued his philosophical and theological studies at Alcalá. Being appointed canon of Toledo, he became archdeacon of Guadalajara on the withdrawal of his uncle, Lopez de Carnajel. In 1585 Philip II called him to his court as almoner and master of the chapel, and a little later intrusted to him the teaching of his little son, don Philip. In 1596 cardinal Albert of Austria appointed him grand-vicar of the archbishopric of Toledo. In 1598 he obtained the title of archbishop of the diocese which he governed. He died Feb. 22, 1599, leaving some works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gisbert, Blaise, a French Jesuit, born at Cahors, Feb. 21, 1657, and died Feb. 28, 1781, is the author of, Le bon Gout de l'Eloquence Chrétienne (Lyons, 1702):—Eloquence Chrétienne dans l'Idée et dans la Pratique (1714; with Zenfant's notes, Amsterdam, 1728; Germ. transl. by J. Val Kornrumpf, Leipzig, 1740). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 61; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gisbert, Jean, a French canonist, was born at Cahors, Jan. 2, 1639. He entered the Jesuit order Oct. 2, 1654; for fifteen years taught rhetoric and philosophy at Tours; then theology for eighteen years at Toulouse, and afterwards became provincial of Languedoc. He died Aug. 5, 1711, leaving, among other works, In Summam Sancti Thomae Quaestiones (1670):—Vera Idea Theologiae (Toulouse, 1676; revised and enlarged, 1689):—Scientia Religiosa Universa (vol. i, Paris, 1689). Gitano (or Spanish Gypsy) Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. This version is intended for the gypsies (Gypsy being in Spanish Gitano). For the history of these people, and the translation of the gospel of St. Luke for them, compare the article Gypsies. In consequence of a fresh demand for the book, the translator has re-translated his former work, which was printed in 1873. Some copies have been sent out to Spain, and satisfactory tidings have been received concerning their acceptance among the gypsies.

Giustiniani, Agostino, an Italian Orientalist of the preaching order, was born at Genoa in 1470. At the age of fourteen years he entered the convent of the Dominicans of Santa Marie del Castello, at Genoa. By the authority of the doge and the archbishop of Genoa, his parents sent him to Valencia, in Aragon, where he contracted a serious disease. This caused him to again adopt his former project, and he returned to Pavia, took the Dominican habit in 1488, and changed his Christian name from Pantaleon to Agostino. The study of Greek, Arabic, Hebrew, and Chaldee so absorbed his attention that he neglected theology and philosophy, and indifferently performed his duties as preacher and confessor. He taught in several schools of his order, but in 1514 resigned his duties as professor in order to devote himself exclusively to the editing of a polyglot Bible. Being appointed bishop of Nebbio, in Corsica, he assisted in 1516-17 at the Lateran council, and contested some articles of the concordat with Francis I and Leo X. The cardinal having fallen into disgrace, the bishop of Nebbio withdrew to Boniface Ferrier, bishop of Ivrea. Francis I, then ruler of the country of Giustiniani, invited him to remain in his kingdom. The king increased his pension, and appointed him professor of Hebrew in the University of Paris. Giustiniani was the first who taught this language there. He remained five years in France, during which time he made a voyage to the Netherlands and England, where he met with Erasmus and Thomas Morus. Recalled to his diocese by certain affairs, he remained there most of the time until his death, which occurred while returning from Genoa to Corsica, in 1586. He wrote a number of works, for mention of which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giustiniani, Angelo, an Italian prelate, was born on Scio in 1520. He joined the Franciscan order, went to Italy provided with valuable manuscripts, taught theology at Padua and Genoa, and accompanied cardinal Ferrara to France. Giustiniani took part in the discussion of Poissy, then was appointed grand almoner of the duke of Savoy, and bishop of Geneva. He assisted at the Council of Trent. Pope Pius IV confided to him an important negotiation with the king of France, in which he acquitted himself well. In 1578 he was obliged to resign his bishopric on account of a violent attack of gout. He died Feb. 22, 1596, leaving Commentarii in Quaedam Capita Sancti Johannis:—Sermones. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giustiniani, Fabiano, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Lerma, a diocese of Genoa, in 1578. His father changed his original name of Taranchetti for that of Giustiniani, having been adopted by a family of that name, not wishing to take part in the conspiracy of Luigi Fieschi. In 1597 he entered the congregation of St. Philip of Neri, and was placed in charge of the library of Santa Maria de Vallicelli, and he there formed a taste for study. In 1616 he was appointed bishop of Ajaccio, at which place he died, Jan. 8, 1627. He wrote Index Universalis Materialium Bibliocarum (Rome, 1612). This work contains many bibliographical errors. He also wrote other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giustiniani (of Chios), Leonardo, an Italian prelate of Genoese origin, lived in 1458. He was archbishop of Mitylene when that island was taken by the Turks. He left a letter upon the subject of the taking of Constantinople, addressed to pope Nicholas V, and some other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giustiniani, Orazio, an Italian cardinal and theologian, was born at Genoa near the close of the 16th century. He was of that branch of the Giustiniani family to which the isle of Chios belonged. Having studied theology at Rome, he entered, at the age of twenty-five years, the congregation of priests of St. Philip of Neri, and advanced rapidly to the higher positions of his order. Urban VIII appointed him first librarian of the library of the Vatican. He was charged with an important negotiation with the patriarch of Constantinople, and acquitted himself so much to the satisfaction of the pope that he bestowed upon him as a reward the bishopric of Montalto, in 1640. He restored harmony between the bishops of Montalto and the inhabitants of that place. In 1645 Innocent X appointed him bishop of Nocera, and the year following he was made cardinal, with the title of St. Onuphrius. Soon after the pope chose him as his grand penitentiary. He became again first librarian of the Vatican library, and died at Rome in 1649. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Giustiniani (Di Moniglia), Paolo, an Italian prelate and commentator, was born at Genoa in 1444. He was the son of Pietro Pellegro Giustiniani, ambassador to the duke of Milan. At the age of nineteen years Paolo entered the order of Minorite preachers. Some years later he was made doctor of theology, and elected prior of the convent of St. Dominic, at Genoa. In 1484 he was regent of the studies of his order at Perugia. When, at the death of Sixtus IV, the Genoese were expelled from the States of the Church, Giustiniani returned to his native country and devoted himself to preaching. In 1486 he was elected provincial of Lombardy, and in 1489 Innocent VIII chose him as master of the sacred palace. This pontiff confided to him several important missions, and in 1494 appointed him inquisitor-general of all the Genoese possessions. In 1498 Alexander VI made him apostolic commissary, and authorized him, with the governor of Rome, to examine a large number of Christians accused of heresy. In this he distinguished himself by the severity of his judgments. He was one of the judges who, in September, 1498, condemned Pietro d'Aranda, bishop of Calahorra, and steward of the pope, to perpetual imprisonment as guilty of Judaism and other errors. He was recompensed for his zeal by the gift of the bishopric of Scio, and being sent as legate to Hungary. He died at Buda in 1502, leaving commentaries upon some of the books of the Bible. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gladiators, Christian Views Concerning.—Some pagan moralists expressed more or less strongly their disapprobation of the gladiatorial shows, as being inhuman and demoralizing; but they were too popular to be checked by such remonstrances; and nothing effectual was done to stop them until they were opposed and finally suppressed by the intervention of Christian principles and Christian heroism.

The Church expressed its abhorrence of these barbarous games as soon as it came in contact with them, not only by discountenancing attendance at them, but by refusing to admit gladiators to Christian baptism. Charioteers, racers, and many others are included in the same condemnation; probably because the public exhibitions in which they took a part were more or less connected with idolatry. For the same reason such persons, if they had already been received into the Church, were to be punished by excommunication.

The first imperial edict prohibiting the exhibition of gladiators was issued by Constantine in A.D. 325, just after the Council of Nice had been convened. Forty years later, Valentinian forbade that any Christian criminals should be condemned to fight as gladiators; and in A.D. 367 he included in a similar exemption those who had been in the imperial service about the court.

In the year 404, while a show of gladiators were exhibiting at Rome in honor of the victories of Stilicho, an Asiatic monk named Telemachus, who had come to Rome for the purpose of endeavoring to stop this barbarous practice, rushed into the amphitheatre, and strove to separate the combatants. The spectators—enraged at his attempt to deprive them of their favorite amusement—stoned him to death. But a deep impression was produced. Telemachus was justly honored as a martyr, and the emperor Honorius, taking advantage of the feeling which had been evoked, effectually put a stop to gladiatorial combats, which were never exhibited again.

Gladstones, GEORGE, a Scotch prelate, was a native of Dundee, and minister at St. Andrews; was preferred by the king to the see of Caithness in 1600; and thence was translated to the see of St. Andrews in 1606, but was not consecrated until 1610. He was called commissioner for uniting the two kingdoms in 1604. He died May 2, 1615. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 41-217.

Glaire, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Orientalist, was born at Bordeaux, April 1, 1798, and died in 1879. He published, Lexicon Manuale Hebraicum et Chaldaicum (1830; new ed. 1848):—Principes de Grammaire Hébraïque et Chaldaïque (1832; 3d ed. 1843):—Chrestomathie Hébraïque et Chaldaïque (1834, 3 vols.):—Torath Mosché, le Pentateuque (1836-37, 2 vols.):—Introduction Historique et Critique aux Livres Saints (1836, 6 vols.; 2d ed. 1843):—Les Livres Saints Vengés (1845, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1874, 3 vols.):—La Bible selon la Vulgate (1863):—Dictionnaire Universel des Sciences Ecclésiastiques (1868, 2 vols.), besides contributing to the Encyclopédie du XIX Siècle, Encyclopédie Catholique, and Biographie Catholique. See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Gläserer, JUSTUS MARTIN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 8, 1696, at Hildesheim. He studied at Helmstädt and Halle, was in 1727 preacher at his native place, and took the degree of doctor of theology in 1738. On account of controversies with his superiors and colleagues, he was deposed from his office, and died at Vienna, Jan. 22, 1750. He wrote, De Intercessionem Reatorum Particulari:—De Dracone Insigni Regum Egyptiorum ad Ezech. xxix-xxxii:—Specimen anti-Judaicum de Genuino Judoorum Messia:—De Demonstratione Spiritus S. Jesum esse Verum Messiam:—Diatribe Philologica de R. Simeone Filio Jochai, Auctoris Libri Sohar:—Diss. de Trinitate Rabbinarum et Cabalistarum non Christiana sed Mere Platonica. Glauch, ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Leipsic, April 17, 1637. In 1666 he was superintendent at Bitterfeld, in 1668 pastor in Merseburg, in 1679 archdeacon at Leipsic, and died July 11, 1681. He published, Schediasma de usu Concordantiarum Biblicarum (Leipsic, 1668):—De Adventu Messie:—De Corona Christi Spinea:—De Victu Jo. Baptiste:—De Rege Agrippa. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 109; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 335; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gleich, JOHANN ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Gera, Sept. 30, 1666. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1690 deacon at Torgau, in 1696 court-preacher at Dresden, in 1722 member of consistory, and took the degree as doctor of theology in 1724. He died Aug. 1, 1734, leaving, Diss. de Liturgiis Orientalibus (Wittenberg, 1724):—De S. Eucharistia Moribundis et Mortuis Olim Data (1690):—Annales Ecclesiastice (Dresden, 1730, 8 parts), etc. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 602, 632, 800; Fürst, *Bibl. Gleig, GEORGE, LL.D., a Scotch prelate, was born at Boghall, Kincardineshire, May 12, 1758, and educated at King's College, Aberdeen. He took orders in his twenty-first year, and was ordained to the pastoral charge of a congregation at Pittenweem, Fifeshire, whence he removed in 1790 to Stirling. He was twice chosen bishop of Dunkeld, but the opposition of the primæ rendered the election null. In 1808 he was consecrated assistant and successor to the bishop of Brechin, in 1810 was preferred to the sole charge, and in 1816 was elected primate of the Episcopal Church of Scotland. He died at Stirling, in February, 1839. He was a frequent contributor to the Monthly Review, the Gentleman's Magazine, the Anti-Jacobin Review, and the British Critic. He also wrote several articles for the third edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and on the death of the editor, Colin Macfarquhar, in 1793, was engaged to edit the remaining volumes. He also published, Directions for the Study of Theology (1827):—various Sermons, and other works. See Walker, Life of Bishop Gleig (1879); Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Glendonning, MATTHEW, a Scotch prelate, was a canon of Glasgow, and was afterwards made bishop of that see in 1389. He appears to have sat there until his death in 1408. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 246.

Glöckner, Hieronymus Georg, a German philosopher, was born at Freiberg in 1715. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1741 bachelor, in 1742 magister, and in 1754 professor of philosophy. He died Feb. 5, 1757. Besides his contributions to Teller's Bible-Work, and translation of Calmet's Biblical Dictionary into German, he wrote, De Libertate Dei Adversus Recentiores Quosdam Philosophos:—De Wetsteniana ἐρμηνείᾳ in N. Test. Vitiis (Leipsic, 1754). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 133. (B. P.)

Glöckner, Johann, a Reformed minister of Germany, was born Aug. 21, 1667. He studied at Marburg, and died at Rinteln, Dec. 29, 1716, professor of Greek and preacher there. He wrote, Disp. in Genes. i, 24, 25:—De Gemina Accentuatione Decalogi:—De Cognitione Dei Naturali. See Strieder, Heinriche Gelehrten Geschichte; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Glörfeld, Christian Benedict, a Protestant theologian, was born in 1747 at Bernau, in Brandenburg, and died there, June 24, 1809, provost and first preacher. He published, Der Katechismus Luthers Erklärt (Berlin, 1791):—Predigten über freie Texte (ibid. 1793):—Gespräche über biblische Erzählungen und Gleichnisse (ibid. 1795, 1798). Glossa Ordinaria, the common exegetical manual of the Middle Ages. It consisted of short explanatory remarks, compiled by Walafrid Strabo, following for the most Rabanus Maurus.

Glover, Livingston M., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1820, and, after having received the necessary training, entered the Western Reserve College, graduating in 1840. He afterwards graduated at Lane Theological Seminary, and was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Jacksonville, Ill., where he labored with great success for upwards of thirty years. He was a delegate of the General Assembly to the Free Church of Scotland. He died at Jacksonville, July 15, 1880. See (N. Y.) Observer, July 20, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Gloves (χειροθήκη, gastus). It would seem that gloves, in the strict sense of the word, were unknown to the early Greeks and Romans (Cassaubon, Anecdota in Athen. xii, 2). That they were in use, however, among the ancient Persians appears from Xenophon (Cyropæd. viii, 8, 17). The European custom of wearing them seems to have originated with the German nations, as the Teutonic origin of the common Latin word for them clearly shows: and although, as an ecclesiastical vestment, properly so called, gloves do not appear till the 12th century (the first extant mention of them in that character being as late as A.D. 1152), they had been used for centuries as articles of practical convenience. Thus we find them mentioned in the life of St. Columbanus, by Jonas Bobbienais (formerly included among the works of Bede, c. 25). In this instance, the gloves are spoken of as used "for purposes of labor," but sometimes they were obviously of a costly nature, for in the will of Riculfus, bishop of Helena (ob. A.D. 915), in a long list of valuable articles, he mentions "one pair of gloves" (Migne, Patrol. cxxxii, 468).

Gloves symbolized the hiding of iniquity by the merits of our Saviour, and recalled the blessing upon Jacob when he wore gloves of skins. William of Wykeham's gloves are preserved at New College, Oxford. Candidates for degrees in medicine formerly gave gloves to the graduates of the faculty in that university, in return for their escort to the doors of the convocation house. Bishop Ken contributed to the rebuilding of St. Paul's the cost of his consecration dinner and a hundred pairs of gloves. At St. Andrew's, Holborn, the clergy were given gloves at Easter, and some noblemen used to send a pair to any bishop or dean whom they heard preach. In 1636 the University of Oxford presented gloves to the members of the royal family and king Charles I.

Glück, Ernest, a Lutheran theologian, was born in Saxony, Nov. 10, 1652. He studied at Wittenberg and Leipsic, and accepted a call extended to him by the general superintendent, John Fischer, in 1673, to Livonia. On his settlement in Livonia he was grieved to find that the people were still destitute of the Scriptures in their vernacular tongue. He therefore applied himself assiduously to the task of producing a translation of the entire Scriptures from the sacred originals; and with this object in view he repaired to Hamburg, there to qualify himself for the undertaking, by studying Hebrew under Edzardi, the celebrated Hebraist. After his return from Hamburg, in 1680, he was appointed military-preacher at Dünamünde, where he also adopted Catharine Badendiek, afterwards empress of Russia, as his daughter. In 1688, Glück was appointed pastor at Marienburg, in Livonia, and translated the Bible into the Lettish, which was published at Riga in 1689, the New Test. having been published in 1685. When Marienburg was taken by Peter the Great (Aug. 6, 1702), Glück was transported with other citizens as prisoners to Moscow. Owing, however, to the fact that he had been the foster-father of Catharine, he was soon released, and was appointed inspector of all the high-schools of Moscow. Here he studied the Russian language, and commenced a translation of the New Test. into the Russian tongue. He died, however, May 5, 1705, before finishing his task. (B. P.)

Glückselig, August Legis, an archæologist, who died at Prague, Jan. 28, 1867, is the author of Christus-Archæologie (Prague, 1862). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 447. (B. P.)

Glycas, Michael (Μιχαήλ ὁ Γλυκάς), a Byzantine historian, probably of the 12th century, was a native either of Constantinople or Sicily (hence called Siculus). He wrote some letters to the last Constantine, and a History (Βιβλος χρονική), in four parts, from the Creation to the death of Alexis I Comnenus (1118), first published in a Latin translation by Leunslavius (Baale, 1572, 8vo; best ed. by Bekker, in the Bonn collection of the Byzantines, 1886, 8vo).

Glycis, John (Ἰωάννης ὁ Γλύκις), or perhaps Glycas (Γλυκάς), was patriarch of Constantinople from 1316 to 1320. He was regarded as a man of great wisdom and oratorical skill. Nicephorus, who was his pupil, praised him greatly. At length, enfeebled by age and disease, Glycis resigned the dignity of patriarch, and retired to the monastery of Cynotissa. Being an elegant and correct writer, he attempted to purify the Greek language from the barbarisms with which it was surcharged. For mention of his works see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gobat, Samuel, D.D., missionary bishop of Jerusalem, was born Jan. 26, 1799, at Cremine, a village near

Munster, in the canton of Berne. In 1821 he entered the missionary seminary at Basle, and in 1824 went to Paris for the purpose of continuing his Oriental studies, particularly Arabic, under the celebrated Sylvester de Sacy. In 1825 he entered into the service of the Church Missionary Society at London, and in the year following embarked upon his mission to Abyssinia. But owing to the unsettled state of that country, he could not begin operations until 1830, and left in 1832. He returned in 1834, but sickness prevented his working, and so, in September, 1836, he returned to Europe. From 1839 to 1842 he was at Malta, assiduously engaged in revising the Arabic Bible, and other learned labors. In 1842 he went to Basle, afterwards to Berne, and returned again in 1845 to Malta, to inaugurate and take charge of the Malta Protestant College. Soon after he had opened the college, Mr. Gobat received an intimation that the king of Prussia had expressed an anxious desire to nominate him to the Anglican episcopate in Jerusalem. He was much surprised at the intelligence, but felt bound in conscience not to refuse the call, without violating his principles of being "obedient to the Lord in all things." "Wherefore," were his words, "I felt persuaded that the call was from God; and herein I ground my hope, that God will bless me, and make me a blessing." On Sunday, July 5, 1846, Mr. Gobat was consecrated at Lambeth as bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in Jerusalem. His work in the Holy City, during the thirty-three years which he spent there, was very successful and vigorous. His annual letters from the Holy City were always looked for with interest, and read with the deepest attention. In the last letter, published in 1877, he stated that there were thirty-three Protestant schools in Judea, Samaria, Galilee, and beyond Jordan, containing between 1200 and 1500 children of both sexes. He died at Jerusalem, May 5, 1879. He wrote A Journey of Three Years in Abyssinia (Lond. 1847). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; S. Gobat, his Life and Work, by the earl of Shaftesbury (Lond. 1884). (B. P.)

Göbel, Karl, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 18, 1808, at Solingen. He studied at Erlangen and Berlin, and was in 1837 appointed pastor at Altwied, near Neuwied-on-the-Rhine. In 1845 he was appointed successor to professor Krafft, at Erlangen, and in 1857 he was called to Posen as pastor of St. Peter's, and member of consistory. He died there April 24, 1881, a doctor of theology and member of the upper consistory. He published, Der heilige Rock, ein evangelisches Zeugnis (Neuwied, 1845);—Evangelisches Zeugnis gegen die Irrlehren des Ghillany und Johannes Ronge (Erlangen, 1849);—Osterbeute Heiligtümern Christlicher Hoffnung (2d ed. 1860);—Stephanus, der Prediger des Gottes der Herrlichkeit (1853);—Das alte Testament gegen Vorurtheile und Missverständnisse der Gebildeten unserer Zeit vertheidigt (1865). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 447. (B. P.)

Göbel, Sebastian, a German theologian, was born at Dresden in 1628. He was at first pastor of the Church of Nicolai, at Leipzig, then abbot of the convent of Bergen, near Magdeburg, in 1669. He died in 1685, leaving Methodologia Homiletica;—De Pactis et Fœderibus Dei cum Homini;—Christianæ Vitis Regule;—Thesaurus Evangelicus;—Cibus Famularum Cælestis, seu Sacrum Orandi et Cantandi Libellus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Godard (or Gildard), bishop of Rouen, was born at Salency, near Noyon, about 460. According to some hagiographers, he was son of Nectar, a Roman lord, and twin brother of St. Medard, but the earliest records contain no such information. As successor to Radbod, he received the priesthood at the hands of the bishop of Vermand, then the capital of the Vermandois. He was elected bishop of Rouen near the close of the 5th century, and brought many idolaters to the Christian faith. He aided in the conversion of Clovis I, together with his co-laborers St. Remy, St. Woast, and St. Medard. In 511 he assisted at the first Council of Orleans. He discovered in St. Laudus an especial talent, although but twelve years of age, and consecrated him bishop of Coutances. The theologians attributed this to divine revelation. He died at Rouen, June 8, about 530, and was interred in the Church of the Virgin, but his remains were afterwards reinterred in the abbey of St. Medard, at Soissons, under the reign of Charles the Bald, which probably led to the conclusion that Godard was brother of Medard. These two saints are honored on June 8. According to Mabillon, Fortunatus wrote the life of these two saints, but it is uncertain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goddard, Kingston, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was rector for several years in Philadelphia, until 1859, when he became rector of Christ Church in Cincinnati, O. In 1862 he returned to Philadelphia as rector of St. Paul's Church. In 1866 he removed to Port Richmond, N. Y., as rector of St. Andrew's Church, where he remained until the close of his life, Oct. 24, 1875, at the age of sixty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 150.

Goddard, William Stanley, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1757. He was rector of Rep-ton, Derby, and died in 1845. He published a Sermon on the visit of the bishop of Winchester (1811);—Sermon at the consecration of bishop Howley (Lond. 1814). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Godeberta, Saint, was born at Boves, near Amiens, about 640. She was consecrated by St. Eligius, bishop of Noyon, in the presence of Clotaire III (from 635 to 659). The hagiographers say that she established a society of twelve women, whom, with untiring devotion, she instructed according to the strict rules of the gospel, and by her own virtuous example. By her faith she is said to have arrested the flames, and when a violent pestilence attacked Noyon, she caused its cessation by assembling the citizens together in penitence. She died about 700. Her remains were for a long time in the cathedral of Noyon. She was canonized, and her memory is honored April 11. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Godehard, Saint, bishop of Hildesheim, was born at Ritenbach, in Bavaria, in 961. He was educated at the court of the archbishop Frederic of Salzburg, and when thirty-one years of age entered the monastery of Nieder-Altaich, and became its abbot in 997. His excellent administration of the monastery attracted the attention of the emperor Henry II, who charged him with reforming the monasteries of Hersfeld, Tegernsee, etc., and having succeeded in this task, he returned to his own monastery in 1012. When Bernward, the bishop of Hildesheim, died, he was made his successor, in 1022, and died May 5, 1038. He was canonized by Innocent III in 1181. His festival is on May 4. Godelive de Ghisteltes, Saint, a martyr of the 11th century, was born at Ghisteltes, in Flanders. She was religiously trained from her youth at the château of Long Fort, in Boulonnais. She was married to Bertolf, who at last caused her to be put to death. Her festival is on July 6. Legend attributes to her many miracles, and her life was written by Dragon, priest of Ghisteltes, one of her contemporaries. Another, published in German, was entitled Godelise Boeck, in Gothic characters, ornamented with coarse wood engravings. This book was translated and published by Louis de Baecker (Bruges, 1849). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Godescard, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French ecclesiastical writer, was born at Rocquemont, near Rouen, March 80, 1728. He was successively secretary of the archbishop of Paris, prior of Notre Dame de Bon Repos, near Versailles, canon of St. Louis du Louvre, and prior of St. Honorius, at Paris, where he died, Aug. 21, 1800. He wrote, Vies des Pères, des Martyrs, et des Autres Principaux Saints (from the English of Alban Butler, Villefranche and Paris, 1763, 1783, 1784), containing a large number of anecdotes which, true or doubtful, afford philosophers, historians, and hagiographers interesting information:—De la Mort des Persecuteurs (with historical notes translated from the Latin of Lactance, Paris, 1797):—Fondemens de la Religion Chrétienne (translated from the English of Challonier):—Table Alphabétique (of the Mémoires de Trévoux down to 1740), and several theological works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Godet des Marais, PAUL DE, a French prelate, was born at Talcy, near Blois, in June, 1649. He completed his studies at the Seminary of St. Sulpice, Paris, and became bishop of Chartres, confessor of madame Maintenon, and superior of the royal house of St. Cyr. On his promotion to the episcopacy he gave all his revenue to the poor. Nov. 21, 1695, he condemned several propositions taken from the works of madame Guyon and P. Lacombe. He claimed also to bring Fénelon to a recantation. In 1697 he signed, with the cardinal of Noailles and Bossuet, a declaration which was sent to Rome, by which he condemned the Maximes des Saints. He founded four seminaries and schools for the instruction of the young. He died Sept. 25, 1709. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Godwin, THOMAS, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Oakingham, in Berkshire, in 1517, and was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1565 he was made dean of Christ Church, Oxford, and had also a prebend in the Cathedral of Lincoln. In 1566 he was promoted to the deanery of Canterbury. In 1576 he was one of the ecclesiastical commissioners. He was consecrated bishop of Bath and Wells in September, 1584. He died Nov. 19, 1590. Among the Parker MSS. in Benedict Church, Cambridge, is a sermon which he preached before the queen at Greenwich, in 1566, concerning the authority of the councils and fathers.

Gorce, HUGH WILLIAM, was a Dutch theologian and physician. After receiving the degree of doctor of medicine, he practiced at Middelburg, where he acquired a great reputation. He understood very well the dialects of north Europe, and the classical languages, and occupied his leisure with archaeology and translating several ancient authors. He died at Middelburg about 1643. For further mention of his works, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goetschius, JOHN HENRY, a Reformed (Dutch) minister (son of a German minister who was sent over, probably in 1728, from the fatherland, to labor among the Germans in and around Philadelphia), was born in 1718, in Switzerland, studied in the University of Zurich, and under Rev. G. H. Dorstius, in Pennsylvania, who, with Rev. J. T. Frelinghuysen, licensed and ordained him in 1738. He was settled successively in North and South Hampton, Pa. (1738), in Jamaica, Newtown, and vicinity, on Long Island (1740), and at Hackensack and Schraalenburgh, N. J. (1748), where he died, Nov. 14, 1774. The validity of his ordination having been questioned, he was newly examined and reordained in 1748, under the authority of the Classis of Amsterdam, by the Costus. But while men disputed, God honored his faithful services, both before and after his second ordination, with frequent and great revivals. His whole ministry was contemporaneous with the agitation of the vexed question of education and ordination in this country, and especially in his last and longest pastorate in New Jersey, where the churches divided and troubled by its unfortunate developments. When the church was locked against him on Long Island, he preached on the steps, or under the trees, or in barns, or in private dwellings. It is related that on one Sabbath the chorister, who in those days announced the Psalms and hymns, gave out the entire 119th Psalm to be sung, to prevent his preaching. Once, when in danger of forcible resistance to his entering the church at Hackensack, he girded on his sword, and with it entered the pulpit, for in those days it was not unusual for clergymen to wear a sword, and carry it into the pulpit and place it behind them during the service. Yet Mr. Goetschius was a man of peace, a learned, pious, godly, faithful, and eminently successful preacher of the gospel in troublous times. He was also the theological instructor of a number of young men who rose to eminence and power in the Church, and who were the apostles of a liberal and independent ecclesiastical polity. Among these were professor Romeyn, the younger Frelinghuysen, Leeydt, and others. He was one of the original trustees of Rutgers College, and a leader in the forward movements of his denomination. "He was below the middle size, of a vigorous constitution, abrupt in speech, but his language was clear and expressive." One of his pupils, Dr. Solomon Froeligh, describes him as "a gentleman of profound erudition, a thoroughbred Calvinist, and an accomplished theologian." See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v.; Taylor, Annals of Classis of Bergen, p. 180; Autobiography of Dr. S. Froeligh. (W. J. R. T.)

Gohren, ADOLPH WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian, was born May 13, 1685, at Copenhagen. He studied at Kiel and Jena, was preacher at the latter place in 1722, member of consistory in 1725, and rector at Hamburg in 1731. He died July 24, 1734. Besides translating into German Buddeus's work, De Atheismo et Superstitione (Jena, 1723), he wrote Diap. Inaug. Theologica de Fermento Phariseorum (1728). See Thiess, Hamburger Gelehrten-Geschichte; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gokei, long strips of white paper, emblems of the divine presence of the Camis (q. v.) among the Japanese. They are kept in little portable mias in all Japanese houses.

Goldberg, BEER, a Jewish writer, was born in 1801 in Poland. In 1840 he went to Berlin, in 1847 to London, in 1852 to Paris, and died there, May 4, 1884. He published, Chofes Mutmonim sive Anecdota Rabbinica (Berlin, 1845):—Yesod Olam, edited for the first time after an old MS. (1848):—Sefer ha-Rikmah, of Ibn-Gemach (Frankfort, 1856):—Sefer Taggin, a masoretic work, edited in connection with Barges:—Risalat, or Ibn-Koreish's treatise on the use of the study of the Targums (Paris, 1867):—Sefer ha-Sichronoth, or a Hebrew concordance, by Elias Levita, edited after a Paris manuscript (Frankfort, 1874). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 337. (B. P.)

Golden, T. C., M.D., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in England, April 16, 1818. He emigrated to America in 1849, settled near Kingston, Wis., and the year following entered the Wisconsin Conference, wherein he successively served Cascade, Sheboygan Falls, Omro, and Fond du Lac, two years each. He was then transferred to the West Wisconsin Conference, and stationed at La Crosse. When the North-west Wisconsin Conference was formed he became a member of it, and was appointed presiding elder of La Crosse district from 1859 to 1862; elected a delegate to General Conference in 1860; Eau Clair district from 1863 to 1866; delegate to General Conference in 1864; located from 1865 to 1869; readmitted to the Upper Iowa Conference in 1870, and for three years was stationed at Mount Vernon, and then was appointed presiding elder of Vinton district. He died May 29, 1879. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 50.

Golden Age is a term used in the Greek and Roman mythology to denote the reign of Saturn (q. v.), when justice and innocence were supposed to have prevailed throughout the earth, and the soil to have produced all that was necessary for the subsistence and enjoyment of mankind.

Goldhorn, David Johann Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Leipsic, July 31, 1810, and died there, professor of theology, Dec. 21, 1874. In connection with Gersdorf, he published, Bibliotheca Patrum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum Selecta (Leipsic, 1838):—wrote besides, Commentatio Historico-Theologica de Summis Principiis Theologiae Aelardus (ed.):—Die theologische Literatur des Jahres 1840 und 1841 (1842-44). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 862, 874, 914; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 448. (B. P.)

Goldhorn, Johann David, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 12, 1774. After having served at different places as preacher, he was called to Leipsic in 1835 as professor of theology, and died Oct. 23, 1836. He published, Ezkurse zum Buche Jonas (Leipsic, 1803):—De Puerorum Innocentia in Sermonibus Sacris, etc. (1828):—Predigten und Kasualreden (8 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 23, 83, 869; ii, 36, 66, 98, 172; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 448 sq. (B. P.)

Goldsbrough, Godfrey, D.D., an Anglican bishop of the 16th century, was born in Cambridge, bred in Trinity College (pupil of archbishop Whitgift), became afterwards fellow thereof, prebend of Hereford in 1585, archdeacon of Salop in 1589, was consecrated bishop of Gloucester in 1598, and died March 26, 1604. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 231.

Goldschad, Gottlieb Conrad, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born May 18, 1719. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1744 regent of the Kreuzschule at Dresden, in 1750 rector of St. Anne, and died in 1767. He wrote, De Mandato Christi Jo. xxi, 15-17 (1760):—Chorus Musicus Gloriam Christi Celebrans ex Ps. lxxviii, 26 (1751):—Septem Spiritus ante Dei Thronum ex Apoc. i, 4 (1752):—De Præfectis Pacificis et Exactoribus Justis Ecclesia a Deo Promissis ex Esaiæ lx, 17 (1755):—Salomonis de Juventutis Institutione Consilium ac Prælium ex Prov. xxii, 6 (1760):—Historische Nachricht von der Amnen Kirche vor Dresden (1763). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Goldsmith, John, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Riverhead, N. Y., April 10, 1794. He graduated from the College of New Jersey in 1815, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1819; was ordained a minister by the Presbytery of New York, Nov. 17, the same year; preached at Newtown, L. I., thereafter until his death, April 6, 1854. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 22.

Goldwell, James, LL.D., an English prelate of the 15th century, was born at Great Chart, Kent, educated in All-Souls' College, Oxford, promoted prebend of Hereford in 1461, dean of Salisbury in 1463, secretary to king Edward IV, and at last made bishop of Norwich in 1472. He repaired the church at Great Chart, and founded a chapel on its south side. He died Feb. 15, 1498. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 137.

Goldwell, Thomas, an English prelate, was born at Goldwell, parish of Great Chart, Kent. Being a Benedictine, he was by queen Mary preferred bishop of St. Asaph's in 1558, but quitted the land in the first year of queen Elizabeth's reign, and, going to Rome, induced the pope to grant indulgences to those who made a pilgrimage to the well of St. Winifred, in his diocese. He died in Rome about 1581. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 137.

Golod, John, an Armenian patriarch of Constantinople, was born at Bales, and educated in the monastery of Amerdolu. During his patriarchate three churches belonging to the Armenians of Constantinople, which had been burned down, were rebuilt with taste and elegance. He also built several schools. The only writing of which he is the author is a profession of faith, which he addressed to the papal court at Rome. He sought to re-establish the harmony between the national Armenians and the united Armenians or Roman Catholics. He was accused of softness by his people, and seeing that the preaching of the missionaries gave occasion to troubles, he closed their churches. Golod died in 1741. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goltz (Lat. Goltzius), Hendrik, a pre-eminent Dutch engraver and painter, was born at Mülbrecht, in the duchy of Juliers, in 1558, and studied engraving under Theodore Cuernbert. He afterwards visited Italy, and studied the works of Raphael, Michael Angelo, and P. da Caravaggio. He began painting at the age of forty-two, and executed a number of fine pictures, the first of which was the Crucifixion, with the Virgin Mary and St. John. As an engraver, he was far more distinguished: his prints number over five hundred. The following are some of the principal: The Life and Passion of Our Saviour; Christ and the Apostles; The Circumcision; The Adoration of the Magi; The Wise Men's Offering; The Temptation of St. Anthony; The Holy Family; The Nativity; The Murder of the Innocents; The Annunciation; The Last Supper; The Fall of Adam and Eve; The Dead Christ Supported by an Angel. Goltz died at Haerlem in 1617. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gomarists, a name sometimes applied to the Calvinists in Holland in the 17th century, after Francis Gomar (q. v.), an eminent opponent of the Arminians in the synod of Dort.

Gomez, Juan, a reputable historical painter of Madrid, was born about 1550. He painted several subjects from the life of St. Jerome; also the large picture of the Martyrdom of St. Ursula. He restored the Annunciation and the St. Jerome Penitent, by F. Zuccheri, which Philip II had rejected and ordered to be retouched. He died in 1597. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Gomidas, an Armenian patriarch, was born at Aghtsits, in the canton of Arakadzoin. He was bishop of the Mamigonians, when he was elected patriarch in 617. After the death of John III, Gomidas erected a magnificent church, dedicated to St. Hripsimie. He died in 625, leaving Nerpogh Hripsimiu ("Hymn in honor of St. Hripsime"), which is still contained in the Armenian liturgy. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gondi Version of the Scriptures. This dialect is spoken by the Gonds, one of the most remarkable of the hill-tribes in North-west India. In 1872 the Gospel according to Matthew, as translated by the Rev. Mr. Dawson, was printed at Allahabad, to which the gospel of Mark was added in 1874. See Driberg and Harrison, Narrative of a Second Visit to the Gonds of the Nerbudda Territory, with a Grammar and Vocabulary of their Language (1849).

Gondi, Pierre de, a cardinal-bishop of Paris, was born in 1533. He studied jurisprudence at Toulouse, and theology at Paris. Before 1569 he was bishop of Langres and grand-almoner of Catherine de Medici. In the following year he became bishop of Paris. A short time after the death of his brother, Henry III sent him to Rome to ask of the pope permission to alienate from the revenues of the clergy 50,000 gold florins. During the league, the Spaniards sought in vain to draw him into their party. He refused the cardinal's hat which Sixtus V offered to him in 1588, except on consent of the king. He died Feb. 17, 1616. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gondrin, Louis Henry de Pardaillan de, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Gondrin, in the diocese of Auch, in 1620. He studied at the College of La Flèche, at the University of Paris, and in the Sorbonne. Being a relative of the bishop of Sens, Octavius of Bellegarde, he was appointed his coadjutor in 1645, and succeeded him the following year. He was one of the first who censured the Apology of the Casuists. In 1653 he signed the letter of the assembly of the clergy to pope Innocent X, in which the prelates recognised only the five famous propositions of Jansenius. He disapproved of the conduct of his niece, Mme. de Montespan, at the court. He died at the abbey of Chaulnes, Sept. 20, 1674, leaving letters and pastoral ordinances. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gonnellieu, Jérôme de, a French Jesuit, was born at Soissons, Sept. 8, 1640. At the age of sixteen he joined his order, and died at Paris in 1717. He wrote, De l'Essence de la Vie Spirituelle (Paris, 1701):—De la Présence de Dieu qui Renferme tous les Principes de la Vie Intérieure (ibid. 1708):—Méthode pour Bien Prier (1710):—Pratique de la Vie Intérieure (eod.):—Le Sermon de Notre-Seigneur à ses Apôtres Après la Cène (1712). For a long time there was attributed to him a translation of the Imitation of Christ, which was published at Nancy in 1712, for which edition he only wrote the prayers and the application at the end of each chapter. The work of translation was, in fact, made by a printer and member of the Paris parliament, Jean Cursor, who published it for the first time in 1678 under his own name. But the ambiguous title of the edition published in 1712, Imitation de Jésus-Christ, avec des Pratiques et des Prières, par le P. de Gonnellieu (Nancy), led to the error of palming the authorship of the translation upon Gonnellieu; and in spite of the testimony of Calmet, Barbier, and Brunet against this authorship, the error has been perpetuated, and Gonnellieu's name continued to figure in the new editions published in 1818, 1822, and 1856. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Göntgen, Jonathan Gottlieb, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 13, 1752, at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, and died there, May 7, 1807. He published, Der Schriftforscher (Leipzig, 1787-89, 3 vols.):—Luther's Kleiner Katechismus (ibid. 1791):—Reden bei der Vorbereitung zur christlichen Feier des heiligen Abendmahls (ibid. 1800). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 183, 213; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Gonthier, François Auguste Alphonse, a Protestant theologian, was born at Yverdon, Dec. 21, 1773. He studied at Lausanne, was in 1805 pastor at Nîmes, and died at Nyons in 1834. He published, Lectures Chrétiennes (1824):—Mélanges Évangéliques:—Lettres Chrétiennes:—Petite Bibliothèque des Pères de l'Église. See Montet, Dict. des Gênois et des Vaudois, etc. (Lausanne, 1877): Archives du Christianisme (1834); Bibliothèque Universelle (1861); Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 335. (B. P.)

Gonthier, Jean Baptiste Bernard, a French theologian, was born at Dijon, and died there, June 1, 1678. He wrote, Règlement du Séminaire de Langres (Langres, 1663):—Le Grand Catechisme du Diocèse de Langres (Dijon, 1664):—Exercices du Chrétien pour le Matin et le Soir (ibid. eod.):—Le Directeur Portatif (ibid. 1662, 1674). See Papillon, Bibl. des Auteurs de Bourgogne; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gonzaga, Ercole de, an Italian cardinal, born in 1505, was the son of John Francis II, duke of Mantua. After he had studied at Bologna under the direction of Pomponacius, he was appointed bishop of Mantua in 1520, six years afterwards was made cardinal, and called to the archbishopric of Tarragona. In 1540 he took in his hands the direction of the government of the duchy of Mantua. In 1562 he was appointed by pope Pius IV to preside at the Council of Trent as first legate of the holy see, but he died March 2, 1663, leaving a catechism in Latin, published for the pastors of Mantua. He composed also a treatise on De Institutione Vita Christiana, in MS. In the library of Este there are two volumes of letters written by him during 1559. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gonzaga, Pirro de, an Italian cardinal, was born in the second part of the 15th century. He contributed to the deliverance of pope Clement VII, who had been kept in prison by Charles V. The pope rewarded him by appointing him a cardinal, and archbishop of Modena in 1527. He died in 1529. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gonzaga, Scipione de, an Italian cardinal, was born Nov. 21, 1542. Cardinal Ercole de Gonzaga educated him with much care, and at the age of sixteen Scipione had perfectly acquired the ancient languages. He then studied philosophy at the University of Padua. In 1563 he founded in that city the Academy of the Etereï, of which he remained the protector during the remainder of his life. Finally he entered into the ministry, and was appointed patriarch of Jerusalem. In 1587 he received the cardinalate from pope Sixtus V. He was the intimate friend of Tasso. He died Jan. 11, 1598, leaving several pieces in verse, which were published among others, in 1567, of the Academy of the Etereï. In 1597 the abbot Marotti published Commentarii de Vita sua, memoirs written in Latin by Gonzaga. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gonzaga, Sigismondo de, an Italian captain and cardinal, was born in the second part of the 15th century. In his military career he distinguished himself as a clever general. In 1505 he was made cardinal by Julius II, whom he defended with considerable energy against his numerous enemies. In 1511 he was appointed bishop of Mantua, and died there in 1525. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gonzalvo, Martin, a Spanish religious impostor of the 14th century, was born at Cuenca, and called himself the archangel Michael, to whom God had reserved the place of Lucifer, and who would some day fight against antichrist. The Inquisition burned him, but his disciple, Nicolas de Calabrois, sought to represent him after his death as the Son of God, and preached that the Holy Spirit would become incarnate, and that at the day of judgment Gonzalvo would deliver by his prayers all the condemned. De Calabrois also perished in the flames. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gon-Zoar, Kin-Zo, a Japanese Buddhist monk, was born in 758, in the district of Taka-Tki, a province of Yamato. One day his mother saw in a vision an august being embracing her in his arms, and shortly afterwards she bore this son. In his twelfth year he entered a hermitage. About the year 796 he commenced the publication of a commentary in eight parts, of Fats-Ke-gyô (in Chinese Fa-Hoa-King), or sacred book of the Japanese. After his death in 827, he received the name of So-dayo. He is famous in Japan for having possessed such a high degree of knowledge on the Buddhistic dogmas, and among others for having fixed the actual order of the Japanese alphabet. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Good Sons, Order of, a religious congregation of the third order of St. Francis, was founded in 1615, at Armentieres, a small town in Flanders, by five pious artisans. In 1626 they adopted the third rule of St. Francis. The order progressed gradually, and in 1670 consisted of two congregations, that of Lisle being added to the first one formed. Shortly after a third was formed at St. Omer, and Louis XIV gave them the direction of various public hospitals. They practiced great austerity, and used the discipline of the scourge three times a week.

Goode, WILLIAM H., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Warren County, O., June 19, 1807. He began school-teaching at the age of seventeen, in Green County; afterwards removed to Madison, Ind., where he continued teaching, and studied law; was admitted to the bar before he was twenty-one; experienced religion about this time; at the age of twenty was elected president of Gallatin County Seminary, Port William, Ky., which position he held for two years; then returned to Indiana and followed farming seven or eight years; was licensed to preach in 1835; in 1836 entered the Indiana Conference, and was appointed to Lexington Circuit. A few months later he was elected principal of the New Albany Seminary. Subsequently he was sent to Jeffersonville and Indianapolis stations; in 1842 was appointed presiding elder of South Bend District, but in the middle of the year was transferred to the Arkansas Conference, and appointed to Fort Coffee Academy and mission, Choctaw nation, where he remained till 1845. In 1844 he formed the Indian Mission Conference, and became a member of it. In 1845 he was transferred to the North Indiana Conference. He afterwards labored on Peru District, four years on Greencastle District, and four years on Indianapolis District; was appointed to Richmond Station in 1853, then had charge of the entire territory between Texas and Nebraska, and the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains. His subsequent appointments were in the same region until 1860, when he was transferred to the Western Iowa Conference, and appointed to Lowden District; Council Bluffs District in 1861; in 1862 was retransferred to the North Indiana Conference, and appointed to Union Chapel (now Grace Church), Richmond. Thereafter he served on various districts, and finally (1877-79) became superannuated. He died in Richmond, Ind., Dec. 16, 1879. Dr. Goode possessed a very high order of intellect, a deep religious character, great pulpit power, was a born leader of men, eminent for uncompromising integrity, and entirely free from inordinate ambition. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 71.

Goodell, WILLIAM, a Congregational minister, was born at Windsor, N. Y., Oct. 25, 1792. For some years he was a merchant, first in Providence, R. I., then in Wilmington, N. C., and afterwards in Alexandria, Va. In 1827 he became editor of the Weekly Investigator, at Providence, R. I. Two years after he went to Boston, his paper having been consolidated with the National Philanthropist, published there. In 1830 he began editing the Genius of Temperance, in New York city, and later he was editor of the Emancipator. From 1836 to 1842 he edited the Friend of Man, at Utica, N. Y.; in 1843 was at the head of a paper in Whitesboro', called the Christian Investigator, and it was in that year that he organized a Congregational church in Honeoye, on anti-slavery and temperance principles, to which congregation he ministered for eight years, although he declined ordination. When he returned to New York, in 1853, he became editor of the Radical Abolitionist, afterwards called the Principia. In 1865 he removed to Bozrville, Conn., and supplied the Church in that place. From 1870 he resided in Janesville, Wis. He died Feb. 14, 1878. Besides a large number of pamphlets, principally on the subject of slavery, he published three larger works, viz.: The Democracy of Christianity (1850, 2 vols.); — History of Slavery and Anti-slavery (1852); — American Slave Code (1853). See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 42.

Goodenough, JOHN JOSEPH, D.D., a Church of England divine, was born in 1780. He graduated at New College, Oxford, in 1801; in 1812 was appointed head master of the Bristol Free Grammar-school, which failed under his administration. He held one or two small pieces of preferment, together with his mastership, before taking the family living of Broughton Pogis, Oxfordshire, in 1845, at which place he died, April 22, 1856. See Hardwicke, Annual Biography, 1856, p. 214.

Goodford, CHARLES OLD, D.D., a Church of England divine, was born in Somerset in 1812, and educated at Eton and Cambridge (A.B. 1836). He was for many years assistant master at Eton; became head master in 1858, and succeeded Dr. Hawtry as provost in 1862. He held the rectory of Chilton Canteloo from 1856, and died May 9, 1884.

Goodrich, WILLIAM HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New Haven, Jan. 19, 1823, being the son of Rev. C. A. Goodrich, D.D., grandson of Noah Webster, LL.D., and great-grandson of Rev. Elizur Goodrich, D.D. He graduated at Yale College in 1843, and Yale Divinity School in 1847, and was tutor in Yale College two years. After making the tour of Europe, he accepted, in 1850, a call to the pastoral charge of the Congregational Church of Bristol, Conn., where he remained four years. He was then called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of Binghamton, N. Y., where he remained till 1858, and then removed to Cleveland, O., as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, where his work was marked by very great success. In 1872, after securing the settlement of the Rev. H. C. Haydn as associate pastor, he left for a visit to foreign lands, that thus his health might be restored; but he died at Lausanne, Switzerland, July 11, 1874. As a preacher, Dr. Goodrich was seldom speculative and theoretical, never dogmatic nor sectarian, but eminently spiritual and practical. A very strong point in his character was his downright, never-failing common-sense. He was remarkable for insight into the character of all with whom he had to do.

Goodsell, Buel, a veteran Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Dover, N. Y., July 25, 1793. He was converted at the age of sixteen; in 1814 was received into the New York Conference, and served Granville Circuit, Mass. and Conn.; in 1815, Stowe Circuit, Vt.; in 1816, Chazy Circuit, N. Y.; in 1817, Middleburgh, Vt.; in 1818-19, St. Alban's Circuit; in 1820-21, Chazy Circuit, N. Y.; in 1822, Charlotte Circuit, Vt.; in 1823-26, Champlain District; in 1827, Fitchtown, N. Y.; in 1828-29, Schenectady; in 1830-31, New York city; in 1832-33, Troy; in 1834-37, Troy District; in 1838-39, John Street, New York city; in 1840-41, North Newburgh; in 1842-43, White Plains; in 1844-45, York Street, Brooklyn; in 1846-47, Willett Street, New York city; in 1848-49, Norwalk, Conn.; in 1850-51, Hempstead, L. I.; in 1852-53, New Rochelle, N. Y.; in 1854, East Brooklyn, L. I.; in 1855-58, Long Island District; in 1859-60, Greenpoint, Brooklyn; in 1861-62, Rockaway, L. I.; and thereafter East Chester and City Island, N. Y., until his death, May 4, 1863. Mr. Goodsell was a laborious, faithful, and successful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1864, p. 88.

Goodsell, Dana, a veteran Presbyterian minister, was born at Bradford, Conn., Aug. 28, 1808. He entered Princeton Seminary in 1827, and remained there over two years; began a year's service in Mississippi as agent of the American Sunday-school Union, Oct. 8, 1830; and in the autumn of 1836 was laboring at Lowell, Mass. He was ordained and installed as pastor at Plainfield, Sept. 27, 1837, and dismissed Sept. 25, 1839; was next installed pastor at South Amherst, Mass., April 21, 1841, and after laboring there with much acceptance, was dismissed Nov. 12, 1846. Subsequently to 1847 he travelled in the West and South, in the service of the American Tract Society, preaching to destitute churches, and distributing religious books. In failing health he next went to North Carolina, where he accumulated much property, which was lost on the opening of the civil war in 1861. He then returned to the North, and henceforth spent most of his time in Philadelphia, where he preached as opportunity offered, and engaged in other Christian labor. In his old age he lost the remainder of his property and was cast upon the charity of the world. Becoming very feeble, he was taken, June 17, 1874, to "The Old Man's Home" in West Philadelphia, where he died, Feb. 19, 1876. Mr. Goodsell was a man of strong intellect and firm convictions, wonderfully gifted in prayer, quiet and devoted. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 24.

Goodspeed, Edgar Johnson, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Johnsbury, Warren Co., N. Y., May 31, 1833. He studied in the academy at Glenn's Falls, spent part of one year at Union College, Schenectady, and graduated from the University of Rochester in 1853, and from the Rochester Theological Seminary in 1856. Immediately he was ordained pastor of the Central Baptist Church in Poughkeepsie, and in the fall of 1858 removed to Janesville, Wis., in the same capacity, where he had eminent success. On the formation of the Second Baptist Church of Chicago, in 1864, he was called to be its pastor, and for several years labored with great constancy and success. In the winter of 1870 and 1871 he was suddenly prostrated by asthma, and spent several months in Europe. On his return he received for his colleague his brother, Rev. T. W. Goodspeed; and in 1876 was forced to resign. He next spent a year and a half at New Market, N. J., in entire rest and freedom from care, and then accepted a call to the Central Church of Syracuse, N. Y. In 1879 he took charge of the Benedict Institute, Columbia, S. C., with the hope that a milder climate would benefit his health. The school largely increased under his administration; but in the midst of his usefulness he died, June 12, 1881. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Chicago University and of the Theological Seminary. He was editor of Cobb's Commentary on the Bible, and wrote The Wonderful Career of Moody and Sankey in Great Britain and America:—The Life of Jesus, for Young People:—The Lives of the Apostles, for the Young:—The Great Fires in Chicago and the West:—A History of the Centennial. See Chicago Standard, June 23, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Goodwillie, Thomas, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Barnet, Caledonia Co., Vt., Sept. 27, 1800. His parents were natives of Scotland, and emigrated to the United States in 1788. He graduated from Dartmouth College, N. H., in 1820. In 1823 was licensed by Cambridge Presbytery, and in 1826 installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Barnet. He was a man of large experience, and an accomplished scholar. He travelled extensively through Europe in order to recuperate his health, as well as to study the workings of Catholicism. He was a life member of the American Bible Society. Dr. Goodwillie died Feb. 11, 1867. He possessed good natural ability, carefully cultivated and improved by study and intercourse with men. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 265.

Goodwin, Benjamin, D.D., an English Baptist minister, was born at Bath, Oct. 10, 1785, educated at the Blue School, began to learn Latin, Greek, and Hebrew while an apprentice, but went to sea, and was pressed into the navy. In 1802 he returned to Bath, was converted, and joined the Church in 1803. In 1805 he became an itinerant evangelist, and in 1808 settled as pastor at Chipping-Sodbury. In 1811 he removed to Dartmouth, and in 1815 to Great Missenden, Bucks. In 1822 he was appointed classical professor at Horton, where he continued to labor with untiring vigor during many years. In 1828 he entered heartily into the controversy on popery, in 1830 delivered lectures against "colonial slavery," and in 1834 lectured on the atheistic controversy. In 1838 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Oxford, and took a leading part in reconciling the differences which had arisen in the Serampore mission. In 1842 he took part in the jubilee at Kettering of the founding of the Baptist missions. In 1843 he exposed the evil tendency of Dr. Pusey's teaching on the eucharist. In 1846 he returned to Bradford; in 1850 was chairman of the London meeting of the Baptist Union; in 1858 enlarged and redelivered his lectures on atheism; in 1855 he removed to Rawdon; at the age of eighty joined in the Baptist Union meeting; in 1868 he wrote two elaborate essays on the Future State, and died Feb. 20, 1871. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1872.

Goodwin, William H., D.D., LL.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Goodwin's Point, Tompkins Co., N. Y., June 12, 1812. He was converted at nineteen years of age, and the next year entered the Genesee Conference. His appointments were: first in his native place, then Ovid, Catharine, Brockport, East Rochester, Lyons, Canandaigua, Vienna, and Penn Yan. In 1848, on the division of the conference, he became a member of the East Genesee Conference, wherein he served Lyons, East Rochester, Elmira, Geneva, Hornellsville District, Elmira District, Rochester District, Geneva, Clifton Springs, Rushville, Ovid, and in 1874 Dryden, where his health failed, and where he died, Feb. 17, 1876. Mr. Goodwin was chosen state senator from Ontario and Livingston counties in 1854; and in 1865 was appointed regent of the University of New York. He was, in personal appearance, very prepossessing, tall, well developed, noble; in character, frank, generous to a fault; had a voice rarely equalled in depth, fulness, and sweetness; imagination fertile and chaste; a mind of great natural strength, finely cultured in logic and rhetoric; and a sincere enthusiasm that overcame all obstacles. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 188; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, a. v.

Gopis, in Hindû mythology, are the nine beautiful maidens who accompanied the youthful Krishna, and with him danced at night on the plains of Agra. Krishna is the Apollo, and these Gopis are the muses of the Hindûs. The number nine might be doubtful, were not Krishna represented riding on an elephant, which is artistically composed of the forms of these Gopis.

Görcke, Hermann Moritz, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 26, 1803, and died March 6, 1883, at Zarben, in Pomerania. He is the author of Bibel-Jahr (Berlin, 1857-60; 4 vols.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 451. (B. P.)

Gordon, Adam, a Scotch prelate, was dean of Caithness and minister at Pettie, and was bishop of the see of Caithness. When he was made bishop is not known. He died at Elgin, June 4, 1528. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 214.

Gordon, Alexander (1), a Scotch bishop, was first rector of Fetteresso, in the shire of Mearns, next chanter or precentor of the see of Moray, and was consecrated bishop of Aberdeen about 1517. He died June 29, 1518. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 119.

Gordon, Alexander (2), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of the Isles Nov. 21, 1553; from this see he was translated to that of Galloway in 1558. In 1570 he preached in John Knox's pulpit, at Edinburgh. In 1576 he was a judge in the Court of Session. He died in the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 279, 307.

Gordon, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Galloway Feb. 4, 1688, and consecrated at Glasgow. After the revolution he followed king James to Ireland, and then to France, and while at St. Germain's read the liturgy of the Church of England to all Protestants who came to hear. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 283.

Gordon, John (2), D.D., F.S.A., a Church of England divine, was born at Whitworth, Durham, in 1725. He was a graduate of Emanuel College, Cambridge, Ancient Representation of the two Gorgons, Stheno and Euryale, complaining to Neptune of the Fate of their Sister Medusa.

where he took the degrees of A.B. in 1748, A.M. in 1752, and D.D. in 1765, at Peterhouse; and was elected a fellow of Emanuel College in 1751. At his decease, which occurred Jan. 19, 1793, he was precentor and archdeacon of Lincoln, and rector of Henstead, Suffolk. He was the author of a New Estimate of the Manners and Principles of the Times, 8 parts:—Occasional Thoughts on the Study of Classical Authors (1762):—and two Sermons preached at Cambridge. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1793, p. 69.

Gordon, Thomas, a noted religious writer, was born in Kirkcudbright, Galloway, Scotland, about 1684, and had a university education. While young he went to London, at first as a teacher, and afterwards as a writer, becoming widely known for his political and religious articles and pamphlets. He died July 28, 1750. He published, Tacitus Translated into English (1728-31):—The Independent Whig, or a Defence of Primitive Christianity (1732):—Sallust Translated into English (1744):—two collections of tracts: I. A Cordial for Low Spirits (1750); II. The Pillars of Priestcraft and Orthodoxy Shaken (ed.). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gordon, Thomas Patterson, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Monongahela City, Washington Co., Pa., July 23, 1813. He graduated from Jefferson College, Canonsburg, in 1834, and from the Theological Seminary at Allegheny in 1837; was licensed by Ohio Presbytery, and ordained pastor of the Buffalo Church in Cumberland, where he labored till 1842 with great acceptance. In 1846 he was appointed an agent for the Board of Domestic Missions, but the same year became pastor at Allegheny, Pa.; in 1850 he removed to Wellsville, O.; in 1856 became pastor of the Sixth Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.; in 1857 removed to Terre Haute, Ind., and died there, Aug. 15, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 150.

Gordon, William (1), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Aberdeen about 1556, and died there in 1557. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 122.

Gordon, William (2), D.D., an English clergyman and historian, was born at Hitchin, Hertfordshire, in 1729, and educated at a Dissenting academy near London. He was pastor of an Independent Church at Ipswich, and was subsequently successor to Dr. David Jennings, in the church at Old Gravel Lane, Wapping. He removed to America in 1770, and became minister of the Third Church, Roxbury, Mass. In 1781 he returned to England, and preached both at St. Neots, Huntingdonshire, and at Ipswich. He died at the latter place, Oct. 19, 1807. He published sermons, etc., 1772, 1775, 1777, 1783:—An Abridgment of Jonathan Edwards' Treatise on the Religious Affections:—A History of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America (1788). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gorgons, in Greek mythology, were daughters of Phorcys and Ceto, of extraordinary beauty, but because of their pride were changed by the gods into snake-haired monsters. Their heads were covered with dragon-scales, they had teeth like hyenas, brazen hands, and wings. Their appearance was so horrible that all who saw them were transformed into stone. Their names were: Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa; the latter is usually called Gorgo. The first two were immortal, Medusa was not. When Perseus was ordered to get the head of the Gorgon, only Medusa could have been meant. See MEDUSA.

Gorham, Nicholas, an eminent Dominican of the 14th century, was born at Gorham, near St. Alban's, Hertfordshire, educated at Merton College, Oxford, went to France when a young man, spent the rest of his life there, and died in Paris about 1400. "Many and learned are his books," says Thomas Fuller, "having commented on almost all the Scriptures, and no hands have fewer spots of pitch upon them who touched the superstitious of that age" (Worthies of England, ed Nuttall, ii, 51).

Göring, Christian Carl Ernst, a Lutheran theologian, who died June 18, 1866, at Windsheim, in Bavaria, is the author of, Mitgabe für's Leben (4th ed. Nuremberg, 1848, 2 parts):—Täglicher Wandel des Christen, etc. (4th ed. Nördlingen, 1854):—Morgen- und Abendsegen des Christen (4th ed. 1858):—Passions-Buch (1856):—Kern des deutschen Liederschatzes (1828), etc. See Zuchold, *Bibl. Gorionides. See JOSEPH BEN-GORION.

Gorlov, Stephen, a philologist, was born in Prussia, Dec. 27, 1619. He studied at Königsberg, was in 1647 professor of Hebrew there, and died Aug. 19, 1678. He wrote, Disp. de Christo Filio Eterni Patris:—De Detorsionibus et Exceptionibus Nonnullis Judeorum in Lippmanni Nizzachon:—De Confusionis Linguarum Origine et Modo:—De Initio Decalogi Exod. xx, 1:—De Protevangelio Gen. iii, 15:—De Sono Tubarum Sanctuariorum. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 339. (B. P.)

Gorran, Nicolas de, a French theologian, was born probably in 1230. After having begun his studies with the preaching friars of Le Mans, he went to the college of Saint Jacob, at Paris; became immediately afterwards one of the lecturers of the college, and, having gained some reputation in the pulpit, was appointed confessor to the king of Navarre, son of Phillippe the Bold. Gorran died in 1295. He wrote some commentaries or postils on the Holy Scriptures, and sermons, a few only of which were published. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Görres. See GOKERRES.

Gorsius, Petrus, a French Jesuit, was born in 1590, and died at Besiers, April 27, 1661. He is the author of, Meditationes in Omnes Dominicas et Festa Totius Anni:—Explicatio in Proverbia Solomonis:—Explicatio in Ecclesiastem:—Explicatio in Ecclesiasticum:—Explicatio in Librum Sapientie. Gorskius, JACOBUS, a Polish Roman Catholic theologian, and archdeacon at Gnesen, who died June 17, 1585, is the author of, De Unu Legitimo Eucharistia:—De Baptismo Prædestinatorum:—Animadversiones in Theologos Würtemberg:—Adversus Apostatam Christ. Francken. See Staravolscius, Scriptorum Poloniae Centuria; Ghilini, Teatro d'Uomini Letterati; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gosains (or Goswami) are the Hindû priests of Eklinga, in Rajasthan. They all wear a crescent in the forehead—the distinguishing mark of the faith of Siva. It is not uncommon to find Gosains, who have made a vow of celibacy, following secular pursuits, such as the mercantile and military professions. Some of these are among the richest merchants of India, while the soldiers possess lands, and beg or serve for pay when called upon.

Goscelin, a Benedictine of St. Bertin, in Artois, who went to England in 1049, and died at the monastery of St. Augustin, in Canterbury, is the author of, Historia Minor de Vita S. Augustini, Cantuar. Archiepiscopi:—Historia Major de Vita S. Augustini, etc. See Foppens, Bibl. Belgica, i, 379 (1739); Histoire Littéraire de France, viii; Wright, Biogr. Brit. i, 518, 521 (1842); Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Goslawski (Lat. Goslawius), ADAM, of Bebelno, an adherent of Socinus, lived in Poland in the first part of the 17th century, and wrote works in Latin (Kakow, 1607, 1620). Their object is to refute the system of Keckerman and of Martin on the divinity of Jesus Christ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goslicki, WAWRZYNIEC (Lat. Goslicius, Laurentius Grimalius), a learned Polish ecclesiastic, was born about 1533, and educated at Craow and Padua. He took orders in the Roman Catholic Church, and was successively appointed bishop of Kaminiets and Posen. He was active in public affairs, and was frequently engaged in political matters. Through his influence the Jesuits were prevented from establishing their schools at Craow. He was also a strenuous advocate of religious toleration in Poland. He died Oct. 31, 1607. His principal work is De Optimo Senatore, etc. (Venice, 1568), of which there are two English translations, A Commonwealth of Good Counsaile, etc. (1607), and The Accomplished Senator, done into English by Mr. Oldisworth (1733). See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Gosman, JOHN, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in New York city in 1784. He graduated from Columbia College in 1801, and studied theology with Drs. Alexander Proudfit and John M. Mason; was licensed by the Presbytery of Washington in 1804, and supplied the Presbyterian churches of Lansingburg, etc., until 1808, when he became pastor at Kingston, to which, for three years, Hurley was attached. In 1835 he removed to the Second Reformed Church, Philadelphia, Pa., but remained only one year. After this he officiated as a stated supply in Port Byron Presbytery Church (1838-41), and Coeymans and New Baltimore. In 1842 he became pastor of the Reformed Church, in Hudson, and remained eleven years, resigning on account of years and health. But he could not be idle even in his retirement, and so again resumed pastoral work in the little country charge of Flatbush, Ulster Co., in 1854. He resigned in 1859, and died in 1865. Dr. Gosman was a man of commanding presence and genial manners, gifted with brilliant genius, artless as a child, generous and disinterested, full of vivacity and cheerfulness, humorous and witty, transparent, sincere, and attractive. His mind was quick, active, philosophical, and powerful, and his reading covered a wide range in literature and theology. In the pulpit he often exhibited a rare and wonderful eloquence. His sermons were filled with apt illustrations, governed by almost faultless taste, and enriched by his knowledge of the best authors and of our English tongue. His memory was uncommonly retentive. His style was rich, terse, accurate, nervous, strong, and beautiful. In every good work he was a leader. See Memorial Addresses and Tributes; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Gospel, BOOK OF THE, the name of the volume from which the lessons were read. We extract an account of it from Walcott, Sac. Archæol. s. v. See EVANGELISTARIUM.

"This volume, usually splendidly illuminated and bound in jewelled covers, always stood on the altar upon a stand, and the latter is called in 1640, in England, a desk: with degrees of advancement, in 1558 it stood in the midst of the altar. Two tapers, according to Amalarinus, were carried before the gospeller to represent the light of the gospel in the world, and other candles, signifying the law and the prophets, were extinguished, to show their accomplishment in the gospel. In St. Augustine's time the gospel was read on the north side, in allusion to the prophetic verse, Jer. iii, 19: and the old sacramentaries added, because it is preached to those cold in faith; but at Rome, because the men sat on the south side, and the women on the north, the deacon turned to the former, as mentioned by Amalarinus, probably in allusion to 1 Cor. xiv, 35. The Gemma Animæ speaks of reading from the north side as a new custom, but it is prescribed by the use of Hereford and Seville. In some parts of England, however, the south side was still observed as late as the 15th century. When the epistle was read on the lowest, the gospel was read on the upper choir steps from a lectern: on principal festivals, Palm Sunday, and the eves of Easter and Pentecost, they were read in the rood-loft. As at St. Paul's, in cathedrals of the new foundation, also, and in all cathedrals, by the canons of 1603, a gospeller and epistolary, or deacon and subdeacon, who are either minor canons or priest-vicars, are appointed; they are to be vested 'agreeably' to the celebrant or principal minister, that is, in copes. In 1159 all these were to be canons at York, by pope Alexander III's order. Anasta-

Ancient Book of the Gospels.

sins I, c. 406, ordered all priests to stand and bow reverently at the reading of the gospel. In the 6th century the people stood at the reading of both these lectures, but standing was retained at the gospel only, in deference to Him that speaketh therein. At the end of the epistle the words are said, 'Here endeth the epistle,' but no such form follows the gospel, because it is continued in the creed. The custom of saying 'Glory be to thee, O Lord,' prescribed before the gospel in Edward VI's First Book, and saying after it 'Thanks be to God for his holy gospel,' is as old as the time of St. Chrysostom. In Poland, during a time of idolatry, prince Miecslaus ordered in 968 that at mass, as a sign of Christian faith, while the gospel was reading every man should draw his sword half out of his scabbard, to show that all were ready to fight to death for the gospel. There was a curious English mediæval superstition of crossing the legs when the gospel from the first chapter of St. John was read. The Gospel oak was the tree at which the gospel was read in the Rogation processions."

GOSPELS, APOCRYPHAL (OR SPURIOUS). By way of supplement we add the following. At an early period two classes of these works were noted: first, such as have reference to the infancy of Christ, or Evangelia Infantia; and, secondly, such as speak of his passion, or Evangelia Passiois Jesu Christi. The following are now extant:

1. Proteuangelium Jacobi, or, according to its title in the manuscripts, The History of James concerning the Birth of Mary ('Η ἱστορία Ἰακώβου περὶ τῆς γεννήσεως Μαρίας). See Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853), p. 1-49; Wright, Contributions to the Apocryphal Literature of the New Testament, Collected and Edited from Syriac MSS. in the British Museum (Lond. 1865).

2. Evangelium Pseudo-Matthæi sive Liber de Ortu Beatae Mariæ et Infanciae Salvatoris. See Thilo, Coдекс Apocryphus New Test. p. 337-400; Schade, Liber de Infancia Mariæ et Christi Salvatoris (Halle, 1869); Tischendorf, l. c. p. 50-105.

3. Evangelium de Nativitate Mariæ, which seems to be but another form of 2. See Tischendorf, l. c. p. 106-114.

4. Historia Josephi Fabri Lignarii. See Tischendorf, p. 115-183.

5. Evangelium Thomæ. Tischendorf, who discovered different recensions, gives a threefold text, two in Greek, and one in Latin. The Greek titles are (1), Θωμᾶ ἱσραηλίου φιλοσόφου ῥητὰ εἰς τὰ παιδικὰ τοῦ Κυρίου; (2) Σύνγραμμα τοῦ ἁγίου; (3) Ἀποστόλου Θωμᾶ περὶ τῆς παιδικῆς ἀναστορέσεως τοῦ Κυρίου. The Latin title is, Tractatus de Pueritia Jesu Secundum Thomam. A Syriac text with an English translation was published by Wright (Lond. 1875).

6. Evangelium Infantia Arabicum. See Tischendorf, p. 171-202.

7. Evangelium Nicodemæ, consisting of two separate works, (a) Gesta Pilati and (b) Descensus Christi ad Infernos. Both these works were joined together at an early date, though the combination did not receive the name it now bears until after the time of Charlemagne. The original title of the first work was Ὑπομνήματα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ πρὸς τὴν Πύλιν Πιλάτου, hence the Latin title, Gesta Pilati (in Gregor. Turon. Hist. Franc. i, 21, 24) or Acta Pilati (Justin Mart. Apolog. i, 35). The author of the Acta Pilati was probably a Jewish Christian, and the work is of some importance for the explanation and further elucidation of the canonical gospels. See Hofmann, Leben Jesu, p. 264, 379, 386, 396; Tischendorf, Pilati circa Christum Judicio quid Lucis Offeratur Exactis Pilati (Leipzig, 1855); Lipsius, Die Pilatus-Akten (Kiel, 1871).

The second part of the Evangelium Nicodemæ, the Descensus Christi ad Infernos, or διήγησις περὶ τοῦ πάθους τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ τῆς ἁγίας αὐτοῦ ἀναστάσεως, is of very little importance. In connection with these two works, Tischendorf gives some other apocryphal fabrications, which together form a group by themselves: namely, Epistola Pilati, incorporated in the apocryphal Acts of St. Peter and St. Paul (Greek text in Tischendorf, Acta Apost. Apocryph. p. 16); which is a letter, addressed to the emperor Claudius Tiberius, containing a report of the resurrection of Christ; Epistola Pontii Pilati, another letter by him, in which he excuses the unjustness of his verdict by the impossibility of resisting the prevailing excitement; Anaphora Pilati, a report on the trial, execution, death, and resurrection of Jesus; Paradosis Pilati, a report of the examination of Pilate before the emperor, his condemnation and execution. A forgery of later origin is the Latin Epistola Pilati ad Tiberium (Tischendorf, p. 411 sq.). To these Evangelia Apocrypha, which only constitute the smallest part of apocryphal gospels, the following must be added:

8. Evangelium Secundum Egyptios, i. e. "the Gospel of the Egyptians," in use among the Encratites (Clem. Alex. Strom. iii, 9, p. 540 sq.; Potter, xiii, 553) and the Sabellians (Epiph. Hæres. lxii, 2).

9. Evangelium Æternum, the work of a Minorite of the 13th century, and condemned by pope Alexander IV.

10. Evangelium Andree, mentioned by pope Innocent I (Epist. 6, ad Exuper.) and St. Augustine (Contra Advers. Leg. et Prophet. 20).

11. Evangelium Apellii, probably a mutilation of one of the canonical gospels.

12. Evangelium Duodecim Apostolorum, mentioned by Origen (Hom. 1 in Luc.); Ambros. (Proem. in Lucam); Jerome (Proem. in Matt.)

13. Evangelium Barnabæ, mentioned in the Decretum Gelasii, vi, 10, and in the catalogue of Anastasius Sinaita (by Credner, Gesch. des Kanons, p. 241).

14. Evangelium Bartholomæi, mentioned by Jerome, Præf. in Matt.; Gelasii, Decretum, vi, 12.

15. Evangelium Basilidis, mentioned by Origen, Tract. 26 in Matt. xxiii, 34; Euseb. Hist. Eccl. 4, 7.

16. Evangelium Cerinthi, seems to have been the Gospel according to Matthew, arbitrarily remodelled, and in this mutilated shape accepted by the Carpocratians.

17. Evangelium Ebionitarum, of which fragments are found in Epiph. Hæres. xxx, 13, 16, 21.

18. Evangelium Ecce, in use by some gnostics (Epiph. Hæres. xxvi, 2, 3, 5).

19. Evangelium Secundum Hebræos, one of the oldest apocryphal productions, written in Chaldee with Hebrew letters, used by the Nazarenes, and translated into Greek and Latin by Jerome. See Nicholson, The Gospel according to the Hebrews (Lond. 1879).

20. Evangelium Jacobi Majoris, found in Spain in 1595, and condemned by Innocent XI in 1682.

21. Joannis de Transitu Mariæ, not published by Tischendorf.

22. Evangelium Judæ Ischariotæ, used by the Cainites.

23. Evangelium Leucii.

24. Evangelia, quæ Fulvati Lucianus, Apocrypha and Evangelia, quæ Fulvati Hesychius, Apocrypha. See Griesbach, Prolog. in ed. Nov. Test. iii; Hug, Einleitung in das Neue Test. 87, 88.

25. Evangelia Manicheorum, comprising

(a.) Evangelium Thomæ, different from the one given under 5.

(b.) Evangelium Virum.

(c.) Evangelium Philippi.

(d.) Evangelium Abda, also called Μόδοξ, i. e. The Bushel.

26. Evangelium Marcionis, a mutilation of the Gospel according to Luke, by the founder of the famous anti-Jewish sect.

27. Mariæ Interrogationes Majores et Minores, two works of obscene contents, used by some Gnostics.

28. Evangelium Matthiæ, mentioned by Origen, Jerome, Eusebius, Gelasius, and Beda.

29. Narratio de Legali Christi Sacerdotio, comp. Suidas, s. v. Ἰησοῦς.

30. Evangelium Perfectionis, used by the Basilidians and other Gnostics.

31. Evangelium Petri was in use in the congregation of Rhossus, in Cilicia, towards the close of the 2d century.

32. Evangelium Philippi, used by the Gnostics.

33. Evangelium Simonitarum, or as it was called by themselves, Liber Quatuor Angulorum et Cardinatum Mundi, i. e. Book of the Four Corners and Hinges of the World, divided into four parts.

34. Evangelium Secundum Syros, probably identical with the Evangelium Secundum Hebræos.

35. Evangelium Tatiani, a compilation from the four gospels, hence also called Diatessaron (τὸ διὰ τεσσάρων). See Zahn, Tatian's Diatesseron (Erlangen, 1881).

36. Evangelium Thaddæi, mentioned in some MSS. of the Decretum Gelasianum. See Credner, Zur Gesch. des Kanons (Halle, 1847), p. 21.

37. Evangelium Valentini, which is perhaps the same as the Evangelium Veritatis used by the Valentiniæ, and differing widely from the canonical gospels.

Gospeller is a name applied to the priest in the English Church who reads the gospel in the communion service, standing at the north side of the altar. In some cathedrals one of the clergy is appointed specially to perform this duty; hence the name.

Göös, KARL ERNST FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 18, 1757. In 1787 he was deacon, in 1814 pastor at Baidersdorf, near Erlangen, and died June 28, 1836. He wrote, Der Verfall des öffentlichen Cultus im Mittelalter (Sulzbach, 1820):—Die Seelen-Feste (Erlangen, 1825). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 576, 619. (B. P.)

Gossel, ANDREAS ARNOLD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 20, 1700, in East Frisia. He studied at Halle, was preacher in 1723, in 1741 court-preacher at Aurich, in Prussia, and died Dec. 9, 1770. He published, Das Evangelium von Christo, in dem xiii Kapitel Iesaiä (Bremen, 1733):—Das Evangelium in dem xiv Kapitel Iesaiä (1736):—Das Evangelisch-lutherische Kirchen Glaubensbekenntnis (1739):—Richtige Mittelstrasse in der Gnadenlehre der Evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche (1747). Gosset, ISAAC, D.D., F.R.S., a Church of England divine, well known in London as a most intelligent purchaser and collector of books, and conspicuous at all public sales by his diminutive person, was born in 1744. He was of a refugee French family, and was the son of a modeller in wax, settled in London. He displayed from his childhood an extraordinary passion for rare books, and was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He became eminent as a preacher, notwithstanding his personal disadvantages, but never sought or obtained a preferment. He was a good scriptural critic, and excelled as a bibliographer. He died Dec. 16, 1812. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1812, p. 182.

Gosson, STEPHEN, an English divine and poet, was born at Kent in 1554, and was educated at Christchurch, Oxford. He became rector of St. Botolph, Bishopgate Street, London, which post he retained until his death. He was distinguished for his opposition to the dramatic entertainments of the day. His death occurred in 1623. His publications are, The School of Abuse (1587):—Plays Confuted in Five Actions:—The Trumpet of Weale. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gossuin, an abbot of Anchin, theologian and scholastic philosopher, was born at Douai in 1086. He was one of the most distinguished students of the University of Paris, where he soon gained the reputation of an excellent grammarian and dialectician. Being admitted to the school of Joslain de Vierzy, who later became bishop of Soissons and also minister of Louis VII, king of France, he was selected by his fellow-students to bring to Abelard, the rival of his teacher, a challenge on science. On his return to his native city, Gossuin entered into orders, and became successively minister of several monasteries. He was at the abbey of Anchin when pope Innocent II charged him with the conversion of Abelard, who had been condemned to confinement and silence. Afterwards he was appointed abbot of Saint-Pierre-de-Châlons, and of Lobbes, in Hainaut, but he refused to accept. Gossuin finally accepted the abbey of Anchin, and governed wisely this opulent monastery. He assisted at the Council of Rheims in 1147, where he gained the friendship of St. Bernard. Gossuin died in 1166. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goswami. See GOSAINS.

Goth, BÉRARD DE, a French prelate, brother of pope Clement V, and son of Bérard I, lord of Villandrault (diocese of Bordeaux), was appointed to the archiepiscopate of Lyons in 1288. Bérard made his brother Bertrand de Goth his vicar-general. This appointment led to a long controversy. Bérard was made cardinal-bishop of Albano in 1294, by Celestine V. Boniface VIII appointed him his legate in France, to restore peace between the kings of France and England. Bérard died on his return from England, without having seen the end of the dissension, July 12, 1297. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Goths (Gothones, Gotones, Guttones, in Tacitus and Pliny), a German people, originally dwelling along the Baltic sea between the Vistula and the Oder. Their native name, Guthinda, is preserved in the Fragments of bishop Ulphilas. The later form, Gothi, does not occur until the time of Caracalla. At the beginning of the 8d century they are spoken of as a powerful nation in the regions of the lower Danube, where the Getae and Scythians of former times had lived, and the name of Getae or Scythian is sometimes applied to them. The different tribes composing this people were: 1. The Gothi Minores or Masogoths, who became permanently established in Mæsia, and devoted themselves to agricultural pursuits (Jornandes, 51, 52); 2. Gothi Tetraxitæ, Ostrogoths of the Palus Mæotis (Procop. Bell. Goth. iv); 3. Taifule, in Dacia, a branch of the Visigoths (Ammian. Marcell. xvii, 13; xxxi, 8; Eutrop. viii, 2); 4. Gepidæ; 5. Rugii; 6. Sciri and Turcilingi; 7. Heruli; 8. Juthungi; some writers include also the Alans and Vandals among the Goths. The nation of the Goths was divided into two principal groups; the Ostrogoths, who occupied the sandy steppes of the East, and the Visigoths, who inhabited the more fertile and wooded countries of the West. Zosimus and Ammianus Marcellinus frequently mention the Greutungi or Grutungi and the Thervingi or Tervingi, concerning whom different opinions are entertained by modern writers. They were, perhaps, the leading tribes among the Ostrogoths and Visigoths respectively. The language of the Goths resembled the ancient dialect of the Franks very closely. They wore beards, and suffered their yellow hair to grow long. The royal dignity among them was hereditary.

The occupation of Dacia by this people took place during the reign of the emperor Philip (A.D. 244-249), and was immediately followed by aggressive wars against the Romans, in which Mæsia, Macedonia, and Greece suffered from their incursions, and the armies of the emperor Decius were twice defeated and destroyed. Between 253 and 269 they ravaged the coasts of Europe and Asia Minor with a fleet of which they had become possessed. Pityus, Trapezus, Chalcedon, Nicomedia, Nicæa, Prusa, Apamea, and Cius fell before their assaults: Cyzicus was destroyed; and the coast of Greece, from the south of Peloponnesus to Epirus and Thessaly was ravaged, Illyricum in particular being literally ransacked. In 269 Crete and Cyprus were swept by their destructive power, and Cassandrea and Thessalonica were besieged; but in that year the emperor Claudius defeated them in three great battles, which earned for him the name of Gothicus, and broke the barbarian power. A period of comparative quiet, interrupted by few and unimportant expeditions, now ensued in the history of the Goths. In 272 the emperor Aurelian ceded to them the province of Dacia. In 332 they followed their king, Araric, across the Danube, but were defeated, and concluded a peace which lasted until the family of Constantine vacated the imperial throne. In 375 vast swarms of Huns and Alans poured out of Asia and drove back the Ostrogoths upon the Visigoths, which latter people thereupon obtained permission to settle in Thrace, at that time lying desolate, the condition being imposed by the emperor Valens that they should embrace Christianity. Insolent usage, which they were called upon to endure at the hands of Roman officers, soon drove them into rebellion, however, and in the war which ensued they completely defeated the army of Valens in 378, and killed the emperor himself by burning a cottage which he had entered in his flight. From that time they exercised an important influence over the affairs of Constantinople, and were for a time regularly engaged in the service of the Roman empire. The application of the Ostrogoths for admission into the territories of the empire, when threatened by the Huns, was denied, and they were compelled to seek refuge in the mountains until after the defeat of the Huns in 453, when they obtained a settlement in Pannonia and Slavonia.

In 396 the Visigoths, led by Alaric, invaded and devastated Greece, till the arrival of the Roman general Stilicho, in the following year, compelled their retreat. In 400 they invaded Italy, but were defeated. A treaty was thereupon made between Alaric and Stilicho, which transferred the services of the former to the Western emperor, Honorius. A second invasion, occasioned by the delay of the Romans to meet the demands of Alaric for pay, and a western province as a home for his nation, took place 408-410. In 408 Rome was subjected to a severe blockade, from which it relieved itself by the payment of a heavy ransom. Refusal to comply with Alaric's demands led to a second siege, in which Ostia was occupied, Rome unconditionally surrendered, and the empire transferred to Attalus, but soon restored to Honorius. In 410 an assault upon the Visigoths, made with imperial sanction, provoked the storming and sack of the city, Aug. 24-30. After the death of Alaric the Visigoths established a new kingdom in Southern Gaul and Spain, which reached its highest prosperity during the latter half of the 5th century, but was soon afterwards harassed by the Franks, in Gaul, and wholly overthrown about two centuries later by the Saracens.

After the overthrow of the Huns the Ostrogoths in Pannonia became so powerful that the Eastern empire was obliged to purchase peace with them by large sums of money. Their king, Widemir, led his hosts into Italy, but they eventually joined the Visigoths in the West. Other bands, under various leaders, traversed the Eastern empire, and were finally settled between the Lower Danube and Mount Hæmus, in the very heart of the empire. In 487 king Theodoric, after protracted disputes with the emperor Zeno, marched upon Constantinople, whereupon that monarch, to save his capital, authorized the Goths to invade Italy and expel the usurper Odoacer. The enterprise was undertaken in 488, and completed in 493, at which time Odoacer was assassinated, and all his strongholds were in the possession of his adversary. Theodoric remained undisputed master of Italy during a prosperous reign of thirty-three years; but on his death his kingdom was attacked by foreign enemies, and became the prey of the Eastern empire, and the Ostrogoths ceased to be an independent people.

Christianity was introduced among the Goths about the middle of the 3d century, by prisoners taken in their wars, and there is evidence that a continuous tradition of orthodox Christianity existed from that time among the tribes who bordered on the Euxine. A Gothic bishop, Theophilus, was present in 325 at the Council of Nice, and even earlier Athanasius (De Incarne. Verb. § 51 sq.; Migne, xxv, 187 sq.; Neander, Church History, Engl. transl. iii, 179) alludes to the influence of Christianity over Gothic (?) barbarians; while Chrysostom (Ep. xiv; Migne, lii, 618) and Procopius (Bell. Goth. iv, 4; ed. Bonn. ii, 475) both speak of applications made to the emperor for a successor to recent Gothic bishops. The propagation of Christianity among the Visigoths was carried forward principally by bishop Ulphilas (q. v.), whose work, beginning in 348, was successful enough from the very first to excite the hostility of the heathen and call forth persecution. Ulphilas and many of his converts fled across the Danube and settled in the neighborhood of Nicopolis. The particular form of teaching adhered to by Ulphilas was that of Arianism, which had already taken deep root, and was yet more firmly established when Frigidian, who had rebelled against the king, Athanaric, consented to become a Christian and an Arian in order that he might secure the support of the Roman emperor, and when, as already related, the Visigoths were obliged to take refuge against the Huns in the territories of the empire ruled over by the Arian, Valens. Subsequently efforts were put forth to win them to Catholicism, especially by Chrysostom, who became patriarch of Constantinople in 398, but with little result. The Goths continued to be fanatical Arians, and became even violent persecutors after their settlement in Gaul and Spain, until the stubborn resistance of the Catholic party was strengthened by the accession of the Franks, and the Gothic king, Recared, solemnly passed over to the Catholic faith at the third Synod of Toledo in 589.

The Ostrogoths, though Arians, were not fanatical adherents of that creed, and Theodoric especially manifested a tolerant spirit towards the Catholics. Chrysostom's missionaries were zealously employed among these tribes, and achieved noteworthy successes. In the Crimea the Catholic Unilas was bishop of the Tetraxite Goths, and established a connection with Constantinople which remained unbroken until the 6th century. The district of Gotia, on the Cimmerian Bosphorus, was a diocese connected with the Byzantine Church in the Middle Ages, and the surname of Gotia was borne by the bishop of Capha as late as the 18th century.

In closing this article a few words respecting the culture of the Goths are required. The introduction of Christianity, and contact with the civilized subjects of Rome, did much to raise them above other German tribes in point of civilization. Ulphilas, in the 4th century, formed a new alphabet out of those of the Greeks and Romans, which was generally adopted by the German peoples, and is essentially the same as that still in use in Germany and known among us as the "black-letter" alphabet. His translation of the Scriptures into the Gothic language is, in the fragments which still survive, the most ancient document of the German language now extant. No other monuments of the Gothic language of considerable importance have been preserved. The Visigoths had a code of written laws, which was probably the first existing among German tribes, and the authorship of which is usually ascribed to their king, Euric, of the 5th century.

Gotthold, ISAAC, D.D., a Jewish rabbi, was born in Bamberg, Bavaria, and was in charge of a synagogue there for many years. In 1858 he came to America, and was at different times in charge of congregations in Brooklyn, Albany, and New York. For many years he taught private classes in ancient and modern languages. He died April 11, 1882, while rabbi of the Jewish synagogue in Fifty-seventh Street, New York city, aged seventy-four years.

Gotti, VINCENZIO LUIGI, an Italian cardinal, was born Sept. 5, 1665, at Bologna, where his father was a professor of law, and in 1680 his son took the habit in the convent of the Dominicans of that city. In 1684 he went to the University of Salamanca, and studied theology. In 1688, after his return to Italy, he was appointed to teach successively at Mantua, Rome, and Bologna, becoming, in 1695, professor of theology in the latter place. In 1708 he was made provincial of the Dominicans for Bologna. Pope Clement XI appointed him inquisitor of Milan; three years afterwards, however, Gotti resigned, and returned to Bologna as professor of polemics. In 1728 Benedict XIII conferred upon him the dignity of a cardinal. Benedict XIV made him his theologian, and later protector of the province of Bologna. Gotti died Sept. 18, 1742, leaving Vera Chiesa di Gesù Cristo (Bologna, 1719):—Colognia Theologico-Polemica (ibid. 1727):—Theologia Scholastico-Dogmatica (1727):—De Eligenda Inter Dissidentes Christianos Sententiā (Rome, 1734). Gottschalk, ruler of the Wends, and martyr, was educated in the monastery of St. Michael at Lüneburg, but left the monastery, and abandoned Christianity altogether, as soon as he heard that his father Uto, ruler of the Wends, was killed by a Saxon, about the year 1029. To revenge the death of his father, Gottschalk stirred up his countrymen to a frightful war against the Saxons. Gottschalk was defeated by Bernhard, duke of Saxony, and taken prisoner. He returned to Christianity, and after his release from prison went to the court of Canute the Great, spent ten years in Denmark and England, and after his return to Wendland in 1043 he united Holstein, Mecklenburg, Pomerania, and the Brandenburg marches into one powerful Wendish empire. He now became one of the most zealous missionaries in his country, translated the liturgical formulas and sermons of German missionaries into the vernacular; he built schools, churches, monasteries, and preached to his people. In spite of all his efforts, there lingered yet among his countrymen a heathenish fanaticism which found vent in an insurrection, that broke out in 1066, and in which Gottschalk was murdered on June 7. Gottskalksson, ODDUR, the translator of the New Testament into Icelandic, son of the second bishop of Holum, in Iceland, was educated in Norway, and visited Denmark and Germany. The doctrines of the Reformation began to excite a general sensation throughout the north of Europe, and his own attention was forcibly arrested by the truths which were then unfolded. We are told that, for three successive nights, he prostrated himself half-naked before the Father of lights, beseeching him to open the eyes of his understanding, and to show him whether the principles of Rome or those of Luther were from heaven. The result of his prayers and meditations was a deep-rooted conviction that the cause of the reformer was the cause of God; and with the view of obtaining further information he repaired to Germany, and attended the lectures of Luther and Melancthon. On his return to Iceland he entered the service of bishop Ogmund. The latter wished Gottskalksson to become a priest, but he declined the offer, because, as he said, he had no voice for singing. As the servant of bishop Ogmund, he commenced the translation of the New Testament into Icelandic; and, to avoid persecution, he selected a small cell in a cow-house for his study. He completed a version in 1539; but finding it impossible, from the state of public opinion, to print it in Iceland, he sailed for Denmark, and published it at Copenhagen under the patronage of Christian III, in 1540. Besides this translation he published Bugenhagen's history of the sufferings and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and Jonik's sermons on the Catechism in Icelandic. He died in 1557. See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Götz, George Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Hanau, April 9, 1750. He studied at Halle, became doctor of divinity and pastor primarius in his native place, and died there, Feb. 3, 1813. He published Sermons and some ascetical writings. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 153, 157, 160, 163, 175, 179, 181, 184, 204, 206, 280. (B. P.)

Götz, Raphael, a Swiss theologian, poet, and teacher, was born at Götz of Münchhoff (Thurgovia), in 1559. He studied at Chur and Zurich, and went to Geneva in 1580, where he held a disputation on predestination, under the auspices of Theodore Beza. Two years afterwards he went to Basle, where he again showed his controversial power. In 1588 he received in Zurich the title pædagogus alumnorum, and in 1592 became, in the same city, professor of the New Test., and deacon at the cathedral. Four years afterwards he was made archdeacon, and thereupon introduced new religious songs into his parish. Unfortunately he gave himself up to alchemy, which brought him into debt, to escape which he fled in 1601. After wandering about for six months, he went to Marburg, where the landgrave Maurice appointed him professor of theology. He died there, Aug. 20, 1622, leaving Tractatus Adversus Albericum Trincarium, de Predestinatione: —De Peccato in Spiritum S.: —De Gratuita Electorum Salute, etc.:—Historia Captivitatis Babylonica. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Gouda, JAN VAN, a Dutch Jesuit, who died Dec. 28, 1630, at Brussels, was for some time professor at Antwerp and preacher at Brussels. In his sermons he was especially severe against the Protestants, and his co-religionists styled him therefore malleus hæreticorum and murus Catholicorum. His writings are mostly directed against ministers of the Reformed Church. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Burmann, Trajectum Eruditum; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Goudimel, CLAUDE, a French musical composer, was born about 1510 in Franche-Comté. He lived at Rome in 1540 when Palestrina studied there. In 1556 he was at Paris, and kept a note-printing establishment there. In 1562 he joined the Reformed Church, and was killed in the Huguenot massacre at Lyons, Aug. 24, 1572. He prepared the music for Clement Marot's and Theodore Beza's translation of the Psalms (1565). Some writers assert that he also composed Huguenot hymns, such as are still sung; but this is a mistake. See Fétis, Biograph. des Musiciens; Haag, La France Protestante; Douen, Clement Marot et le Psautier Huguenot, and the same in Lichtenberger's Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, a. v.; Grtneisen in Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. a. v.; Grove, Dict. of Music, a. v. Gouffier, ADRIEN, cardinal of Boisy, had at first the title of protonotary of Boisy, then he became bishop of Coutances in 1509. Francis I asked for the cardinal's hat for him of pope Leo X, in the conference of Boulogne, which this pontiff granted in 1515. In 1519 Gouffier obtained a charge as a legate in France. He was already grand almoner, and held the bishopric of Alby and other considerable benefices. He died in the castle of Villendren-sur-Indre, July 24, 1523. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Gouge de Charpaignes, MARTIN, a French prelate, was born about 1360, in Bourges. After the death of his brother John, who was treasurer of the duke of Berry, Martin was appointed to fill his place. He became bishop of Chartres in 1406, and was transferred to the see of Clermont-Ferrand in 1415. In 1409 he was arrested for being connected with the revolution of the palace, but on account of his great talents he soon returned to his former honors. Under the reign of Charles VII, Gouge became royal councillor. In 1425 he resigned his civil functions, but resumed them until Nov. 8, 1428. He died Nov. 25 or 26, 1444. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Goujet, CLAUDE PIERRE, a French theologian, was born at Paris, Oct. 19, 1697. In 1720 he was canon of St. James's in his native place, and died Feb. 1, 1767. He translated Grotius's work on the truth of Christianity into French (Paris, 1724) and other Latin works, and published Maximes sur la Pénitence et sur la Communion (1728):—Bibliothèque des Auteurs Ecclésiastiques du XVIII^e Siècle, pour Servir de Continuation à celle de Mr. Dupin (1786, 3 vols.):—Histoire du Pontificat de Paul V (1766, 2 vols.). Gomilevski, MOSES, a Russian prelate and writer, was bishop of Theodosia, and took an active part in the scholastic movement which Catherine II promoted in her empire. He died in 1792 by assassination in the Crimea, leaving several linguistic works, two funeral speeches of the prince Potemkin, several translations from the fathers of the Greek Church, and some fugitive pieces of poetry in Latin and Russian. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gounja Ticquoa (the God of Gods), the title of the Supreme Being among the Hottentots. They say he is a good being, who does no one any hurt, and dwells far above the moon. They pay no act of devotion immediately to this god, and when asked why not, they answer that their first parents so grievously sinned against the Supreme God that he cursed them and all their posterity with hardness of heart, so they know little of him and have no inclination to serve him.

Gourlin, PIERRE SÉBASTIEN, a French Jansenist writer, who died in 1775, made himself conspicuous by his opposition to the bull Unigenitus. He is the author of Institution et Instruction Chrétiennes (Naples, 1776, 3 vols.), which has often been reprinted, and which contains an exact exposition of the Jansenistic doctrine. To him is also attributed Tractatus de Gratia Christi Salvatore ac de Prædestinatione Sanctorum, in sex libros distributus (1781, 3 vols.). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Gousset, THOMAS MARIE JOSEPH, a French prelate, was born at Montigny-lès-Cherlieux, May 1, 1792. He began in 1809 a course of study, and obtained in 1812 the diploma of a bachelor of letters; entered the great seminary of Besançon the same year, and became one of its most distinguished scholars and teachers of theology. Cardinal Rohan made him, in 1832, grand-vicar, and he was consecrated bishop of Périgueux Oct. 6, 1835. He was elevated to the archiepiscopacy of Rheims, May 25, 1840, and in 1851 obtained the cardinal's hat. He died at Rheims, Dec. 24, 1866, leaving Exposition de la Doctrine de l'Eglise (Besançon, 1823):—Code Civil Commenté dans ses Rapports avec la Théologie Morale:—L'Immaculée Conception de la Bienheureuse Vierge (Paris, 1855), etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Govona, ROSA, an Italian philanthropist, was born at Mondovì in 1716. Her parents were poor, and Rosa became an orphan while very young, but she supported herself by labor. One day, finding a little girl in a still worse condition than herself, she aided her and taught her to work, and the two soon formed the plan of gathering other poor little girls for a similar purpose. Rosa at length received a house from the community in the plain of the Brao, where she settled down with her company. Charles Emanuel III gave her several large buildings which had belonged to the friars, and she organized the establishment of The Rosines. She also established houses in other places, and in the centre of the cities of Novara, Fossano, Savigliano, Saluzzo, Chieri, and Saint Damian of Ostia. The establishment at Turin became the centre of all these houses, which still flourish. In this latter city she died, Feb. 28, 1776. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gown. The ancient academical gown, always wide-sleeved, was an adoption of the monastic habit from the robe of the preaching-friars, who wore it instead of an alb. From itinerant lay preachers of the time of Elizabeth, the custom of the universities, the vanity of the richer clergy in the last century, wearing silk robes out-of-doors and then in the pulpit, and the introduction of lectures, not provided for by the rubric, the use of the gown in English pulpits took its origin. The narrow-sleeved gown, with a cross-alit for the arms, was an importation from Geneva, and called the lawyer's gown, in distinction from the wide velvet-sleeved gown still worn by other graduates, posers at Winchester, and often with an ermine hood by proctors at Oxford. Russet white and black gowns were worn by mourners at funerals.

Göz, CHRISTIAN GOTTLIEB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 29, 1746. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1769 vicar, in 1777 preacher, at Stuttgart, and died Dec. 10, 1803. He published, Uebung der Gottseligkeit in heiligen Betrachtungen und Liedern (Stuttgart, 1776):—Beitrag zur Geschichte der Kirchenlieder (1784), and composed some hymns, which are still in use. See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 309 sq. (B. P.)

Gozlin (Lat. Gauzlenus), a French prelate and statesman, was born about the beginning of the ninth century. According to some he was the son of Boricon, count of Anjou, and to others the natural son of Louis the Gentle. He became a monk at Rheims about 848, and soon after abbot of St. Germain-des-Près. Gozlin, like most of the abbots of that time, was also a warrior. In 858 he was made prisoner by the Normans, and had to purchase his liberty by a heavy ransom. After 855 he held the office of chancellor to Charles the Bald, and about 883 he was appointed bishop of Paris. He died April 16, 886. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Graal, THE HOLY, a name in mediæval tradition for the precious dish (paropsis) or cup used at the Last Supper, said also to be the vessel in which our Lord turned water into wine, and in which Nicodemus or Joseph of Arimathea received the Saviour's blood at the crucifixion. Other legends describe it as a cup originally given to Solomon by the queen of Sheba. It often appears in the Arthurian laws, and probably arose from a Druidic origin. The Genoese claim to have it in the cathedral treasury, where it is known as Sacro Catino. It is of glass, of hexagonal form, with two handles, and is three feet nine inches in circumference. It was cracked in its removal from Paris, whither it had been taken under Napoleon. Sometimes the graal supports a bleeding spear, as on a crucifix at Sancerre Church, Cornwall. The Church is often represented holding a pennon and a graal opposite the synagogue with drooping head, and a banner of three points, the staff broken.

Grabau, JOHANN ANDREAS AUGUST, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born March 18, 1804, at Olvenstädt, near Magdeburg. He studied at Halle, was in 1834 pastor at Erfurt, but was suspended in 1836 because he refused to accept the Prussian Agenda (q. v.). In 1839 he came, with a number of his adherents, to America, and settled at Buffalo, N. Y., where he founded a Lutheran congregation, to whom he preached till his death, June 2, 1879. Grabau was president of the Lutheran Buffalo Synod, founded the Martin Luther College, and was for some time editor of the Kirchliches Informatorium and of the Wachende Kirche. (B. P.)

Grabe, MARTIN SYLVESTER, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Weissensee (Thuringia), April 21, 1627. He studied at Königsberg, was professor there in 1660, in 1662 at Jena, in 1677 general-superintendent of Pomerania, and died at Colberg, Nov. 23, 1686. He published, among other writings, Disp. in Gal. iv, 4:—in Joh. xvii, 3:—Contra Socinianos:—De Unione Duarum in Christo Naturarum:—De Perspicuitate Scripturæ Sacræ Ejusdemque Lectione Lucis Concedenda. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Grabener, Christian Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 15, 1714, at Freiberg. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1738 con-rector at Meissen, in 1742 rector at Dresden, and died Nov. 30, 1778, leaving Disp. ad Genes. xii, 6, 7 (Leipsic, 1737):

—De Carminibus Apostolicis:—De Formula κέριε ἱλίσσον:—De Portis Calii. See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 612. (B. P.)

Grabener, Theophilus, father of the foregoing, was born Nov. 3, 1685. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1711 professor at the gymnasium in Freiburg, in 1735 rector at Meissen, and died April 15, 1750, leaving De Planctu Hadadrimmon ad Zuch. xii, 11 (Wittenberg, 1709):—De Sacris Judaorum Peregrino in Hortis Ritu Factis (1710):—De Excommunicatione per Insomnia (eod.):—De Symbolo Israelitarum trans Jordanem Incolentium ad Jos. xxi. 22-29 (Meissen, 1737):—De Theophilo Episcopo Antiocheno (1744). See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gräber, Franz Friedrich, a Protestant theologian, was born in 1784 in Prussia. He studied at Halle, and entered upon his ministerial duties in 1808. After he had occupied different pastorates, the king of Prussia appointed him, in 1846, a member of the general synod, and made him general-superintendent of Westphalia. In 1856 he retired from his office, and died in 1857. He published Das Verlorene Paradies, Predigten (Elberfeld, 1830). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 116; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 460. (B. P.)

Grace, ACTUAL. See ACTUAL GRACE.

Grace at Meals was customary among the Jews (Lightfoot, Horæ Hebr. on Matt. xx, 36), and forms are contained in the Talmud (Berachoth, vii). Numerous examples occur in the New Test., and early Christian writers abundantly confirm the practice (Chrysostom, Homil. xlix; Clemens Alex. Paedag. ii, 4, § 44, 77; so also Tertullian, Cyprian, and others). Examples of forms occur both in the early Eastern and Western churches, and the Gelasian Sacramentary sets forth quite a number. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antiq. s. v.

Gradenigo, Giovanni Agostino, an Italian prelate, was born at Venice, July 10, 1725. He studied under the direction of Domenico dall' Orazio; entered the Benedictine order in 1744; in 1749 was called to teach philosophy at Mantua, and later canon law; in 1756 returned to Venice, where, in 1762, he founded an academy of ecclesiastical history; refused the bishopric of Corfu in 1765, but in 1770 became bishop of Ceneda, and died March 16, 1774, leaving a large number of short publications, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gradenigo, Giovanni Gieronimo, an Italian prelate, was born at Venice, Feb. 19, 1708. While young he entered the order of the Theatines, and occupied several important chairs at the Seminary of Brescia. On Jan. 27, 1766, he was appointed archbishop of Udine. He died June 30, 1786, leaving Lettera al Card. Quirini, etc. (Venice, 1744):—Lettera Istoria Critica Sopra Probabilismo (Brescia, 1750):—Le Cure Pastorali (Udine, 1756):—De Siculo Argenteo Hebraeorum (Rome, 1766), and other pieces, for which see Hoefer, *Nouv. Gradin, a French term for a step behind and above the level of the altar-slab, for placing the cross and candlesticks upon, so as not to interfere with the altar itself.

Gradual (Graduall, Grayl). Strictly only the first verse of the anthem sung was thus called. The rest was technically styled the "verse." The mode of singing it was not everywhere the same, but that in which one sang alone for a while and many responded was probably in use from the very infancy of the Church. From Easter eve to the Saturday in Whitsun week inclusively the Gradual was followed, and at last supplanted, by the Alleluia. This had been long known in the West, and used, though not prescribed, on public occasions of religious joy. At Rome it was only sung on Easter day.

The Tract was another anthem sometimes sung after the epistle. Originally it was always from the Book of Psalms. The Tract in all probability was nothing more than the Gradual as it was chanted in seasons of humiliation. Very soon, however, a Tract was often sung after the Gradual; that is, a third verse was added to the anthem, which was sung continuously by the cantor without any assistance from the choir. The Gradual and Tract were sung from the same step of the ambo from which the epistle was read. The fact that the Gradual and Tract were both sung from the lesson-desk, and that by a single cantor detached thither, like the readers, from the choir, seems to indicate their common origin in that extended use of the Book of Psalms with the rest of Holy Scripture which we know to have prevailed during the first ages.

Graf, Anton, a Roman Catholic theologian, for some time professor of exegesis and pastoral theology in Tübingen, who died May 24, 1867, is the author of Kritische Darstellung des gegenwärtigen Zustandes der praktischen Theologie (Tübingen, 1840). (B. P.)

Graf, Carl Heinrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Möhlhausen in 1815. He studied at Strasburg. In 1838 he was a teacher at Paris, was made a licentiate of theology at Strasburg in 1842, took the degree of doctor of philosophy at Leipsic in 1846, and was professor at the royal school at Meissen, in Saxony, and died July 16, 1869. He wrote, De Librorum Samuelis et Regum Compositione Scripturibus et Fide Historica (Strasburg, 1842):—Essai sur la Vie et les Écrits de J. Lefèvre d'Étaples (ibid. eod.):—Moslichehkin Sadi's Rosengarten (translated from the Persian, Leipsic, 1846):—Moslichehkin Sadi's Lustgarten (Jena, 1850, 2 vols.):—La Morale du Poète Persan Sadi (1851):—De Templo Silonensi (Meissen, 1855):—Der Prophet Jeremia erklärt (Leipsic, 1863):—Die sogenannte Grundschrift des Pentateuchs (1869), besides a large number of essays contributed to the Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft. Graf, Johann Heinrich, a Lutheran minister, was born Nov. 19, 1797, at Lindow, in Brandenburg, Prussia. In 1823 he entered the missionary seminary at Berlin, and in 1825 the Hebrew College at London, to prepare himself as a missionary to promote the gospel among the Jews. He remained in England till 1827, when he was sent to the Rhenish provinces on a missionary journey. In the same year he was appointed to the mission-station at Posen, was ordained there in 1846, and died Dec. 5, 1867. (B. P.)

Gräfe, Heinrich, a German ecclesiastic and educator, was born at Buttstädt, in Weimar, May 3, 1802, and educated at Jena. In 1823 he obtained a curacy in the State Church at Weimar, and in 1825 was made rector of the town school at Jena. In 1840 he was also appointed extraordinary professor of the science of education in the University of Jena, and in 1842 he became head of the bürgerschule in Cassel. He afterwards occupied various positions in the educational field, and in 1849 entered the house of representatives of Hesse, and became noted as an agitator. He was imprisoned in 1852 for having been implicated in certain revolutionary movements. On his release he withdrew to Geneva, where he engaged in educational work till 1855, when he was appointed director of the school of industry at Bremen. He died in that city, July 21, 1868. His works were chiefly on educational subjects. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Gräfenhain, Ferdinand Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian, was born Feb. 14, 1740. For some time deacon at Taucha, in Saxony, he was called in 1780 to Leipsic, and died March 18, 1823. He wrote Animadversiones in loc. Epistol. Pauli ad Philipp. ii, 5-13 (Leipsic, 1802). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 263. (B. P.)

Grafunder, David, a Lutheran theologian, who died Dec. 24, 1680, at Merseburg, is the author of, Calligraphia Hebræa:—Grammatica Syriaca cum Syntaxi a Lexico:—Grammatica Chaldaica. Graham, Andrew, a Scotch prelate, was elected and consecrated to the see of Dunblane, July 28, 1575. He was also pastor of the Church of Dunblane until his death. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 180.

Graham, Archibald, a Scotch prelate, was first pastor at Rothsay, in the Isle of Bute, and from there promoted to the see of the Isles in 1680, where he continued until the revolution in 1688. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 310.

Graham, Charles, an Irish Wesleyan missionary, was born at Tullinnagrackin, near Sligo, Aug. 20, 1750. After laboring for twenty-one years as a local preacher, he was, in 1790, appointed by Wesley as a missionary in Ireland. Few of the Irish preachers had severer trials from mobs than Graham, but he courageously met them. For six years he and Onseley traversed Ireland together, bringing the light into its darkest quarters. Graham afterwards labored in Ulster, Armagh, Kilkenny, Wicklow, Wexford, and other places. He died suddenly near Athlone, April 23, 1824. His powerful appeals to his street congregations were pathetic, and sometimes overwhelming; the multitudes heard, trembled, and fell before him. See Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 131, 409 sq., 416 sq., 435; George Smith, Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism, vol. ii (see Index, vol. iii); William Smith, Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism in Ireland, p. 286; Minutes of the British Conference, 1824; Reilly, Onseley (N. Y. 1848); Arthur, Life of Onseley (Lond. and N. Y. 1876); Campbell, Life of Charles Graham (Dublin, 1868, 12mo; Toronto, 1869).

Graham, George, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Dunblane in 1606, from which see he was translated to that of Orkney in 1615, where he continued until 1638. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 181, 227.

Graham, John, D.D., an English prelate, was born in Durham in 1794. In 1834 he was appointed prebendary of Lincoln, having formerly been rector of Wilingham, Cambridgeshire. At one time he was one of the chaplains of prince Albert, consort of queen Victoria. He was consecrated to the bishopric of Chester in 1848, which see he held until the close of his life, June 15, 1865. During his administration seventy-eight new churches were consecrated by him in his diocese. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1866, p. 141.

Graham, Patrick, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Brechin in 1483, and was translated to the see of St. Andrews in 1466. He undertook a journey to Rome, in 1467, and while there the controversy concerning the superiority of the see of York over the Church of Scotland was renewed. He obtained sentence against that see, and that his own see should be erected into an archbishopric, and the pope also made him his legate within Scotland for three years. On his return he found the king's clergy and courtiers all opposed to his transactions. He was put in prison, where he died in 1478. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 30-164.

Graham, Samuel Lyle, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Liberty, Va., Feb. 9, 1794. He studied under Rev. J. Mitchell, and subsequently at the New London Academy, and graduated at Washington College, Lexington, in 1814. After this he became tutor in the family of judge Nash of North Carolina. In 1818 he graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Brunswick. He acted for a while as missionary in Indiana, and subsequently in Greenbrier and Monroe counties, Va. In 1821 he removed to North Carolina, and became pastor of Oxford and Grassy Creek churches. After remaining here seven years he took charge of the Oxford Church, where a gracious revival followed his labors, in 1830. In 1834 he became pastor at Clarksville and Shiloh, and in 1838 professor of ecclesiastical history in Union Theological Seminary, Va., which position he retained until his death at Prince Edward, Oct. 29, 1851. He contributed several papers to the Princeton Review. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 20; Nevin, Presb. Encyclop. s. v. (W. P. S.)

Graham, Sylvester, a Presbyterian minister and reformer, was born in Sheffield, Conn., in 1794. From childhood he was troubled with weak digestion and rheumatism, and was compelled to abandon one employment after another on account of poor health. He finally studied at Amherst College, and became a Presbyterian preacher about 1826. In 1830 the Pennsylvania Temperance Society employed him as a lecturer. This led him to the study of human physiology, by which he became convinced that the only cure for intemperance was to be found in correct habits of living and judicious diet. This idea was set before the world in permanent form in his Essay on Cholera (1832), and Graham Lectures on the Science of Human Life (Boston, 1839, 2 vols.). He died at Northampton, Mass., Sept. 11, 1851. His other publications were a Lecture to Young Men on Chastity:—a Treatise on Bread-Making, from which we have the name "Graham bread":—and the Philosophy of Sacred History, of which only one volume was finished by him, and published after his death. In this work he attempted to show the harmony between the teachings of the Bible and his views on dietetica. See Appleton's Amer. Cyclop. viii, 142.

Grail. (1) Gradale, gradual, that which follows in degree, or the next step (gradus) after the epistle, a book containing the Order of Benediction of Holy Water, the Offices, Introit, or beginning of the Mass, the Kyrie, Gloria, Alleluia, Prose, Tract, Sequence, Creed, Offertory, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, and Communion and Post-Communion, which pertain to the choir in singing solemn mass. In France it denotes the Antiphonar, which was set on the gradus or analogium. (2) A verse or response, varying with the day; a portion of a psalm sung between the Epistle and Gospel while the deacon was on his way to the rood-loft. Their introduction into the Church is attributed variously to Celestine, 430, St. Ambrose, Gelasius, 490, or Gregory the Great, c. 600, who arranged the responses in order in his "Antiphonar." Rabanus says the name is derived from the custom of singing the grail on the steps of the ambon or pulpit; but others consider it to be taken from the responsory, gradation, or succession, or the altar-step. These verses were formerly chanted, either by a single voice or in chorus. When the chanter sang to the end tractim, they were called the Tract; but when he was interrupted by the choir, then the name was a Verse, Responsory, or Anthem.

Gramberg, Carl Peter Wilhelm, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 24, 1797, at Seefeld, in Oldenburg, and died at Züllichau, in Prussia, March 29, 1830. He is the author of, Die Chronik nach ihrem geschichtlichen Charakter (Halle, 1823):—Libri Geneseos Secundum Fontes (Leipsic, ed.):—Kritische Geschichte der Religionsideen des Alten Testaments (Berlin, 1823, 1830, 2 vols.):—Salomo's Buch der Sprüche übersetzt u. erklärt (Leipsic, 1828). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 79, 138, 212; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 342; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 461. (B. P.)

Grammer, John, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at Petersburg, Va. He began the practice of law in that place some two years after graduating at Yale College. In January, 1824, he entered the Episcopal Theological Seminary at Alexandria, and on July 15, 1826, received deacon's orders. For the next ten years his life was that of a missionary. He lived upon his estate in Dinwiddie County, and preached in eight or ten of the neighboring counties. In October, 1835, his dwelling was burned down, and he removed to Lawrenceville. In 1838 he accepted a call to the parish of Halifax Court-house, and removed there, where he continued to reside till his death, March 5, 1871, aged seventy-five years. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1871; Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1872, p. 127.

Grammlich, JOHANN ANDREAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 1, 1689, at Stuttgart. He studied at Tübingen and Halle, was in 1716 court-chaplain at Stuttgart, and died April 7, 1728. He wrote, Erbauliche Betrachtungen auf alle Tage (Stuttgart, 1724; new ed. by Böck, Breslau, 1853); Vierzig Betrachtungen von Christi Leiden und Tod (Tübingen, 1722; new ed. by Koppen, 1865); also Annotations on the Acts of the Apostles, on the epistles of Peter, John, and James. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 461 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 182; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 66 sq. (B. P.)

Grammont, Antoine Pierre de (1), a French prelate, was born in 1615. He entered the ministry when quite young. Alexander VII offered him the deanery of the chapter of Besançon, but he declined. Some time later he was consecrated archbishop of that see. When Louis XIV invaded Franche-Comté in 1668, Grammont made every exertion for defence. On the second invasion, six years later, he resigned at the door of his cathedral, and thereafter occupied himself by raising various schools in his diocese. He died May 1, 1698, leaving editions of the missal, of the breviary, of the ritual, and a catechism of his diocese. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grammont, Antoine Pierre de (2), a French prelate, nephew of François Joseph, was born in 1685. After finishing his studies at the College of Louis-le-Grand, in Paris, he became a soldier at eighteen years of age; was wounded before Spire, and taken prisoner. Being exchanged, he received command of a regiment of dragoons, which bore his name. When peace was restored, Grammont returned to his province, where his uncle supplied him with a canonicate of the chapter of Besançon. He was nominated archbishop of that city by Louis XV, in 1735, and died Sept. 7, 1754. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grammont, François Joseph de, a French prelate, nephew of Antoine (1), was coadjutor of his uncle under the title of bishop of Philadelphia, and succeeded him in the see of Besançon. He reconstructed the archiepiscopacy, and gave new editions to the breviary and the ritual, also published a collection of synodal statutes, and left his fortune to the seminary. He died Aug. 20, 1715. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gramont, GABRIEL DE, a French prelate, succeeded his brother in the bishopric of Couserans, and also of Tarbes in 1522. He was sent on various diplomatic missions. In 1532 he was made bishop of Poitiers, and finally archbishop of Toulouse. He died March 26, 1534, leaving in MS. a collection of letters relating to his various embassies. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gramur, in Norse mythology, was the famous sword of the hero Sigurd. It was the most excellent that had ever been made by dwarfs. Sigurd proved it in two ways: he cut in two a large piece of steel, and behold, the sword had not even the slightest scratch, then he laid it in the river, which carried a light woolflake against it, and the latter was cut in two.

Granacci, FRANCESCO, a reputable Florentine painter, was born in 1477, and studied under Ghirlandajo at the same time with Buonarroti. Among his principal pictures are those of St. Zano and St. Francis, near the Virgin, under a lofty canopy, and The Assumption, in San Pietro Maggiore. He died in 1544. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Granada, LUIS DE. See LOUIS OF GRANADA.

Grancolas, JEAN, a French theologian and member of the Sorbonne, was born at Paris in 1660. In 1685 he took his degree as doctor of divinity, was chaplain to the duke of Orleans, and died in 1732. He wrote, Traité de l'Antiquité des Cérémonies des Sacraments (Paris, 1692); Instructions sur la Religion, Tirées de l'Écriture Sainte (1693); La Science des Confesseurs (1696); L'Ancienne Discipline de l'Église (1697); Heures Sacrées (eod.); Traité des Liturgies (1698); Histoire Abrégée de l'Église de la Ville et de l'Université de Paris (1728, 2 vols.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 603, 890; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Grandi, GUIDO DE, an Italian member of the Camaldule order, was born in 1671 at Cremona. He studied at Rome, was professor at Florence and Pisa, and died at the latter place, July 21, 1742, leaving Martyrologium Camaldulense: Dissertationes Camaldulenses, etc. See Vita del Padre D. Guido Grandi, Scritta da Uno suo Discepolo; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 714. (B. P.)

Grandidier, PHILIPPE ANDRÉ, a French theologian, born at Strasburg, Nov. 9, 1752, entered into holy orders, was canon and keeper of the archives of the bishopric there, and died Oct. 11, 1787. He wrote, Histoire de l'Église et des Princes-Évêques de Strasburg (1776, 1778, 2 vols.); Histoire Ecclésiastique, de la Province d'Alsace (1781); Essai Historique sur la Cathédrale de Strasburg (1782). Besides, he left in MS. a great deal of matter pertaining to the Church history of Strasburg, which was published in six volumes, by Liblin, under the title, Œuvres Historiques Inédites de Grandidier (Colmar, 1865). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 823; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Grandin, MARTIN, a French theologian, was born at St. Quentin in 1604. He commenced his studies at Noyon, continued them at Amiens, and finished them at Paris, in the college of the cardinal Le Moine, where he afterwards taught philosophy. He was doctor of the Sorbonne, and taught theology there more than fifty years. He died at Paris in 1691, leaving a work of value entitled, Institutiones Theologicae (Paris, 1710). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grandison, JOHN, an English prelate of the 14th century, was born at Asperton, Herefordshire. He was prebendary of Exeter and York in 1309, archdeacon of Nottingham, Oct. 12, 1310, and dean of Wells. While holding these preferments, he became chaplain to pope Clement V, who employed him as his nuncio in France, Spain, Germany, and England, where he attracted the notice of Edward III. He was consecrated to the see of Exeter, Oct. 18, 1327. He was enormously rich, founded Ottery St. Mary, built Bishop's Teignton, vaulted the nave, built the west front of Exeter Cathedral, annexed Radway to his see, and compelled all ecclesiastics in his diocese to bequeath their goods to him to complete his buildings. He died July 16, 1369. Bishop Grandison had great trouble with the archbishop of Canterbury. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iii, 507; Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 74.

Grandpierre, HENRI, a Reformed theologian of France, who died at Paris while director of the missionary institute, in 1875, is the author of some ascetical works, as Tristesse et Consolation:—Le Guide du Fidèle à la Table Sacrée:—Les Aspirations Chrétiennes. Some of these, besides a number of his sermons, were translated into German. For a long time he edited a religious journal entitled, L'Espérance. See Za-child, Bibl. Theol. i, 462; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Grant (or Graunt), Edward, D.D., an eminent English scholar of the 16th century, was educated at Westminster School and Christchurch, or at Broadgates Hall, Oxford. In 1572 he was made master of Westminster School, where he continued until 1591. He was prebend of Westminster in 1577, of Ely in 1589, and died in Sept. or Oct. 1601. He published, Institutio Græcæ Grammaticæ Compendiaria (1597):—Græcæ Linguae Spicilegium (1575). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Grant, Richard, an English prelate, is usually stated to have been dean of London, but this is very improbable. In 1221 he was chancellor of Lincoln, and in 1229 he was consecrated to the see of Canterbury. His episcopate was short, and it seems that he was not as discreet as he should have been, which was so needful for the time. He died Aug. 3, 1231. According to Tanner, the following works were written by Richard Grant: De Fide et Legibus, lib. i:—De Sacramentis, lib. i:—De Universis Corporalis et Spirituali, lib. i. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iii, 103 sq.

Grape, Zacharias, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Rostock, Oct. 6, 1671. He studied at his native place and at Greifswalde, commenced his academical career in 1696 at Rostock, was in 1701 doctor, in 1704 professor of theology, and died Feb. 11, 1713, leaving, Systema Notissimarum Controversiarum (Rostock, 1705):—Historia Litteraria Talmudis Babylonici (ibid. 1696):—De Carthesii Methodo Convincendi Atheos:—*De Quibusdam Locutionibus in Critica Edu. Grasser, Johann Jacob, a Swiss historian and theologian, was born Feb. 21, 1579, at Basle. He studied a long time in France, and became three years later professor at Nîmes. In 1607 he received at Padua the title of a count-palatine, of a knight and Roman citizen. He then went to England, and on his return accepted, in his own country, the functions of a pastor in the village of Bernwyl, and afterwards at Basle, where he was connected with the Church of St. Theodor. He died at the latter place, March 21, 1627. Some of his principal works are, Eiðóλλιον, Helvetiæ Laudem Complotens, etc. (Basle, 1598):—De Antiquitatibus Nemanensibus (Cologne, 1572):—Ecclesiæ Orientalis et Meridionalis (Strasburg, 1613):—Itinerarium Historico-Politicum per Celebres Helvetiæ, etc. (Basle, 1614):—Chronicon der Waldenser (1623), and other works on the history of Italy, France, England, and Switzerland. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grassi, Giovanni, an eminent Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Verona, Oct. 12, 1778, and entered the Jesuit order, Nov. 16, 1799. In 1810 he was sent to Maryland to be superior of the Jesuit missions. He was recalled to Italy in 1817, and appointed to some important places of the order. He was also rector of the College of the Propaganda. He died Dec. 12, 1849. Grassi published Various Notices on the State of the Republic of the United States, 1818, which passed through three editions in Rome, Milan, and Turin. See Cath. Almanac, 1872, p. 102.

Grassi, Pietro Maria, an Augustinian monk of Vicenza, who flourished in the beginning of the 18th century, is the author of, Narratio Historica de Ortu ac Progressu Hæresium Joh. Wiclefi (Vicenza, 1707). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 734. (B. P.)

Gratianus, Philip Christoph, a German theologian, was born July 2, 1742, at Oberroth (in Limburg). He studied at the convents of Blaubeuren and Bebenhausen, in Württemberg, served afterwards in various ecclesiastical relations at Heilbronn (1767), at Neustadt (1773), at Offendingen, and became in 1795 ecclesiastical superintendent and first pastor of the city of Weinsberg, where he died, Jan. 7, 1799, leaving, De Harmonia Representationum Dei Realium (Tübingen, 1763):—De Memorialibus Justini Martyris, etc. (ibid. 1766):—Ursprung und Fortpflanzung des Christenthums in Europa (ibid. 1766):—Pflanzung des Christenthums in den aus den Trümmern des römischen Kaiserthums, etc. (Stuttgart, 1778):—Grundlehren der Religion (Lemgo, 1787). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gratius, Ortwin, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in the 15th century, at Moltwick, in the diocese of Münster. In 1509 he became professor at the College of Kuick, at Cologne, and afterwards took holy orders. He undertook the defense of Hogstraten against Reuchlin, but was overthrown by Hutten. He died at Cologne, May 18, 1541, leaving, Orationes Quodlibeticæ (Cologne, 1508):—Criticomastix Peregrinatio, etc. (Lyons, 1511):—Lamentationes Obscurorum Virorum (Cologne, 1518):—Fasciculus Rerum Expectandarum et Fugientiarum, etc. (ibid. 1535; new and enlarged edition, by Brown, Lond. 1690):—*Apologia Adversus Joh. Gratry, Auguste Joseph Alphonse, abbé, a French theologian, was born at Lille, March 30, 1805. He studied at Paris, became director of the College of Sainte-Barbe, in that city, in 1841, and chaplain of the superior normal school in 1846. He resigned this position in 1851, and, in conjunction with the abbé Petetot, founded the Oratory of the Immaculate Conception, and gave special attention to the conversion and instruction of the Parisian youth. In 1861 he was appointed vicar-general of Orleans, and in 1863 he became professor of moral theology in the Sorbonne. He attacked Renan and the Rationalists with great vigor in 1864; and in 1867 he was elected a member of the French Academy. He withdrew from the Oratory in 1869 on account of the unfriendly attitude assumed towards him by that institution, because of his connection with father Hyacinthe and the International League of Peace. He set forth his views of the position of the two parties in the Vatican Council in two letters, in 1870, but was constrained to retract in 1872. He died at Montreux, Switzerland, Feb. 6 of the same year. His principal works are, Étude sur la Sophistique Contemporaine (Paris, 1851; 4th ed. 1863):—De la Connaissance de Dieu (1853, 2 vols.; 7th ed. 1864), which received the prize from the French Academy:—Logique (1853, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1858):—De la Connaissance de l'Âme (1858, 2 vols.):—La Philosophie du Credo (1861):—Commentaire sur l'Évangile Selon Saint-Matthieu (1863-65, 2 vols.):—La Morale et la Loi de l'Histoire (1868, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1871), in which he declares the French revolution to be the true regeneration of human society:—Lettres sur la Religion (1869):—Les Sources de la Régénération Sociale (1871). Gravier, JACQUES, a French missionary to America, arrived in Canada in 1684. He was sent at once to the Illinois region, to follow up the labors of Marquette and others. He made a canoe voyage from Kaskaskia down the Mississippi to confer with Iberville: went down a second time in 1706, and from thence to Europe. He returned in February, 1708, re-embarked, and died at sea in April of the same year. He wrote a grammar of the Illinois language, a journal of his voyage down the Mississippi in 1700, and other works, a part of which have been published. See Appleton's Amer. Cyclop. s. v.

Gravina, DOMINICO, an Italian theologian, was born at Naples in 1580. He entered the order of St. Dominic, and studied theology; taught in several convents of his order the interpretation of the Scriptures; in 1608 was advanced to the grade of a licensed theologian at Rome, where he was professor several years in the College of La Minerva, and was selected occasionally to address the pope. He died at Rome in 1648. Some of his principal works are, Catholicæ Præscriptiones, Adversus omnes Veteres et Nostri Temporis Hæreticos (Naples, 1619):—Pro Sacro Fidei Catholicæ et Apostolicæ Deposito, etc. (ibid. 1629):—Ad Discernendas Veras a Falsis Visionibus et Revelationibus Lupis Lydius (1638). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Gray, John, a Reformed (Dutch) minister, descended from the Scotch Covenanters, was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1792, and educated and ordained in that country in 1815. He led in prayer at the family altar, and bought a Bible, then a costly book, with his own earnings, of which he afterwards wrote the history, called Little Johnny and his Bible. In 1818 he went with his wife to Russian Tartary as a Presbyterian missionary. After seven years of labor there, he returned on the death of his wife, and engaged in home mission work in England until 1833, when he removed to America, and spent the rest of his busy life chiefly as a missionary (Fallsburgh, N. Y. 1833-35; Schodack, 1835-46; Cohoes, 1847-48; Ghent, 1848-55; Cicero, 1856-57). He died in 1865. He was an almost constant contributor to the religious press, and was the author of several of the most striking tracts of the American Tract Society. He was a close observer of men and things, an acute thinker and vigorous writer, full of strong points and memorable forms of expression. His spirit, work, and life were full of Christ, and his earnestness was unwearied. See Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church in America, a. v. (W. J. R. T.).

Gray, Joshua Taylor, Ph.D., an English Baptist, born at Davenport, Feb. 9, 1809, was the son of the Rev. W. Gray. He was early converted, baptized by his father at Northampton, and began to preach in his youth. He entered the Baptist College in 1827, and in 1830 was ordained pastor of the St. Andrew's Baptist Church, Cambridge. His mind not being suited to preaching, he opened a school at Brixton, but afterwards succeeded Mr. Bligh in his school near Bedford Square, London. In 1849 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Hastings, but in 1850 was chosen classical tutor at the Baptist College, Stepney. In 1852 consumption set in; he visited New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, but was able to address only one American audience. He returned to his mother's house in Bristol, and died there, July 13, 1854. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1855, p. 49.

Gray, Thomas, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, Mass., March 16, 1772. He graduated at Harvard University in 1790, and studied theology for a year there and under Dr. Stillman. After preaching at several places, he was called to Jamaica Plain, where he was ordained, March 27, 1793. In 1849 he resigned in favor of his colleague, Joseph H. Allen. He died at Jamaica Plain, June 1, 1847. Gray was an agreeable, practical preacher, although it was as a pastor he was most conspicuous. See Christ. Examiner, September, 1847, art. vii; Frothingham, Funeral Sermon (Boston, 1847).

Gray, William, an English prelate of the 15th century, was son of lord Gray of Codnor, Derbyshire. He studied at Balliol College, Oxford, then at Ferrara, Italy, where for a long time he heard the lectures of Guarinus of Verona, an accomplished scholar. The English king appointed him his procurator at the court of Rome, and he afterwards was preferred to the see of Ely, in which he sat twenty four years. In 1469 he served as lord-treasurer of England, being the last clergyman who discharged that office until the appointment of Bishop Juxton (or Juxon) in 1635. He died Aug. 4, 1478, and was buried in the Cathedral of Ely. He wrote many books, which have not survived, however. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 370.

Graziani, ERCOLE, the Younger, an eminent Bolognese painter, was born in 1688, and studied under Donato Creti. He painted an immense number of works for the Bolognese churches, among which is the celebrated picture of St. Peter Consecrating St. Apollinare. There are other works by him at Rome, The Ascension and The Annunciation in La Purita. He died in 1765. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, a. v.

Greaton, JOSIAH, a Roman Catholic priest, was born about 1680; entered the Society of Jesus, July 5, 1708, became a professed father, Aug. 4, 1719, resided at St. Inigo's, Md., from 1721 to 1724; exercised his ministry in Philadelphia for nearly twenty years (1730-50); returned to Maryland; and died at Bohemia, Sept. 19, 1752. Greaton's name is a prominent one in the early annals of Catholicism in Philadelphia. See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the U. S., p. 200.

Greatrakes, VALENTINE, a famous English thaumaturgist, was born at Affane, County Waterford, Ireland, Feb. 14, 1628. At the age of thirteen he was obliged, on account of the civil troubles, to leave the College of Dublin, and take refuge with his mother in England. Some time later he fought in Ireland against the royalists, and after the disbanding of his regiment, in 1656, retired to a quiet life. He now imagined that he had received from above the power of curing the sick, which he actually proved in several cases by simply laying on his hands. This, however, drew upon him the attention of the local authorities, and being summoned before the bishop of Lismore, he was condemned, and had to abstain from his pretensions. He was afterwards called to England, where the countess Conway was afflicted by a disease which he cured. He was then called to London, where he went about daily professing to cure invalids. He excited the jealousy of the physicians, who began to write pamphlets against him, but Greatrakes did not hesitate to refer even to members of the court. He died in Ireland about 1700. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict., a. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, a. v.

Grebenitz, ELIAS, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died Dec. 31, 1689, professor of theology at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, is the author of, De Christo ἀναμάρτητῳ:—Theologia Systematica Propædia:—De Scriptura Probata:—De Regeneratione:—De Scriptura Sacra Vero Usu:—De Auctoritate Conciliorum. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Grebo Version of the Scriptures. The Grebo language is predominant in the immediate vicinity of cape Palmas, and is supposed to extend considerably into the interior. At present the Grebos enjoy the benefit of having in their own vernacular the gospels of Matthew and Luke, the Acts of the Apostles, Paul's epistle to the Romans, his first epistle to the Corinthians, and the book of Genesis. The publication of these parts of the Scriptures is due to the American Bible Society. (B. P.)

Green, Alexander L. P., D.D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Sevier County, Tenn., June 24, 1807, and reared in Jackson County, Ala. He joined the Church in his ninth year; in 1824 was admitted into the Tennessee Conference; at the age of twenty-five was chosen a delegate to the General Conference, and was thus elected each session except one until his decease. He was one of the chief actors in securing a separation, in 1844, between the Methodist Episcopal Church North and South. For sixty years he gave his entire energies to the Church, dying in the midst of his labors, in Nashville, Tenn., July 15, 1874. Probably no man of his time made a more lasting impression upon his chosen denomination than Dr. Green. In winning souls he had but few equals. He was self-taught and self-cultured, strictly original, full of pathos, and unrivalled in descriptive ability. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 70; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Green, Anson, D.D., a Canadian Methodist minister, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1801. He went to Upper Canada in 1822, taught school in Prince Edward County, was called into the ministry in 1824, received on trial in 1825, ordained as elder in 1830, was presiding elder from 1832 to 1845, was book steward from 1845, superannuated from 1854 to 1859, was again book steward from 1859 to 1865, and retired finally from active service in the latter year. He was elected president of the conference in 1842 and 1863, and representative to the British Conference in 1846 and 1854. He died at his home in Toronto, Feb. 19, 1879. Dr. Green was a faithful laborer, a successful and popular preacher, and discharged with efficiency the duties of all the offices with which he was intrusted. He wrote his own Life and Times, a valuable book, which was published at the request of the conference. See Minutes of the Toronto Conference, 1879, p. 13.

Green, Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born July 8, 1636. He studied at Wittenberg, Leipsic, and Strasburg, was for some time professor at Wittenberg, in 1678 court-preacher at Dresden, and died Aug. 22, 1691. He wrote, Tres Disputationes de Sibyllis:—Duae Disputationes de Rebus Herodis Magni:—De Ecclesia Bohemica:—De Hæresi Veterum Prædestinationarum:—De Concilio Nicæano. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Green, Georg Sigismund, the Younger, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 8, 1712, at Chemnitz. He studied at Wittenberg and Leipsic, in which latter place he also lectured in 1732. In 1736 he was rector at Meissen, in 1746 archdeacon, and died Jan. 12, 1754. He wrote, De Lucæ Religioni ab Abrahamo Consecrata, ad Genes. xxii, 33 (Leipsic, 1735):—De Vite in Templo Hierosolymitano a Romanis Reperta (1787):—De Clypeis in Loco Sacro Suspensis (ed.).:—De Regibus Sacerdotibus (1739; contained in Exercitationes Philol. Antiquæ et Criticæ, Meissen, 1744):—De Plantatis in Domo Jehovæ:—De Anno Quinquagesimo Dei Sacris Ministrorum:—De Choreis a Paulo Interdictis:—De Summa Decalogi:—De Deo Fulminatore:—De Vento Nuntio et Symboli Dei, contained in Exercitationum Sacrarum Decas Prima. See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priester, vol. i; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Green, John, an English prelate, was born about 1706 at Beverly, in Yorkshire, and became, in 1730, a fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1748 he was regius professor of divinity, and in 1750 was master of Benedict College. In 1756 he was dean of Lincoln, and bishop of Lincoln in 1761. In 1771 he was canon-residentary of St. Paul's. He died April 25, 1779. He published ten occasional Sermons (1749-73):—The Academic (1760). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict., s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Green, Lewis Warner, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Boyle County, Ky., Jan. 28, 1806, and educated at Centre College, Danville; studied one year (1831) at the Princeton Theological Seminary, was licensed by the Transylvania Presbytery, and appointed professor in Centre College. Subsequently he was elected professor of Hebrew and Oriental literature in the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny City, Pa., which position he occupied for many years. In 1848 he was elected president of Hampden Sidney College, Va. He died May 26, 1868. He was an eminent scholar and a lowly Christian. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 93; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop., s. v.; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 76.

Green, Thomas Hull, an English philosopher, was born in 1836. He was educated at Rugby and at Balliol College. In 1859 he took his bachelor's degree, began to study Hegel, and gave a good deal of attention to the Tübingen school, especially Baur. Among the fruits of these studies were two essays on the Development of Dogma. In 1866 he commenced lecturing at Balliol, and in 1878 was elected to the office of Whyte's professor of moral philosophy, and shortly after resigned his tutorship. He died March 26, 1882. For the North British Review he contributed, in 1866, on the Philosophy of Aristotle, and on Popular Philosophy in its Relation to Life. His main work followed in 1874, as part of a new edition of Hume's works by Green and Grose, in four volumes. The first two volumes, including the Treatise on Human Nature, were prefaced by lengthy introductory dissertations; one dealing with the theoretical philosophy of Locke, Berkeley, and Hume; the other with the ethical views of these writers and their contemporaries. "The former," says a writer in the Academy, "is a probably unequalled piece of minute and at the same time comprehensive criticism of the origins of current English philosophy." In December, 1877, professor Green began, in the Contemporary Review, a series of papers on "Mr. Herbert Spencer and Mr. G. H. Lewes: their Application of the Doctrine of Evolution to Thought." Besides, in several short reviews published in the Academy, he has made contributions of permanent value to the literature of philosophical criticism. See Contemporary Review, May, 1882. (B. P.)

Green, Valentine, an eminent English mezzotint engraver, was born in Warwickshire in 1739. In 1765 he went to London and devoted himself to mezzotint engraving, which, without the aid of an instructor, he elevated to a high degree of perfection. In 1769 he obtained the exclusive privilege from the king of Bavaria of engraving and publishing prints after the pictures in the Düsseldorf gallery, and in 1795 he published twenty-two prints from that collection. In 1767 he was elected a member of the Incorporated Society of Artists in Great Britain, and in 1774 an associate engraver of the Royal Academy. He died July 6, 1813. The following are some of his important works: The Stoning of Stephen; The Raising of Lazarus; Christ Culling to him the Little Children; Jacob Blessing the Sons of Joseph; Daniel Interpreting Belshazzar's Dream; The Annunciation; The Nativity; The Virgin and Infant; St. John with his Lamb; The Entombing of Christ. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Greene, Abijah Emmons, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Greenfield, Saratoga Co., N. Y. Dec. 11, 1809. He was prepared for college at the academies at Johnstown and Amsterdam, N. Y.; graduated from Union College in 1834; went immediately to Princeton Seminary, and remained nearly three years; was licensed by the Presbytery of Albany, Oct. 15, 1835, and, after supplying Glenham Church, was ordained by the Presbytery of North River pastor at Cold Spring, May 16, 1838, from which charge he was released June 9, 1841. After this time he labored as stated supply successively at Highland Falls, Haverstraw, Rockland Lake, Highland Falls again, Southampton, Rensselaersville, Bleecker, and Hampstead churches, all in the state of New York, for various periods of time. After 1866 he resided, in poor health, at Highland Falls. He died in New York city, Oct. 20, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 83.

Greene, Maurice, an eminent English musician, was born in London in 1696. He composed cathedral music, and made collections with a view to its publication. Before he was twenty years old he was organist of St. Dunstan's, in 1717 of St. Andrew's, Holborn, in 1726 of the chapel royal, and of St. Paul's in 1727. He died in London, Sept. 1, 1755. Greenlanders, RELIGION OF THE. These people, like the other Esquimaux, spiritualize all objects that surround them. The spirits are called Innuet, i. e. rulers. Malina and Aniunga are the rulers of the sun and moon. They were formerly men, but have been placed in the heavens. Their food changes their color, for they are sometimes red, sometimes yellow. The planets are women, who visit each other, therefore oftentimes a number are seen together. The rulers of the atmosphere are Innerterisok and Erloersortok; the spirits of the sea Konguesetokit, and the ice-ruler, Sil-lagigartok. The spirits of fire are called Ingersoit. The mountains are inhabited by great spirits and small gnomes, Tannersoit and Innuarolit. The gods of war Erkiglit, the spirits of food Nerrim Innuet, etc., are distributed everywhere, and they can be persuaded by mysterious means, only known to magicians, to become the protecting spirits of men. Such a guardian is called Torgak, but the great spirit, the ruler of all Innuets and Torgaks, is called Torgaseak. The wife or mother of this great spirit is a dreaded being; she is the daughter of the sorcerer who tore Disko (Greenland) from the mainland, and thrust it towards the north. She lives under the sea, and injures the fish-traffic. The invisible ruler of the universe, Scylla or Pirksom, is the unimaginable, omniscient god. The Greenlanders have no divine worship with ceremonies. When a young man captures his first sea-lion, he lays a piece of fat or meat under a stone as a sacrifice, in order to insure good success in hunting. Sun and moon are sister and brother. The latter loved his sister, who was very beautiful, and he conceived the idea of putting out the lamps in winter, in order that he might caress and embrace her. She wanted to know who her lover was, and therefore covered her hands with rust, and thus blackened his face and clothes. Then she brought in the light, and recognising her brother, she fled. The brother lighted a bundle of moss in order to find his way and follow her; the moss would not ignite, the sister escaped, and was placed in the heavens. The sun still follows her, and the dark spots which he has are the stripes made by his sister's blackened hands. Heaven, according to the Greenlanders, rests on the top of a mountain on the North Pole, about which it revolves daily. They have no knowledge of astronomy whatever, which is quite singular, as the stars and planets are the only means of reckoning time during the long half-year night. They have, however, the following theory as to the origin of thunder and lightning: Two old women, inhabiting a log cabin in heaven, are angry with each other over a dry, stretched seal-skin; as often as they strike the skin with their fists, a peal of thunder is heard. When, then, the house tumbles, and the burning rafters fall, the lightning is produced. The rain also has its explanation: The souls live in heaven on the brink of a dammed-up sea. When this sea swells, the overflowing waters form the rain. Their traditions also tell of Adam, Noah, and a flood. Kollak was the first man, from whose thumb there sprang the first woman, and from her came all human beings. When, after many years, the earth sank into the sea, only one man was left, who began a new generation. The Greenlanders have a twofold conception of souls: these are a shadow, or a breath. A dangerous journey must be made by all souls to heaven; for five days they must slide down a steep rock, which is therefore covered with blood.

Greenlandish Version OF THE SCRIPTURES. As early as 1721, Hans Egede (q. v.), a Norwegian clergyman, settled at Sodthaas (latitude 64° north), and his attention was soon arrested by the abject and deplorable condition of the natives. He applied himself to the study of their language, reduced it to writing, and translated the Psalms and the Epistles of St. Paul. His son Paul completed the version of the New Test., portions of which were published at Copenhagen in 1744, followed in 1758 by an edition of the Gospels and Acts, and in 1766 by the entire New Test. This first attempt being very deficient, Fabricius, after the death of Egede (1789), undertook a new translation, which was printed in 1799. As this second attempt did not prove to be in any respect superior to Egede's version, Moravian missionaries undertook a third translation from Luther's German version, which was published in 1822 by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and in subsequent editions by the Danish Bible Society. A new and revised edition was published at Hernhut, under the personal superintendence of several retired missionaries from Greenland, in 1851; while of the Old Test. only some portions are published. It is said that while John Beck, one of the missionaries, was engaged in transcribing the version of the four Gospels, the curiosity of the savages being excited to know what he was writing, he read to them the history of the Saviour's agony on the Mount of Olives. Some of them laid their hands upon their mouths, as is customary among them when they are struck with wonder; but one of them, named Kajarnak, exclaimed in a loud and serious tone, "How was that? Tell us that once more; for I, too, would fain be saved," and finally became converted to God. Up to March 31, 1884, the British and Foreign Bible Society had distributed 2000 New Test., and 1200 portions of the Old Test. See ESQUIMAUX VERSION. (B. P.)

Greenlaw, GILBERT, a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of Aberdeen in 1390, and was made chancellor of the kingdom in 1396. In 1423 this bishop was sent on an embassy to Charles VII, king of France, by Robert, duke of Albany. He died in 1424. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 28-112.

Greenleaf, Jonathan, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Newburyport, Mass., Sept. 4, 1785. He was deprived of the privileges of an academic education, and when he felt that he was called to preach the gospel, he began the study of theology under Dr. Bruer, president of Dartmouth College, at Hanover, N. H. He was licensed to preach by the Cumberland Association at Saco, Me., in September, 1814. After having filled several important charges, he was elected corresponding secretary of the American Seaman's Friend Society in 1833, in which capacity he labored with untiring diligence until 1841. He died at Brooklyn, N. Y., April 24, 1865. Dr. Greenleaf was the author of, *Ecclesiastical Sketches of Maine:—History of the Churches of New York:—Thoughts on Paper:—The Genealogy of the Greenleaf Family:—A Doctrinal Catechism:—*and five tracts entitled, The Missing Disciple; Experimental Religion; Sudden Death; Misery of Dying in Sin; and Shall I Come to the Lord's Supper? During his connection with the Seaman's Friend Society, he also edited the Sailor's Magazine. He contributed many valuable articles to the religious papers. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 111.

Greenleaf, Patrick Henry, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a native of Maine, and a son of the Hon. Simon Greenleaf. After graduating at Bowdoin College, he practiced law for several years; but turning his attention to the ministry, pursued his theological studies under bishop Doane, and was duly ordained. He was connected successively with the dioceses of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. For several years he was rector of St. John's, Charlestown, Mass.; also of St. Paul's, Cincinnati, O.; and in 1862 of Emanuel Church, Brooklyn, in which city he died, June 21, 1869, at the age of sixty-two years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev., Jan. 1870, p. 635.

Greenville (Granville or Grenville), DENIS, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in Cornwall, and admitted commoner of Exeter College, Sept. 22, 1657.

The rectories of Easington and Elwick, in the palatine of Durham, were conferred upon him. He was installed dean of Durham in 1684, and deprived of his preferments in 1690, on account of his refusal to acknowledge William and Mary. He died at Paris in 1708, leaving several theological works, sermons, etc. (1684-89). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Greens, a mediæval term, which some assert to be derived from Gradus, signifying "a step." It is frequently employed by old English writers to designate the altar-steps, which anciently were two only; but others were added later, until, in more recent times, high altars have been elevated on at least seven steps. There are some examples of this both in old and modern churches.

Greeting-house, a term sometimes applied in mediæval times to the chapter-house of a cathedral, where a newly-appointed bishop or dean received the greetings respectively of his flock, or the members of his cathedral. Such greetings, however, were as frequently given at the entrance of the choir, or in the sacristy. To an abbot they were sometimes tendered in the refectory, or even in the choir after the rites of installation.

Gregentius, Saint, bishop of Tephæ, in Arabia, was born at Sopian, "on the frontier of Asia," but other authorities say, at Milan, on Dec. 19 (his festal day). He went to Alexandria, where he embraced the life of an anchorite, and was sent to take charge of the Homerites. He propagated Christianity among the idolaters of Yemen, and is said to have died in 552. There is a book extant, giving some details of part of his life, entitled: Τὸ ἐν ἀγίοις Πατὴρ ἡμῶν Γρηγορίου ἀρχιεπισκόπου γενομένων Τεγγών, etc. (Migne, Patrol. Græc. lxxxvii, 5). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Gregorius, BAR-AHRUN (OF BAR-HEBÆUS). See ABUL-FARAJ.

Gregory (1), an Irish prelate, was elected to the see of Dublin, and went immediately to England, where he received his first orders as bishop, from Roger, bishop of Salisbury, Sept. 24, 1121, and was consecrated in the following October. After he had presided thirty-one years over his see, the archiepiscopal dignity was conferred upon him, at the Council of Kells. He died Oct. 8, 1161. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Abps. of Dublin, p. 41.

Gregory (2), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Dunkeld in 1169. How long he sat is unknown. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 73.

Gregory (3), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Ross in 1161. He died in 1195. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 184.

Gregory (4), a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Brechin in 1242. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 158.

Gregory I*, OF ARMENIA (surnamed the Mami-gonian), brother and successor of Hamazasb, having been given as a hostage to the Arabians from the time of the conquest of Armenia, was sent back into his own country in 659, to govern it, with the title of a patriarch. He relieved Bagdad from its caliphs until the year 679, when he made himself independent. But four years later he perished, in 683, in an encounter with the Khazars, who had crossed the Caucasus and invaded Armenia. He erected several buildings, among which the monastery of Arûj, near Erivan, and the monastery of Elivard are particularly distinguishable. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory II, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Vgaizer or Martyrophilus), a patriarch of Armenia, the son of Gregory Magisdros, died in 1105, at Garmir-Vankh, near Khesûn. He was educated under the direction of his father, and made great progress both in science and languages. He inherited, in 1058, the government of the duchy of Mesopotamia. But neither that dignity, nor the favor which he enjoyed at the court of Constantinople could make him attached to a secular life. He separated himself from his wife, sold all his goods, distributing the money among the unfortunate, and consecrated himself to the monastic life. Gregory is less remarkable as an administrator than as a protector of letters. He gathered about him Greek and Syrian scholars, whom he charged with translating a large number of works, written in their own languages. These versions were revised by Armenian scholars, who improved their style. The patriarch himself put his hand upon a translation of a martyrology. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory III, OF ARMENIA (named BAHLAVUNI, and surnamed the small Vgaizer or Martyrophilus), was born in 1092. After the death of his uncle Basil, he was consecrated patriarch in 1113, in conformity with the dispositions which were made by Gregory II. But several bishops found fault with the new patriarch as too young, and refused to recognise him. One among them, David of Aghthamar, was consecrated patriarch at the Council of Droroi-Vankh. But this usurpation was condemned in a council convoked in 1114 by Gregory III, and composed of two thousand five hundred bishops and doctors, who established the principle that for the election of a patriarch in the future it should be necessary to have the unanimous consent of the four archbishops. Gregory lived in good understanding with the Romish Church, and died in 1166, having arranged that his brother, Nurses IV, should become his successor. He left hymns, which are very well written, and which are still sung in the solemnities of the Armenian Church. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory IV, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Dgha, i. e. "the child"), succeeded to his uncle Nurses IV in 1173. He gained the admiration of his people by his imposing manners. Being charged by the emperor Manuel Comnenus to renew the offer of uniting the churches of Armenia and Greece, he convoked a council at Tarsus in 1178, but, on account of disputes between the parties, the projected union failed of consummation. Gregory IV died in 1193, leaving, Odanaver Oghg (poetical lamentation), on the capture of Jerusalem by Saladin in 1187:—six Letters, which were addressed by him to the emperor Manuel, and the letter of convocation for the Council of Hrhomgla. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory V, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Mansug, i. e. "the young," and Kaharej, "he who falls from on high"), succeeded his uncle, Gregory IV, in July, 1193, although yet quite young. After having administered his office about one year, he conducted himself in such a manner as to make himself odious to the nobility as well as to the clergy. He was accused before Leo II, and was put in the fortress of Gobidarrh. He died in 1195. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory VI, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Abirad), nephew of Gregory III, was elected after the deposition of Gregory V. The inhabitants of Great Armenia, and particularly the monks, refused to recognise him, because the place of his residence, the strong castle of Hrhomgla in Cilicia, or Little Armenia, was too far away from them. They chose as their patriarch Basil of Ani. When the persecution of the Armenians by the Greeks had broken out, Gregory VI vainly tried to bring back the emperor Alexis to principles of tolerance. Under his patriarchate the Armenian Church had a good understanding with that of Rome. He died in 1202. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory VII, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Anararseli), was proposed as successor to Jacob I in 1287,

* Strictly, Gregory II. See GREGORY the Illuminator.

but his attachment to the doctrines of the Roman Church was so great that in his stead were elected Constantine II, and afterwards Stephen IV. On the death of the latter, who was a captive in Egypt, Gregory was appointed to fill his place in 1294. The residence of his predecessors at Hrhongia had been destroyed by the Mamelukes, and so Gregory VII selected his seat in Cilicia. His tendencies to substitute the Roman liturgy for the rites of the Armenian Church were regarded with disfavor by the monks of Great Armenia, who begged him to abstain from such unpopular innovations. Having taken the part of the prince Sempad against king Thoros, Sempad's brother, he crowned him in 1297, and placed him in subjection to the pope. Towards the end of his life, Gregory occupied himself mostly with the reunion of the Armenian and Roman churches. He died in 1306. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory VIII, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Khandougad), succeeded Jacob III in 1411. He was a monk before his election. The inhabitants of Sis, who had poisoned his predecessor, made a conspiracy against their new chief, and were punished by the chief of the Mamelukes in Cilicia, but roused themselves again in 1418, deposing the patriarch, and putting him in a fortress, where he died shortly afterwards. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory IX, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Mousapigian), succeeded Joseph III in 1440 as patriarch. Cilicia had been continually invaded at that time by different enemies, on which account some of the bishops wished to establish the patriarchal seat in a different part of the empire, less exposed to danger, and proposed to transfer the see of Sis to the monastery of Echmiadzin. But as Gregory would not consent, they began to attack him on account of his election, which, in fact, had taken place in a small assembly. Accordingly seven hundred bishops and doctors united, in 1441, at Echmiadzin, under the presidency of Zacharias, bishop of Havuts-Tharha, and elected Gurragas, a monk of Kharrabad, in the province of Khadchperuni. The latter established himself at Echmiadzin, while Gregory continued in the city of Sis, being recognised only by the inhabitants of Cilicia. He died in 1447. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory X, OF ARMENIA (surnamed Magovetsi), was elected patriarch, in 1443, to succeed Gurragas, whom Zacharias, bishop of Havuts-Tharha, had deposed. Yacoub Bey, of Erivan, governor of Armenia, imposed on him a heavy tribute, which, however, did not prevent Gregory from finding the means to repair the patriarchal church. He died in 1462. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory XI, OF ARMENIA, was elected patriarch in 1536, after the death of Sarkis III. He died in 1541, and was succeeded by Stephen V. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory XII, OF ARMENIA, succeeded Michael of Sebastopol as patriarch in 1562. He died in 1573, and was succeeded by Stephen VI. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory XIII, OF ARMENIA, was born at Edessa. As he was in possession of a large fortune, the patriarch Melchisedech and his coadjutor, David, offered to transfer to him their dignity, if he would consent to pay their debts. Serapion (the former name of Gregory XIII) went to Joulfa (near Ispahan) in 1602, to negotiate with the patriarch the conditions of the arrangement, but could not settle anything. Some inhabitants of that city took him to Echmiadzin, and elected him patriarch, Aug. 14, 1603. That dignity caused Gregory the loss of his fortune. The Turks, who were on the point of being driven out of Armenia by the troops of shah Abbas, requested the payment of all debts. Melchisedech being insolvent, they seized his successor, and forced from him all that they could get. Shah Abbas required of him an enormous sum, and delivered him to his ministers, who put him to torture, in order to force him to disclose his treasures. Under protest the patriarch retired to Van, and then to Amid, where he died of grief in 1606. The patriarchal seat, having remained vacant, was taken again by Melchisedech. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gregory VII, OF ROME (Antipope). See BOURDIN, MAURICE.

Gregory OF HUNTINGDON, a monk of the 13th century, so called from the place of his nativity in Huntingdonshire, was bred a Benedictine monk at Ramsey, where he became prior or vice-abbot, a place he deserved, being one of the most learned men of his time in the languages. He wrote many comments on the Latin and Greek classics, and was proficient in Hebrew by constant conversing with the Jews. When the latter were driven from the kingdom, he purchased many of their literary treasures for his monastery at Ramsay, an institution which exceeded any other of the kind in England for its fine library, rich now especially in Hebrew books. Two hundred years after, a monk of the same monastery, John Yong, added yet more to the library of his school. Gregory was prior of Ramsey for thirty-eight years, flourishing under Henry III, and died in the reign of Edward I, about 1280. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 101.

Gregory, Caspar Robue, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 17, 1824. He was prepared for college by his brother, Henry D.; graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1843; taught nearly two years in private families; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1847; was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, April 5, 1848; then taught a year, and was ordained an evangelist by the same presbytery, May 20, 1849. His first field of labor was as a missionary to the Choctaw Indians at Spencer Academy, in the Indian Territory. In 1850 he left the mission on account of ill-health. He next supplied the church at Oneida, Madison Co., N. Y., from April 20, 1851, until installed as its pastor, Feb. 9, 1852, continuing his labors until 1862; was installed pastor of the First Church of Bridgeton, N. J., May 12, 1864, and was released Oct. 7, 1873, immediately becoming professor of sacred rhetoric in Lincoln University, Pa. He died there, Feb. 26, 1882. Dr. Gregory was an earnest man, his preaching of a high quality, and as a professor was devoted and faithful. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 46.

Gregory, Henry, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born Sept. 22, 1803, at Wilton, Fairfield Co., Conn. He graduated at Hobart College in 1826; was ordained deacon in 1829, and presbyter in 1831; officiated first in Moravia, N. Y.; was called to Calvary Church, Homer, in 1833; went as missionary to the Menomonee Indians, near Green Bay, Wis., in 1836; returned to Homer in 1838, and two years after was elected rector of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, N. Y.; became the first rector of St. James's Free Church, in the same city, in 1848, but resigned in 1857 on account of impaired health; subsequently accepted the presidency of De Veaux College at Suspension Bridge, remaining in that position two years, when he established the Church Book Depository at Syracuse. He died there, April 5, 1866. In connection with the free church system, Dr. Gregory published, in 1850, a tract on the Christian Tenth. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. July, 1866, p. 311.

Gregory, John, an English churchman of the 17th century, was born of humble parents at Amersham, Buckinghamshire, Nov. 10, 1607. He was educated at Christ Church College, Oxford, where for many years he studied sixteen hours a day. He became an exquisite linguist and general scholar, his modesty setting the greater lustre to his learning. He wrote notes on Dr. Ridley's book of Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. He was chaplain of Christ Church, and was thence preferred prebendary of Chichester and Sarum. He died at Kidlington, Oxfordshire, in 1846. His Opera Posthuma are faithfully set forth by John Gurgain. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 208; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Gregory, Samblak, a Russian prelate, was a native of Bulgaria, and became metropolitan of Kiev in 1414. He went to the Council of Constance in 1418, and died the year following. It is certain that this prelate was a Catholic, for his name is found in one of the ancient liturgies. The library of the synod of Moscow is in possession of twenty-seven Discourses of this metropolitan. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Greiling, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 23, 1765. He was preacher in 1797 in Saxony, in 1805 superintendent at Aschersleben, and died April 3, 1840. He wrote, Die Biblischen Frauen (Leipzig, 1814, 2 vols.):—Das Leben Jesu von Nazareth (Halle, 1813):—Ueber die Urverfassung der apostolischen Christengemeine (1819):—Versuch über das wechselseitige Verhältniss des Staats und der Kirche (1802):—Neue praktische Materialien zum Kanzelortrag (1798–1804, 6 vols.):—Neueste Materialien (1821–27, 6 vols.):—Amstovorträge (1805). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 162, 550; ii, 18, 20, 25, 66, 125, 164; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 465. (B. P.)

Greith, KARL JOHANN, a Roman Catholic doctor of theology and prelate, was born in 1807 at Rapperswyl. In 1863 he was made bishop of St. Gall, the second after the foundation of that diocese. He died May 17, 1882. He wrote, Die deutsche Mystik im Prediger-Orden von 1250–1350 (Freiburg, 1860):—Geschichte der altirischen Kirche (ibid. 1867):—Der heilige Gallus, der Apostel Alemanniens (St. Gall, 1865):—Licht und Recht zur Vertheidigung seiner bischöflichen Pflichtenstellung (Einsiedeln, 1874). any drops of unction that might fall in the act of anointing candidates for the priesthood. In later times it was made of silk or damask, to match the episcopal vestments, and was used in certain French dioceses both at solemn and high mass.

Grenvil, WILLIAM DE, an early English prelate, was born of a noble family in Cornwall; became canon of York, dean of Chichester, chancellor of England under king Edward I, and finally archbishop of York. His confirmation to this last preferment was delayed until he had paid the pope nine thousand five hundred marks, which reduced him to such poverty that he had to be relieved by the clergy of his province. He had this compensation—he was consecrated by the very hands of pope Clement V. He highly favored the Templars, but persons so greatly opposed as they were by the pope and Philip of France had more fear of losing than hope of gaining by his friendship. He was present at the Council of Vienna (1311), where he had a high place assigned him. He died at Cawood in 1315, and was buried in the Chapel of St. Nicholas, leaving the reputation of an able statesman and a good scholar. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 309.

Grenz, ADAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Rochlitz in 1700. He studied at Leipsic, was preacher in 1728, and died at Dresden, April 22, 1773, leaving, Lucubratio Theologica in Joh. vii, 48, 49 (Leipsic, 1789):—De Apocriphis (1748):—De eo qui Major est Templo ad Matth. xii, 6 (1752), etc. See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priester; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 613. (B. P.)

Greswell, EDWARD, an English ecclesiastical writer, was born at Manchester in 1797. He was educated at Oxford, where he became a fellow, and vice-president of Corpus Christi College. He devoted his life chiefly to theological literature. He died at Oxford, June 29, 1869. Among his more important publications are, Expositions of the Parables and other Parts of the Gospels (1834, 1835, 5 vols.):—Prolegomena ad Harmoniam Evangelicam:—Dissertationes upon the Principles and Arrangement of a Harmony of Gospels (2d ed. 1837, 5 vols.):—Fasti Temporis Catholici (1852, 5 vols.). See Appleton's Amer. Cyclop. s. v.

Gretsch, ADRIAN, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born at Vienna, Oct. 11, 1752. He joined the Benedictines in 1770, was in 1784 professor of theology at Vienna, in 1796 dean of the theological faculty, and died Oct. 28, 1826, leaving eight volumes of Sermons. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 113. (B. P.)

Greuter, MATTHIEU, a reputable French engraver, was born at Strasburg in 1566, and acquired the principles of the art in his native city. He went to Rome, where he settled permanently, and executed a number of plates, among which are the following: The Virginia Seated, with the Infant Jesus and St. John; Mary Magdalene Sitting. He died at Rome in 1638. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Greuze, JEAN BAPTISTE, an eminent French painter, was born at Tournus (Burgundy) in 1726, and studied under Grandon. He went to Paris, and produced his celebrated picture of The Father Explaining the Scriptures to his Children, which at once established his reputation. Many of his works have been engraved by eminent French artists. He died at Paris, March 21, 1805. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Grew, OBADIAH, D.D., an English clergyman, was born at Atherston, November, 1607, in the parish of Mancetter, Warwickshire, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1635; became minister of the great parish of St. Michael's, Coventry; was ejected at the Restoration for nonconformity; and died in 1698. He published some Sermons (1663):—and Meditations upon the Parable of the Prodigal Son (1678). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Grial, JUAN, a Spanish canonist, who flourished in the second part of the 16th century, is known as the editor of Isidori Hispanensis Opera (Madrid, 1599). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 917; Antonii Bibliotheca Hispanica; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Grier, John Ferguson, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Deep Run, Pa., in 1784. He graduated from Dickinson College in 1808 with the first honors of his class; studied theology privately; was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery in 1810; ordained pastor of the Church at Reading in 1814, and died June 26, 1829. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 467.

Grier, John Nathan Caldwell, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born June 8, 1792, at the Forks of the Brandywine, Pa. In 1809 he graduated from Dickinson College; subsequently studied theology with his father, Rev. Nathan Grier; was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery, April 7, 1812, and engaged in preaching to vacant churches in Delaware. In 1814 he succeeded his father as pastor at the Forks of Brandywine, and after a long and fruitful ministry there, he resigned in 1873, and retired to his farm. He died at New Castle, Sept. 12, 1880. See New York Observer, Sept. 23, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Griesinger, Georg Friedrich von, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 16, 1734. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1766 deacon at Stuttgart, in 1786 member of consistory, in 1799 doctor of theology, and died April 27, 1828, leaving, De Decentia Reformationis Generis Humani (Tübingen, 1758);—De Commodis Angelorum Bonorum ex Opere Redemptionis (1766);—Theologia Dogmatica (1825);—Initia Theologiae Moralis (1826);—Einleitung in die Schriften des neuen Bundes (1799);—Ueber die Authentie der alttestamentlichen Schriften (1804);—Ueber den Pentateuch (1806);—Die sämtlichen Schriften des alten und neuen Testaments (1824). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der Theol. Lit. i, 77, 78, 82, 389; ii, 297. (B. P.)

Griesinger, Johann Burchard, a Lutheran preacher of Germany, was born Dec. 17, 1638, at Worms. Being blind from his third year, he did not begin his studies until the age of nineteen. He went to the universities of Strasburg and Jena, and settled in 1686 at Königsberg, where he became famous as a preacher. He died July 15, 1701, leaving, De Conceptu Quibitative Immutabilitatis Dei;—De Genuina Nominis Tetragrammati. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Griffet, Henri, a French Jesuit and court-preacher, was born at Moulins, Oct. 9, 1698, and died at Brussels, Feb. 22, 1771, leaving, among other works, L'Année du Chrétien (Paris, 1747, 18 vols.);—Exercice de Piété pour la Communio (ibid. 1748);—Sermons (Liege, 1767, 4 vols.). Griffi (Lat. Gryphus), LEONARDO, an Italian prelate, was born at Milan in 1437. In 1478 he was made bishop of Gubbio, and five years afterwards was transferred to the archbishopric of Benevento. He died at Rome in 1485, leaving (in the collection of Muratori, Scriptores Rerum Italicarum, xxv, 465) a small piece of poetry in hexameter, which narrates the exploits of Braccio de Perouse with Aquila. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Griffin, in Greek mythology, was a fabulous animal, in size like a lion, with four clawy feet, two wings, and the hooked bill of an eagle. It seems to have been an Oriental conception. This fantastic creature is the centre of a rare circle of myths, and it is mentioned by Hesiod and Herodotus as the guard of the gold in the innermost of northern Europe, which the one-eyed Arimaspes stole.

Griffin, Henry, D.D., an Irish prelate, was born July 10, 1786. He was originally a Roman Catholic, but entered Trinity College, Dublin, as a member of the Established Church; finished his under-graduate career, and gained a fellowship in 1811, which he held until 1829, when he became rector of Clonsilla, in the diocese of Armagh. On Jan. 1, 1854, he was consecrated Lord Bishop of Limerick, Ardfer, and Aghadoe. He died at the University Club, Dublin, April 5, 1866. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. July, 1866, p. 324.

Griffin, Nathaniel Herrick, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Southampton, L. I., Dec. 28, 1814. He graduated from Williams College, Mass., in 1834; spent two years in Princeton Theological Seminary; was a tutor in his alma mater in 1836-37; became thereafter stated supply successively at Westhampton, N. Y., and at Franklin; was ordained by the Presbytery June 27, 1839; was pastor at Delhi; acted as assistant professor in Williams College (1841-42), and as a teacher in Brooklyn (1843-46), professor of Latin and Greek in Williams College (1846-53), of Greek (1853-57), a teacher in Williamstown, Mass. (1857-68), librarian there (1868-76), and died in that place, Oct. 16, 1876. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 99.

Griffith, David, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in New York city in 1742. His father was a native of Wales, who came to America in early life, settling on a farm on the East River. After preliminary study in his native city, David went to England and graduated in London as a student of medicine. About 1763 he returned to America, and began practice in the interior of the province of New York. A few years after he studied theology, went to England, was admitted to orders in August, 1770; soon after was sent to Gloucester County, N. J., as a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. From the close of 1771 until May, 1776, he was rector of Shelburne Parish, Loudon Co., Va.; when he entered the American army as chaplain of the 3d Virginia Regiment, remaining until the close of 1779. In 1780 he became rector of Christ Church, Alexandria, Va. Throughout the latter part of his life he is said to have enjoyed the confidence of General Washington, who was his parishioner for a number of years. It is reported that he was the first clergyman to propose a convention for the independent organization of the Church after the Revolution. In May, 1785, he was a member of the first convention that met in Richmond, Va., under the act of incorporation; and he was appointed a delegate to the ensuing General Convention. In May of that year he was chosen bishop,

A Team of Griffins Attached to a Car of Apollo.

but was unable to meet the expenses of a voyage to England for consecration. Accordingly, in May, 1789, he resigned his claim to the office. He died in Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 3, 1789. Dr. Griffith was regarded as a sound and able divine, and was universally esteemed. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 270.

Griffiths, DAVID, a Welsh Congregational minister, was born at Glanmeilwch, Carnarvonshire, Dec. 20, 1792. He was converted when about eighteen years of age, studied two years at Neuaddilwyd Academy, three at Wrexham College, and three at the Missionary College, Gosport; was ordained as missionary to Madagascar, reaching his destination in 1821. He formed the first native Christian church in that island, but after nearly fifteen years of labor, when the missionaries were compelled to leave the country, he returned to England. Two years later he received a letter from the Queen of Madagascar, permitting him to return for five years, at his own expense, in the capacity of a trader, but in reality a missionary. He was again expelled from the island, and after travelling on sea and land about the coast of Africa, and the Comoro Isles, he returned to his native country in 1842, and published a history of Madagascar, in Welsh. In 1852 he established a church in Kington, Radnorshire. About this time, learning that Madagascar was free for mission work, he, in company with Messrs. Joseph Freeman and T. W. Meller, commenced a new and improved translation of the Bible into the Malagasy language, and finished it shortly before his death, which occurred at Machynlleth, March 21, 1863. Mr. Griffiths was emphatically practical. He could preach in three languages, and had a good knowledge of Greek, Latin, Hebrew, French, Chaldee, and Arabic. Besides his work on the Malagasy Bible, he translated into the language of Madagascar, The Anxious Inquirer, Friend of Sinners, Come to Jesus, It is I, and Treatise on the Resurrection; corrected former translations of Pilgrim's Progress, and several tracts; corrected and enlarged former works, English and Malagasy Dictionary; Malagasy and English Dictionary; Vocabulary of Malagasy and English. Besides his History of Madagascar, he published, A History of Madagascar Martyrs, in English: — Malagasy Grammar: — Catechisms: — Hymn Book: — Essay on Destiny: — The Poor Rich Man, and the Rich Poor Man, and several tracts. Also left ready for the press, Peep of Day, and Line upon Line. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-Book, 1864, p. 216.

Grigg, JOSEPH, an English Presbyterian, was assistant minister at the Silver Street Church, London, from 1743 to 1747, at which last date he married the widow of Colonel Drew, a lady of much property, and retired to St. Albans, where he preached for his dissenting brethren occasionally. He contributed poetical pieces to several works between 1756 and 1765, when he issued a small tract of Hymns on Divine Subjects. These were collected in a small volume by Daniel Sedgwick, and published in 1861. Mr. Grigg died at Walthamstow, Oct. 29, 1768. One of his hymns, written when he was only ten years old, "Jesus! and shall it ever be," is still a favorite. See Gadaby, Hymn Writers, p. 63.

Griggs, LEVERETT, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Tolland, Conn., Nov. 17, 1808. He graduated at Yale College in 1829, was engaged for a year and a half in teaching at Mount Hope Institute, near Baltimore, Md., studied at the Andover Theological Seminary two years, and acted as tutor in Yale College for the same length of time, while pursuing his theological studies in the Yale Divinity School. He was ordained at North Haven, Oct. 30, 1833, and remained as pastor till July 30, 1845, when he accepted a call to the Chapel Street Church (now Church of the Redeemer), New Haven. After supplying the pulpit of the Second Church in Millbury, Mass., for a time, he became, in 1856, pastor of the Church, where he continued fourteen years. For a time he acted as an agent of the Western College Society. His home, during the last years of his life, was in Bristol, Conn., and he died there Jan. 28, 1883. The high esteem in which he was held in this town is indicated by the circumstance that, as a token of respect, a vote was passed exempting his property from taxation. See The Congregationalist, Feb. 8, 1883. (J. C. S.)

Grille (1), a metal screen, to enclose or protect any particular spot, locality, shrine, tomb, or sacred ornament; (2) a gate of metal enclosing or protecting the entrance of a religious house or sacred building; (3) the wicket of a monastery; (4) a small screen of iron bars inserted in the door of a monastic or conventual building, in order to allow the inmates to converse with visitors, or to answer inquiries without opening the door.

Grillet, JEAN, a French missionary, one of the first explorers of Guiana, was born about 1630. He joined the Jesuits, and was sent out to Guiana, where he became superior of the establishment of his order until the English squadron destroyed the colony, Oct. 22, 1667. In 1674 he made an exploring tour through a part of that country, of which on his return to France he published an account. Grillet died about 1676. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimaldi, Agostino, a Genoese prelate, third son of Lambert, prince of Monaco, studied belles-lettres and theology, and became a particular friend of cardinals Bembo and Sadolet. In 1505 he was elected abbot of Lerins, and assisted in 1512 at the Council of Lateran. On account of some political offence, Francis I deprived him of all his revenues in France. Charles V indemnified him by giving him the bishopric of Majorca and the archbishopric of Oristano; he had even designated him to pope Clement VII as cardinal, but Agostino died before his promotion, probably of poison, April 12, 1532. There are extant of this prelate several letters to illustrious men of his time. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimaldi, Domenico, a Genoese prelate, was born in 1592, being the son of Giambattista Grimaldi, lord of Montaleone. He had distinguished himself in the army when pope Pius V appointed him commissary-general of the galleys of the Church, in which capacity he took an active part in the battle of Lepanto. He afterwards entered into orders, and obtained the abbey of Mont Majour-les-Arles. In 1581 Gregory XIII gave him the bishopric of Savona, from which he was transferred, in 1584, to the see of Cavaillo, as archbishop and vice legate. He persecuted Protestants with rigor and cruelty. He died in 1592. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimaldi, Geronimo, a Genoese statesman and prelate, occupied the principal offices of the republic, and accomplished several diplomatic missions with success. After the death of his wife, he entered into the ministry, and easily attained the first dignities of the Church. He was made cardinal, with the title of St. Georges-in-Velatro. He obtained afterwards the archbishopric of Bari, and then that of Genoa, where he died in 1543. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimaldi, Giovanni Francesco (called Il Bolognese), an eminent Italian landscape painter, was born at Bologna in 1606, and studied under the Caracci. He went to Rome for improvement, and soon rose to eminence. He was employed by Innocent X in the Vatican and at Monte Cavallo. He was invited to Paris by cardinal Mazarin, and was employed in the Louvre by Louis XIV. On returning to Rome he received numerous commissions, was patronized by Alexander VII and Clement IX, was twice appointed president of the Academy of St. Luke, and attained both fame and fortune. One of his best works was the Baptism of Christ. He died in 1680. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Grimaldi, Giuseppe Maria, an Italian prelate, was born at Moncalieri (Piedmont), Jan. 3, 1754. He studied at Turin, entered the ministry, and was received as doctor of theology in the university at Turin, afterwards went to Verceil, in 1779, and was appointed canon of the cathedral there in 1782. In 1811 he assisted at the Council at Paris, and took part in the commission appointed to revise the response to the emperor. He died Jan. 1, 1830. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimaldi, Nicolo, a Genoese prelate, was born Dec. 6, 1645. He was at first clerk of the apostolic chamber, and superintendent of the streets and roads of Rome. In 1696 he became prefect of the pontifical almonry. After having made good use of these different employments, he left them to become secretary of the congregation of the bishops and regulars, in 1701. Clement XI made him cardinal, May 17, 1706, and on Sept. 14 following he was made legate of Bologna. After being prefect of the Consuls for several years, he passed over, June 8, 1716, to the order of the cardinal priests. He died Oct. 25, 1717, leaving an immense fortune. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Grimes, L. A., a distinguished colored Baptist minister, was born a slave at the South in 1808. While acting as a coachman in Washington, D. C., he attracted the attention and secured the friendship of the late Rev. Dr. Rollin H. Neale, then a student in that city. He soon became a good scholar and a most acceptable preacher, holding for twenty-five years the pastorate of a colored Baptist Church in Boston. He died there, March 14, 1873. Mr. Grimes took a special interest in the education of colored men as ministers of the gospel, and for several years was one of the most useful trustees of the Wayland Seminary, Washington, D. C. See The Watchman, March, 1873. (J. C. S.)

Grimm, Heinrich Adolph, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 1, 1747, at Siegen, in Prussia, and died at Duisburg, Aug. 29, 1818, doctor and professor of theology. He published, Jonæ et Obadiæ Oracula Syriace (Duisburg, 1805):—Chald. Chrestomathie mit einem vollständigen Glossarium (1801):—Exegetische Aufsätze zur Aufklärung schwieriger Stellen der Schrift (1793):—Der Prophet Jonas erklärt (1793):—Nahum erklärt, mit Anmerkungen (1790). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 9, 54, 125, 192, 227, 228; ii, 267; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 343. (B. P.)

Grindrod, Edmund, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Clay Lane, near Rochdale, Feb. 28, 1786. The family removed to Liverpool when Edmund was young. At about the age of twenty, when assisting his father and brothers in the erection of the new exchange buildings in that city, he had a narrow escape from instant death. In 1806 he was received into the ministry, and henceforward labored on some of the most important charges. In 1826 a great revival blessed his labors in Edinburgh; in 1827, with Christian gentleness and firmness, he withstood the torrent of opposition at Leeds on the organ question; in 1832 and 1833 he was secretary of the conference; in 1834 was president of the Canadian Conference at Kingston; in 1834 and 1835, while stationed at Manchester, he again passed through a bitter conflict. In 1837 Grindrod was elected president of the British Conference at Leeds; in 1840 he went to his last appointment, fifth London or Lambeth circuit; in April, 1841, he underwent a severe surgical operation, and died May 1, 1842. He wrote, besides essays in periodicals, and several sermons, published collectively, The Duties, Qualifications, and Encouragements of Class-Leaders (Lond. 1831, 12mo):—Compendium of the Laws and Regulations of Wesleyan Methodism (ibid. 1842, 8vo). See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, July, August, September, 1846; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 318, 347; Minutes of the British Conference, 1842; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, iii, 462 sq.

Grinfield, Edward William, an English clergyman and scholar, was born in 1784. He commenced his career as a writer in 1818. From 1827 to 1843 he published little, being employed during that time on his Novum Testamentum Hellenisticum (2 vols. 8vo), the design of which was to show the close connection between the Septuagint and the Greek Testament. The next five years were spent in preparing the Scholia Hellenistica (2 vols. 8vo). For fifty years he labored to elevate the Septuagint to its proper place as an interpreter of the Hebrew text. To this end he collected all the various editions of the book, and all the literature relating to them. In addition to the above, his publications are, An Apology for the Septuagint, in which its claims to Biblical and canonical authority are stated and defended (1850, 8vo), a number of sermons, and theological and other treatises. He died July 9, 1864. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Grinnell, Daniel T., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector of St. Paul's Church, Jackson, Mich., the most of his ministry being spent in this pastorate. For a long time he was a member of the missionary committee of his diocese. He died June 2, 1868, aged fifty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109.

Grischow, Johann Heinrich, inspector of the Halle Bible Society, was born in 1685. After completing his studies, he devoted his talents entirely to the work of the Bible Society, founded by the marquis of Canstein (q. v.), and died at Halle, Nov. 6, 1754. He translated into Latin Bingham's Christian Antiquities (1724, 10 vols.); he also translated from the German into Latin the works of Spener, Francke, Freylinghausen, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 606. (B. P.)

Griswold, Rufus Wilmot, D.D., a Baptist minister and writer, who was born Feb. 15, 1815, at Benson, Rutland Co., Vt., and died in New York, Aug. 27, 1857, was literary manager of a number of journals in several of the principal cities of the Union, such as, The New-Yorker, The Brother Jonathan, and The New World; in 1842 and 1843 editor of Graham's Magazine; and from August, 1850, to April, 1852, conducted the International Magazine. Besides these, he prepared numerous works, especially The Poets of America (1842), etc. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Duyckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Lit. ii, 532.

Groen (van Prinsterer), WILLEM, a Dutch statesman and historian, was born at the Hague, Aug. 21, 1801. He studied at Leyden, was appointed secretary to the king in 1827, and soon afterwards director of the royal archives; was, in the Dutch Parliament, the leader of the anti-revolutionary party, and opposed with great zeal the separation of State and Church, and emancipation of the school from the Church. He was a Christian statesman, and his idea was that Christianity should be the basis of all instruction, since the school has for its object not only the information, but also the education, of the individual. He has often been called the "Dutch Stahl," but Groen was more conspicuous in his position towards Rome than Julius Stahl (q. v.). Groen died May 19, 1876. He published, Archives ou Correspondance Inédite de la Maison d'Orange-Nassau (1840-55, 13 vols.):—Handboek der Geschiedenis van het Vaderland (Amsterdam, 1852):—Maurice et Barnevelt, Étude Historique (Utrecht, 1875). Groesbeck, GÉRARD DE, a French prelate, was born in 1508. He was first dean of the Cathedral of Liege, when Robert of Berg, prince-bishop, resigned his authority in his favor, July 22, 1563. He successfully resisted the encroachments of William of Orange into the territory. The Jesuits, whom the bishop had called for, assisted Groesbeck largely in his persecutions of the Calvinists, and made, in 1569, their first establishment at Liege. The prelate died Dec. 28, 1580. Grosvenor, CYRUS PITT, LL.D., a distinguished Baptist minister, was born at Grafton, Mass., Oct. 18, 1798. He studied first at New Salem Academy, afterwards Leorrette, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1818, and then taught three years as principal in an academy at Haverhill, and as preceptor in Amherst Academy, partly in studies preparatory to his ministry. In 1820 he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, and left in March, 1822. He was called to the Baptist Church of Charleston, May 19, 1823, was pastor of the Baptist Church, Georgetown; of Hartford, Conn.; of First Baptist Church, Boston, Mass.; of Second Baptist Church, Salem; of Sterling; of Baptist Church, Southbridge; and of Ganges, Allegan Co., Mich. Dr. Grosvenor died Feb. 11, 1879. He was editor of The Christian Reflector, and also of The Christian Contributor, published at Worcester, Mass., and at Utica, N. Y., respectively. For fifteen years he was connected as president and professor with New York Central College. In March, 1860, he went to Great Britain, and travelled extensively in England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, lecturing on American affairs, and preaching frequently. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 43.

Grotta, in Norse mythology, was a miraculous mill of king Frothi; it had two stones, so large that no one could turn them, but everything could be ground on it. In order to set it in motion the king had two maids, Menja and Fenja, who had come from Sweden. They were only allowed to rest so long as the cuckoo did not cry. When the sea-king, Mysingr, came, they ground out an army for Frothi; but the army was conquered, and became a prey of the strange king, who took the treasures and the mill on his ship, and ordered the maids to grind salt. This they did until midnight, and then asked the king whether he had enough, but Mysingr told them to keep on. They did this so long that the ship sank, and the sea was made salt.

Grulich, Friedrich Joseph, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Dec. 15, 1766. He entered the ministry in 1795, was archdeacon at Torgau, and died Nov. 19, 1839, leaving, Betrachtung über den neuesten Versuch, das Leben Jesu (Leipsic, 1836):—Ueber die körperliche Beredtsamkeit Jesu (1827):—Leidensführung und Leidensgewinn (1826):—Ueber die Ironien in den Reden Jesu (1838). Grulich, Martin, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1695. He studied at Wittenberg and Leipsic, was preacher in 1728, and died at Torgau, Nov. 30, 1772, a superintendent. He is the author of a great many ascetical works, of no importance for the present times. The titles are given in full in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Grundig, Christoph Gottlob, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 5, 1707. He entered upon his ministerial duties in 1737 as pastor at Hermannsdorf, near Annaberg, in Saxony, and died at Freiberg, Aug. 9, 1780. He is the author of a number of ascetical works mentioned by Jöcher in Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Grundtvig, Nicolai Frederik Severin, "the prophet of the North," was born Sept. 8, 1783, at Udby, a village in the island of Zealand. He studied theology at Copenhagen, was tutor in a private family in the island of Langeland from 1805 to 1808, teacher of history in a school at Copenhagen from 1808 to 1810, vicar to his father at Udby from 1810 to 1813, and again teacher at Copenhagen from 1813 to 1821. During those years of his youth and early manhood he lived like a monk, without being monkish. He only slept two hours, and for twenty years never in a bed. Before he was appointed to his pastorate, Grundtvig had already become known in the literary circles of his country. His earliest literary efforts were the Teaching of Asa, the Songs of the Edda, and Religion and Liturgy. From 1809 to 1822 he published a series of poetical and historical works—Nordens Mythologie (1808): Optrin af Kämpelivets Undergang i Nord (i. e. Fall of Heathenism in the North, a grand drama, 1809), and the translations of Saxo Grammaticus (1818–22, 6 vols.), Snorre Sturleson, and Beowulf's Drupa—most of them referring to the heroic age of Scandinavian history, and all of them pregnant with a peculiarly stirring life. But his theological productions, also his sermons, more especially his Kort Begreb af Verdens Krønike i Sammenhæng, i. e. View of the World's Chronicle (1812), attracted equal attention, as they ran out in a vehement denunciation of the frivolity with which the age had eliminated Christianity from its life. Attracted by the genius of Grundtvig, king Frederick VI, without consulting either the bishop or the consistory, appointed him pastor in Præstøe (a small town in Zealand), and in the next year he was called to the chaplaincy at the Church of our Saviour in Copenhagen. There he soon gathered a circle of friends and pupils around his pulpit, and day by day his position in the Danish Church became more and more strongly marked. In 1825 professor H. N. Clausen (q. v.), a rationalist, published his Katholicismens og Protestantismens Kirkeforfatning, Lære og Ritus (i. e. Church Government, Teaching, and Rites of Catholicism and Protestantism), and Grundtvig answered with his Kirkens Gjenmæle (i. e. Protest of the Church), in which he requested Clausen either to renounce his heresy or to give up his professorship. Within eight days, Grundtvig's Protest was three times reprinted. Clausen instituted a civil suit; Grundtvig was sentenced to pay a fine, and to publish nothing without permission of the royal censor. In 1826 he resigned his office, because he did not wish to serve a Church which seemed to give up the faith and the confession of the fathers. To this period belongs his interesting work, My Literary Testament. From 1826 to 1839 Grundtvig lived in literary retirement at Copenhagen. From 1829 to 1831 he visited England, edited a theological monthly, Theologisk Mueldsskrift; published the Sang-Værk til den danske Kirke (1837; new editions, 1870–75), a collection of hymns, partly original, partly translated. Meanwhile his influence spread far beyond the capital, and the "Grundtvigians" and "Grundtvigianism" increased from day to day. He was allowed to preach in the afternoon in the German Frederiks-Church, and the number of his adherents grew more and more. In 1839 he was pastor of the Vartov-hospital-Church, and there he remained till his death, which took place Sept. 2, 1872. His party made itself especially felt in 1848, and brought about those liberties in church and school which in some cases were detrimental to religion. Grundy, Robert Caldwell, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington County, Ky., in 1809. He graduated at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, in 1829, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1835. In 1836 he was licensed by the Transylvania Presbytery, and installed over the Presbyterian Church of Maysville, where he remained until 1858, when he removed to Memphis, Tenn., as pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in that city. In 1863 he took charge of the Central Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati. He died at Dayton, O., June 27, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 153; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 88.

Grüneisen, Carl von, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, Jan. 17, 1802. He studied at Tübingen and Halle, was in 1825 military preacher and court-chaplain, in 1835 court-preacher and member of consistory, and died at his native place Feb. 28, 1878. Grüneisen took an active part in the development of the church of Württemberg, and for sixteen years presided at the annual meetings of the Eisenach Church conference. He wrote Ueber bildliche Darstellung der Gottheit (Stuttgart, 1828):—Ueber das Sittliche der bildenden Kunst bei den Griechen (Leipsic, 1833):—Nicolaus Manuel, Leben und Werke (Stuttgart, 1837):—Ulms Kunstleben im Mittelalter (Ulm, 1840):—Predigten für die Gebildeten in der Gemeinde (Stuttgart, 1835):—Christliches Handbuch in Gebeten und Liedern (5th ed. 1859):—Ueber Gesangbuchreform (1839). In connection with Schnaase and Schnorr von Carolsfeld, he founded in 1858 the Christliches Kunstblatt. See Zuchold, *Bibl. Grünenberg, Johiann Peter, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 27, 1668. He studied at different universities, was in 1698 professor of theology at Rostock, and died Jan. 5, 1712, leaving Doctrina Symbolica de S. Theologiae Testibus Symbolicis: Disputationes de Scientia Dei:—De Sabbato Hebdomadali ad Gen. ii, 2:—De Summare Victore ad Judic. iii, 31:—De Semine Davidis Christo ad 2 Sam. vii, 11–16:—De Timore Domini ad Prov. ix, 10:—De βίβλῳ γενέσεως ad Matt. i, 1:—De Fide Matt. Genealogica ad Matt. i, 6–11:—De Filio Dei ex Egypto Vocato ad Matt. ii, 15:—De Jesu Nazareno ad Matt. ii, 22, 23, etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gruppe, OTTO FRIEDRICH, a German philosopher and antiquarian, was born at Dantzic, April 15, 1804. He studied at Berlin, but as he opposed the Hegelian system of philosophy, the academical career was closed up to him, till at last, in 1844, he was made professor of philosophy. Gruppe died Jan. 7, 1876, at Berlin. He wrote Antäus (Berlin, 1831):—Wendepunkt der Philosophie im 19. Jahrhundert (1834):—Gegenwart und Zukunft der Philosophie in Deutschland (1855). These works were all directed against Hegel. Of his poetical productions we only mention, Ruth, Tobias, Sukamith (1857). (B. P.)

Guadagni, BERNARDO GAKTANO (or John Anthony of St. Bernard), an Italian prelate, was born at Florence, Sept. 14, 1674, being the son of Maria Magdalena Corsini, sister of pope Clement XII. He joined the barefooted Carmelites, at the convent of Arezzo, Nov. 11, 1700. He had been successively teacher of the novices, and several times prior and provincial of Florence, and was, on Dec. 20, 1724, appointed by pope Benedict XIII to the bishopric of Arezzo, and received from the hands of Clement XII the pallium on Nov. 26, 1730. In 1781 he was made cardinal, with the title of St. Martin del Monte. In 1732 he became vicar-general of Rome, which office he maintained until his death, after 1733. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guadagnolo, FILIPPO, a Minorite and professor of Arabic in the college of the Sapienza at Rome, was born in 1596, and died March 27, 1656. In behalf of the Congregation de Propaganda Fidei, he translated the Bible from the Vulgate into Arabic, which was published in three volumes (Rome, 1671)—a work on which he spent twenty-seven years. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 58; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Toppi, Bibliotheca Neapolitana. (B. P.)

Guala (Bichieri), GIACOMO, an Italian prelate, was born at Vercelli in the second part of the 12th century. At the age of twenty-one, after having studied canon law, he was made canon of the Eusebian Cathedral, and cardinal in the same year, by Innocent VII. In 1208 Innocent sent him to France as a legate to reform the habits of the clergy. For this purpose Guala wrote constitutions of ecclesiastical discipline. After having been commissioned also to reform the clergy of Lombardy, he was sent to Sicily to the emperor Frederic II, to persuade him to undertake a new crusade, but did not succeed. On his return to Italy he contributed to the foundation of the University of Vercelli, but died before the finishing of his establishment, May, 1227. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gualdim (-Paes), a celebrated grand-master of the order of the Templars in Portugal, was born at Braga in the 12th century. He frequently fought against the Moors of the Peninsula. At the time of the second crusade he was provincial of the order of the Templars. During his five years' stay in the East, he distinguished himself at the siege of Ascalon in 1155; and in the following year came back to Europe, when he was made grand-master. In March, 1160, he laid the foundations of the magnificent castle of Thomar, which was henceforth to serve as the capitulary chapter of the Portuguese Templars. In 1190 a vast troop of Moorish soldiers advanced under the leadership of Yakub, son of Abu-Yussuf, against the doors of Thomar, determined to revenge upon the Templars that loss which they had suffered at Sandarem in 1147, to which the knights under Gualdim had largely contributed. But the Moors were repulsed. The Templars of Portugal were indeed a rampart to the Christian populations, and their order was respected, even though the pontiff was hostile to their convents. Gualdim-Paes died peacefully, in 1195, in his monastery. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gualterio, FILIPPO ANTONIO, an Italian prelate and scholar, was born at San Quirico de Fermo, March 24, 1660. He belonged to one of the first families of Ancona. His grand-uncle sent him, in 1672, to Rome, to study at the college of Clement. Antonio studied philosophy at Rome, and law and theology at Fermo, where his grand-uncle was the archbishop. At the age of nineteen he received the degree of doctor, and about 1684 was admitted to the number of the candidates for prelates. On Feb. 17, 1700, Innocent XII intrusted him with the nonciature to France, and Clement XI conferred on him the abbey of the Trinity, the bishopric of Tmolus and Todi, and in 1799 made him cardinal with the title of Saint Chrysogonus. In France Gualterio had connected himself with the principal scholars, had examined all the monastical and other libraries, and made a fine collection of MSS. of great value, medals, both antique and modern, and instruments of rare precision; but all these literary or scientific treasures, being embarked at Marseilles, were lost on the passage. He began new researches, and succeeded in collecting a number of elements, useful for a universal history, which he proposed to write. But when he was settled down as a legate at Ravenna, the imperial troops invaded that city and pillaged his house, by which his documents were either burned or dispersed. Later, Louis XV appointed him commander of the Order of the Holy Ghost. Cardinal Gualterio, with all his literary tastes, left no writings. He died at Rome, April 21, 1728. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gualterius, OTTO, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 1, 1546, at Rotenburg. He studied at Marburg, and was there professor of Hebrew and Greek in 1582. In 1598 he went to Lübeck as director of the schools, and died Dec. 24, 1624. He wrote, Grammatica Linguae Sanctae:—Sylloge Vocum Exoticarum Novi Testamenti:—Collatio Præcipuarum Sacrarum Genæos Translationum, etc. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 846; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Seelen, Athena Lubecensæ. (B. P.)

Guanzellis, GIANMARIA DE', an Italian prelate, was born in 1557 at Brazighella, near Faenza. He became a Dominican while still young, and taught school in various establishments of his order. Paul V chose him as a master of the sacred palace, and in 1607 he appointed him bishop of Polignano. Guanzellis died in 1619, leaving, Index Librorum Expurgandorum in Studiosorum Gratiam Confectus (Rome, 1607):—Synodus Diocæsanæ Polignanensis (Bari). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guard, THOMAS, D.D., an eloquent Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in County Galway, Ireland, June 8, 1831. He was accepted by the Irish Conference of 1851 as a candidate for the ministry, and called to labor the same year. He was received into full connection in 1855. In 1862 he went to South Africa under the direction of the London Missionary Society, and spent nine years, chiefly at Grahamstown and Port Elizabeth. In 1871 he came to America on a visit, and at once became popular as a preacher and lecturer. On receiving an invitation to become the pastor of Mount Vernon Place Church, Baltimore, Md., he decided to make this country his home. He entered upon his pastorate in Baltimore in 1872. At the end of his term (in 1875) he became pastor of the Howard Street Church, San Francisco, Cal. In 1878 and 1879 he was pastor of First Church, Oakland, and in 1880 resumed his former relationship with the Mount Vernon Place Church, Baltimore. It was there that he closed his earthly career, Oct. 15, 1882. He was thoroughly acquainted with standard English divinity, and particularly with Methodist theology. As a lecturer and platform speaker he was almost without an equal. As a pulpit orator he was unsurpassed in his own or any age, and he could attract and hold the largest audiences of the most cultivated people. As a pastor he was not successful, and was incapable of managing business of any kind. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1883, p. 83.

Guarnacci, MARIO, an Italian prelate, was born at Volterra in 1701. He received the doctor's degree at Florence, where he pursued the course of Salvini. He was honored with the favor of Benedict XIV, who charged him to continue Chazon's Lives of the Popes, but he retired in 1757 to his own country. He discovered there the remains of Roman baths. He also made a collection of Etruscan antiquities, which he bequeathed to his native city. He died Aug. 21, 1785, leaving, Dissertatione sopra le XII Tavole (Florence, 1747):—Vita et Res Gestæ Pontificum Romanorum, etc. (Rome, 1751):—Origini Italiche (Volterra, 1768):—Poesie di Zelalzo Arrusiana (Lucca, 1769). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guden, HEINRICH PHILIPP, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 4, 1676. He studied at Helmstädt and Jena, was in 1700 pastor at Osterroda, took the degree as doctor of theology in 1720, was in 1722 pastor, general-superintendent, and professor at Göttingen, and died April 27, 1742. He wrote, Manipulus Problematum ad Theologiam Naturalem Pertinentium:—De Bonifacio Germanorum Apostolo (Helmstädt, 1720). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 780; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Gudenus, ANSELM FRIEDRICH VON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Erfurt in 1731, and died May 16, 1789, leaving Geschichte des ersten christlichen Jahrhunderts (Würzburg, 1783, 2 vols.):—Geschichte des zweiten christlichen Jahrhunderts (ibid. 1787, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 548. (B. P.)

Güder, EDUARD, a Swiss theologian, was born June 1, 1817. He studied at Bern University, was pastor at Biel from 1842 to 1855, and thereafter pastor of the Rydeck Church, at Bern, until his death, July 14, 1882. In connection with his pastorate, he also held a professorship in his alma mater. He published, Die Lehre von der Erscheinung Jesu Christi unter den Todten (Bern, 1853):—Alles und in Allen Christus (sermons, ibid. 1857):—Die Thatsächlichkeit der Auferstehung Christi und deren Bestreitung (ibid. 1862). In 1855 he published the work of his teacher, Schneckenburger, Vergleichende Darstellung des lutherischen u. reformirten Lehrbegriffes, on account of which he was made doctor of theology by the Königsberg University. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 475. (B. P.)

Guérard, ROBERT, a learned French Benedictine, was born at Rouen in 1641. He assisted Delfau in the revival of St. Augustine's works; while thus employed, was accused of being concerned in a satirical book entitled, L'Abbi Commendataire, and confined in the abbey of Aimbournay, in Bugey. He took advantage of this exile to make a diligent search for ancient MSS., and discovered a great number; among others, St. Augustine's book against Julian, entitled, Opus Imperfectum. He was afterwards sent to Fécamp, then to Rouen, where he died, Jan. 2, 1715. He left Abrégé de la Bible (first published in 1707). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guérech (1) (Lat. Guerckus, Erechus, or Warochus) was a bishop and count of Nantes. His father sent him for his education to a monastery, and he was appointed to the episcopal see at Nantes, or the first vacancy. However, a few days after having received the news of his election, Guérech learned of the death of his brother. The people had made him bishop, but by law of relationship he was made count. He pretended, nevertheless, to occupy the two positions simultaneously. He became famous by his war engagements with Conan le Tors (the crooked), count of Rennes. The death of Guérech, in 988, was thought to have been caused by poison. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guérech (2), a French prelate, was born in the first part of the 11th century, being the son of Alain, count of Carnonailles. Airard, bishop of Nantes, having been expelled from his episcopal see in 1052, by the people of Nantes, was immediately replaced by Guérech, who, without attending to his consecration, occupied the episcopal palace, and took the administration of the Church. He had not even obtained canonical ordination when he went to the Council of Rheims in 1059. He also attended the disputation of Angers in 1062, and presided at the Council of Tours in 1068. He was a friend of the monks of Marmontiers, and sustained their pretensions in all the ecclesiastical assemblies. Guérech died July 31, 1079. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guéranger, PROSPER LOUIS PASCAL, a French ecclesiastic, was born April 4, 1805, at Sablé-sur-Sarthe, in Le Mans. He studied at Angers and Le Mans, and received holy orders in 1827. For some time he was professor at Le Mans, and at the same time secretary to the bishop of De la Myre. With a view to restoring the order of the Benedictines in France, he retired in 1833 to the Benedictine abbey at Solesmes, where, with a number of friends, he commenced a monastic life according to the rules of St. Benedict. In 1836 he went to Rome, made his profession in 1837, and was appointed by Gregory XVI, abbot of Solesmes and president of the Benedictine congregation of France. He was opposed to the Gallican Church and her liturgies. In the spirit of his motto he published, Institutions Liturgiques (1840-52, 3 vols.):—L'Année Liturgique (1844-66, 9 vols.; translated also into German at Mayence, 1875):—Essais sur le Naturalisme Contemporain (1856, written against prince Albert de Broglie). When the Vatican council was opened, and the adherents of the Gallican Church insisted upon their privileges, Guéranger published De la Monarchie Pontificale, which was highly praised by pope Pius IX. At the time of his death, Jan. 30, 1875, Guéranger was dean of Le Mans, Nantes, and St. Denis. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote, Origines de l'Eglise Romaine (1836):—Histoire de Sainte Cécile (1848; 2d ed. 1853; translated also into German, Ratisbon, 1851):—Mémoire sur la Question de l'Immaculée Conception (1850):—Enchiridion Benedictinum, Complectens Regulam Vitæ et Laudes, etc. (1862):—Les Exercices de Sainte Gertrude (2d ed. cod.):—Essai sur la Mâleille de St. Benoît (4th ed. 1865; Germ. transl. Einsiedeln, 1863):—La Règle de Sainte Benoît (1868):—Sainte Cécile et la Société Romaine aux deux Premiers Siècles (1873). See Literarischer Handweiser für das Katholische Deutschland, 1875, col. 355 sq.; 1882, col. 323; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Guericke, HEINRICH ERNST FERDINAND, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 25, 1803. He studied at Halle, was made a doctor of philosophy in 1824, licentiate of theology in 1825, on presenting De Schola, quæ Alexandriæ Floruit, Catechetica, and professor of theology at Halle in 1829, in acknowledgment of his biography of August Hermann Francke, and his Beiträge zur historisch-kritischen Einleitung ins Neue Testament. In 1833 the Tübingen faculty conferred on him the degree of a doctor of theology. He was a very strict Lutheran, opposed the exertions of the Prussian government to effect a union between the Lutheran and Reformed churches, and founded, together with Rudelbach, the Zeitschrift für die gesammte lutherische Theologie und Kirche, in 1840, which was continued till 1878, in connection with professor Deltzsch. Guericke died Feb. 4, 1878. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote, Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte (9th ed. 1867-69, 8 vols.; translated into English by W. G. T. Shedd, N. Y. 1857-63, 2 vols.):—Allgemeine christliche Symbolik (Leipsic, 1861):—Historisch-kritische Einleitung in das Neue Testament (ibid. 1843; 2d ed. 1854):—Lehrbuch der christlich kirchlichen Archäologie (2d ed. Berlin, 1859). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol.

Guérin (Lat. Guirinus), abbot of Flavigny, in Burgundy, and thirty-first bishop of Autun, was born about 626. He took part in the disputation in which his brother St. Léger, bishop of Autun, had engaged against Ebroin, a burgomaster of Neustria, and shared with him his alternatives of triumph and of persecution. Ebroin, having overcome his rivals, brought them before the tribunal, after having cut out their eyes. Guérin, being charged with complicity in the murder of Childeric II, was tied to a stake and stoned to death in 678. He is commemorated as a martyr on Aug. 25 and Oct. 2. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guérin (or Garin), a French prelate, was born in 1160. He was first a friar of the order of the Hospitaliers at Jerusalem, and succeeded, in 1213, to Geoffroi, bishop of Senlis. He was one of the principal counsellors of Philip Augustus. Guérin recovered Tournay from Renaud, count of Boulogne. In 1214 he assisted in the celebrated battle of Bouvines, in memory of which an abbey was founded in the diocese of Senlis, with the name of Notre-Dame de la Victoire. Louis VIII ascended to the throne in 1223, when Guérin continued his services to him as to his father, and received the title of chancellor. In 1228, two years after the death of Louis VIII, Guérin retired from the world, and entered the monastery of Châlis, where he died, April 19, 1230. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guérin (Gérin or Guarin), whose surname and country are unknown, a grand master of the order of the Hospitaliers of St. John of Jerusalem, succeeded Bertrand of Taxis in 1240. At this time the Templars and Hospitaliers were divided; Thibaud VI, of Champagne, went to Palestine at the head of a crusade, and concluded a truce with the infidels after the loss of the battle of Gaza. The Templars subscribed to that truce. Richard of England followed next and sailed against Jaffa; he concluded a truce by which Jerusalem was to be surrendered. In that truce the Templars were entirely excluded. The grand master of the Hospitaliers brought the treasure of the order to the patriarch of Jerusalem, to assist him in fortifying the walls of that city. But hardly had they made a few trenches, when all Palestine was invaded by the Koreishites. The grand masters of the Hospital and the Temple at Jerusalem, being almost without troops, resolved to conduct the inhabitants to Jaffa, while others refused to go, and tried to defend themselves, but were all cut down without mercy, or fell in open battle. Only twenty-six Hospitaliers, thirty-three Templars, and three Teutonic knights escaped with their lives. The two grand masters of the two orders and a commander of the Teutonic knights lost their lives at the head of the army in 1243. Other historians say that they had only been made prisoners, and that Guérin died in 1244, in slavery. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guérin, Anne Thérèse, foundress of a religious community, was born at Etables, St. Briec, Brittany, Oct. 2, 1798. In 1822 she joined the Sisters of Providence, an order founded at Ruillé-sur-Loire in 1806, assuming the name of Sister St. Theodore. Immediately after her profession she was appointed superior of an extensive establishment at Rennes, the object of which was to give poor children an education. Astonishing success attended her exertions among the ignorant and degraded. She was afterwards removed to Soulaire, where her educational and charitable duties were combined. Here she studied medicine. On Oct. 22, 1840, Sister St. Theodore, at the request of bishop Bruté, founded, at St. Mary's of the Woods, Vigo Co., Ind.—a very wilderness at the time—the Sisters of Providence in America. In November, 1841, she was joined by Sister St. Francis, a saintly woman, whose Life and Letters—the latter called "a string of exquisite pearls"—has been published. The two sisters died in 1856, within three months of each other. Mother Theodore united those rare virtues which form the perfect religious with extraordinary governing and financial abilities. The fruit of her charity and zeal is witnessed in extensive and numerous establishments, educational and charitable, spread over the Western States. See (N. Y.) Cath. Annual, 1881, p. 75.

Guérin, Eugénie de, a French lady eminent for her piety and devotion, was born at the ancient chateau of Le Cayla, Languedoc, Jan. 25, 1805. She lived in stirring times; even into the solitude of her country home came the agitation of political changes and religious disturbance, distressing to her as a legitimist and Catholic. Her life was an uneventful one, passed in the home of her father, busy in unselfish home ministrations. She died May 1, 1848. Her famous Journal is the record of her brother Maurice's life. She felt no call to write her own personal thoughts and feelings. It follows him through every mental and spiritual change, his griefs and joys, his relapse from the Roman faith and reconversion, his marriage and death, and then it closes. It tells of him at the seminary, then at La Chinaie, under the eminent Lamennais, who had left the Catholic Church, and was then in Paris. After her death, the French Academy caused the publication of this simple record, written in the quiet chamber for Maurice's eyes alone. Her Journal and Letters make two volumes of 400 pages each, and have gone through twenty editions in France. They have been translated into English, and republished in London and New York, edited by G. S. Trebutien, and have had an extensive sale among both Protestants and Romanists. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1872, p. 42.

Guérin, Jean Baptiste Paulin, a distinguished French painter of history and portraits, was born at Toulon, March 25, 1783. There are a number of fine historical pieces, by him, mostly of Scriptural subjects, in the churches of Paris. He was professor of painting to the Maison Royale de St. Denis. He died at Paris, Jan. 16, 1855. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Guerra, Giovanni (called du Modena), an Italian painter, designer, and architect, was born at Modena in 1544, and visited Rome at the age of eighteen, where he rose to considerable eminence. He executed a number of works for the chapels and churches during the pontificate of Sixtus V, and also made a great number of designs of subjects from the Old and New Test. As an architect, he designed the Scala Santa at Rome, and the Church of Santa Maria di Paradiso, and La Madonna delle Asse, at Modena. He died at Rome in 1618. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Guevara, Juan Beltran, a Spanish prelate, was born at Medina-de-las-Torres in 1541. He was sent on a mission to Naples, and wrote for pope Paul V against the Venetians; for which that pontiff rewarded him with the bishopric of Salerno. Guevara was afterwards bishop of Badajoz, and died archbishop of Compostella, in May, 1622. His contemporaries designate him as governed by passion and given up to imagination. He wrote Propugnaculum Ecclesiasticae Libertatis Adversus Leges Venetis Latus, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guevara, Don Juan Nino de, an eminent Spanish painter, was born at Madrid in 1632, and was instructed in the school of Miguel Manrique. There are many of his works at Malaga, Cordova, and Granada. In the Church de la Charidad, at Malaga, is a fine picture of The Triumph of the Cross; and in the cathedral, The Ascension of Christ, and The Assumption of the Virgin. He died at Malaga in 1698. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Gui, the institutor of the order of the Hospitallers of the Saint-Esprit de Montpellier, seems, in 1197, to have united several religious persons, and to have written down the rules of that new institution, which was recognised and confirmed by a bull of pope Innocent III, April 23, 1198. This pontiff called Gui, with several of his co-workers, to Rome, where he charged them with the administration of the hospital of St. Mary in Saxony. The order founded by Gui had for its special object to offer hospitality to the sick, and was regarded as a military order. Gui died in 1208. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui d'AMIENS (thirty-fourth bishop) was born about the beginning of the 11th century, being the son of Ingelramme I, count of Ponthieu. He studied at the abbey of St. Riquier, and was appointed archdeacon of Amiens in 1049. The bishop of that city sent him some time afterwards to Rome, to obtain a sanction from the pope for the pretensions of the bishop. Gui returned to France without success, and was appointed bishop of Amiens in 1058. Ten years afterwards he accompanied, as almoner, Mathilde, the wife of William the Conqueror, into England. He died in 1076, leaving in Latin a piece of poetry on the battle of Hastings. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui d'AUXERRE, a French prelate, was born about the end of the 9th century, in the diocese of Sens. He was educated at the Cathedral of Auxerre, under the care of the bishop Herifrid, and became archdeacon there. He also went to the court of king Raoul and queen Emma, by whose influence he was appointed bishop of Auxerre, and was consecrated May 19, 938. He died Jan. 6, 961, leaving Responsoria and Antiphonæ, in honor of St. Julian. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui DE BOULOGNE (or D'Auvergne), a French prelate, was born in 1320, being the son of Robert, count of Auvergne. After having entered holy orders, he became canon and afterwards chancellor of the Church of Amiens. In 1340 he was elected archbishop of Lyons, and two years afterwards was appointed cardinal by Clement VI. That pope, having reduced the jubilee from one hundred to fifty years, sent, in 1350, Gui, with cardinal Ceccan, to Rome to reopen there the holy year. A short time afterwards Gui was sent as legate to Hungary to settle a difference which had arisen between Louis, king of Hungary, and the queen Jeannette of Naples. Some time after his return to France Gregory XI sent him to Spain, to effect a reconciliation of the kings of Castile and Portugal. He died at Lerida, Nov. 25, 1373, and was buried at the abbey of Bouchet, in the diocese of Clermont. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui DE BOURGOGNE (surnamed Gallus), a French prelate, was born in Burgundy about 1210. He was elected abbot of Cîteaux in 1260. Two years afterwards he undertook a journey to Rome on business for his order. While there he received the promise of a cardinalate by pope Urban IV, with the title of St. Laurent in Lucina. Clement IV charged him with divers missions in France, Denmark, Sweden, and Germany. In 1267 he presided at the Council of Vienna. To him may be attributed the compilation of the acts of that assembly, found in Mansi, Concilia, xxiii, 1167-1178. Gui died at the Council of Lyons, May 20, 1274. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui DE SAINT-DENIS, abbot there, and counsellor of kings Charles V and Charles VI, was a doctor of canon and civil law, and well versed in sacred and profane letters. He assisted, in 1380, at the coronation of Charles VI, and in 1389 at the crowning of Isabella of Bavaria. He died April 28, 1398. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui (or Guimar) D'ÉTAMPES, a French prelate, was born about the middle of the 11th century. He studied in the famous school of Le Mans, and became the disciple of Hildebert of Lavardin. He visited afterwards several other schools, and also went to England, where he studied under the direction of St. Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury. After his return he assumed the functions of a professor under Hildebert, and succeeded him in 1097 as director at the school of Le Mans. According to the Histoire Littéraire, "Hildebert had more talent for composition and declamation; but Gui surpassed him in the liberal arts, which attracted to him a great concourse of students." Gui succeeded Hildebert as bishop of Le Mans in 1126, and did not cease even then to occupy himself with the instruction of the schools. He died in 1135, and left no writings. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui DE LUSIGNAN, king of Jerusalem, and first king of Cyprus, was born about 1140. He belonged to an ancient family of Limousin, which had distinguished itself in the first crusades. In 1180 he married Sibylla, the sister of Baldwin IV, king of Jerusalem, the widow of William of Montferrat. That princess brought him in dowry Ascalon and Joppa, and Baldwin, who had been attacked with an incurable disease, conferred upon Gui the government of the kingdom of Jerusalem. But his incapacity and pride made him unbearable to the lords, who disputed over the feeble remains of the Frankish power in the East. Baldwin soon began to regret his choice, and in 1183 took back the power from Gui de Lusignan to give it to the count of Tripolis. This gave occasion for a new civil war within the kingdom, which lasted till the death of Baldwin IV, in 1185. He had for his successor Baldwin V, a child of six years, the son of Sibylla and of William of Montferrat; but the youth died in 1186, shortly after his uncle, probably of poison administered to him by Gui. Having become heiress to the throne of Jerusalem, the sister of Baldwin IV announced her intention of separating from her husband, and of giving the crown to the most worthy of the French lords. She published the divorce in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre; Heraclius, patriarch of Jerusalem, pronouncing the separation. Sibylla, after having taken back the crown, gave it to Gui de Lusignan, and thus disgusted most of the French lords. Soon afterwards again Gui showed incapacity. Saladin, with his troops, continually invaded the country, and on the morning of July 4, 1187, threw himself with his Mohammedans upon a small body of Christian soldiers, who were encamped about the hill Hattin, near Lake Tiberias. Gui, with Reynold of Châtillon and other commanders were taken prisoners. Gui bought his liberty by restoring Ascalon to Saladin, and Jerusalem capitulated Oct. 2, 1187. Thus ended the Latin kingdom founded by Godfrey de Bouillon, after a duration of eighty-nine years. The only use that Gui made of his title of King of Jerusalem was in ceding it to Richard, in 1192, as a price of sovereignty over the island of Cyprus, which that prince had taken from the small Greek tyrant Isaac Comnenus; he also bound himself to pay back the twenty-five thousand marks which the Templars had given to Richard. Cyprus was devastated and nearly deserted; Gui peopled it again by drawing colonists from Armenia and Antioch. He also offered an asylum to a great number who fled from the domination of the Mohammedans in Palestine. After a peaceful reign of two years he died, in 1194, and transmitted his crown to his brother Amaury. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Gui DE PUY (thirty-first bishop), a French prelate, was born in the first part of the 10th century, being the son of Poulques the Kind, count of Anjou. He took holy orders, and was supplied with various abbeys and benefices. But, the Church having interdicted the holding of several offices, Gui surrendered all the other abbeys and gave back again all that he had taken away from the monasteries, holding only the abbey of Carmeri, which he administered with great regularity and order. He succeeded his brother Drogon in the episcopal see of Puy in 985, and died in 996. Gui left no works, but two pieces, which are of some interest in ecclesiastical history. The first is the manifestation by which he resigned his benefices (in Mabillon, Annales Ord. Bened. i, 47); the second is a diploma, relating to the foundation of the monastery of St. Peter (in the Gallia Christiana, iii). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guibé, Robert, a French cardinal, was born at Vitré, being of high parentage, which contributed to his early fortune. His ambition as well as his aptitude to conduct the most difficult affairs, rendered him one of the most remarkable men of his time. Being appointed bishop of Tréguier in 1483, he obtained his bulla on May 20, but not yet having attained the age requisite to a canon, the pope intrusted the government of the diocese to a provisional administrator. In February, 1485, Guibé went to Rome on a message from duke Francis. In 1499 he returned to Brittany, to be transferred from the see of Tréguier to that of Rennes. He went to Rome a second time in 1502, and was appointed cardinal by Julius II, with the title of St. Anastasia, Jan. 1, 1506. On Jan. 24, 1507, he was called to the episcopal see of Nantes, but, preferring his position at Rome, he did not remain long at his new church. He was legate of Avignon in 1511. The king afterwards took away the revenues of the benefices from the cardinal, and Guibé resigned the bishopric of Nantes in favor of François Hamon, his nephew. Finally, in 1512, he assisted at the Lateran Council, and died Sept. 9, 1513. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guibert, abbot of GEMBLoux and of FLORENNES, was born about the year 1120, in Brabant. He lived for some time in the abbey of St. Martin, was elected abbot of Florennes in 1188, and five years later was placed at the head of the monastery of Gembloux; which communities he administered in wisdom, but resigned shortly before his death, which occurred Feb. 22, 1208. He wrote numerous works, e.g., A Poem on St. Martin, a Life of St. Hildegard, and several Letters, of which the majority have been published by Dom Martene, Amplissimus Collectio, i, 916. A fire which broke out in the monastery of Gembloux at the end of the 17th century destroyed nearly all the works of Guibert. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guichard, a French prelate, entered the order of the Cistercians and became abbot of Potigny, and in 1165 archbishop of Lyons, replacing thus another prelate, who had been deposed on account of his relations with the emperor of Germany. Guichard rendered important service to his Church, and died about 1180. Several of his letters have been preserved. Dom Martene has published, in De Antig. de Eccles. Ritibus, iii, certain statutes which were promulgated by that archbishop, relating mostly to the divine service. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guidacerio, AGATHO, an Italian Hebraist, born at Rocca-Coragio (Calabria), was still living in 1539. After having taken holy orders, he studied Hebrew at Rome under a Portuguese rabbi, and was appointed afterwards to teach that language. His life was much in danger during the year 1527, and having retired to Avignon, he found a protector in the bishop of Apt, Jean Nicolai, who took him to Paris. Guidacerio was appointed royal professor by Francis I, in 1530. He interpreted at the College of France both the Hebrew and Greek texts of the Scriptures, and wrote, Grammatica Ebraice Linguae (Rome, 1514; Paris, 1529; under the title of Peculium, Paris, 1537); a dozen treatises, or commentaries on the Psalms; a commentary on the Song of Songs, with the Hebrew and Latin texts (Rome, 1524), and a commentary on Ecclesiastes (1531). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guidiccionì, Giovanni, an Italian prelate and author, was born at Lucca, Feb. 25, 1500. He received a careful education, and was quite successful in his studies at the universities of Pisa, Bologna, and Ferrara, where he obtained the degree of a doctor of law, and then went to Rome, where he connected himself with the principal literary men. By recommendation of his uncle, Bartolommeo, he entered the service of cardinal Farnese, who, on becoming pope under the name of Paul III, in 1534, appointed Guidiccionì governor of Rome, and called him in the same year to the bishopric of Fossombrone. Guidiccionì was afterwards sent on various more or less important commissions. He was made governor of the marches of Ancona in 1541, and died at Macerata, in August of the same year. For his letters and other writings, see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guidiccionì, Christoforo, an Italian prelate and writer, was born at Lucca in 1536. After being rector of the Church of St. Synesius in that city, he was appointed, in 1578, bishop of Ajaccio, in Corsica, and died in 1582, leaving Tragedie Trasportate Dalla Greca nell' Italiana Favella (Lucca, 1547). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guido, Passi. See CONTE.

Guido, Reni. See RENI.

Guidonis, Bernard, a celebrated French prelate, was born in the vicinity of Limoges, near La Roche l'Abeille, in 1260. He entered the convent of the Dominicans at Limoges, Sept. 16, 1279. In 1293 he taught theology in the convent of Alby, in 1301 was appointed prior of Castres, and in 1305 of Limoges. Guidonis went to Toulouse, in 1307, to enforce the inquisition against the Albigenses. In 1317 he was appointed procurator-general of his order at the court of Rome, and was charged by the pope, John XXII, with several negotiations, and on the conclusion of peace between France and Flanders, he was rewarded by being made bishop of Loxève (Lower Languedoc). He died Dec. 30, 1331. Some of his principal writings are, Traité Théologiques Touchant les Articles de Foi;—Traité de la Pauvreté de Jésus-Christ;—Pratique de l'Office d'Inquisiteur;—Le Miroir des Saints;—Une Chronique des Souverains Pontifes, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guignes, Joseph de, a French Orientalist, father of Chrétien Louis Joseph (q. v.), was born at Pontoise, Oct. 19, 1721. He studied the Oriental languages under Fourmont, whom he succeeded in 1745. When the French Revolution broke out, Guignes was deprived of his position, and lived in great poverty. He died at Paris, March 3, 1800. Guignes, who had made the Chinese language a specialty, believed it to be related to the Egyptian. See his Mémoire, dans lequel on prouve que les Chinois Sont une Colonie Egyptienne (Paris, 1759). His main work is Histoire Générale des Huns, des Turcs, des Mongols et des Autres Tuteurs Occidentaux (Paris, 1756-58, 4 vols.). (B. P.)

Guijon, André, a French prelate and orator, was born at Autun, in November, 1548. He became grand-vicar to cardinal de Joyeuse, and afterwards bishop of Autun. He made a voyage to Rome to receive his new dignity, and returned to France in 1586. He died in September, 1631, leaving Remontrance à la Cour de Parlement de Normandie, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guijon, Jacques, a French prelate, a relative of the preceding, was born at Noyers in 1663. He entered the ministry, and, after success in teaching, died in 1739, leaving, Apophthegmes des Saints (Paris, 1709);—Eloge de Rassicod (1718);—Longueurana (1754);—and a very important MS. work entitled, Réflexions sur les Mœurs des Français. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guldin, John C., D.D., a prominent minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in Berks County, Pa., in August, 1799. He was ordained in 1820, and settled as pastor over some congregations in Montgomery County, where he labored successfully until 1841, when he removed to Chambersburg, taking charge of several congregations in the vicinity. After laboring here about one year, he was called to take charge of the German Evangelical Mission Church, in the city of New York. In this field he labored with great acceptance and success up to the time of his death, Feb. 18, 1863. Dr. Guldin was a man of fine talents, ardent feelings, and great energy of character. Besides his pastoral duties, he also labored in connection with the American Tract Society. He published a volume of Sermons, and aided in getting up a German hymn-book for the use of the Reformed Dutch Church. "He had a fellow-feeling for all in sorrow, and could speak from a sweet experience for the comfort of such." See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 158. (D. Y. H.)

Guillaume. See WILLIAM.

Guillaume, frère, an eminent French painter on glass, was born at Marseilles in 1475. He was a member of the order of Dominicans, and executed many excellent works in the south of France. In the cathedral at Arezzo he painted several admirable works, among which were The Baptism of Christ, The Resurrection of Lazarus, and Christ Driving the Money-changers from the Temple. He established a school for teaching the art of painting on glass. He died in 1557.

Guillaume, Saint (1), a French regular canon, was born at St. Germain, near Crôpy, about 1105. After having been educated under the care of his uncle, the abbot Hugues of St. Germain-des-Prés, he became canon of the collegiate church of St. Geneviève, but, on account of the laxity in discipline among the monks, accepted the provostship of Espinac. In the interval, reform and regularity were established in the Church of St. Geneviève by the monks of St. Victor. Guillaume then returned there, and was elected sub-prior of the house in 1148. About the same time Absalon, bishop of Roeskild, in Denmark, wished to reform a monastery of regular canons on the isle of Eskind. Guillaume was sent there with three other canons, who abandoned him. After his arrival in Denmark, in 1171, he was made abbot of St. Thomas of the Paraclete. He re-established the discipline of that house, and lived under the greatest austerities until 1203. There are known of St. William more than a hundred letters, which were published in 1786, in the Rerum Danicarum Scriptores. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume, Saint (2), a French prelate, was born in the borough of Arthel (Nivernais). He was descended from a noble family, educated by William the Hermit, archdeacon of Soissons, who was his uncle, and became first canon of the Church of Paris and of Soissons. He entered the order of Grammont, in the diocese of Limoges, and later went over to that of the Cistercians at the abbey of Pontigny. In 1181 he was made abbot of Fontaine, dean in the diocese of Sens, and afterwards of Charlieu. There he was selected by Eudes ofully, bishop of Paris in 1199, to occupy the episcopal see of Bourges. The epoch of his episcopate was marked particularly by the discussions with Philip Augustus, on the subject of the repudiation of queen Ingelburga. The bishop, who took the part of the queen, was threatened with exile and confiscation, but withstood the royal indignation, and Philip, having decided to take back Ingelburga, was reconciled with the prelate. Guillaume died in 1209, as he was about to march out against the Albigenes, who had propagated their doctrine as far as Berry. His body was deposited in the crypt of the basilica of St. Etienne of Bourges, and remained in that church until 1562, when the Huguenots, on their taking possession of the city, burned his remains. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume d'Auberive, a French abbot and theologian, lived in the 12th century. In 1165 and 1180

he was at the head of the abbey of Auberive, which was of the order of Cistercians, in the diocese of Langres. He composed various books, which have remained unedited, however; there are cited among them four letters on the last judgment, and a treatise upon numbers, which reveals a profound knowledge of arithmetic. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume DE BEAUMONT, a French prelate, was born in 1177, being a member of the illustrious family of Beaumont. After the decease of Guillaume de Chemillé, which took place in May, 1202, Guillaume de Beaumont united the suffrages of the people and of the clergy, and was consecrated Sept. 23, 1203. In 1209 he put an end to disagreements between the monks of Ronceray and the friars of the Hospital of St. John. In 1223 he took an oath of allegiance to king Louis VIII. Finally, in 1236, he admitted the preaching friars into the city of Angers. He died in 1240. His literary works are very few, and of no importance; they are statutes which were published in 1680 by one of his successors, Henry Arnauld. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume DE BLOIS (surnamed the cardinal of Champagne) was born in 1135. In his early childhood he was recommended by his father to St. Bernard, who inspired him with the love of study and virtue. In 1164 Guillaume was elected bishop of Chartres, and in 1168 consecrated archbishop of Sens by the venerable Maurice, bishop of Paris. In the same year pope Alexander III, who was at that time in France, selected him as his legate, on the occasion of a quarrel which had broken out between Thomas, archbishop of Canterbury, primate of England, and king Henry II. Owing to the prudence and zeal with which he transacted his mission, he obtained the archiepiscopal see of Rheims. Guillaume had the honor of crowning, at Rheims, his nephew, Philip Augustus, as associate with his father, Louis the Younger. He took advantage of the credit which he enjoyed with Louis the Younger to obtain from him the regulation which granted to the archbishops the perpetual privilege of having the sole power of consecrating the kings of France, a regulation afterwards confirmed by the bull of the pope. At the beginning of the reign of Philip Augustus, Guillaume fell into disgrace, and so turned his further attention towards the court of Rome, which shortly afterwards conferred upon him the cardinal's hat, and restored him to his dignity at the French court, and his call to the ministry of the state. Guillaume died at Laon about 1202. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume (Abbot) DE ST. DENIS, was born at Gap, and lived in the 12th century. It seems that he had studied medicine before entering the monastic life. In 1178 he was placed at the head of the celebrated abbey from which he derives his name, and governed it with zeal and wisdom. But he displeased king Philip Augustus, and resigned in 1186. He was a man well instructed for his time, translating from the Latin the Eulogy of St. Denis the Areopagite, composed by Michael Syncellus, patriarch of Jerusalem, and a Life of the Philosopher Secundus. His writings remain in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume DU DESERT (Lat. Guilelmus or Willelmus). See WILLIAM OF AQUITAINE.

Guillaume (Saint) DE MALAVAL, founder of the Guillemites, is supposed to have been a French nobleman who had chosen a soldier's life, and lived in dissipation. Being anxious to do penance, he went to Rome, where pope Eugenius III, in 1145, ordered him to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. After his return to Tuscany, in 1153, he settled in a lonely valley of the Sienna territory, in the diocese of Grosseto, where he spent his life in work and prayer. He died Feb. 10, 1157. Some time later some of his followers erected a hermitage with a chapel on the tomb of Guillaume, and from that time it became the shrine of the order of the Guillemites, who multiplied in Germany, Flanders, and France. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume DE MANDAGOT, a French prelate and canon, was born of an illustrious family of Lodève. He was successively archdeacon of Nîmes, provost of the Church of Toulouse, archbishop of Embrun about 1295, and was made cardinal and bishop of Palestine in 1312 by Clement V. In 1296 he was charged by Boniface VIII with composing the sixth book of the Decretals, together with Bérenger de Frédol and Richard of Sienne, to whom was added, some time later, Dinus, a professor of the Roman law at Bologna. Guillaume composed, about 1300, the Summa Libelli Electionum, a very peculiar work, which contains some interesting details on the Church of Toulouse. Some time afterwards it was revised by John Andrea, and dedicated to Bérenger (Cologne, 1573). Guillaume died at Avignon in November, 1321. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume (Abbot) DE MARMOUTIERS was born in the latter part of the 11th century, and was a native of Brittany. Before he had taken the cowl he was an archdeacon of Nantes. After the death of Hilgode, the monks of Marmoutiers selected him as their abbot, in 1104. Between these monks and the archbishop of Tours there existed at that time a grave dispute. Raoul, who occupied the metropolitan see, required that newly-elected abbots should, in the ceremony of consecration, offer to him the oath of fidelity. The monks refused to render that homage, declaring it to be humiliating. Guillaume having accordingly refused, Raoul brought a complaint before the pope. During the debate, which agitated the whole province of Tours, Guillaume himself went to Rome, and there was consecrated. In 1105 he returned to his abbey. In 1106 he sat at the Council of Poitiers, and vigorously attacked a certain lord Maucéau, who had taken possession of the Church of Chaignais. In 1108 he obtained of Benedict, bishop of Aleth, the Church of St. Malo of Dinan. In 1109 he pleaded before the Council of Laon against the monks of Chemillé. He was one of the most famous of the abbots of Marmoutiers, and increased its wealth considerably. He died May 23, 1124. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume DE PASSAVANT, a French prelate, was born in Saintonge, in the beginning of the 12th century. When Rainaud of Martigné, his cousin, was nominated archbishop of Rheims, Guillaume succeeded him in that church, and executed there the functions of an archdeacon until January, 1144. After that he was called to the episcopal see of Mans, where his name is found among the documents of the year 1145. He was proud and able to defend the privileges of the Church. Being asked by the monks of Marmoutiers to intervene in their favor against Guy de Laval, who had taken possession of one of their priories, he immediately excommunicated that powerful leader. In 1151 a vassal church (of Brulan) had refused to give homage to its superior, the Church of La Coûture, and Guillaume ordered the rebel church to be demolished, for which he was obliged to go to Rome in order to justify his conduct. St. Bernard wrote in his favor to Hugues, bishop of Ostia, and to pope Eugenius III. Guillaume died at Yvré, in the province of Maine, Jan. 26, 1187. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume (Saint) PINCHON, a French prelate, was born in 1184, in the parish of St. Alban, of poor agricultural parents. Being admitted in early youth as a clerk of the Church of St. Brieuc, he soon distinguished himself among his colleagues, early obtained a canonicate, and in 1220 was appointed bishop of St. Brieuc. The bishops of Brittany at that time were engaged in serious disputes with Peter Mauclerc. Guillaume being summoned to obey this formidable leader, responded by a sentence of excommunication. The reply of Peter Mauclerc was the exile of the prelate, and the imprisonment of the priests who were known as his most devoted partisans. But the court of Rome took up the defence of Guillaume, and made his exile of short duration. He had left his diocese in 1228, and returned to it again in 1231. He died in 1234. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillaume LE WALLON, an abbot of St. Arnoul of Metz. It is believed that he received instruction at the school of Liege. On the conclusion of his studies he retired to a cloister. His teacher wrote him a letter, engaging him to leave his retreat and to enter the ranks of the secular clergy, but Guillaume continued in his chosen vocation. In 1050 he succeeded Warin at St. Arnoul as abbot. In 1073 he was elected abbot of St. Remi at Rheims. Since the year 1071 that monastery had remained without a chief, and stood exposed to the ravages of archbishop Manassé. Guillaume had some warm disputes with the latter, and wished to resign. He wrote to the pope, and not receiving any answer, set out for Rome. The pope received him kindly, and on his return archbishop Manassé relieved him. Guillaume retired to Metz, and although devoted to bishop Herman, he was so weak as to allow himself to be consecrated in his place, when the emperor Henry IV had expelled the latter from his see in 1085. The following year Guillaume went to meet the bishop, and in the presence of the chief members of the Church renounced the episcopate, and retired to the abbey of Gorze. He was intrusted with the care of the children educated there, and after some time bishop Herman gave him the abbey of St. Arnoul. He died about 1089. There are extant of Guillaume le Wallon a collection of seven letters to divers persons, one to Gregory VII, and two to archbishop Manassé, in which he reproaches him severely on account of his many vices. To him also is ascribed a fine prayer in honor of St. Augustine. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guillebert, NICOLAS, a French prelate, who lived in the first half of the 17th century, is the author of, Les Proverbes de Salomon Paraphrasés (Paris, 1626, 1637):—Paraphrase sur l'Ecclesiaste de Salomon (1627, 1635, 1642):—La Sagesse de Salomon Paraphrasée (1631):—Paraphrases sur les Épîtres de S. Paul aux Colosses, Thessaloniens, Timothée et Tit (1635):—Paraphrase de l'Épître aux Hébreux et des Épîtres Canoniques (ibid. 1638). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Guillemin, PIERRE, a French Benedictine, who died Sept. 9, 1747, at Neuf-Château, in Lotharing, is the author of Commentaire Littéral Abrégé sur Tous les Livres de l'Ancien et du Nouveau Testament (Paris, 1721). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 188; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Guilleminot, JEAN, a French Jesuit, born in 1614, joined his order in 1631, was professor of theology at Pont-à-Mousson, and died at Nancy, Nov. 24, 1680. He left, Selectæ ex Philosophia Quaestiones (Paris, 1671, 2 vols.):—La Sagesse Chrétienne (ibid. 1674):—Selectæ Quaestiones Theologicae (1682, 2 vols.). See Papillon, Bibl. des Auteurs de Bourgogne; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Guion, Elijah, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was first employed as a teacher in Carrollton, La., about the year 1853. The next year he was rector of St. James's Church, Baton Rouge; in 1860 he removed to New Orleans, where, during the war, he served as chaplain in the United States army; in 1867 was chosen rector of the Church of the Advent in Brownsville, Texas, where he also served as chaplain in the army; in 1871 was at Fort Sill, in the Indian Territory, as United States chaplain; in 1874 was appointed to the same position at Fort Gibson; in 1877 removed to Texas, and, still chaplain, went in the following year to Almaden Mines, Cal. He died in New Almaden, Jan. 17, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 171.

Guion, John M., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was employed as rector of the Church in Bethany, Conn., in 1853; the following year became assistant minister of a church in Baltimore, Md.; and shortly after was chosen rector of Trinity Church, Seneca Falls, N. Y., where he remained until his death, July 20, 1878, at the age of seventy-seven years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Guion, Thomas T., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Bedford, N. Y., Aug. 31, 1817. He graduated at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., in 1840. His first cure was the missionary station at Zoar. He then took charge of the parishes of St. Thomas, in Bethel, and St. James, in Danbury, which, at the end of three years, had become self-supporting, and he assumed the rectorship of them both. In 1848 he had charge of St. Mary's parish, Brooklyn, N. Y.; afterwards was rector of St. James's, Birmingham, Conn., for more than four years. In 1853 he accepted the pastorate of St. John's parish, Brooklyn, N. Y., where he was very successful, but his health failed. He died at Milford, Conn., Oct. 21, 1862. Dr. Guion was clear in his conceptions, honest in his convictions, and fearless in their avowal. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. April, 1863, p. 150.

Guiragos (or Cyriacus) of Armenia, was born at Kharabasd, in the province of Khajaperuni. He resided thirty-two years in the convent of Khor-Virab, whence he received the surname Virabetsi. He was an humble and pious man, and well versed in the Scriptures. He was elected patriarch in 1141, when Gregory IX, patriarch of Armenia, residing at Sis (Cilicia), objected to the transportation of his seat to Echmiadzin (Greater Armenia). Guiragos was the first patriarch who resided at the latter place; he erected convents and churches there, repaired the cathedral, and broke up the schism which separated the patriarch Aghthamar from the rest of the Church. A certain Marcus, bishop of Georgia, who was dissatisfied with that reconciliation, pretended that the election of Guiragos was invalid, because he had not previously been consecrated bishop, and it was even said that he had never been baptized. Zacharias, bishop of Havuts-Tharhah, joined the enemies of the patriarch, and went to Echmiadzin to depose him in 1143, at the head of thirty bishops. Yakub-Khan of Erivan at first opposed the change, but, being bribed by Zacharias, gave him authority to renew the election. The suffrages were in favor of Gregory X, and Guiragos, who had been hiding during the excitement, retired into a convent, where he died the same year. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guise, John, of LORRAINE, cardinal, was born in 1498. He went to France, and contributed a great deal to the elevation of his brother, Claude of Lorraine, the first duke of Guise, and of his family. In April, 1536, Francis I sent him to Charles V to negotiate an agreement. About 1542 the cardinal was removed from the court, and he died May 18, 1550. He is known for his excessive liberality, by means of which he became so influential among the people. He was in possession of a number of archbishoprics in France. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guise, Louis (1), of LORRAINE, a French prelate, brother of Charles, also archbishop of Sens, and bishop of Troyes, of Metz, and of Alby, was born Oct. 21, 1527. He was made cardinal Dec. 22, 1553, and attended the election of pope Paul IV. He was so fond of conviviality that the people used to call him "the cardinal of the bottles." He died at Paris, March 24, 1578. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guise, Louis (2), of LORRAINE, a French prelate and peer, was born at Dampierre, July 6, 1555. The cardinal of Lorraine, his uncle, appointed him, in 1572, his coadjutor at the abbey of St. Denis, and made over to him at his death the archbishopric of Rheims, the abbey of Fécamp and Montier-en-Der (1574). In 1578 he was made cardinal, and in the following year Henry III appointed him commander of the order of the Holy Spirit. A few days after he had been consecrated archbishop of St. Denis, Feb. 17, 1583, he went to Rheims to hold a provincial council, and then came back to Paris to mingle in the intrigues of the League. In 1585 he assisted at the ecclesiastical reunion of St. Germain-en-Laye. The Germans and Swiss had burned down (1587) his abbey of St. Urbin, in Champagne, in revenge for which the cardinal burned the castle of Brème, near château Thierry, belonging to the duke of Bouillon. Cardinal Guise was assassinated, Dec. 24, 1588. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guise, Louis (3), cardinal of Lorraine, archbishop of Rheims, and peer of France, was born, according to some, Jan. 22, 1575, according to others in May, 1585. He obtained the abbey of St. Denis and of Montier-en-Der, and also that of Châlis. He was never ordained, preferring brigandage, and exhibited that tendency in his later years, when he proposed to settle theological disputes by arms. In 1621 he followed the king on his expedition to Poitou, but fell sick at the siege of St. Jean d'Angely, and died shortly after (June 21, 1621). Charlotte des Essarts, countess of Romorantin, and one of the mistresses of Henry IV, is said to have been secretly married to the cardinal (Feb. 4, 1611), bearing to him three sons and two daughters. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Guise, William, a learned English divine, was born at Abload's or Abbey-load's Court, near Gloucester, in 1653, and was educated at Oriel College, where he was made fellow in 1674. He was ordained about 1677, and died Sept. 3, 1684. He translated into English, and illustrated with a commentary, Dr. Bernard's Miscellanea Pars Ordinis Primi Terrarum Tituli Septem (1690), and a tract, De Victimis Humanis. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Guizot, François Pierre Guillaume, a noted French religious author, was born at Nîmes, Oct. 4, 1787, being the descendant of a family of Huguenot pastors. He was educated at Geneva, and studied law at Paris. During the literary period of his life (1812-30), he was successively professor of history at the Sorbonne, secretary-general of the interior, journalist, etc. To this period belong his Du Gouvernement Représentatif et de l'État Actuel de la France (1816):—Des Conspirations et de la Justice Politique (1821):—Des Moyens de Gouvernement et d'Opposition (ed.):—De la Peine de Mort en Matière Politique (1822):—Essai sur l'Histoire de France (1823):—L'Histoire de la Révolution d'Angleterre (1827, 1828, 2 vols.):—L'Histoire de la Civilisation Depuis l'Établissement du Christianisme (1829). With the year 1830 Guizot's political career commenced, and it was mainly due to his efforts as minister of public instruction that a reform of the educational system of France took place. In the year 1816 Guizot published his Essai sur l'Histoire et sur l'État Actuel de l'Instruction Publique, in which he insisted that the state had the right of managing and controlling the public instruction. This idea he now developed, and introduced many improvements, especially in the primary and higher schools. In ecclesiastical respects, Guizot was the main support of orthodoxy in the Reformed Church of France. In 1852 he was chosen president of the consistory. He was opposed to liberalism of any kind in religious matters. He was orthodox, and clung to the Credo of his Church. In 1872 he was obliged, on account of feeble health, to retire from the presidency of the synod. He died at Val de Bècher, Sept. 12, 1874. Of his religious works, we mention, L'Eglise et la Société Chrétienne (1861):—Méditations sur l'Essence de la Religion Chrétienne (1864; Engl. translation, N. Y. 1865):—Méditations sur la Religion Chrétienne dans ses Rapports avec l'État Actuel des Sociétés (1865-68, 3 vols.):—Les Vies de Quatre Grands Chrétiens Français (1868; Engl. translation, Lond. 1868): — Mémoires pour Servir à l'Histoire de mon Temps (1858–68, 9 vols.). He was one of the founders of the Société Biblique in 1826, of the Société pour l'Encouragement de l'Instruction Primaire in 1833, and of the Société l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français in 1857. When, in 1861, Guizot had to make a reply to the address of the new academicien, Père Lacordaire, he defended and justified the papacy and the worldly power of the pope, whereas the Dominican praised Protestant America. This address of Guizot made a great stir. The Catholic papers, especially the Univers, rejoiced, and hoped soon to see Guizot return to the Church of Rome. But in spite of this Guizot remained in his Church, and from his words in his testament, "I die in the bosom of the Reformed Christian Church of France, in which I was born, and to have been born in which I rejoice," which have been quoted in full, we see that Guizot made all allowance to the Church of Rome, without becoming one of her members. See Mazade, Portrait d'Histoire Morale et Politique du Temps Jacquemont, Guizot, etc. (Paris, 1875); Madame de Witt, née Guizot, Monsieur Guizot dans sa Famille et avec ses Amis (ibid. 1880; English transl. Gujerati Version of the Scriptures. The Gujarati takes its name from Gujarat, a district of the Punjab in India, and the principal province in which it is spoken, and is said by the Serampore missionaries to be the vernacular of a territory equal in point of extent to England. On account of its wide diffusion it has been appropriately designated "the grand mercantile language of foreign Indian marts." The Serampore missionaries were the first to undertake a Gujarati version of the Scriptures. In 1807 they commenced printing the gospel of Matthew, but the work was given up. In 1813 it was resumed, and in 1820 the New Test., in Gujarati characters instead of the Sanscrit, was completed. The prosecution of this version was, however, resigned about this period by the Serampore missionaries to the agents of the London Missionary Society stationed at Surat. The Rev. Messrs. Skinner and Fyvie, of the London Missionary Society, published their version of the New Test. in 1821, at Surat. Shortly after the publication of the New Test. Mr. Skinner died, and the translation of the Old Test. was now carried on by Mr. Fyvie, and in 1823 it was completed at press. Other editions, in a revised state, rapidly followed as the demand increased. Another version of the New Test. was made by the Rev. Messrs. Clarkson and Flower, and an edition of two thousand copies was issued from the press. But it was subsequently resolved to publish an edition of the New Test. according to the old translation of the Surat edition, subject to such slight changes as might be deemed necessary. This edition was completed at the Bombay press in 1853. Meanwhile, preparations for a revised edition of the entire Gujarati Scriptures were in active progress under the care of the Bombay Auxiliary Society, and an edition of the New Test., according to this improved version, was completed at the mission-press in Surat in 1856. The Old Test. was completed in 1861. Besides these two editions, the Serampore New Test. and the Surat version, in 1860 a new edition of the Gujarati New Test., for the special use of the Parsees, was announced. It was carried through the press in Bombay, in Parsee characters, by the Rev. Dunjeebhoy Nowrojee, and published in 1862. In this edition the religious terms are those technically used in religious Parsee literature. Of the latter edition up to March 31, 1884, two thousand two hundred and forty-nine portions of Scripture were disposed of. See Bible of Every Land, p. 123. There exist several grammars for the study of this language: Munshi, The Student's Companion in the Acquisition of a Practical Knowledge of English and Gujarati

Grammar and Idioms (Ahmedabad, 1869); Shapurji Edalji, A Grammar of the Gujarati Language (Bombay, 1867); Taylor, A Grammar of the Gujarati Language (ibid. 1868). (B. P.)

Guldberg, OVK HOEGH, a Danish statesman, historian, and theologian, was born Sept. 1, 1731, and died Feb. 8, 1808. He is known as the author of a Chronology for the Books of the New Testament (Copenhagen, 1785), and of A Translation of the New Testament, with Annotations (1794, 2 vols.), both published in the Danish language. (B. P.)

Gumpel, MORDECAI. See LEVISOHN.

Gunn, ALEXANDER, D.D., a distinguished minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born Aug. 13, 1785. He graduated from Columbia College in 1805, and prepared for the ministry under Dr. Henry Kollock of Princeton, and Dr. John Rodgers of New York. In 1809 he was licensed by the Presbytery of New York, and the same year took charge of the Church at Bloomingdale. He died Oct. 1, 1829. An accomplished gentleman, amiable, prudent, and a peace-maker, he was also noted for his conscientious piety and entire devotion to his work. His talents as a writer and preacher were of a very high order. Imaginative and cultivated, with good taste, ample learning, and fine abilities, he was among the most popular pulpit orators of New York. He wielded a powerful pen as a theological writer, and took a conspicuous part in some of the exciting controversies of his time. The General Synod, in 1825, appointed him to write the biography of the late Rev. John H. Livingston, D.D. See Magazine of the Ref. Dutch Church, December, 1829, p. 257; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Gunner, JOHANN ERNEST, a Norwegian prelate and naturalist, was born in Christiansand, Feb. 26, 1718. He began his studies under the direction of his father, who was a physician in that city, and went to Copenhagen to continue them. In 1742 the king gave him means to go to Halle, and afterwards to Jena, where he studied philosophy, and became a member of the faculty. On his return to Copenhagen in 1756 he was made extraordinary professor of theology in the university. In 1758 the bishopric of Dröntheim was conferred upon him. He died at Christiansand, Sept. 23, 1773, leaving, Nyrdebrev (Dröntheim, 1758): — Kjagtale over Kong Frederic V (ibid. 1766): — also Memoirs in the Norsk Videnskabselskabets Skrifter (writings of the Academy of Science of Norway), etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Günther, Johann, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 17, 1660. He studied at Breslau and Leipsic, was preacher and licentiate of theology at the latter place, and died Jan. 20, 1714. His writings are for the most part directed against the Roman Catholic Church. See Ranft, Leben der chursächsischen Gottesgelehrten; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Günther, Wolfgang, a Lutheran theologian, was born in Saxony in 1586. He studied at Wittenberg, was preacher in 1611 in the vicinity of Annaberg, in 1615 pastor and superintendent at Friedland, in 1626 at Spardau, and died Jan. 16, 1636. He wrote, Analysis Trium Librorum Ecclesie Nostrae Symbolicorum (Wittenberg, 1614): — Aphorismi Theologici super Aug. Confessionem (1615): — Dispositio Epistolae S. Pauli ad Romanos (1625). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Güntherode, CARL VON, a Roman Catholic theologian of Milan, was born in 1740. In 1799 he was professor of Church history at Innsbrück, but soon exchanged the academical chair for the monastery, a step which he regretted, because both the monastic life and the religious views of the monks were not in harmony with his intellectual powers. More pleasant was his position as librarian to prince Esterhazy, at Vienna.

He died in 1795, leaving, Institutio Theologiæ Naturalis (1774):—Diss. de Criteriis Veri et Falsi (eod.):—De Supremata Concilii Generalis supra Romanorum Pontificum (1777). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v. (B. P.)

Güntner, GABRIEL JOHANN BERNHARD, a Premonstratensian, was born in 1804 in Bohemia, received holy orders in 1830, was in 1838 professor of exegesis at Prague, and died March 17, 1867. He wrote, Hermeneutica Biblica Generalis Juxta Principia Catholica (Prague, 1848; 2d ed. 1851; 3d ed. 1863):—Introductio in Sacros Novi Testamenti Libros Histor.-Critica et Apologetica (ibid. 1863, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Günzburg, AARON, a Jewish rabbi, was born at Prague in 1812. He received his rabbinical as well as classical education at his native place, and was appointed rabbi of the congregation of Libachowitz, in Bohemia. In 1846 he published, Dogmatisch-historische Beleuchtung des alten Judenthums (Prague), in which he boldly demanded the emancipation of the Jews, and grounded his demand on the words and promises of former Austrian emperors. In consequence of this publication he was obliged to leave his country, and came to America. He was elected rabbi at Baltimore, then at Rochester, N. Y., and last in Boston, where he died, July 19, 1873. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 348. (B. P.)

Gurley, LEONARD B., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Norwich, Conn., March 10, 1804. He moved to Ohio in youth, was converted, received into the Ohio Conference in 1828, was three years on circuits, thirteen on districts, two in agency of Ohio Wesleyan University, twenty-eight in stations, and six in retirement. He was elected to the general conferences of 1848, 1856, and 1864, and died at Delaware, O., March 26, 1880. Dr. Gurley was genial, generous, and sympathetic. He was a strong advocate of temperance, wrote and spoke for the abolition of slavery, and gave $8000 to Ohio Wesleyan University and $10,000 to the Board of Church Extension. His published poems exhibit high talent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 314.

Gurlitt, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, a Lutheran theologian and philologist, was born at Leipsic, March 13, 1751. In 1802 he accepted a call to Hamburg as director of the Johanneum, and professor of Oriental languages at the academical gymnasium, and died June 14, 1827. Gurlitt was the teacher of the famous Church historian Neander. He wrote, Explanatio Brevis Hymni 43 Davidis (Hamburg, 1778):—Kurze Geschichte des Tempelherrenordens (1824). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 228, 365, 375, 589, 679, 702, 722, 730; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 348 sq. (B. P.)

Gurney, John Hampden, an English divine, son of Sir John Gurney, a baron of the exchequer, was born Aug. 15, 1802. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1824, was for some time curate of Lutterworth, Leicestershire, and in 1848 was presented by the crown with the rectory of St. Mary's, in Marylebone. He died March 3, 1862. Mr. Gurney was a most earnest and popular preacher, and among his published discourses are, A Pastor's Warning, suggested by the death of Sir Robert Peel (1850):—The Lost Chief and a Mourning People, on the death of the duke of Wellington (1852):—The Grand Romish Fallacy, and Dangers and Duties of Protestants (1854):—Better Times and Worse (1856), and several series of sermons. His lectures were published under the titles of, Historical Sketches, Illustrating some Important Epochs from A.D. 1400 to A.D. 1546:—St. Louis and Henri IV.:—and God's Heroes and the World's Heroes (1858). Mr. Gurney was also the author of several psalm and hymn books, and of Four Letters to the Bishop of Exeter on Scripture Readers. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1862, p. 685.

Gurney, Samuel, a distinguished member of the Society of Friends, and brother of Joseph John Gurney, was born at Eastham Hall, near Norwich, England, Oct. 18, 1786. His education closed when he was fourteen years of age, and he was apprenticed to a London banker and tea-merchant. He eventually became a partner in one of the most celebrated business firms of Lombard Street. Early in his active life he was associated with other distinguished philanthropists in efforts to improve the condition of English missions. He was also the warm friend of the Bible Society and of the republic of Liberia. He was one of a deputation, representing four thousand merchants and tradesmen of London, sent to France, in 1853, in the interests of peace. He died in Paris, June 5, 1856. See Memorials of Samuel Gurney, by Mrs. Thomas Geldart (Philadelphia, 1859). (J. C. S.)

Güruth, GEORG SAMUEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 3, 1745, at Brieg, in Silesia. He studied at Königsberg, was in 1768 rector at Neustadt, in 1778 preacher at his native city, in 1792 pastor primarius at Krenzburg, and died Feb. 3, 1803. He published some acetical writings. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v. (B. P.)

Gürb, a teacher among the Hindüs, occupying in some degree the place of the confessor of the Middle Ages. He is looked upon as a representative and vehicle of divine power, and therefore entitled to the most implicit submission on the part of the man whose gürü he is.

Gurwhal (or Shreenagur) is a dialect spoken in the province of Gurwhal, west of Kumaon. A translation of the New Test. was undertaken at Serampore in 1816, and was completed at press some time prior to 1832. (B. P.)

Gutbier, Ægidius, a German Orientalist, was born at Weissensee, in Thuringia, Sept. 1, 1617. He studied at different universities, was in 1652 professor of Oriental languages at Hamburg, took in 1660 his degree as doctor of theology at Giessen, and died Sept. 27, 1667. He published, Notum Testamentum Syriacum:—Lexicon Syriacum:—Nota Critica in Novum Testamentum Syriacum:—De Sibyllis et Earum Oraculis. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Gutbier, Friedrich August Philip, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in Thuringia, March 2, 1765, and died Feb. 5, 1838, superintendent and member of consistory. He published, Summarium über das Neue Testament (Leipsic, 1831–38, 4 vols.):—Lehrbuch der christlichen Glaubens- und Sittenehre (Gotha, 1825):—Liturgisches Handbuch zum Gebrauch für Prediger (Leipsic, 1805). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 189, 215, 280; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 480 sq. (B. P.)

Güte, HEINRICH ERNEST, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 13, 1754, at Bielefeld. He studied at Halle, was preacher there in 1779, magister in 1780, professor of theology in 1791, and died Dec. 6, 1805. He wrote, De Factis Ejus Dei, quo Christus e Mortuis Resurrexit (Halle, 1780):—Anfangsgründe der hebräischen Sprache (ibid. 1782; 2d ed. 1791):—Entwurf zur Einleitung in's Alte Testament (ibid. 1787):—Kurze Uebersicht der vorzüglichsten Materien, etc. (ibid. 1804). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, a. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 81; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 349. (B. P.)

Gutelius, SAMUEL, a most estimable minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in Lancaster County, Pa. He studied under the Rev. Yost Henry Fries, was licensed and ordained in 1822, and immediately took charge of some congregations in Northumberland County. After laboring successfully in different charges, he died, July 17, 1866. "Strict honesty and integrity were leading and marked features in his life and character." Father Gutelius was a great sufferer, but his sufferings never interfered with his duties.

"He was an indefatigable worker, and a solid preacher. His sermons were always well prepared. He pleaded with his hearers like a man who expected to meet them at the bar of God. Indeed, he often reminded them of that meeting. He took a deep interest in all the benevolent operations of the Church, and was for a time connected with the publication of its periodicals. His ministry was characterized by great earnestness and success." See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Ref. Church, iv, 190. (D. Y. H.)

Guthrie (or Guthry), Henry, bishop of Dunkeld about 1664, died in 1676. He published Memoirs, temp. Charles I (Lond. 1702). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Guthrie, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was promoted to the see of Moray from Edinburgh, in 1623, where he continued until he was deprived with the other prelates by the Glasgow Assembly in 1638. He then lived at Spynie castle till 1640, when he was forced to surrender it to colonel Monroe, after which he retired to his own private castle of Guthrie, in the county of Angus. He died not long afterwards. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 152.

Guthrie, John (2), D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Milnathort, Kinrossshire, Jan. 30, 1814. He was kept in the Church from infancy through the care of pious parents; entered Edinburgh University at the age of seventeen, where he took the degree of M.A., distinguishing himself in classics and philosophy; and in 1839 was ordained pastor of the Secession Church at Kendal. Shortly afterwards he was excommunicated from that Church for maintaining the universality of Christ's atonement. He then, with others, formed the Evangelical Union, became the professor in the Theological Hall of the new body, and held the office from 1846 to 1861. From 1848 to 1851 he held the pastorate in Glasgow, whence he removed to Greenock, where he labored successfully for eleven years. Thence he went to Tolmers Square, London, but returned to Glasgow, where he assumed the pastorate of a new church, and filled the chair of apologetics in the Theological Hall of the Evangelical Union. He died in London, Sept. 8, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 316.

Guthrie, Thomas, D.D., an eminent Scottish pulpit orator, philanthropist, and social reformer, was born July 12, 1803, at Brechin, Forfarshire, where his father was a merchant and banker. He went through the curriculum of study prescribed by the Church of Scotland to candidates for the ministry, at the University of Edinburgh, and devoted two additional winters to the study of chemistry, natural history, and anatomy. Meanwhile he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Brechin in 1825; subsequently spent six months in Paris, studying the physical sciences. In 1830 he became pastor of the Church at Arbirlot, in his native county, and in 1837 was appointed one of the ministers of Old Greyfriars parish, in Edinburgh. Here his eloquence, combined with devoted labors to reclaim the degraded population of one of the worst districts of the city, soon won for him a high place in public estimation. In 1843 he joined the Free Church, and for a long series of years continued to minister to a large and influential congregation in Edinburgh. In 1845 and 1846 he performed a great service for the Free Church by his advocacy throughout the country of its scheme for providing manse or residences for its ministers. His zeal was not diverted in mere denominational or sectarian channels. He came forward in 1847 as the advocate of ragged schools, and to him the rapid extension of the system over the kingdom is very much to be ascribed. He also earnestly exerted himself in many ways in opposition to intemperance and other vices. He possessed great rhetorical talent, and his style was remarkable for the abundance and variety of the illustrations he used. Few public speakers have ever blended solemnity and deep pathos so intimately with the humorous, his tendency to which has more frequently than anything else been pointed out as his fault. Dr. Guthrie always displayed a generous sympathy with all that tended to progress or improvement of any kind. He was moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland in May, 1862, and died near Edinburgh, Feb. 23, 1873. His most important published works are, The Gospel in Ezekiel, a series of discourses;—The Way of Life, a volume of sermons;—A Plea for Drunkards and against Drunkenness;—A Plea for Ragged Schools, followed by a second and a third plea, the latter under the title, Seed-time and Harvest of Ragged Schools;—The City, its Sins and Sorrows;—A Sufficient Maintenance and an Efficient Ministry (Edinburgh, 1852, 8vo). He edited a new edition of Berridge's Christian World Unmasked (ibid. 1856, 8vo). For some years before his death he acted as editor of The Sunday Magazine, founded in 1864, in which year he retired from his regular ministrations. His Autobiography and Memoir was published by his sons (1873), and his Works (1873-76, 11 vols.). Guy. See GUL.

Guy, THOMAS, an English philanthropist, founder of Guy's Hospital, was born at Southwark in 1644. After serving an apprenticeship of eight years, he began business as a bookseller in 1668. He dealt largely in Bibles, which he at first imported from Holland, but afterwards printed for himself. He became master of an immense fortune, and died unmarried, Dec. 17, 1724. In 1707 he built three wards of St. Thomas's Hospital, and aided it in other ways. He built Guy's Hospital at a cost of over £18,000, and left an endowment of £219,499. He also made other gifts and bequests for hospitals and almshouses. Gyöngyösi (di Peteny), PAULUS, a Hungarian Reformed theologian, was born in 1668. He studied in England and at Franeker, and took the degree of doctor of theology at the latter place in 1700. Having returned to his country, he was pastor of the Reformed congregation at Kaschau, but he had to leave that place in 1724, and went to Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, where he was appointed professor of theology. He died there in 1743, leaving, De Fatis Sexta Novi Testamenti Ætate Haak, THEODOR, an English divine and natural philosopher, was born in 1605 at Neuhausen, near Worms, in Germany, and was educated partly in his native country, and finally at Oxford and Cambridge. He then visited some of the Continental universities, and returned to Oxford in 1629, but without taking a degree was ordained, in 1632, deacon to bishop Hall of Exeter. He gave himself up to literary pursuits, and was devoted to the interests of parliament during the rebellion. He died in London, May 9, 1690. He published the Dutch Annotations on the Bible (1657, 2 vols. fol.); was employed by the Westminster Assembly, and translated into Dutch several theological works. He seems to have been the first to propose the Royal Society. Some of his letters appeared in the Philosophical Collections (May, 1682).

Haar, in Norse mythology, was a dwarf, made of and living in stones.

Haas, Carl, a German convert to the Church of Rome, was born Oct. 18, 1804. He studied theology at Tübingen, and became a Protestant minister. In 1843 he was dismissed from the ministry, having the year before published Die Glaubensgegensätze des Protestantismus und Katholicismus. He joined the Church of Rome at Augsburg, in 1844, and published on that occasion Offenes Sendschreiben an seine liebe Gemeinde, etc., and Protestantismus und Katholicismus. He now set himself to write in the interest of the Church of Rome, and published Josephs und Konrads Feiertunden (Augsburg, 1845):—Populäre Kirchengeschichte, mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Reformationsgeschichte (2d ed. 1846):—Beleuchtung grosser Vorurtheile gegen die Katholische Kirche (1857):—Geschichte der Päpste (1860):—Die zwei Hauptfeinde des Christenthums (1866):—Natur und Gnade (1867). After the Vatican council, Haas renounced again the Church of Rome, without returning to the Evangelical Church, and to justify himself, he published Nach Rom und von Rom zurück nach Wittenberg (Barmen, 1882). In 1881 he published Der ungefälschte Luther nach den Udrucken der königl. öffentl. Bibliothek in Stuttgart hergestellt. Haas died Dec. 21, 1883. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 484. (B. P.)

Haas, Carl Franz Lubert, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 12, 1722, at Cassel. He studied at Marburg, commenced his academical career there in 1748, was professor in 1754, and died Oct. 29, 1789. He wrote, Diss. Historica de Meritis Philippii Magnanimi in Reformationem (Marburg, 1742):—De Eutichianismo et Variis Ejus Sectis (ibid. 1746):—Versuch einer Hessischen Kirchengeschichte (ibid. 1782). Habadim (or rather Chabadim), a subdivision of the Jewish sect of Chasidim, founded by rabbi Solomon, in the government of Mohilef, in the 18th century. The name is composed of the initial letters of the three Hebrew words, חָכְמָה, בִּינָה, דַּעַת, "wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge." They may not improperly be termed the "Jewish Quietists," as their peculiarity consists in the rejection of external forms and the complete abandonment of the mind to abstraction and contemplation. Instead of the baptisms customary among the Jews, they go through the signs without the use of the element, and consider it their duty to disengage themselves as much as possible from matter, because of its tendency to clog the mind in its ascent to the supreme source of intelligence. In prayer they make no use of words, but simply place themselves in the attitude of supplication, and exercise themselves in mental ejaculations.

Habakkuk, the Hebrew prophet, is commemorated in the old Roman martyrologies on Jan. 15.

Habdalah (הַבְדֵּלָה, distinction), a ceremony by which the Jewish Sabbath is divided or separated from the other days of the week. It is performed after the concluding service in the synagogue, by reciting passages of Scripture and prayers, and the use of wine and spices. On Sabbath evening four benedictions are said, one over the wine, a second over the spice, the third over the light, "Blessed art thou Lord our God, king of the world, who hast created a shining light," and the last is, "Blessed art thou, Lord our God, king of the universe, who hast made a distinction (יְהִי בְרִיחַ) between the holy and the common, between light and darkness, between Israel and the other nations, between the seventh day and the other six days of work; blessed be thou, O God, who hast made a distinction between the holy and the common." If for any reason a Jew is prevented from performing this ceremony, either at home or abroad, he is at liberty to substitute the following short benediction: "Blessed is he who has made a distinction between things sacred and profane." See Buxtorf, Lex. Chald. Tul. s. v. (B. P.)

Häberlin, GEORG HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Stuttgart, Sept. 30, 1644. He studied at Tübingen, became deacon in 1668, doctor and professor of theology in 1681, member of consistory and preacher in 1692, and died Aug. 20, 1699, leaving, Specimen Theologiae Practicae: — Conspectus Locorum Theologicorum: — Theologia Corinthiaca in Formam Systematicam Proposita: — De Principio Fidei: — De Unione Fidelium cum Christo: — De Justificatione Hominis Coram Deo: — De Satisfactione Christi: — De Chiliasmo Hodierno, Fidei Christianae Ruina et Infidelitatis Judaicae Firmamento, etc. See Fischlin, Memoria Theologorum Württembergensium; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. Habert, LOUIS, a French theologian and doctor of the Sorbonne, was born at Blois in 1638, and died at Paris, April 17, 1718. He is the author of, Pratique du Sacrement de Pénitence (Paris, 1714, 1729), better known as the Pratique de Verdun. He also wrote Theologia Dogmatica et Moralis ad Usum Seminarii Catalaunensis (Lyons, 1709-12, 7 vols.), which was attacked and condemned by Fénelon. Being opposed to the bull Unigenitus, Habert was exiled in 1714, and only returned to Paris after the death of Louis XIV. Habitacle (Lat. habitaculum) (1) a residence; (2) a niche.

Hachilah, HILL OF. Lieut. Conder suggests for this spot (Quar. Statement of the "Palest. Explor. Fund," January, 1875, p. 47) "the high hill bounded by deep valleys north and south on which the ruin of Yekin now stands," and Tristram (Bible Lands, p. 63) coincides in this identification; but if this be the site of the ancient city Cain (q. v.), it can hardly be also that of Hachilah; and, in fact, the latter is not a proper name at all, as it invariably has the article (הַחִיִּלָּה), as being a mere appendage of Ziph). Later, Lieut. Conder proposes another site (Tent Work, ii, 91): "This [hill] I would propose to recognise in the long ridge called El-Kolah, running out of the Ziph plateau towards the Dead Sea desert or Jeshimon, a district which, properly speaking, terminates about this line, melting into the Beersheba plains. On the north side of the hill are the 'Caves of the Dreamers,' perhaps the actual scene of David's descent on Saul's sleeping guards." As to the "wood (choresh) of Ziph," he remarks (p. 89):

"A moment's reflection will convince any traveller that as the dry, porous formation of the plateau must be unchanged since David's time, no wood of trees could then have flourished over this unwatered and sun-scorched region. The true explanation seems to be that the word choresh is a proper name with a different signification, and such is the view of the Greek version and of Josephus. We were able considerably to strengthen this theory by the discovery of the ruin of Khoreisa and the valley of Hiresch (the same word under another form), close to Ziph, the first of which may well be thought to represent the Hebrew Choresch-Ziph." But the latter term likewise is a mere denominative, for it takes the article (הַחֹרֶשׁ), 1 Sam. xxiii, 15, 18), and is elsewhere used plainly with reference to trees (Isa. xvii, 9; Ezek. xxxi, 3).

Hacke, NICHOLAS P., D.D., a German Reformed minister, was born in Baltimore, Md., Sept. 20, 1800. At the age of six years he was sent to a relative in Bremen, Germany, to acquire a thorough knowledge of the German language. He returned to America in 1816, and studied theology privately until 1819, when he accepted an invitation to preach to some congregations in Westmoreland County, Pa., returning to his studies the same year. He was licensed and ordained in 1819, and became pastor of the Greensburg charge, which he served fifty-eight years, and died there, Aug. 25, 1878. During the greater part of his ministry he preached exclusively in the German language. He was a student all his life, and used the English language with ease and grace. He was fully consecrated to his work, remarkable for his social powers, caring not for worldly honors, a model Christian gentleman, and faithful minister of the gospel. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 800.

Hacker, JOACHIM BERNHARD NIKOLAUS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 11, 1760, at Dresden. He studied at Wittenberg, and died at Zscheyla, in Saxony, Oct. 4, 1817, leaving some ascetical works, for which see Döring, Deutsche Kanzelredner; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 356, 386. Hacker, JOHANN GEORG AUGUST, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Dresden, Jan. 24, 1762. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1784 preacher at Torgau, in 1790 garrison-preacher at Dresden, in 1796 court-preacher there, and died Feb. 21, 1823, leaving Diss. Inauguralis de Descensu Christi ad Inferos (Wittenberg, 1802), and several volumes of sermons. See Döring, Deutsche Kanzelredner; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 436; ii, 82, 91, 127, 161, 172, 173, 183, 366, 389. (B. P.)

Hackett, HORATIO BALCH, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Baptist scholar, was born at Salisbury, Mass., Dec. 27, 1808. In 1823 he entered Phillips Academy, Andover, and in 1827 Amherst College; became a hopeful Christian in 1828, and was valedictorian in 1830. He graduated from the theological seminary at Andover in 1834, spending one year meanwhile as tutor in Amherst College. The next year he occupied a position as teacher of classics in Mount Hope College, Baltimore, and became a member of the First Baptist Church in that city. He was adjunct professor of Latin and Greek in Brown University for four years (1835-39). In 1839 he was elected professor of Biblical Literature and Interpretation in Newton Theological Institution, and the same year was ordained to the Christian ministry. Two years of earnest devotion to the cultivation of the classes which came under his instruction were followed by a year spent abroad, six months of the time in earnest study in Halle, Germany, attending the lectures of Tholuck, Gesenius, Rödiger, and other eminent scholars, and four months in Berlin, enjoying the instructions, especially, of Neander and Hengstenberg. After his return to America, in 1842, he prepared an annotated edition of Plutarch's treatise on the Delay of the Deity in the Punishment of the Wicked, devoting also much time to the study of French, Chaldee, and Syriac, modern Greek, and Sanscrit. Two years afterwards he published a translation of Wiser's Grammar of the Chaldee Language. The first number of the second volume of the Bibliotheca Sacra, January, 1845, contains his critique on the Life of Jesus, by Strauss. In the number of the same quarterly for January, 1846, is an able article on the Synoptical Study of the Gospels, and Recent Literature Pertaining to it. The next year (1847) appeared his Exercises in Hebrew Grammar, and Selections from the Greek Scriptures to be Translated into Hebrew, etc. The result of some of his studies in connection with the preparation of this volume may be found in the January (1847) number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, in the form of two articles from his pen, The Structure of the Hebrew Sentence, and The Greek Version of the Pentateuch, by Thiersch. Then came his great work, the Commentary on Acts, the first edition of which appeared in 1852. He then made a second visit to Europe, his journey being extended to Palestine, and on his return spending several weeks in Germany. In 1855 he published his Illustrations of Scripture; Suggested by a Tour through the Holy Land. Soon after, he set out upon his third foreign tour, spending six months in Athens, for the purpose of devoting himself to the study of modern Greek, and thence making excursions in different directions in Greece. In 1860 the Bible Union published his Notes on the Greek Text of the Epistle of Paul to Philemon, as the basis of a revision of the common English version; and a Revised Version, with Notes. In 1864 appeared his Christian Memorials of the War. During the same period he wrote thirty articles for the original edition of Dr. William Smith's Dictionary. In 1861 he wrote an introduction to the American edition of Westcott's Study of the Gospels; in the winter of 1865 he began to edit an American edition of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, aided by Dr. Ezra Abbot. He was also engaged by Dr. Schaff to translate Van Oosterzee's Commentary on Philemon, for his edition of Lange's Commentaries, and Braun's Commentary on Philippians, for the same series. He published in 1867 a second revised edition of Plutarchus de Seru Numinis Veri Dicta, with notes prepared by himself and professor W. S. Tyler, of Amherst College. Professor Hackett's connection with the Newton Theological Institution closed with its anniversary, June 24, 1868. Two years were next spent in laborious study in his favorite department, translating and revising the books of Ruth and of Judges for the Bible Union, upon the American edition of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and upon translations which he engaged to make for Dr. Schaff; also, in 1870, spending several months, once more, in the Old World. Having been appointed to the chair of Biblical Literature and New Testament Exegesis, in the Rochester Theological Seminary, he entered upon the duties of his office in the fall of 1870. The same zeal and enthusiasm which characterized his instructions at Newton marked his teachings at Rochester. Five years of work were followed by another of those vacations in which he took so much delight, a vacation passed amid the scenes of the Old World. He returned, apparently greatly refreshed and strengthened, to enter anew upon his work, when the summons suddenly came, telling him that his work was done. He died almost instantly, Nov. 2, 1875, at his own home in Rochester, N. Y. See Memorials of H. B. Hackett, edited by G. H. Whittemore (Rochester, 1876). (J. C. S.)

Hackett, Thomas, D.D., an Irish prelate, was bishop of Down and Connor in 1672. He was deprived for simony in 1694. He published some Sermons (1672). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, & v.

Hadarniel, in the Talmud, is an angel of the heaven of fixed stars, and commander of fire; therefore more than twelve thousand flashes of lightning come from his mouth at every word he utters. He would not allow Moses to wander through the air, when the latter came, at the command of God, to receive the law. God chided him, therefore he offered his services, to go before Moses, and announce his words.

Hadassi, JEHUDA, a learned Karaite Jew, was born towards the end of the 11th century, at Jerusalem, and died between 1150 and 1160. He is the author of a great work, bearing upon the literature of the Karaite Jews, entitled, אֲשֶׁל חֲסִידֵי יְהוּדָא, also סֵפֶר הַתְּפִלָּה, first published at Koelov, 1836. See Fürst, *Bibl. Hadelin (Lat. Hadalinus), Saint, priest and confessor, who died about 690, was one of the disciples of St. Remacle, and when that saint resigned his bishopric of Fougères, that he might retire into the peaceful monastery of Stanislawow, lately founded by St. Sigebert, king of Austrasia, he took with him the pious Hadelin. Remacle sent Hadelin into Dinant, on the Meuse, in 669, and finding a quiet retreat at Celles, on the Lesse, he dwelt there in a cave, and built a little chapel, on the site of which afterwards rose a collegiate church. St. Hadelin is the patron of five churches in the diocese of Liege and Namur. His hermitage still exists, and has never been without a pious successor. The body of this saint was buried there, but was translated to Vise, in the diocese of Liege, in 1338. He is mentioned in the martyrologies of Ado, Wyon, Menardus, those of Liege, Cologne, etc. There are two ancient lives, one by Notker, bishop of Liege (971-1007). See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints (sub. Feb. 8, his day), ii, 49.

Hadeloga (or Adaloga), Saint, commemorated Feb. 2, is said to have been the first abbess of the nunnery of Kissingen, and a daughter of Charles Martel, in the 8th century.

Hadid. The modern site, Hadithek, is laid down on the Ordnance Map as three miles east of Ludd, and is described in the accompanying Memoirs (ii, 297; comp. p. 322) as "a moderate-sized village on a terraced tell at the mouth of a valley at the foot of the hills, with a well to the east. There are remains of a considerable town round it; tombs and quarries exist; and the mound on which the village stands is covered with pottery."

Hadith, a name given by Mohammedans to the sayings of Mohammed, which were handed down by oral tradition from one generation to another. There are said to be six authors of these traditions, among whom are Ayesha, the wife of the prophet; Abu-Horeira, his intimate friend; and Ibn-Abbas, his cousin-german. The collection of these traditions made by Khwarezmi numbers 5266 sayings, all of which the devout Mohammedan ought to commit to memory, or, where that cannot be done, to transcribe them.

Hādshi-Khalfa (originally MUSTAFA ben-Abdallah, also known by the name of Katib-Tshelebi), a most celebrated Turkish historian, geographer, and biographer, was born at Constantinople about 1605. He was for some time secretary to the sultan, Murad IV, and died in 1658. His main production is a great biographical lexicon, Keshful-funûn, written in Arabic, in which he gives the titles of more than 18,000 Arabic, Persian, and Turkish works, with short biographies of the authors. It is of the greatest value, since it enumerates a great many others which seem to have been lost. Hammer-Purgstall largely used this work for his Encyklopädische Uebersicht der Wissenschaften des Orients (Leipsic, 1806). A complete edition of Hādshi's text, with a Latin translation, was published by Flügel, Lexicon Bibliographicum et Encyclopaedicum (Lond. 1835-58, 7 vols.). Hādshi also published chronological tables, Takwim-al-tawarikh (translated into Latin by Reiske, Leipsic, 1766), and a geography, Deschihán-numá (Latin transl. by Norberg, Lund, 1818, 2 vols.). (B. P.)

Hæmir, in Norse mythology. When the Wanæs and Asas, after a long war, agreed on an armistice, they exchanged hostages. The Asas got the Wane Niori, the Wanæs the Asa Hæmir, who was very beautiful, but had no mental gifts, and soon the Wanæs ceased to respect him. Both hostages remain in the power of their enemies until the destruction of the world, when they will return to their kindred.

Haer, FRANCISCUS VAN DER, a theologian and historian of Utrecht, who died at Louvain, Jan. 12, 1632, is the author of, Catena Aurea in IV Evangelia:—Concordia Historiæ Sacræ et Profanæ (1614):—Jesus Nazarenus Messias Daniels:—Biblia Sacra Vulgata:—Expositio in Epistolâ Pauli:—De Sacramentis. Hafsi (keepers), a name given to Mohammedans who commit the entire Koran to memory, and are on that account regarded as holy men, intrusted with God's law.

Haftorang, in Persian mythology, is the god and ruler of the planet Mars, the light-giver and health-restorer. As he is the protector of the northern region and its stars, he may be the seventh constellation, because Hafti denotes seven.

Hagemann, Lorenz, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Wolfenbüttel, Aug. 10, 1692. He studied at Jena, was preacher in 1719 at Bodenburg, in 1722 at Nordhausen, in 1728 at Hanover, in 1748 general superintendent, and died in 1752. He wrote An Homerus Fuerit Philosophus Moralis? (Jena, 1712), besides a number of ascetical works. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hagemann, Johann Georg, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Blankenburg in 1765, a superintendent, wrote Betrachtungen über die fünf Bücher Moses (Brunswick, 1732-44):—Von den vornehmsten Uebersetzungen der heiligen Schrift (Quedlinburg, 1747). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hagen, FRIEDRICH CASPAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died April 13, 1741, member of consistory, court-preacher, and superintendent at Bayreuth, is the author of, De Conventu Snobacence (Bayreuth, 1717):—De Synopaxia Pauli (Wittenberg, 1703; also found in Thesaurus Novus Theol. Philol. ii, 875 sq.):—Memorie Philosophorum, Oratorum, Poetarum, Historicorum, etc. (Bayreuth, 1710):—Die Ausgabe einer deutschen Bibel Lutheri. Hagenbach, KARL RUDOLF, a Swiss theologian, was born at Basle, March 4, 1801. Besides the university of his native place, he studied at Bonn and Berlin, and in these places received the instruction of Lücke, Schliermacher, and Neander. Having returned to Basle, he commenced his academical career by presenting Observationes Historico-Hermeneuticas circa Origenis Methodum Interpretanda Scripturæ Sacræ (1823), and six years later he was made professor ordinarius in the theological faculty. For fifty years he belonged to the Basle University, and exerted a wide influence, not only as a teacher, but also as a preacher. He died June 7, 1874. Hagenbach's first important work was Encyclopædie und Methodologie der theol. Wissenschaften (Leipsic, 1838; 11th ed. by Kautzsch, 1884; Engl. transl. by Crooks and Hurst, as vol. iii of Library of Biblical and Theological Literature, N. Y. 1884):—Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte (1840; 4th ed. 1867; Engl. transl. by Beech, Edinburgh, revised and enlarged by Dr. H. B. Smith, N. Y. 1861, 2 vols.; new ed. with preface by Plumptre, Edinburgh, 1880, 3 vols.):—Grundzüge der Homiletik und Liturgik (1863). His largest work is the Kirchengeschichte von der ältesten Zeit bis zum 19. Jahrhundert (Leipsic, 1869-72, 7 vols.; that part which treats of the 18th and 19th centuries has been translated into English by Dr. Hurst, N. Y. 1869, 2 vols.):—Ecolampad und Myconius (Elberfeld, 1859):—Predigten (9 vols.). Besides, he contributed to Herzog's Encyclopædia and other theological reviews. See Eppeler, Karl Rudolf Hagenbach (Güterslohe, 1875); Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 487 sq. (B. P.)

Hager, E. W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of central New York, was a chaplain of the U. S. Navy. At one time he was rector of All-Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass., and subsequently of St. George's Church, Utica, N. Y. He died in Chicago, Ill., July 7, 1880. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881.

Hagioscope, a word used by English ecclesiastical writers to describe openings made through different parts of the interior walls of the church, generally on either side of the chancel arch, so as to afford a view of the altar to those worshipping in the aisles.

Hagiosidëron (ἁγιοσίδηρον, holy iron), one of the substitutes for bells still used in the East (also called τὸ σιδῆρον, κρούσμα). See ΣΕΜΑΤΡΟΝ. It usually consists of an iron plate, curved like the tire of a wheel, Hahn, Christoph Ulrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1805 at Württemberg.

In 1833 he was deacon, in 1859 pastor at Haslach, and died Jan. 5, 1881, at Stuttgart, doctor of theology and philosophy. He organized the Evangelical Society at Stuttgart, and took a great interest in the work of missions. He published, Der symbolischen Bücher der evangelisch-protestantischen Kirche Bedeutung und Schicksale (Stuttgart, 1833):—Geschichte der mittelalterlichen Ketzer, besonders im 11., 12. u. 13. Jahrhundert (1846-50, 3 vols.):—Handbüchlein für Kirchenälteste (1851). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 490; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 335. (B. P.)

Hahn, Hermann Joachim, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1679 at Grabow, in Mecklenburg. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1706 deacon at Dresden, and finally preacher there. He was stabbed by a fanatical Roman Catholic, May 21, 1726. He wrote De iis, quæ circa Receptum de Sabbatho Doctrinam, a non Neminè Nuper in Dubium Vocata sunt (Leipsic, 1703), besides a number of ascetical works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hahn, Johann Bernhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Königsberg in 1685, and died there, July 8, 1755, doctor and professor of theology. He wrote, De Appellatione Linguae Hebraeæ quæ dicitur Sancta (Königsberg, 1715):—De Cornubis Altaris Extremi:—De Fæsto Ebraeorum Purim:—Introductio ad Jesuam (1735):—Introductio ad Jeremiam (1736):—De Anno Ebraeorum Jubileo (1746):—De שלמים ad Num. xi, 31. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hahn, Johann Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 15, 1710, at Bayreuth. He studied at Jena and Halle, was preacher at Klosterbergen in 1743, and military chaplain at Berlin in 1746. In 1749 he was general superintendent, in 1762 member of consistory, and died at Aurich, in East Frisia, June 4, 1789. He published sermons and other ascetical writings. See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v. (B. P.)

Hahn, Johann Zacharias Herman, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 12, 1768, at Schneeberg, in Saxony. In 1800 he was deacon at his native place, in 1804 general superintendent and member of consistory at Gera. He died Nov. 22, 1826, doctor of theology, leaving, Politik, Moral, und Religion in Verbindung (Leipsic, 1797-1800, 2 vols.):—Geraisches Gesangbuch nebst Gebeten (Gera, 1822). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 168, 172, 177, 291, 296. (B. P.)

Hahn, Philipp Matthäus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 25, 1739, at Scharnhausen, in Württemberg. He studied at Tübingen, and died at Echterdingen, near Stuttgart, May 2, 1790. He was famous alike as a mechanic and theologian. A pupil of Oetinger and Bengel, he developed their theosophic system in his commentaries on different parts of the New Test., and his other writings. He published, Betrachtungen und Predigten über die Evangelien (Stuttgart, 1774; 5th ed. revised according to his manuscripts, 1847):—Erbauungsstunden über den Brief an die Epheser (published by his grandson, 1845):—Erbauungsstunden über den Brief an die Kolosser (1845):—Die Lehre Jesu und seiner Gesandten (1856):—Die Erklärung der Bergpredigt Jesu Christi (ed. by Flattl, 1859). Haï (or Haja) bar-Sherira, a Jewish rabbi, was born in 969 and died in 1035. He was the last gaon of Pumbeditha (q. v.), and was distinguished both for his personal virtues, and for an erudition which rendered him the most accomplished Jewish scholar of his time. He was a voluminous writer, and his works may be classified under the following heads: a. Talmudical;

b. Exegetical; c. Poetical; d. Cabalistic; and e. Miscellaneous. Passing over his Talmudical works, we mention his פרשן על התורה, or commentary on the Scriptures, not extant, but cited by some of the later commentators, as Ibn-Ezra, David Kimchi, and others. Sefer ham-measeph, ס' המצאס, originally called el-Châci, i. e. "the gathering," arranged alphabetically after the manner of many Arabic dictionaries, where the order is regulated by the last radical letter (e. g. רכד under daleth). In this dictionary, written in Arabic, which extended to the Biblical Chaldee also, the language of the Mishna, as well as a comparison of the Arabic, and sometimes even of the old Persian, was applied to the explanation of Hebrew words, as may be seen from the quotations of Ibn-Balaam (in his commentary on Numbers and Deuteronomy, preserved in Oxford, and where the dictionary of Haja is expressly called el-Châci, as in Tanchûm on Judges viii, 16), Ibn-Ezra (Deut. xxxii, 39; Isa. xlvii, 8; Amos i, 27; Ps. lviii, 10; Job iv, 15; vi, 10; xiii, 27; xxi, 32), David Kimchi (in his Book of Roots, also in his commentary on Isa. v, 5; xxxv, 14; Jer. xii, 6; Ezek. xix, 10), Rashi (on Judg. iv, 19; Hos. iii, 4), and others. This dictionary, as well as several other treatises, is not extant. Of his poetical works, we mention Musar huskel, מוסר השכל, also שניר מוסר, an exposition of the Pentateuch in Arabic verse (Constantinople, 1511; Latin transl. by Mercier, Paris, 1561; and Seidel, Leipsic, 1638); Shema Koli (שמע קולי), i. e. "Hear my voice," in the Spanish Ritual. See Rapaport, Biography of Hai, in Bikkura hu-Ittim, x, 79-95, xi, 90-92; Steinschneider, Jewish Literature, p. 78, 125; and *Catalogus Libr. Haioites, a Mohammedan sect, who profess to believe in Christ as well as in Mohammed. They hold many of the doctrines pertaining to Christ in common with orthodox Christians. They also believe that he will come again to judge the world in the same body which he had on earth; that he will destroy Antichrist, and reign forty years, at the close of which the world will be destroyed.

Haifa, a town in Palestine, just under the northern brow of Carmel, on the shore near the mouth of the Kishon, seems to be alluded to as (near) the western terminus of Zebulon (Gen. xlix, 18, דִּרְתָּ, chôph, "haven;" see Deut. i, 7, "side;" Josh. ix, 1, "coasts;" in both which passages the associated geographical terms are likewise technically used as proper names). In fact the present Arabic name (properly Chaypha) is but the Aramaean form (חַיפָא, the core) of the Heb. word (used in the above passages only). In the Talmud the old name reappears (חַיפָה, Cheyphah, the modern form; Grecized Ἡφά: see Reland, Palæst. p. 718). By the Greek and Roman writers, a place called Sycaminum (Συκαμινον, Hebraized שִׁכְמִינָה, Sekamnah, doubtless as a mart for figs) is mentioned as situated in Phœnicia, near the foot of Carmel (see Reland, p. 1024). In the Middle Ages the place was called Porphyrion by a strange mistake, the real town of that name being north of Sidon. It was also known as Cayphas, and the derivations given are very curious, either from Cephas or Caiaphas. Haifa is now a small but growing town of about two thousand inhabitants, built close upon the sandy beach, and surrounded by a shattered wall. The interior has a dreary look, which is not improved by the broken wall, and two or three rusty cannon lying about, half covered by rubbish. The only tolerable houses appear to be those of the consular agents, who abound here, as it is a frequent stopping-place, especially in soul weather, for the Levant steamers. There is a flourishing German colony in the neighborhood. The bay spreads out in front, its sandy beach sweeping gracefully along the plain to the low point on which the battlements of Acre are seen in the distance. In Haifa the Christians outnumber the Mohammedans; and there is a small community of Jews. Few remains of antiquity are visible except some tombs in the rocks; but the magnificence of former buildings is attested by the fragments of marble, granite, porphyry, and greenstone lying in the shingle on the beach. Two miles farther south-west are the remains of another large town, at the place called Tell es-Semak. There can scarcely be a doubt that this is the ancient Sycaminon, often confused with Haifa, but a place distinct and named from its sycamine fig-trees—a stunted specimen of which still stands near, with its little figs growing out of the stem. See Murray, Handbook for Syria, p. 862; Bildeker, Palestine, p. 348; Conder, Tent Work, i, 180; ii, 806. See CARMEL; KISHON.

Haight, BENJAMIN L., S.T.D., LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in the city of New York, Oct. 16, 1809. He graduated at Columbia College in 1828, and at the General Theological Seminary in the same city in 1831; was ordained that year, and became rector of St. Peter's Church in his native city; in 1834 of St. Paul's, Cincinnati; in 1837 of All-Saints, New York, and the same year likewise professor of pastoral theology in the General Theological Seminary, retaining the latter position until 1855, when he was associated with Trinity parish in the same city. He died there Feb. 21, 1879.

Hair, CHRISTIAN MODES OF WEARING. In the early Church the clergy sometimes wore long hair, but the custom of cutting it short, in distinction from pagans, soon became general, and at length shaving it altogether, even to a bare spot upon the crown, was introduced as a monkish habit. See TONSURE. Penitents cut their hair short as a sign of humiliation. Laymen usually wore long hair, but ringlets were regarded as a mark of effeminacy. Women were enjoined to wear long hair, but modestly arrayed. False hair was strongly denounced.

Hair-cloth has often been worn by ascetics as a means of mortifying the flesh, especially hair-shirts. In the early church penitents were sometimes clothed with it, and candidates for baptism were often examined standing upon a piece of hair-cloth. The dying and the dead were also covered with it.

Hairtites, a skeptical Mohammedan sect, who profess to doubt everything, and to hold their minds in constant equipoise, maintaining that it is impossible to distinguish truth from falsehood. Their usual reply in discussion is, "God knows, we do not." They are, however, scrupulous in their observance of Mohammedan laws and ceremonies, both civil and religious.

Haitz, FIDELIS, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1801 at Waldshut, Baden. In 1826 he was made a priest, in 1845 canon at Freiburg, and died June 9, 1873. He wrote Die Katholische Abendmahllehre (Mayence, 1872). (B. P.)

Hakluyt, RICHARD, an eminent English clergyman and historian, was born in London in 1553, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He died in 1616.

He published Divers Voyages touching the Discoverie of America, and the Islands Adjacent unto the Same (1582). He was prebendary of Westminster in 1605, and rector of Witheringset, in Suffolk. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Halak, MOUNT. Jebel Maderah, with which we may probably identify this mountain, lies on the south side of a wady of the same name, five miles south-west of the pass of Sufah, and is a round, isolated hill, with numerous blocks of stone on the base and summit, which Arab tradition ascribes to a destructive shower, as a punishment for inhospitality on the part of the ancient inhabitants (Palmer, Desert of the Exodus, p. 351).

Halal, what is permitted and sanctioned by the Mohammedan law.

Halcyon, a mythological term equivalent to rest or quiet, especially applied to any season of repose; a figure drawn from the so-called "halcyon days," which are a fortnight, one half before and the other after the winter solstice, during which the bird halcyon, or kingfisher, was fabled by the Greeks to brood, the sea remaining calm during the time of incubation. The myth originated in the classical story of Halcyone or Alcyone (Ἀλκυώνη), a daughter of Æolus and Enarete, or Ægiale, who married Ceyx, and lived so happily with him that the two compared themselves to Jupiter and Juno, and were punished for their presumption by being changed into birds. A more literal version of the story is that Ceyx having perished by shipwreck, Alcyone threw herself into the sea, and was metamorphosed into a kingfisher.

Halcyon Church, a denomination of Christians which is said to have arisen in the interior of the United States in 1802, who reject all creeds and confessions. They hold that there is but one person in the Godhead, and that the Father reveals himself in the personality of the Anointed. They deny eternal punishment, and believe in the annihilation of the wicked. They baptize only adults, and that in a peculiar manner. The persons to be baptized walk down into the water in procession, attended by the congregation, and accompanied with vocal and instrumental music. The ordinance is then administered in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. They devote their children to God, not by baptism, but by dedicating them in prayer, and placing them under the guardianship of the church members.

Hale, Benjamin, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Old Newbury, Mass., in 1797. He graduated with honor from Bowdoin College in 1818, and immediately became principal of the Saco Academy. In 1819 he entered the Andover Theological Seminary, and became a minister of the Congregational Church in 1822. The four years thereafter he spent as a tutor in Bowdoin. In 1827 he was called to Dartmouth College, N. H., as a professor, and held the office until 1835, when his professorship was abolished by the trustees of the college. He was ordained deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1828, and presbyter in 1831. After his return from a visit to the West Indies, whither he went for recuperation in the summer of 1836, he was elected to the presidency of Hobart College, in Geneva, N. Y. In 1852 he made a brief visit to Europe, and in 1856 resigned the presidency of the college, which he had held for twenty years, and afterwards lived in retirement in his native place. He died at Newburyport, Mass., July 15, 1863. Dr. Hale was the author of several scientific and professional works; but his reputation rests largely upon his work as an instructor. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. Oct. 1863, p. 507.

Hale, Bernard, D.D., master of Peterhouse, in Cambridge University, was born of religious parents, and received his early education in the public school of Hartford. Afterwards he removed to Westminster, thence to Peterhouse, of which he became a fellow,

After three or four years spent in his fellowship, his father's death transmitted to him a fair estate, and he resigned his office, and thereafter lived in retirement, chiefly in Norfolk, occupied with acts of devotion and beneficence. At the Restoration he was moved by a father of the Church to enter the priesthood. Immediately several preferments were offered him, some of which he accepted, but with the understanding that whatever emoluments he reaped therefrom should be dedicated to the service of God. He largely endowed the College of St. Peter. He died about 1663. See The (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, April, 1822, p. 208.

Hale, Enoch, a Congregational minister, brother of Nathan Hale, the Revolutionary martyr, and father of Hon. Nathan Hale, of the Boston Daily Advertiser, was born at Coventry, Conn., in 1754; graduated from Yale College in 1773; was ordained pastor of the Church in Westhampton, Mass., in 1779, and died Jan. 14, 1837. He was secretary of the Massachusetts General (Congregational) Association from 1804 to 1824. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 39; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 572.

Halenius, ENGELBERTUS, a Swedish prelate, son of Lars, was born Oct. 8, 1700, became bishop of Skara in 1753, held lively discussions with Swedenborg, and died Feb. 14, 1767, leaving some sermons, and a translation of Maimonides. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, & v.

Hales, Alexander. See ALEXANDER ALESIUS.

Hales, Stephen, D.D., F.R.S., a Church of England divine, was born Sept. 7, 1677. He entered Corpus Christi College in 1696, graduated A.B. in 1701, A.M. in 1703, and B.D. in 1711, greatly distinguishing himself meanwhile as a botanist, anatomist, and astronomer. In 1710 he was presented to the perpetual curacy of Teddington, Middlesex, and afterwards accepted the living of Porlock, Somersetshire, which he exchanged for the living of Farrington, Hampshire. On March 18, 1717, or 1718, he was elected a member of the Royal Society. In 1725 he published a valuable work on Vegetable Statics, and in 1738 a sequel to it, entitled Statistical Essays. He published a very popular work on Temperance; and in 1789 an 8vo volume entitled, Philosophical Experiments on Sea-water, Corn, Flesh, and other Substances. Dr. Hales also published several sermons and many papers in the Phil. Trans., etc. He died at Teddington, Jan. 4, 1761. See Masters, Hist. of E. C. C. C.: Annual Register, 1764, p. 42; Gentleman's Magazine, vol. lxxix; Butler, Life of Hildesley, p. 362; Lysons, Engravings; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, & v.

Hales, William, D.D., an Irish divine, was born at Cork, April 8, 1747, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became a fellow in 1769. Afterwards he served as a college tutor, and was very popular. In due time he was ordained deacon and priest; and in 1788 was appointed to the rectory of Killesandra, in Cavan, which he held till his death, Jan. 30, 1831. Dr. Hales was eminently faithful in all the duties pertaining to the ministerial office. He was amiable and unselfish, catholic in spirit, and blameless in life. His works are, Sonorum Doctrina (1778):—De Motibus Planetarum (1782):—Analysis Equationum (1784):—Observations on the Political Influence of the Doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy (1787-88):—The Rights of Citizens (1793):—The Scripture Doctrine of Political Government and Liberty (1794):—Methodism Inspected (1803-5):—Dissertations on the Prophecies Expressing the Divine and Human Character of our Lord (1808):—Analysis of Chronology (1809-14; his most important publication):—Origin and Purity of the Primitive Church in the British Isles (1818). See The Church of England Magazine, March, 1842, p. 147, 164; Memoir of Dr. Hales in the early numbers of the British Magazine; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, & v.

Halbul. The modern representative of this place,

Halbul, is described in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 305) as "a large stone village on a hill-top, with two springs and a well; also a fine spring below ('Hin ed-Dhirweh'). On the west is the mosque of Neby Yûnis, now in a partly ruinous condition, with a minaret. There are rock-cut tombs south of the village. The hills on the north have vineyards on them, and there are other tombs here also." These last are elsewhere more fully detailed (iii, 329).

Hall. For this locality Lieut. Conder accepts (Tent Work, ii, 377) the suggestion of the modern 'Alia, which is laid down on the Ordnance Map at nine and three quarter miles south-east of Fa-Zib (Ecdippa on the coast), and described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 170) as "a small square building of well-dressed stone, without draft, probably of the crusades; a large number of cisterns and traces of ruins." Among the latter are added, from Guérin, a description of several sepulchral chambers containing sarcophagi. The village of Malia, which lies half a mile north-west, is thought to represent the Meltoth of Josephus (Wars, iii, 3, 7), and the Mahalia or Chateau du Roi of the Teutonic knights (ibid. p. 149, 155).

Haliburton, George (1), a Scotch prelate, minister of Perth, was made bishop of Dunkeld by letters royal, Jan. 18, 1602, and died in 1664. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 98.

Haliburton, George (2), a Scotch prelate, was born in 1628, consecrated bishop of Brechin in 1678, and was translated to the see of Aberdeen in 1682, where he sat until the Revolution, in 1688. He died at his house of Denhead, in the parish of Coupar, in Angus, Sept. 29, 1715. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 134, 168.

Hall, Baynard Rush, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in Philadelphia in 1798. At the age of four he was left an orphan, and heir to a large estate, which through mismanagement never came into his possession. In Union College, where he graduated in 1820, his reputation for ability and scholarship was of the first rank. He was educated with a view to the law, but Providence turned his steps to the ministry. He graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1823, with bright promise of success, yet most of his life was spent in teaching. He was professor in Indiana University the same year, and taught in after-years in Trenton, Poughkeepsie, Newburgh, and Brooklyn. In 1846 he left the Presbyterian Church and joined the Reformed Church in America, but remained without charge. He died in Brooklyn, L. I., Jan. 23, 1863. Dr. Hall published in early life a valuable Latin Grammar. His volume entitled The New Purchase, or Seven Years' in the West, enjoyed great popularity. Later in life he published a work of acknowledged merit, entitled, Teaching, a Science. He contributed freely to the religious periodicals. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, & v.; Christian Intelligencer, 1863, (W. J. R. T.)

Hall, Charles, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born at Williamsport, Pa., June 23, 1799. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1824; studied two years in Princeton Theological Seminary; was ordained evangelist, March 25, 1832; became secretary of the American Home Missionary Society in 1827; and so continued until his death at Newark, N. J., Oct. 31, 1853. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 49; Nevin, Presb. Cyclop. & v.

Hall, David, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Yarmouth, Mass., Aug. 5, 1704. He graduated from Harvard College in 1724; in November, 1728, supplied the pulpit in Sutton, and was ordained pastor Oct. 15, 1729. His church shared in the great revival of 1740. He died at Sutton, May 8, 1789. Dr. Hall was an able and faithful minister. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 357.

Hall, Edwin, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born at Granville, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1802. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1826; studied theology privately; taught in Middlebury for some two years; was ordained at Hebron, Aug. 27, 1830; was successively pastor at Glenn's Falls and Sandy Hill for one year thereafter; at Bloomfield, N. J., the next year; over the First Congregational Church at Norwalk, Conn., for twenty-two years, and in 1854 became professor of Christian theology in Auburn Theological Seminary, a position which he retained until his death, Sept. 8, 1877. He published several works on baptism, and other ecclesiastical subjects. See Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 266.

Hall, George, an English prelate, was born in 1612, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He was the son of the bishop of Norwich, became prebendary of Exeter in 1639, archdeacon of Cornwall in 1641, bishop of Chester in 1662, and died Aug. 23, 1668. He published Sermons (1655-66). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hall, Gordon, Jr., D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Bombay, India, Nov. 4, 1823. After preparatory study at Ellington, Conn., he graduated from Yale College in 1843, and from Yale Divinity School in 1847. After a term of service as tutor in the college, he was ordained pastor of the Church in Wilton, Oct. 25, 1848, and June 2, 1852, became pastor of Edwards Church, Northampton, Mass., and so continued until his death at Binghamton, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1879. From 1870 he was a corporate member of the American Commissioners for Foreign Missions; was a trustee of Williston Seminary; and from 1878 was visitor of Andover Theological Seminary. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 20; Obituary Record of Yale College, 1880.

Hall, Henry, a learned English divine, was born in London in 1716, and was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow in 1738. In 1750 he was collated to the rectory of Harbledown, and soon after to the vicarage of Herne. He was presented to the vicarage of East Peckham in 1756, and was at the same time librarian of Lambeth. He died at Harbledown, Nov. 2, 1763. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Hall, James, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Carlisle, Pa., Aug. 22, 1744. When he was eight years old the family moved to North Carolina, and settled in Rowan County. He was blessed with pious parents, who taught him the truths of the gospel, and thus early he was brought into the Church. He graduated at Princeton in 1774; was licensed by the Presbytery of Orange in 1775; in 1778 became pastor at Bethany, and there labored faithfully and successfully until his death, July 25, 1826. Dr. Hall was active in the scenes of the Revolutionary war. He published a few Sermons which he preached on national occasions. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 381.

Hall, Jeremiah, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Swanser, N. H., May 21, 1805. He pursued his classical studies in the Brattleborough Academy, Vt., and his theological studies at the Newton Seminary, where he graduated in 1830. He was ordained Feb. 3, 1831, and had charge, successively, of churches in Fairfax, Westford, and Bennington; afterwards became one of the pioneer laborers of his denomination in what was then the territory of Michigan, and assisted in the organization of the Church at Kalamazoo, of which he was the pastor eight years (1835-43), and subsequently at Akron, O. (1843-45). For some time he was principal of the Norwalk Institute; then pastor in Granville (1851-53); president of Denison University (1858-63); and being a pastor for a time at Shell Rock, Ia., returned to Michigan, where he labored as occasion offered until his death, May 30, 1881. See Gen. Cat. of Newton Sem. p. 9. (J. C. S.) Hall, Samuel Read, LL.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Conydon, N. H., Oct. 27, 1795. He was educated at Kimball Union Academy, and was for some years a teacher; studied theology with Rev. Walter Chapin of Woodstock, Vt.; was ordained at Concord, March 5, 1823, and remained pastor there until 1880. During this time he established and taught the first normal school in the country; afterwards became principal of the Teacher's Seminary at Andover, Mass., for six years; then took charge of Plymouth Academy, N. H. (1836-39); was pastor at Craftsbury, Vt., fourteen years; at Browning twelve years, and thereafter, with the exception of two years, when he was acting pastor in Granby, remained without charge until his death, June 24, 1877. He was moderator of the General Convention of Vermont in 1859. He published, The Child's Assistant to a Knowledge of the Geography and History of Vermont (1827; revised ed. 1868);—Lectures on School Keeping (1829);—Lectures to Female School Teachers (1832);—The Child's Instructor (ed.) ;—The Arithmetical Manual (ed.);—Practical Lectures on Parental Responsibility, and the Religious Education of Children (1833);—A School History of the United States (ed.);—The Alphabet of Geology (1868). He assisted president Hitchcock in the geological survey of Vermont, and a part of section vii in the published Report on Northern Vermont was prepared by him. (W. P. S.) Hall, Thomas, a learned English Nonconformist divine, was born at Worcester, July 22, 1610, and educated at Balliol College; was master of the free school at King's-Norton, and curate of the place; and died April 13, 1665. Among his works are many controversial tracts, and commentaries on some parts of the Scriptures. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Hall, Timothy, an English prelate, who was consecrated bishop of Oxford in 1688, and died April 10, 1690, published some Sermons (1684, 1689). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hall, Westley, a minister of the Church of England, was one of the Oxford Methodists. Of his origin and early life nothing is known. He became one of Wesley's pupils at Lincoln College, Oxford, and joined the Methodists some time prior to Oct. 25, 1732. The date of his ordination must have been as early as 1734, as he then refused a living. He was at that time deemed a young man of "extraordinary piety, and love to souls." He married Wesley's sister, Martha, whom he afterwards abandoned, but after a very irregular and dissolute life, partly in the ministry, but chiefly as an open Deist, he became penitent, and died at Bristol, Jan. 8, 1776. See Tyerman, The Oxford Methodists, p. 386.

Hallahan, MARGARET MARY, foundress of the congregation of St. Catherine of Sienna, was born in London, Jan. 23, 1803. From her ninth to her thirtieth year she lived at service, part of the time in Belgium. In 1834 she received her habit as a member of the Dominican order. In April, 1842, she returned to England, and began teaching at Coventry. On Dec. 8, 1845, she laid the foundation at Coventry of the first English convent of Dominican nuns, which had a hard struggle there; although at Langton (1851), Stone (1853), Stoke-upon-Trent (1857), Rhyll (1864-66), and Torquay (1864) the establishments were successful. In October, 1858, mother Margaret, accompanied by Rev. Dr. Northcote, went to Rome, in order to obtain a definite settlement as to the future government of the increasing communities. It was deemed best that they should be united in a congregation under one superioress, with one novitiate, the whole to be under the government of the order of St. Dominic. She was appointed prioress-provincial of the newly formed congregation, which afterwards received the name of St. Catherine of Sienna. Her last work was the establishment of a house at Bow, London. She died at Stone, May 11, 1868. See Cath. Almanac (N. Y.), 1880, p. 85.

Hallam, ROBERT ALEXANDER, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born at New London, Conn., Sept. 30, 1807. After some time spent in teaching, he graduated from the General Theological Seminary of New York city in 1832; in August of the same year was ordained deacon in Hartford, Conn., and went to Meriden as rector of St. Andrew's Church, where he was ordained presbyter, Aug. 2, 1838. He returned to New London in January, 1835, as rector of St. James's Church, a position which he held until his death, Jan. 4, 1877. In 1836 he published a volume of Lectures on the Morning Prayer, and a volume of Sermons; also, in 1871, a course of Lectures on Moses, and in 1873 a History of his Parish Church. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1877.

Hallbauer, FRIEDRICH ANDREAS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in Thuringia, Sept. 13, 1692. He studied at Halle and Jena, was adjunctus of the philosophical faculty at Jena in 1721, professor of elocution in 1731, professor of theology in 1738, and died March 1, 1750. He wrote, De Luthero (Jena, 1717):—De Ecclesia Lutherana (ibid. 1717):—Commentationes Philologice in Quædam Loca Vet. Test. (ibid. 1721):—Disp. in Quædam Loca Novi Test. (ibid. eod.):—Vindiciæ Trium Doctorum N. Test. Luc. xxi. 34, Apoc. xiv. 13, Rom. ix. 5 (ibid. 1736):—Messias ex Virgine Exorturus (ibid. 1740):—Comment. Theol. in Apoc. ii. 2 (ibid. 1741):—Filius Dei Mundi Creator et Pater Hominum (ibid. 1746):—De Jesu sine Patre et Matre (ibid. 1748):—Christus Pulcherrimus Hominum Pat. xlv. 2 (ibid. 1749). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 4, 736; ii, 58; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Halley, Ebenezer, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scotland, Aug. 1, 1801. He graduated from Edinburgh University, pursued his studies in theology under Dick and Chalmers; was ordained pastor at Leith, where he labored for ten years, and then removed to America. His first settlement was in Salem, Washington County, N. Y., as pastor of the United Presbyterian Church. After serving this Church ten years, he was called to the pastorate of the Second Street Presbyterian Church, Troy, where he remained seven years, and then became pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, Albany. After two years he retired, in 1875, as its pastor emeritus. From 1878 he was chaplain of the State Senate. He died Oct. 31, 1881. Dr. Halley was unusually well read in classical and English literature, but his leading trait was his passion for preaching. For a great part of his ministry he followed the Scottish method of writing and memorizing; he was at the same time ready, as few are, to respond to a sudden demand for a speech or a sermon. See New York Observer, Nov. 10, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Halley, Robert, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Blackheath, near London, Aug. 13, 1796. He joined the Church at an early age, entered Homerton College in 1816, and five years later began his ministry at St. Neot's, Huntingdonshire. On the opening of Highbury College, in 1826, Mr. Halley was chosen resident and classical tutor, which post he occupied for thirteen years. In 1834 he published a reply to Rev. James Yates's letter, which letter defended Mr. Wellbeloved's Improved Version of the Scriptures, entitling his reply, The Improved Version truly Designated a Creed. This pamphlet soon attracted special attention by its vigor, keenness of criticism, depth of scholarship, and its able handling of the Greek text. It soon found its way across the Atlantic. In 1839 he accepted a call to the pastorate of Muzley Street Chapel, Manchester, and in 1857 received an appointment to the principalship of New College, from which he retired in 1872. He spent some months at Spring Hill College, supplying a vacant chair. He was an indefatigable preacher, travelling over the whole country. He died at Betworth Park, near Arundel, Aug. 18, 1876.

Dr. Halley wrote a History of Puritanism and Nonconformity in Lancashire:—Lectures on the Sacraments;—The Lord's Supper. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 367; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hallier, FRANÇOIS, a French prelate, was born at Chartres in 1595. He was doctor and professor of the Sorbonne, and syndic of the theological faculty at Paris. While at Rome in 1652 he was the main instrument of having the five propositions of Jansenius condemned. In 1656 he was made bishop of Cavillon, and died in 1659. He wrote, Defensio Ecclesiasticæ Hierarchiæ (Paris, 1632):—Monita ad Ordinandos et Ordinatos (1634):—De Sacris Electionibus et Ordinationibus ex Antiquo et Novo Ecclesiæ Usu (1636, 3 vols. fol.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 461; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Hallock, WILLIAM ALLEN, D.D., a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Moses Hallock, was born at Plainfield, Mass., June 2, 1794. He graduated in 1819 from Williams College, and in 1822 from Andover Theological Seminary; the next three years was agent for the New England Tract Society, and in 1825 was corresponding secretary of the American Tract Society, which he was largely instrumental in founding. He was ordained in Middlefield, Mass., Oct. 5, 1836, and became honorary secretary of the Tract Society in 1870, and so continued until the close of his life in New York city, Oct. 2, 1880. He was for several years editor of the American Messenger, and besides several tracts, wrote and published the following:—The Life of Harlan Page:—The Venerable Mayhews:—Life of Rev. Moses Hallock:—Life of Rev. Dr. Justin Edwards. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 24.

Halloix, PIERRE, a Jesuit of Liege, was born there in 1572, and died July 30, 1856. He is the author of Illustrium Eccl. Orient. Scriptorum Vitæ et Documenta (Douay, 1633, 2 vols. fol.):—Vita et Documenta S. Justinii (1622):—Origenes Defensus, S. Origenis Vitæ, Virtutes et Documenta Libris IV (Liege, 1648). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 854, 897, 899; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hallowe'en, the Scotch term for the eve of the feast of All-Saints (q. v.).

Hallowmas. See ALL-SAINTS' DAY.

Hallum (or Halom), ROBERT DE, an English prelate of the first part of the 15th century, was of the blood royal of England, says Pits (De Scripturis Britannicis, an. 1410), but in what way is not said. He was educated in Oxford, became chancellor of that university in 1408, afterwards archdeacon of Canterbury, bishop of Salisbury, and June 6, 1411, was made cardinal. He was one of the three prelates sent to represent the English clergy in the Councils of Pisa and Constance, in which last service he died at Goteby Castle, in 1417. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 323.

Hallymote (1) a sacred or holy court, presided over by an ecclesiastic; (2) a visitation by a bishop of some particular parish or church.

Halsey, Abram Oothout, D.D., a Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born in New York, Nov. 3, 1798. He graduated from Union College in 1822, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1827; became pastor at North and South Hampton in 1829, a position which he retained until a few months before his death at Sweetsborough, N. J., Aug. 23, 1867. He was a man of childlike, catholic spirit, and possessed a peculiar unction in prayer. He was eminent as a preacher. His theology was that of moderate Calvinism, and he held it with genuine charity towards all who differed from him. He was also a decided premillenarian, and was thoroughly versed in the literature of that question.

See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Halsey, Job Foster, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Schenectady, N. Y., July 12, 1800. He received his preparatory education at Newburgh Academy; graduated from Union College in 1819; taught with his father at Newburgh; studied theology with his brother, and was licensed by the Presbytery of North River, May 1, 1823; spent from 1823 to 1826 at Princeton Seminary; was ordained by the Presbytery of New Brunswick at Freehold, N. J., June 14, 1826, and on the same day installed pastor of the Old Tennant Church in that place, where he labored until May 5, 1828; was agent in New Jersey for the American Bible Society in 1828 and 1829; in Albany, N. Y., in 1829 and 1830, for the American Tract Society, and in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1830 and 1831, in the Sunday-school cause. He went to Allegheny City, and was installed pastor of the First Church of that city, July 1, 1831, and labored there until released, April 23, 1836. He was a professor in the Marion Manual Labor College in Missouri, in 1835 and 1836; principal of Raritan Seminary for Young Ladies, at Perth Amboy, N. J., from 1836 to 1848; was installed pastor at West Bloomfield, now Montclair, Jan. 8, 1852, where he remained until 1856; was installed pastor of the First Church of Norristown, Pa., May 11, 1856, where he labored twenty-four years. Here he died, March 24, 1882. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 12.

Halsey, Luther, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Schenectady, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1794. After receiving a preparatory education, he graduated from Union College in 1812; then entered upon the study of medicine, but soon relinquished it for theology, and in 1816 was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Blooming Grove, Orange Co., N. Y., where his labors were blessed in the ingathering of many souls. In 1829 he was appointed professor of theology in the Allegheny Theological Seminary, and in 1837 professor of ecclesiastical history and Church polity in the Auburn Theological Seminary. In 1844 he again took charge of the Blooming Grove Church, and in 1847 accepted the chair of Church history in the Union Theological Seminary. For several of the last years of his life he occupied a retired relation. He died in New York, Oct. 29, 1880. See New York Observer, Nov. 11, 1880; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 279. (W. P. S.)

Hamadryads were certain rural deities in the pagan theogony, or nymphs of the woods, whose fate depended on particular trees with which they were associated.

Hambræus, Jonas, preacher to the Swedish ambassador at Paris, and professor of Oriental languages there, was born in 1588. He studied at Upsala, Greifswald, and Rostock, was professor of Hebrew at Upsala, accompanied some noblemen on their travels in 1626, and settled at Paris as professor of Oriental languages. In 1635 he became preacher to Hugo Grotius, and died in 1665. He wrote, Diap. de Accentibus Hebræis (Greifswald, 1616); — Institutio Hebraica Compensiosa (Rostock, 1618); — Loci Theologici Latino-Suedici (Stockholm, 1622). He translated into Swedish the Ethica Christiana of Dares (Rostock, 1618); also Erasmus's Παράκλησις ad Christianos Omnes, ut Libenter Audiant et Legant Verbum Dei (1620). See Hambræus, Diap. I. et II. de Meritis ac Fatis Jonæ Hambræi (Upsala, 1743, 1749); Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Stiernmann, Bibl. Suiogothica, p. 313; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hamburg, a noted city of Germany. When the reformation was introduced there in 1529, the city adopted the Church constitution prepared by Bugenhagen. This Kirchenordnung provided that all non-Lutherans should be excluded from the city and its territory. In 1567 members of the Anglican Church, in 1605 members of the Dutch Reformed Church, and in 1648, by the peace of Westphalia, Roman Catholics, were allowed to live in the city, but they could not become citizens, nor could they celebrate worship in public. These latter restrictions were removed by the new civil constitution of Sept. 28, 1860. The Lutheran Church is governed by a synod consisting of fifty-three members, of whom sixteen are clergymen, thirty-five laymen, and two senators, and by an ecclesiastical council consisting of nine members, viz. four laymen, three ecclesiastics, and two senators. The ecclesiastical council has the executive power, and carries out the resolutions of the synod, which meets every five years. In the year 1877, Hamburg, with a territory comprising an area of about eight square miles, had a population of 406,014, of which about eighty-nine per cent. were Lutherans, 13,796 were Jews, 7771 were Roman Catholics, and 5585 belonged to other evangelical denominations. See Plitt - Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Statistik des hamburgischen Staates (Hamburg, 1878, part vi). (B. P.)

Hamel, Jean Baptiste du, a French philosopher and theologian, was born in 1624 at Vire, in Normandy. In 1663 he was chancellor at Bayeux, in 1666 secretary of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and died Aug. 6, 1706. He published, Biblia Latina Vulg. etc. (Paris, 1706 fol.); — Theologia Speculativa et Practica (1691); — Theologia Clericorum Seminarius Accommodata Summarium (1694, 5 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 60, 291; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hamelin, a French prelate of the 12th century, was the nephew of Odon, dean of St. Martin of Tours, and a scholastic of that church from the year 1186. He was elected bishop of Le Mans in December, 1190, and consecrated by pope Celestine III at Rome in the beginning of the following year. He established in all the parishes of his diocese the capitulary jurisdiction, and being devoted to the interests of the king of England, refused to render it to the French king. Upon this the revenues of the bishop were confiscated by the latter, who ordered also the suspension of the divine service in the Church of Le Mans. These troubles were settled in 1204. Hamelin abdicated about the middle of Lent, 1214, and died probably Nov. 1, 1218. See Hoefler, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hamelsveld, Ysbrand van, a former professor of theology at Utrecht, who died May 9, 1812, at Amsterdam, is the author of Aardrijksde des Bijbels, mit Karten (Amsterdam, 1790, 6 vols.; Germ. transl. Biblische Geographie, übersetzt mit Anmerkungen, von Rudolf Jähniich, Hamburg, 1798 - 96); — Allgemeine Kerkelyks Geschiedenis der Christenen (Harlem, 1799 sq., 23 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 149, 537; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 360. (B. P.)

Hamet, a Mohammedan prophet, who began to teach on the western coast of Africa in 1792. He rejected the ancient doctrine of the Caliphs, introduced certain modifications into the Moslem faith, and thus gathered a number of followers. Hamet was finally killed, and his followers soon dispersed.

Hamill, Hugh, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Norristown, Pa., Feb. 28, 1810. He received his preparatory education at Norristown Academy; graduated from Rutgers College, N. J., in 1827; entered Princeton Theological Seminary in November of the same year, and left in April, 1830; then spent the winter of 1831-32 at Yale Divinity School; was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, April 30, 1830; ordained an evangelist at Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 31, 1832; became stated supply at Black Rock (now the Breckenridge Street Church, Buffalo), from Nov. 1, 1830, until Nov. 1, 1838; began to preach at Elkton, Md., and Pencader Church, Del., where he was installed pastor by New Castle Presbytery, Jan. 21, 1834; in 1837 became connected with the High School at Lawrenceville, N. J., where he remained thirty-three years; but about 1870 was obliged to withdraw from the work of teaching on account of impaired hearing, and in 1873 took up his residence at Newark, Del., where he spent his remaining years in study, and died Aug. 1, 1881. He was a man of fine scholarship, and his life was pure, noble, and useful. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 20.

Hamilton, Alfred, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Culpepper Court-House, Va., May 1, 1805. He was educated at Jefferson College, Pa., graduated from the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, in 1830; was licensed by the Ohio Presbytery, and commissioned by the Board of Domestic Missions to make a tour through Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. In 1835 he accepted a call to the old church of Fagg's Manor, Chester Co., Pa., in New Castle Presbytery, where he remained for twenty-three years as pastor. He died in Chicago, Ill., Sept. 13, 1867. He was for some years associate editor of the Northwestern Presbyterian. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 103.

Hamilton, David, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of Argyle in 1506. He was witness to the grant which James, earl of Arran, made to James Hamilton, his son, of the lands of Finnart, in 1507. He also held in commendam the two abbeys of Dryburgh and Glenluce, and obtained the abbey of Sandal, in Kintyre, to be annexed to his episcopal see. He was still bishop in 1520. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 289.

Hamilton, David Henry, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Canajoharie, N. Y., Oct. 29, 1813. He graduated from Union College in 1839; studied and practiced law in Amsterdam; graduated from the Auburn Theological Seminary in 1841; entered upon his ministry in 1843 in Trumansburg; subsequently was pastor of three other churches, in New Haven, Conn., Jacksonville, Ill., and Ripley, O. There was an interval of two years between his labors in New Haven and Jacksonville, which was spent in study at the University of Berlin, Germany. He died at Kingsborough, N. Y., July 4, 1879. As a preacher and pastor he was highly prized. He toiled incessantly, and seemed to rest in labors that would utterly break other men down. In these efforts hundreds and thousands were converted, and the churches quickened and strengthened. His Autology, an inductive system of mental science, a large octavo of seven hundred pages, published in 1873, is a monument not less to his industry than his mastery of philosophy, and his remarkable powers of independent, bold, sharp thinking. He had spent years in the preparation of a second volume, which he left unfinished, in which the system of theology was to be elaborated in accordance with his mental science. See Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 273. (W. P. S.)

Hamilton, Gavin, a Scotch prelate, was first a minister at Hamilton, and afterwards promoted to the see of Galloway in 1606, and because the revenue was small, king James gave him the abbey of Dundrennan. He was consecrated bishop of Brechin, Oct. 20, 1610, according to the form of the Church of England. He had also a grant from the priory of Whitem annexed to the see of Galloway. Here he sat until his death, in 1614. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 280.

Hamilton, Henry Parr, an English divine, son of Dr. Alexander Hamilton of Edinburgh, was born there in 1794, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated with high honors in 1816. He held a living for several years in Yorkshire, and in 1850 was made dean of Salisbury. He died Feb. 9, 1880. Dean Hamilton published, The Principles of Analytical Geometry:—Analytical System of Conic Sections:—Remarks on Popular Education:—The Education of the Lower Classes, and several sermons.

Hamilton, James (1), a Scotch prelate, was reader at Petyn, in the diocese of Moray, and afterwards rector of Spot, in East Lothian. He was elected to the see of Glasgow in 1547. In 1558 he was put into the see of Argyle, and about the same time got the sub-deanery of Glasgow in commendam. It is not certain whether he was ever consecrated a bishop. He became a Protestant at the Reformation. In 1565 he granted a charter to Alexander Stewart. He was still in the see in 1576. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 289.

Hamilton, James (2), a Scotch bishop, was born in August, 1610, and ordained minister at Cambusnethan in 1634. He was then called to London by the king, and consecrated bishop of the see of Galloway in 1661. He died in 1674. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 281.

Hamilton, James (3), M.D., an intimate friend and helper of John Wesley, was born at Dunbar, Scotland, in November or December, 1740. When about the age of eighteen he was appointed surgeon to the Isis man-of-war, and it was while that ship was off Malta that Dr. Hamilton became religious. His health declining after four years' service, he settled down in his native town as surgeon and apothecary, where his eminent success soon admitted him as a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh. After a number of years he removed to Leeds, and subsequently, on invitation of his friends, to London, where he became physician to the London Dispensary. He followed his profession until his death, April 21, 1827. Dr. Hamilton joined the Methodist society on his return to Dunbar, and ever after continued an earnest and devoted member of the community he loved. His Christian character was peculiarly excellent. He co-operated with his friend Wesley, and his advice was sought for by the Methodist preachers, by whom he was much beloved. See Wesl. Meth. Mag. July and August, 1829; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 503.

Hamilton, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was made abbot of Paisley in 1525, and went to France to pursue his studies. In 1543 he was made keeper of the privy seal, and soon after lord treasurer. He became bishop of St. Andrews the same year, and in 1545 was translated to the see of Dunkeld. Under the regency of the earl of Moray, he was accused of treason, and hanged publicly, April 1, 1570. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 38, 95.

Hamilton, John (2), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Dunkeld, Oct. 19, 1686. He survived the Revolution, and died one of the ministers of Edinburgh, and sub-dean of his majesty's chapel-royal. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 100.

Hamilton, Robert, D.D., a minister of the Church of Scotland, was a son of Dr. William Hamilton, for many years a professor in Edinburgh University, and was born and educated within its walls. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and served the Church of Cramond, near by, and Lady Yestor's Old Greyfriars' Church in the same city. In 1754 he was elected to the chair of divinity in the university, where he labored until failing health caused the election of Dr. Andrew Hunter as his assistant, and afterwards as his successor. Dr. Hamilton retired soon after this election, in 1779, from active work, and died April 3, 1787. He was moderator of the assembly in 1754 and 1760. See Annals of the Church of Scotland, 1739-66, ii, 386.

Hamilton, William, a veteran Irish Wesleyan minister, was born near Newry in 1761. He became a member of a Methodist society at the age of fourteen, in 1788 received an appointment to the Brookboro' Circuit, and for twenty-nine years labored for the evangelism of Ireland. He was the first preacher who encouraged Ouseley's extraordinary plan of labor, inducing the conference to sanction it, and to enroll the missionary on their minutes. Hamilton had superior talents; he was an effective preacher, singularly calm himself, but as singularly powerful over the passions of his hearers. His thoughts were original and often humorous; his arguments ingenious and irresistible; his style simple; the effect of his discourses sometimes magical. He worked with his might. Ouseley declared that he never saw a more indefatigable laborer. Broken down in the labors of the ministry, he was compelled to retire from the active service in 1816. He was one of the eight preachers who received a rebuke of the Irish Conference for the administration of the Lord's Supper. He died Oct. 8, 1848. See Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, iii, 420, 435; Minutes of the British Conference, 1844; Smith, Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism, iii, 24, 25.

Hammer, CHRISTOPH, professor of Oriental languages at Jena, who died March 19, 1597, is the author of Pedagogus Linguarum Quinque Orientalium (Jena, 1595). See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 360; Steinschneider, Bibl. Handbuch, s. v. (B. P.)

Hammerschmid, JOHANN FLORIAN, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born May 4, 1652, in Bohemia. He was chaplain at Budweis, rector of the archiepiscopal seminary at Prague, and died there in 1737, dean and apostolical protonotary. He wrote, Magnalia S. Andree (Prague, 1685);—Magnalia S. Joannis Baptiste (ibid. 1690);—Magnalia S. Joannis Evangeliste (ibid. eod.);—Magnalia S. Matthie (ibid. 1700). See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 566, 567. (B. P.)

Hammon (Josh. xix, 28). Tristram thinks (Bible Places, p. 238) that this is one of the mounds "just north of Alma [see UMMAN], bearing the name of Hamûn;" but no such name appears on the Ordinance Map, nor in the accompanying Memoirs. The Hamûl which has been thought to be the best modern representative of Hammon is laid down on the Map at one and a half miles north-east of Nakmah, as Ain-Hamul; which is described in the Memoirs (i, 157) as "a large perennial spring of good water, irrigating gardens and turning a mill near its source; a plentiful supply." No ancient ruins are noted in the immediate vicinity. Trelawney Saunders locates it (Map of the O. T.) at Khurbet el-Hima, ten miles south-east of Tyre, which consists simply of "large heaps of stones" (Memoirs, i, 176) without any special marks of antiquity.

Hammond, Charles, LL.D., a Congregational minister, son of Dr. Shubael Hammond, was born at Union, Conn., June 15, 1818. He studied at Monson Academy, and graduated from Yale College in 1839; entered Andover Theological Seminary, and from 1842 to 1844 attended Yale Divinity School. In the meanwhile (1839-41), he was principal of the Monson Academy, and afterwards again occupied that position (1844-1859). From this time till 1863 he was connected with the Lawrence Academy, at Groton, and then was a third time chosen principal of the Monson Academy, a position which he retained until his death, Nov. 7, 1878. He was ordained an evangelist, Oct. 5, 1855, at Tolland, Conn. He was the author of many educational articles, and published several pamphlets. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 43.

Hammond, William, an English Calvinistic Methodist minister, was born at Battle, Sussex, Jan. 6, 1719. In 1745 he published a volume of original Psalms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs. Among these were several which are found in many of our modern collections: Lord, we come before thee now; Would you win a soul to God? and Awake and sing the song. Mr. Hammond was an educated man, having been connected with St. John's College, Cambridge. Later in life he joined the Moravian Brethren, and, upon his decease, Aug. 19, 1783, was interred in their burying-ground in London. He was the author of a volume entitled The Marrow of the Gospel. See Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 163. (J. C. S.)

Hamul, the angel who was regarded by the ancient Persians as the inspector of the heavens.

Hamza, in the mythology of the Druses, was a prophet of the Egyptian god Hakem, whom the Druses call their supreme deity. Hamza is an honored hero. Seven times he has come from heaven to the earth. The sacred books of the Druses call Hamza the guide of the compass, the straight road to the only salvation, the establisher of truth, the Imam of all times, the holy spirit, the final cause of all causes. He was the highest Nezir of the god Hakem. He was so highly esteemed by the latter that he ordered all angels to worship him, which they all did except Sheitun (Satan), and for this reason the latter was damned. The four other prophets, Ismael, Mahommed, Selami, and Ali, are called Hamza's wives.

Hanap, a mediæval term for a drinking-cup.

Hanau (or Hena), SOLOMON, a Jewish writer of the 18th century, is the author of, ס' בנין שלמה, a large Hebrew grammar (Frankfort, 1708);—ס' יסוד, חזקוני, another grammatical work (Amsterdam, 1730);—צחור חזקוני, also a Hebrew grammar (Berlin, 1733, and often);—ס' שערי הורה, a compendium of Hebrew grammar (Hamburg, 1718);—שערי זמרה, a treatise on the Hebrew accents (1718, 1762);—טחברה, שער הפלה, a grammatical commentary on the daily prayers (1725). His works were opposed by different Jewish writers, against whom he wrote קירי קירות אדירים and עכביש (Fürth, 1744). He left a number of philological works in MS. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 379 sq.; Steinschneider, Bibl. Handbuch, s. v.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 122. (B. P.)

Hanbalites, one of the four orthodox sects of the Mohammedans, which derived its name from Ahmed Ibn-Hanbal, a devout follower of the prophet. He maintained the eternity of the Koran, and thus brought upon himself the vengeance of the caliph al-Motassim, who held that the Koran was created. Hanbal was imprisoned and scourged; but he continued to propagate his opinions until his death, which occurred about the middle of the 8th century. The Hanbalites prevail principally in the wilder districts of Arabia, their austere habits being well suited to the simple manners of the Bedouin.

Hanckel, CHRISTIAN, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was rector, for several years, in Charleston, S. C., and in 1858 in Radcliffborough. At this time he was president of the standing committee of his diocese, a position to which he was re-elected several successive years. In 1866 he retired from the active duties of the ministry, and in 1867 was elected honorary rector of the same church. He died in 1870. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1871, p. 118.

Hand, AARON HICKS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Albany, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1811. He graduated from Williams College in 1831, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1837; was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick the same year, and ordained by the Presbytery of Flint River, Ga., in 1841. He became stated supply of the churches of Roswell and Marietta in 1838, and remained until 1841. He then became pastor of the Church in Berwick, Pa., and accepted a call to the Church of Greenwich, N. J. His last charge was the Palisades Presbyterian Church, N. Y., where he remained eight years, and was in consequence of infirmity compelled to resign. His labors in all the churches of which he was pastor were attended with revivals. He died at Easton, Pa., March 8, 1880. See New York Observer, March 18, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Handcock, WILLIAM JOHN, noted for his labors in connection with the French Wesleyan work under the British Conference, was born in the island of Jersey in 1813. He was converted in his nineteenth year, entered the ministry in 1838, and for five years labored in the south of France. His first circuit extended from the Alps to the Mediterranean. In 1841 he was made superintendent of the work in the Upper Alps, and his labors in those dreary regions were the most fatiguing and self-denying, and contributed to the shortening of his days. The eighteen years following 1849 were spent in the French circuits in the Channel Islands. Besides pastoral work he did much in the educational and literary line. The Wesleyan day-schools were established through his efforts, and for several years he edited the French Methodist Magazine, a periodical of large circulation and influence. In conjunction with one of his brethren, he prepared the new French Hymn-Book, completed in 1867. Failing health compelled him to seek a change of climate, and the same year he went to Birmingham. In 1868 he was appointed to the Uxbridge and Rickmansworth circuits, and died at the latter place, March 25, 1870. Handcock was studious, pious, and of unassuming manners, evangelical as a preacher, and conscientious in the discharge of his duties. He wrote, Sommaire des Lois Organiques et Règles de Discipline des Églises Méthodistes d'Angleterre (Guernsey, 1858, 18mo), and an Exposition of the First Epistle of St. John (Lond. 1861, 8vo). His biographer, in the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine (May, 1876, art. i) (T. J. McCartney), characterized the latter work as learned and original. See also Minutes of the British Conference, 1870, p. 29.

Handel, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian, who died at Neisse, Silesia, Sept. 6, 1841, a superintendent, is the author of, Evangelische Christenlehre (11th ed. Breslau, 1852);—Materialien zu einem vollständigen Unterricht im Christenthum (3d ed. Halle, 1840);—Kurzer Inbegriff der christlichen Religionslehre (Neisse, 1841);—Althessia oder Liturgien für gebildete Gemeinden (1824). See Winer, *Handbuch der theol. Handy, ISAAC WILLIAM KER, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington, D. C., Dec. 14, 1815. A part of his early education was received from Salmon P. Chase, afterwards chief-justice of the United States. He graduated from Jefferson College, Pa., in 1834; entered Princeton Theological Seminary in November, 1835, and studied there between one and two years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of the District of Columbia, April 8, 1838; ordained by Lewes Presbytery, Nov. 22, 1838; and installed as pastor of the churches of Buckingham, Blackwater, and Laurel. He next went to Missouri to labor as a missionary, and met with much success at Warsaw and vicinity. He afterwards served the churches at Odessa, Port Penn, and Middletown, Del., where he labored two years. From 1853 for two years he was missionary on the eastern peninsula of Maryland. His next pastorate was at Portsmouth, Va. He was installed pastor of Augusta Church, in Virginia, May 18, 1870. From the division of the Church in 1861, Dr. Handy adhered throughout the rest of his life to the Southern General Assembly. During the civil war he was a prisoner for fifteen months at Fort Delaware in 1863-64. He died June 14, 1878. Dr. Handy was many years a trustee of Delaware College at Newark, Del., a member of the Presbyterian Historical Society, of the American Scientific Association, and of the Maryland Historical Society. He had a wide reputation for accurate research. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 37.

Hane, PHILIPP FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 2, 1696, at Belitz, in Mecklenburg. He studied at Rostock and Jena, was in 1724 librarian at Kiel, in 1780 doctor and professor of theology, and in 1788 member of consistory. He died Sept.

27, 1774, leaving, Leben und Thaten Ignatii Loyold (Rostock, 1721, 1725);—De Concilio Lateranensibus (Kiel, 1726);—De Sacrorum Christianorum in Cimbria Primordiis (1728);—De Melanchthonis Moderatione in August. Confess. Negotio Conspicuum (1730);—Historia Critica August. Confessionis (1732);—Sermones de Tempore (1766). Haneberg, DANIEL BONIFACIUS, bishop of Spire, was born June 16, 1816, at Tanne, Bavaria. He studied at Munich, was priest in 1839, and commenced his academic career in 1840. In 1850 he entered the newly founded Benedictine monastery of St. Bonifacius, at Munich, and was made abbot in 1854. In 1861 he went to Algiers and Tunis, and in 1864 to Jerusalem. In 1868 he was called to Rome as consulor of the Romish congregation for Oriental rites, and at the same time to take part in the preparations for the Vatican Council. Like many others, he was at first opposed to the dogma of papal infallibility, but finally yielded to it. In 1872 Haneberg was appointed bishop of Spire, and died May 31, 1876. He published, Ueber die in einer münchener Handschrift aufbehaltene arabische Psalmenübersetzung des Rabbi Saadia Gaon (Ratisbon, 1841);—Religiöse Alterthümer der Hebräer (1844; 2d ed. 1869);—Einleitung in das Alte Testament (1845);—Geschichte der biblischen Offenbarung (1850; 3d ed. 1863);—Renan's Leben Jesu beleuchtet (1864);—Zur Erkenntnislehre von Ibn Sina und Albertus Magnus (Munich, 1866);—Canones S. Hippolyti Arabice e Codicibus Romanis (1870). From his manuscript Schegg published Evangelium nach Johannes übersetzt und erklärt (1878-80, 2 vols.). See Schegg, Erinnerungen an Haneberg (Munich, 1877). (B. P.)

Haner, GEORG, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 8, 1672. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1736 superintendent in Transylvania, and died July 10, 1759, leaving, De Subjecto Philosophiæ Moralis (Wittenberg, 1691);—De Lustratione Hebræorum (1692);—De Litterarum Hebraicarum Origine (eod.);—De Punctorum Hebræorum cum Litteris Coæritate (1693);—Historia Ecclesiarum Transylvanicarum a Primis Populorum Origibus ad Hæcque Tempora (Frankfort, 1694). Hanifees, an orthodox Mohammedan sect, who derived their name from their founder, Abu-Hanifa, the first Moslem casuist, who flourished in the 8th century. He learned the principles and traditions of Mohammedanism from those who had lived in the time of the prophet, and was a lifelong partisan of Ali (q. v.), although now he is regarded as the chief authority of the Sunnites (q. v.). He was imprisoned for refusing to accept the office of judge, and is said to have been poisoned for resisting the execution of a severe edict against the citizens of Mosul in 767. The Hanifees are usually called the followers of reason, because they are guided chiefly by their own judgment in giving decisions, while the other Mohammedan sects adhere more closely to the letter of tradition. This is now the established faith of the Turks and Tartars, but it has branched into numerous subdivisions.

Hänlein, HEINRICH CARL ALEXANDER VON, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Anspach, July 11, 1762. He studied at Erlangen and Göttingen, was in 1788 professor of theology at Erlangen, in 1808 member of consistory at Munich, in 1818 director of the Protestant superior consistory, and died at Esslingen, May 15, 1829. He wrote, Observationes ad loca Quædam Vet. Test. (Göttingen, 1788);—Einleitung in die Schriften des Neuen Testaments (Erlangen, 1794, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1801-1803);—Symbolæ Criticæ ad Interpretationem Vaticanorum Habacuci (ibid. 1795);—Commentarius in Epistolam Judæ (ibid. 1795-96);—De Lectoribus Epistolæ Pauli ad Ephesios (ibid. 1797):—Curæ in Libros Novi Fœderis (1798–1804, 7 parts):—Lehrbuch der Einleitung in die Schriften des Neuen Testaments (1802):—Epistolæ Judæ, Græce (1804). Hanna, Thomas, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born Oct. 4, 1799. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1818; was licensed by the Chartiers Presbytery in 1820; in 1821 became pastor at Cadiz, O.; in 1850 at Washington, Pa.; and died Feb. 9, 1864. As a preacher he was clear and methodical, though his doctrines and mode of treating them was not according to the modern school. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 205.

Hanna, William, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, son of Rev. Dr. Samuel Hanna, was born at Belfast, Ireland, in 1808. He received his literary and theological education at the University of Glasgow, Scotland, and entered the ministry in 1835, in which he spent a laborious and useful life, and died May 25, 1882. He wrote the biography of Dr. Chalmers, and also of Wycliffe, and an interesting history of the Huguenots, besides several other valuable works.

Hannapes, Nicolas DE, a French prelate, the last of the Latin patriarchs of Jerusalem, was born at Hannapes, in the Ardennes mountains, about 1525. At the age of twelve he joined the Dominicans at Rheims, afterwards studied at the convent of St. Jacques, Paris, was ordained priest, and taught theology. He was called to Rome by pope Innocent V, where he exercised the functions of grand-penitentiary, later was selected by Nicolas IV as patriarch of Jerusalem, and in 1289 apostolic legate in Syria, Cyprus, and Armenia. Jean d'Acre was taken by the Turks, and the mission was broken up. Hannapes died in 1291, leaving, Virtutum Viktorumque Exemplum, ex Sacris Literis Excerptum (Tübingen, 1533):—Dieta Salutis Nicolai de Hannapis, ardi. Prædicat. (Mayence, 1609):—Nicolai Patriarchæ Hierosolym. Typicon de Jejuniis Græcorum, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hannathon. For this site Tristram suggests (Bible Places, p. 253) Deir Hannan, meaning doubtless what is laid down on the Ordinance Map as Deir Hanna, three miles south-west of Mughar (the locality which we had conjectured), and thus described in the Memoirs (i, 364): "High walls all round the village, which is built of stone. The walls have round towers, and were built by Dhaker el-'Amr's son, S'ad el-'Amr. It is situated on the top of a high ridge, and contains about four hundred Christians. It is surrounded by olive groves and arable land. Water is obtained from cisterns and an old paved birkeh [pool] to the north of the village." No ancient remains are noted in the immediate vicinity. Mr. Trelawney Saunders coincides with this location (Map of the O. T.). Lieut. Conder, however, prefers (Tent Work, ii, 337) Kefr 'Anân, which is too far north, being five miles south-west of Sofed, and equally destitute of any traces of antiquity (Memoirs, i, 203).

Hannauer, Georg, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1817. In 1843 he was made priest, in 1851 professor of philosophy at the Lyceum in Ratisbon, and died Jan. 11, 1868. He wrote Ueber den Ursprung der Ideen nach Thomas von Aquin (Ratisbon, 1855). (B. P.)

Hanneken, Menno, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born March 1, 1595, at Blaxen, in Oldenburg. He studied at Giessen, was in 1619 conrector at Oldenburg, in 1626 professor at Marburg, in 1646 superintendent at Lübeck, and died Feb. 17, 1671. He wrote, Scutum Veritatis Catholicæ contra Thomam Henrici:—Synopsis Theologicæ:—Expositio Epistolæ Pauli ad Ephesios:—Doctrina de Justificatione Hominis coram Deo:—Grammatica Hebræica:—Quattuor Disput. de

Hanneken, Philip Ludwig, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, son of Menno, was born at Marburg, June 5, 1637. He studied at different universities, was in 1663 professor of elocution at Giessen, in 1668 doctor and professor of theology there, in 1693 professor at Wittenberg, and died Jan. 16, 1706, leaving, Annotata Philologica in Josuam:—Declaratio Augustanæ Confessionis:—Mysterium Antichristi Ostensum:—Disputationes de Providentiâ, de Sessione Christi ad Dexteram Dei, de Baptismo Primarium Chilidum ad Christum Conversarum, de Amore Dei Salutari in Judam Proditorem, de Moribus Regni Christi Illique Oppositis Pietismo et Chiliasmo, etc. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Fürst, *Bibl. Hannover, Nathan, ben-Moses, a Jewish writer of the 17th century, is the author of ירון בצילה, or a history of the persecution of the Jews in Poland, Lithuania, etc. (Venice, 1653; transl. also into Judæo-German):—משה ברורה, a dictionary of the Hebrew language, with the corresponding German, Italian, and Latin words (Prague, 1660; an edition containing also the French was edited by Koppel ben-Wolf, Amsterdam, 1701). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 361 sq.; De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 122. (B. P.)

Hansch, Michael Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 22, 1683. He studied at Leipsic, where he also lectured from 1709 to 1711. It was his intention to publish Kepler's manuscripts, which he had bought at Dantzic, but he only succeeded in publishing the first volume, as he could not get the support necessary for such an undertaking. Hansch died in 1752, leaving, De Justificatione Fidei sub Veteri Testamento, contra Paresin Coccejianam (1702):—De Mediis Cognoscendi Existentiâ et Discriminâ Scripturæ Sacræ (1709):—De Fundamentali in Fide Dissensu (eod.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hansell, William Forde, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 5, 1815. He graduated from Brown University in 1845, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1848; was ordained in 1849 in the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia, and became pastor of the Central Baptist Church in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 1, 1849. In April, 1853, he was released from that Church, and installed pastor of the Ninth Street Baptist Church in Cincinnati, O., Feb. 5, 1854. His services ended here July 18, 1858. For several years he resided in Philadelphia without pastoral charge. Removing to Hartford, Conn., in 1872, he preached frequently for various churches in and near that city. On going to Rainbow, a town between Hartford and Springfield, April 12, 1874, he became deeply interested in that field, remaining there and organizing a Church, which was constituted May 18, 1875. The last time he appeared in public was before the annual meeting of the Hartford Baptist Association, as the representative of that new Church. He died Nov. 26, 1875. Dr. Hansell's sermons were admirably clear; sound in doctrine, graceful in construction and expression. He dwelt specially on the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 39.

Hansen, Frans Volkmar Reinhard, a Lutheran theologian, was born in 1815. In 1843 he was pastor at Keitum, in the island of Sylt, Schleswig, but was deposed by the Danish government in 1850. From 1852 to 1862 he was court-preacher to queen Amalie, at Athens, in 1864 provost and first pastor in Schleswig, and died June 28, 1879. He is the author of, Die Auf- gabe Deutschlands und die Union im Zusammenhange der Zeitgeschichte (1873). (B. P.)

Hansen, Ludwig, a Lutheran minister, was born at Hildesheim, Feb. 1, 1664. He studied at Jena, was in 1689 pastor at his native place, and died Feb. 28, 1694, leaving, Disp. de Dæmonibus (Jena, 1684):—De Simplicitate Dei (eod.):—De Salute Majorum in Patris (1688). See Lauenstein, Hildesh. Kirchenhistorie, vii, 38; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hansen, Petrus, a Lutheran theologian, was born July 6, 1686, in Schleswig. He studied at Kiel, was deacon in 1714, in 1720 first pastor at Plön, Holstein, in 1729 member of consistory and superintendent, and died in 1760, leaving, De Asilo Juliani Apostati Studio in Abolenda cum Scholis Religione Christiana (Plön, 1733):—Diss. Synod. de Differentia inter Religionem Naturalem et Revelatum contra Tindalium (1733). Besides, he published a number of ascetical works. See Moser and Neubauer, Jetztlebende Theologen; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hansiz, Markus, a Jesuit and Church historian of Austria, was born April 23, 1683, at Völkermarkt, in Carinthia. He was educated in the Jesuit college at Eberndorf, studied at Vienna, and, after receiving holy orders, was for many years professor of philosophy at Graz. His ecclesiastical researches made him conceive the idea of producing a Germania Sacra, after the pattern of the Gallia Christiana (Paris, 1656 sq.), Ughelli's Italia Sacra (Venice, 1717 sq.), and Wharton's Anglia Sacra (Lond. 1691), and he undertook a journey to Rome with a view of examining the libraries there. In 1727 he published the first volume of his Germania Sacra: Metropolis Laureacensis cum Episcopatu Pataviensi, Chronologie Proposita (fol.); the second volume, published in 1729, is entitled, Archiepiscopatus Salisburgensis Chronol. Prop.; the third volume, published in 1754, is styled, De Episcopatu Ratisbonensi Prodomus, sive Informatio Summaria de Sede Antiqua Ratisbonensi. The freedom with which he treated local legends roused such an opposition to him that he felt compelled to renounce literary labor in 1756, but he encouraged others to continue his work. Hansiz died Sept. 5, 1766, at Vienna, and his book was continued by Usermann and others. See Backer, Écrivains de la Compagnie de Jésus, ii, 285; Werner, Gesch. der kuthol. Theologie, p. 132; Rettberg, Kirchen-Geschichte Deutschlands, i, 2 sq.; Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Plitt-Herzog, Real-Encyclop., s. v. (B. P.)

Hanstein, Gottfried August Ludwig, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Magdeburg, Sept. 7, 1761. He studied at Halle, was in 1782 teacher at the cathedral-school of his native place, in 1787 preacher at Tangermünde, in 1804 member of consistory and preacher at Berlin, and died Feb. 25, 1821, doctor of theology. He published homiletical and ascetical works, for which see Döring, Deutsche Kanzelredner; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., ii, 62, 94, 97, 118, 130, 148, 156, 158, 164, 168, 170, 172, 173, 175, 177, 197, 199, 203, 205, 206, 227, 233, 357; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol., i, 501. (B. P.)

Hanuman, the ape-god of the Hindûs, son of Pavan, lord of the winds. There is a reference to Hanuman in the Ramayana (q. v.), in which the monkey-chief is introduced as heading the natives of India, who had come to the assistance of Rama. In memory of this service a small pagoda is erected to his honor in the temples of Vishnu.

Haphraim. This place, according to Tristram (Bible Places, p. 237), "is probably represented by the little village of el-Ajuleh, two miles west of Shunem, in the plain;" the position which we had assigned it [see ISSACHAR], and which is adopted by Mr. Grove in Dr. Smith's Atlas. It is laid down on the Ordinance

Map at two and a half miles due west of Solam, and is described in the Memoirs (ii, 40) as "a small village of mud in the plain, supplied by two wells. This is possibly the Ophlah of the lists of Thothmes III (on the temple at Karnak). Compare el-Fueh (one mile to the east). It is also mentioned by Maria Sanuto (A.D. 1821) under the name of Afel." There are no other indications of antiquity. Lieut. Conder suggests (Tent Work, ii, 337) the identity of Haphraim with Khurbet el-Farriyeh, which is laid down on the Ordinance Map far away from Shunem, at two and a half miles south of Ain-Keimûn (Jokneam), on the north edge of Mount Carmel; and is described as "a steep hill-lock with traces of ruins, and on the north a good spring in the valley" (Memoir, ii, 58, where a description and plan of the ancient tombs are given). In this latter location Mr. Trelawney Saunders coincides (Map of the O. T.).

Happach, Johann Casimir, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1726. He was director and professor of theology at the Coburg gymnasium in 1772, and died Aug. 11, 1783, member of consistory. He wrote, Comm. de Calumnia Religiosa et Theologia Civili Veterum Præsertim Romanorum (Coburg, 1749):—De Conatibus Quibusdam Translationes Bibliorum Emenandis (1772):—De Papyro ad Iob viii, 11 (eod.):—Explicatio Nova Cludis Bethsemitæ, 1 Sam. vi, 19 (3 parts, 1774):—Progr. III ad Gen. xlvii, 24 (1775):—Progr. VI Super Quibusdam Locis Prophetæ Iosæ (1776, 1777). See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 362; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Happach, Lorenz Philipp Gottfried, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 6, 1742, at Hoyersdorf, near Dessau, studied at Halle, was rector and chaplain in 1764, preacher at Alten in 1772, and in 1780 at Mehlingen. He died July 20, 1814, leaving Naemann Syrus, Illustrandum (Bremen, 1774):—Theologische Nebenstunden (Dessau, 1798-1805):—Ueber die Beschaffenheit des künftigen Lebens nach dem Tode, aus Ansichten der Bibel (ibid. 1809-11, 2 vols.). See Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit., i, 475; ii, 51. (B. P.)

Happersett, Reese, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Brandywine, Pa., July 31, 1810. He graduated from Washington College, Pa., in 1836, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1839; was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery the same year, and ordained in 1841. In 1844 he was appointed agent for the Board of Domestic Missions, and in this position was eminently active and useful. In 1850 he became assistant secretary of the board, and in 1859 was elected corresponding secretary. He died Oct. 2, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 154.

Happiness, absolutely taken, denotes the durable possession of perfect good, without any mixture of evil; or the enjoyment of pure pleasure unalloyed with pain; or a state in which all our wishes are satisfied; in which senses, happiness is only known by name on this earth. The word happy, when applied to any state or condition of human life, will admit of no positive definition, but is merely a relative term; that is, when we call a man happy, we mean that he is happier than some others with whom we compare him; or than the generality of others; or than he himself was in some other situation. Moralists justly observe that happiness does not consist in the pleasures of sense; as eating, drinking, music, painting, theatrical exhibitions, etc., for these pleasures continue but a little while, by repetition lose their relish, and by high expectation often bring disappointment. Nor does happiness consist in an exemption from labor, care, business, etc.; such a state being usually attended with depression of spirits, imaginary anxieties, and the whole train of hypochondriacal affections. Nor is it to be found in greatness, rank, or elevated stations, as matter of fact abundantly testifies; but happiness consists in the enjoyment of the Divine favor, a good conscience, and uniform conduct. In subordination to these, human happiness may be greatly promoted by the exercise of the social affections, the pursuit of some engaging end, the prudent constitution of the habits, and the enjoyment of our health.

Hara, one of the names of Siva (q. v.).

Harsæus, FRANZ, a learned Dutch Catholic divine, was born at Utrecht in 1550, and educated in the academy there, after which he travelled through Germany, Italy, and Russia. He was made canon of Bois-le-Duc, then of Namur and Louvain. He died at the latter place, Jan. 12, 1632. His principal works are, Biblia Sacra Expositioibus Præcorum Putrum Litteralibus et Mysticis Illustrata (1630):—Catena Aurea in IV Evangelia (1625):—Vita Sanctorum.

Harald, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Argyle in 1228. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 285.

Haram, a term used by Mohammedans to denote what deserves reprimand or punishment, because expressly forbidden by the law. It is the opposite of Halal (q. v.). The word Haram also signifies a sacred thing from which infidels are to abstain, as the temple of Mecca, or Mohammed's tomb at Medina.

Harbada, a name substituted by Zoroaster for the magi (q. v.) of the ancient Persians, and designed to denote the priests of the Guebres. See PARSEES.

Harbart, BURCHARD, doctor and professor of theology at Leipsic, was born in 1546, and died Feb. 18, 1614. He is the author of, Theses de Smalcaldica Confessione Articulis:—Doctrina de Conjugio:—Capitula Doctrinam de Confessione Vera Fidei Complectentia:—Capitula de Lege Divina:—De Spiritu Sancto:—De Libero Hominis Arbitrio:—De Sacramentis in Genere:—De Ministerio Ecclesiastico. Harcourt, Agnès d', a French nun, sister of Robert, became abbess of Longchamps, and died in 1291.

Harcourt, Guy d', a French prelate, brother of Robert, became bishop of Lisieux in 1303.

Harcourt, Louis d', a French prelate, became archbishop of Narbonne in 1452, and died Dec. 14, 1479. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Harcourt, Philippe d', a French prelate and statesman, was originally archdeacon of Bayeux, became bishop of that see in 1142, and died in the abbey of Le Bec about 1160. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Harcourt, Robert d', a French prelate and diplomat, became bishop of Coutances in 1291.

Hardenbergh, JAMES B., D.D., an eminent Reformed (Dutch) minister, was born at Rochester, N. Y., June 28, 1800. Early converted and consecrated to the ministry, he graduated from Union College in 1821, and from the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick in 1824. His first settlement was at Helderberg and Princeton, N. Y. (1824-25). He was then called to succeed Dr. Isaac Ferris, in the First Church, New Brunswick, N. J., where he remained four years (1825-29). From thence he went to Orchard Street, New York city, for a single year, when he succeeded Dr. Bethune at Rhinebeck (1830-36), and followed him again in the First Church of Philadelphia (Crown Street), where he labored successfully until 1840, and then accepted the charge of the Franklin Street, or North-west Reformed Dutch Church, in New York. Here he remained sixteen years, a healer of old dissensions, and a leader of the people to new and long prosperity. Meantime by his exertions the church edifice in Franklin Street was sold, and a new one erected in Twenty-third Street. In 1856 he resigned his pastorate to seek rest and recuperation for wasted health and strength. After a year in Europe, and two winters in the South, he preached in Savannah and Macon, Ga. Upon his return from a second visit abroad, he devoted his ample means and willing services to the founding of a city mission on the corner of Madison and Gouverneur streets, New York city. He died Jan. 24, 1870. Dr. Hardenbergh was a man of majestic frame, countenance, and bearing, handsome beyond most men, dignified, graceful, and cultivated. His preaching was earnest, evangelical, simple, direct, scriptural, and practical. "His fervor was intense. At communion seasons his face was radiant with emotion, and his tones thrilling with tenderness. He was loyal to the Church of his fathers, active in her benevolent boards, and held high rank among the first men of his period." He was a trustee of Rutgers College from 1825 till his death, and was president of the General Synod in 1842. See Memorial Sermon, by A. R. Thompson, D.D. (W. J. R. T.)

Hardin, ROBERT, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Greene County, Tenn., Jan. 3, 1789. He was educated in Greenville College, and studied theology privately; was licensed by Union Presbytery, ordained by French Broad Presbytery in 1814, and became pastor of the Westminster and St. Paul churches. He died in Lewisburg, Sept. 4, 1867. Dr. Hardin was considered by his brethren as a man of great moral worth and deep piety, and theological attainments far above the average. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 333.

Harding, NEHEMIAH HENRY, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Brunswick, Me., in October, 1794. He graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1825; spent two years in Princeton Theological Seminary; was ordained by the Presbytery of Orange, April 18, 1829; became stated supply for Milton, N. C., Bethany and Red House, and died at the former place, Feb. 17, 1849. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 58.

Hardt, ANTON JULIUS VON DER, a German theologian and Orientalist, was born at Brunswick, Nov. 13, 1707. He was professor of theology and Oriental languages at Helmstädt, and died June 27, 1785, leaving, Epistola Rabbínica de Quibusdam Præcorum Ebraeorum Rectoribus Magnificis (Helmstädt, 1727):—Diss. de Zereda, Gemino in Palestina et Peræa Appido (ibid. 1728):—De Sæptia (eod.):—De Judaorum Statuto Scripturæ Sensus Inflectendi (eod.):—Commentatio in Frontem Libri Moralis Mischnici Pirke Aboth (eod.):—De Jubilæo Moisi Levit. xv (eod.):—De Sophismatibus Judeorum in Probandis suis Constitutionibus (1729):—*Rubbi Isaac Aramæ Diss. Harenberg, JOHANN CHRISTOPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 24, 1696, studied at Helmstädt, and was rector at Gandersheim in 1720. In 1735 he was pastor, and accepted a call in 1745 as professor of history and antiquities to Brunswick, where he died, Nov. 12, 1774. He wrote, Kurze Einleitung in die Ethiopische, sonderlich Habessinische alte und neue Theologie (Helmstädt, 1719):—De Specularibus Veterum, ad Locum 1 Cor. xiii, 12 (ibid. eod.):—Veri Divinique Natales Circumcisionis Judaicae, Templi Salomonici, Musicae Davidicae in Sacris, et Baptismi Christianorum (1720):—Jura Israelitarum in Palaestinum (Hildesheim, 1724):—De Articulis Suobacensibus, Fundamento Augustanae Confessionis (Brunswick, 1730):—Historia Ecclesiae Gundersheimensis Cathedralis et Collegiatae Diplomatica (Hanover, 1734):—Otius Gundersheimensis, Exponendis Sacris Litteris et Historia Ecclesiastica Dicitur, Complexa XIII Observationes (Utrecht, 1740):—Zwei Religionspöthler, Celsus und Edelmann (Leipzig, 1748):—Amos Propheta, Expositus Interpretatione Nova Latina (Leyden, 1763):—Aufklärung des Buches Daniel (1773, 2 vols.). Hareth. Lieut. Conder argues at length (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund.," January, 1875, p. 42 sq.) against the existence of any forest in this vicinity, and therefore prefers the reading עֵץ (city) to עֵץ (wood); but his reasoning is based upon a misconception (corrected in his Tent Work, ii, 88) of the latter word, which usually does not imply timber, but simply a copse or low brushwood. He finds the locality in question in the "small modern village of Khurās, in the hills on the north side of Wady Arneba, one of the heads of the valley of Elah (Wady es-Sunt); an ancient site, with the usual indications—wells, cisterns, and rough caves in the hill-sides." It is laid down on the Ordinance Map seven and a half miles east of Beit-Jibrin, and two miles east of Khurbet Kila (Keilah). This identification is concurred in by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 43) and Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.).

Harigara, a word which, when pronounced along with Siva and Rama, is believed by the Hindus to bring down numberless blessings upon him who utters it. The moment these three sacred words escape from the lips, all sins are cancelled; but if they are thrice repeated, the gods are so honored that they are at a loss to find a recompense equal to the merit. Such privileged persons are no longer obliged to pass into other bodies, but are straightway absorbed in Brahm.

Harington, EDWARD CHARLES, an Anglican clergyman, was born about 1807; graduated from Worcester College, Oxford, in 1827; was appointed chancellor in 1847, in 1857 resident canon of Exeter Cathedral, and died July 18, 1881. He wrote numerous works on Church history and polity, for which see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hariöli were magicians who are mentioned by ancient writers as waiting on the altars of the heathen to receive their inspiration from the fumes of the sacrifices.

Harishandis, a sect composed of doms or sweepers in the western province of Hindustan, the members of which are very scarce, or, perhaps, entirely extinct.

Harless, GOTTLIEB CHRISTOPH ADOLPH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Nürnberg, Nov. 21, 1806. He studied philosophy and theology at Erlangen and Halle, and commenced his academical career at the former place in 1828. In 1836 he was appointed professor and university preacher, in 1838 he took part in starting the Zeitschrift für Protestantismus und Kirche, and in 1842 he published his Christliche Ethik, of which eight editions were printed, and which was also translated into English (Edinburgh, 1868). To this period belongs his activity as member of parliament in the Bavarian diet, where he so energetically fought for the cause of Protestantism that the ultramontane minister, Abel, deposed him from his professorship, and in 1845 sent him as member of consistory to Bayreuth. In the same year, however, he was called to Leipzig, where he labored as professor and preacher at St. Nicholas till 1847, when the king of Saxony appointed him court-preacher and vice-president of the consistory. In 1852 Harless was called to Munich as president of the Protestant superior consistory, and directed the affairs of the Protestant Church in Bavaria for twenty-five years. He died Sept. 5, 1879. Besides his Ethik, he published, De Revelatione et Fide (Erlangen, 1830):—Commentar über den Brief Pauli an die Epheser (1834; 2d ed. 1858):—Die kritische Bearbeitung des Lebens Jesu von David Fr. Strauss beleuchtet (1836):—Theologische Enzyklopädie und Methodologie (1837):—De Supernaturalismo Gentilium seu de via et Ratione Superstitionem a Religione Recte Distinguendi (1838):—Lucubrationum Evangelia Canonica Spectantium Pars I et II (1841, 1842):—Die Sonntagsweihe, sermons (2d ed. 1860, 4 vols.):—Kirche und Amt nach lutherischer Lehre (1853):—Die Ehescheidungsfrage (1861):—Das Verhältnis des Christenthums zu Kultur- und Lebensfragen der Gegenwart (1863; 2d ed. 1866):—Jakob Böhme und die Alchimisten (1870; 2d ed. 1882):—*Geschichtsbilder aus der luther. Harmar, JOHN, an English clergyman and scholar, was born about 1594, at Churchdowne, near Gloucester, and educated at Winchester School. He was appointed Greek professor in that school in 1650, and in 1659 was presented to the rectory of Euhurst, in Hampshire. He died Nov. 1, 1670. His principal works are, Elogia Sententiarum et Similitudinum, e Chrysostomo Decerpta (Greek and Latin, with notes, 1622):—Epistola ad Lambertum Obaldstonum (1649):—A Short Catechism. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Harmon (Heb. Harmon', חֶרְמוֹן, probably from חָרַם, to be high; Sept. ῥὸ ὄρος ῥ' Πομπάν; Vulg. ex-celsus mons; A. V. "the palace"), a place only mentioned in Amos iii, 4, as that to which the inhabitants of Samaria would be led forth by their Assyrian conquerors, evidently, therefore, some unknown locality of the captivity. The ancient interpretations are obviously mere etymological conjectures, chiefly by a resolution of the first part of the name into חָרַם, a mountain; and the latter into a form of חֶרְמֵי, Armenia, or חֶרְמֵי, Rimmon; which are unsuitable. Kimchi makes it equivalent to חֶרְמֵי, a town.

Harms, THEODOR, brother of Louis (q. v.), was born in 1819. When thirty years of age he was called as missionary inspector to Hermannsburg, and succeeded his brother in 1865. In 1878 Harms put himself at the head of those ministers who left the State Church and formed separate congregations. This separation was neither in the interest of the Church nor in the interest of the great missionary work with which Harms was intrusted, and the more so as he had not those talents which would qualify him to become a party leader. Friends of Harms had, therefore, often tried to heal the breach between the State Church and the Hermannsburg Mission, but all efforts were in vain, on account of Harms being too headstrong a person. He died Feb. 16, 1885. Besides a biographical sketch of his brother Louis (5th ed. 1877), he published, Das Hohelied kura erklärt (Leipzig, 1870):—Der zweite Brief Petri (1878):—Der Psalter erklärt (2d ed. 1870):—Das dritte Buch Mose kurz ausgelegt (1871):—Der Heilweg in 22 Predigten (1871; 8d ed. 1877):—Die letzten Dinge (1872; 3d ed. 1875):—Der Prophet Maleachi erklärt (1878):—Zu Jesu Füßen, Predigten (1877). Harney, MARTIN, a Dominican of Amsterdam, was born May 6, 1634, and died at Louvain, April 22, 1704, professor of theology. He was an opponent of the Jansenists, and wrote L'Obéissance Raisonnée des Catholiques des Pays-Bas (Antwerp, 1636; transl. also into Latin). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Harnisch, WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Wilsnack, Brandenburg, Aug. 28, 1786. For some time first teacher at Teachers' Seminary, in Breslau, he was called in 1822 as director to Weissenfels, and died Aug. 15, 1864, leaving, Luther's kleiner Katechismus für die Schuljugend (18th ed. Eisleben, 1862):—Vollständiger Unterricht im evangelischen Christenthum (Halle, 1831, 2 vols.):—Entwürfe und Stoffe zu Unterredungen über Luther's kleinen Katechismus (1841-45, 3 vols.):—Erbauliche Betrachtungen über Luther's Katechismus (1836):—Die Geschichte des Reiches Gottes auf Erden (2d ed. 1844):—Die künftige Stellung der Schule zu Kirche, Staat und Haus (Erfurt, 1858). Harod, SPRING OF. Lieut. Conder suggests for this (Tent Work, ii, 69) the modern Ain el-Jem'a'm ("fountain of the two troops"), described (Memoirs to Ordinance Map, ii, 81) as "a small spring of fresh water, with a considerable stream, between two larger ones," and laid down three miles west of Beisán. But this is to accommodate his theory of the location of Megiddo as near the Jordan. There is no good reason to desert the traditionary site of Ain Jalud, which is briefly described in the same Memoirs (ii, 79).

Ain Jalud or Harod's Spring. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

Harosheth. The modern el-Harithiyeh, which is thought to represent the ancient site, is placed on the Ordinance Map nine miles south-east of Haifa, and is described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 270) as "a miserable hamlet of mud, on high ground, with an open plateau to the east, and a spring below on the west (Ain el-Ghafr). The population in 1859 is stated by consul Rogers at one hundred and twenty souls, and the tillage at twelve feddans." According to the same authority, however (i, 96), "Guérin suggests that we have the ancient name of Harosheth or Haris," three and a half miles south-west of Jibrin, in the north of Palestine, where "there appear to be no vestiges of ancient constructions, except a circular cistern cut in the rock. This identification is strengthened by the fact that the same word which occurs in the name Kir Harosheth, the modern Kerak, exists in the present local dialect of Moab under the same form, Harith or Haris" (ibid. p. 116).

Harpies ("Ἀρπυιαι"), in Greek mythology, were daughters of Thaumasia and Electra (an Oceanid). Sometimes two, sometimes three, are mentioned, under the different names, Aello, Podarge, Ocypete, Celano, Thyella, Acholoe, Aellopos, Nicthoe, and the like. In the descriptions of them there is also a great difference.

Antique Figures of the Harpies.

With Homer they are storm goddesses, fleet, but beautiful; Hesiod also calls them swift goddesses, but in Æschylus they appear as hateful, winged monsters. They were usually represented as eagles with maiden faces. At times they had human arms and legs, which ended in claws and hens' feet. They were generally sent out by the gods to punish criminals.

Harpocrates, in Græco-Egyptian mythology, was the name of an Egyptian deity, which originated from the word, Har-pa-chrut, i. e. "Har the child." This Har the Greeks usually called Horus, and distinguished him as Horus Harpocrates from another Horus. Both were sons of Osiris and Isis. What the ancients say about Harpocrates is quite incomplete, and therefore dark as to its significance. That he was not the god of silence, as once believed, is now fully accepted. In Rome he was worshipped as such, but probably only because he had his finger in his mouth, which is but the figurative representation of sucking, and designates him as an infant. Beans and cherries were offered to him, and on special festive days he was fed, by men, with milk, his image being carried around in procession. Among animals, scorpions, snakes, crocodiles, lions, and reindeer were sacred to him. See Horus.

Harrison, ELIAS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York city, Jan. 22, 1790. He graduated from Princeton College in 1814, spent one year thereafter in the theological seminary there, was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery, ordained by the Baltimore Presbytery in 1817, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Alexandria, Va.

where he labored faithfully for forty-six years. He died Feb. 13, 1863. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 20; Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 134.

Harrison, Jephtha, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Orange, N. J., in December, 1795. He graduated from Princeton College in 1820, and studied two years in the theological seminary there; was ordained in 1831; became stated supply at Fair Forest, S. C., in 1832, at Salem, Va., in 1835, and in 1838 became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Memphis, Tenn., where he labored for six years with great acceptability. He afterwards preached in Newcastle, Ky. (1844-47); Florence, Ala. (1848-50); Aberdeen, Miss. (1851-54); Burlington, Ia. (1855-58), and Fulton, Mo., where he died, Oct. 30, 1863. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 35; Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 159; Nevins, Presb. Encyclop. s. v.

Harrison, John Christian, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. Samuel Harrison of the South Carolina Conference, was born in Mecklenburg Co., N. C., Oct. 1, 1809. In 1819, with his parents, he removed to Kentucky, in 1827 was converted, became a class-leader in 1828, an exhorter in 1829, a local preacher in 1830, and later in the same year united with the Kentucky Conference. His first field of labor was Rock Castle Circuit, where he remained two years. He afterwards filled the best appointments in the conference, was presiding elder twenty-one years, occupied a seat in seven general conferences, and finally died, March 11, 1878. Mr. Harrison was a wise counsellor; had a clear, logical mind; was always affable, kind, reliable, and pure-minded, and full of faith and good works. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, i, 24.

Harrison, Thomas (1), an eminent English Baptist preacher, and general in the time of Cromwell, was born near Nantwich, Cheshire, England. As one of the judges selected to try king Charles, he did not shrink from what he conceived to be his duty, and gave his vote for the execution. He was the warm friend of Cromwell until the latter declared himself protector. He and his wife were baptized by immersion in 1657. At the Restoration he was arrested, tried as a regicide, and executed at Charing Cross, London, Nov. 13, 1660, his body being subjected to the most revolting treatment. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Harrison, Thomas (2), D.D., an English Independent minister, was born at Kingston-upon-Hull, Yorkshire. In his youth he removed with his parents to New England, who gave him the best education that country then afforded. He began to preach, and became chaplain to the governor of Virginia, a great enemy of Puritans. Two missionaries from England settled in Virginia, but the governor sent them out of the country. After this the Indians rose in rebellion, and murdered five hundred English persons. Those who escaped the massacre Mr. Harrison gathered into a church, but the governor became more hardened, and dismissed his chaplain, who had become too serious for him. He returned to London, where he became a popular preacher, and in 1650 succeeded Dr. Goodwin at St. Dunstan's in the East. He then removed to Broom-brough Hall, where he preached continually. In 1657 he went to Ireland with Henry Cromwell, son of the protector, and preached for some years at Christ Church, Dublin. When the government changed he returned to England, resided at Chester, and preached in the cathedral till silenced in 1662. He returned to Dublin in 1663, where he had a large, respectable, and flourishing congregation. He was an agreeable and instructive preacher, and when he died, in Dublin, there was a general mourning for him in the city. He left a valuable library, including a large folio System of Divinity in manuscript, and published Topica Sacra, or Spiritual Pleadings, and a Funeral Sermon for Lady Susanna Renolds (1654). See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 221.

Harrotee Version. See HINDUWEE, DIALECTS or.

Harsa (Hercia, or Hersa), a mediæval term, sometimes employed to describe any triangular candlestick for tapers, but more especially used to designate that which is employed in the offices of Tenebræ, in Holy Week. In it, at this service, are placed fourteen unbleached wax candles to represent the apostles and the three Marys, with one bleached wax candle to represent our Saviour. They are all extinguished in the course of the service, save the last named.

Hart, John Seely, LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Old Stockbridge, Mass., Jan. 28, 1810. He studied at Wilkesbarre Academy; graduated from Princeton College in 1830, with the highest honors of the class; the following year taught as principal of an academy at Natchez, Miss., and three years afterwards graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary. During the last two years of his course he also filled the position of tutor in the college. In 1834 he was elected adjunct professor of ancient languages in Princeton College, and filled that chair two years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Aug. 4, 1835. In 1836 he resigned his professorship in the college, purchased Edgehill School, in Princeton, and in 1842 was elected principal of the Philadelphia High School, continuing there until 1859, when he became editor of the periodicals published by the American Sunday-school Union, and in this connection began the Sunday-school Times. In 1862 he was elected principal of the New Jersey State Normal School, at Trenton, and held that position with distinguished usefulness and success until February, 1871. From 1864 to 1870 he also gave courses of lectures on English literature in Princeton College, where, in 1872, he was elected professor of belles-lettres and English literature, which chair he filled two years, returning in 1874 to Philadelphia, where he was engaged in literary pursuits until his death, March 26, 1877. Dr. Hart was the author of many volumes, an enthusiast in the cause of education, a devoted Sabbath-school worker, of elegant culture, accurate scholarship. During the months preceding his last illness, he had been delivering a course of popular lectures on the works of Shakespeare. He was an humble, consistent, and devout Christian. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 29.

Hart, Joseph, an English Independent minister, was born about the year 1712, of godly parents. He had a classical education, and was for many years a teacher of languages. He was long in bondage on account of his sins, but found deliverance under a sermon preached in the Moravian Chapel, Fetter-lane, London. He began to preach at the Old Meeting, St. John's Court, Bermondsey, in 1760, and afterwards settled at the Independent Chapel, Jewin Street, where his ministry was abundantly crowned, and he gathered there a prosperous Church. He would not allow either Arian or Arminian preacher in his pulpit. He died May 24, 1768, and was interred in Bunhill Fields, where twenty thousand persons are said to have been present. His hymns will live in the Church to the end of time, especially the one beginning "Come, ye sinners, poor and needy." See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 348; Gadsby, Hymn Writers.

Harte, WALTER, an English poet and divine, was born about 1700, and educated at Marlborough School and at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, of which he became vice-principal. He was canon of Windsor in 1751, and subsequently vicar of St. Austel and of St. Blazy, Cornwall. He died in March, 1774, leaving Poems on Several Occasions (1727);—Essay on Satire (1730);—Essay on Reason (1735);—A Fast Sermon (1740). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Härter, FRIEDRICH HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian, was born Aug. 1, 1797, at Strasburg. He studied at his native place and at different German universities, was in 1823 pastor at Ittenheim, and in 1829 at Strassburg. He exercised a considerable influence in the Church and in the school, and took a great interest in the work of foreign and home missions. He died in August, 1874, leaving, besides a number of sermons, Die Augsburgische Confession (Strassburg, 1834). See Lichtenberger, Encyclop. des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 508 sq. (B. P.)

Hartgrop, in Norse mythology, was the wife of the Danish king, Hadding, a favorite of the gods and a mighty giant. She was a powerful sorceress, feared on account of her art, and worshipped with superstitious reverence. By her assistance her husband descended alive into the infernal regions, to combat with Hela.

Hartley, ROBERT, a practical philanthropist, was born in England in 1795, and removed with his father to New York in 1798. He grew up with the expectation of entering the ministry, but was prevented by feeble health, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He devoted his life to works of charity and mercy. He was the first to expose the iniquity of the "swill milk" traffic. He visited Europe and learned the various systems there in use, and on his return formed a society for the amelioration of the condition of the poor, which commanded the admiration and support of the wisest and best men in the city. He was secretary of the Hospital for the Ruptured and Crippled, and manager of the Presbyterian Hospital, Juvenile Asylum, and various other charities. He was an elder in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, and abounded in works of piety and usefulness. He died in New York city, March 3, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Hartman, JOHANN ADOLPH, a learned German divine, was born at Münster in 1680. After being several years a Jesuit, he became a Protestant at Cassel in 1715, and was soon after made professor of philosophy and poetry. In 1722 he was appointed professor of history and rhetoric at Marburg, and died there in 1744. His most esteemed works are, Hist. Hassaica:—Vita Pontificum Romanorum Victoris III, Urbani II, Pascalis II, Gelasii II, Callisti II, Honorii II. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Hartmann, Christian Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Köthen, Oct. 12, 1767. He studied at Halle, was in 1792 con-rector, and in 1796 rector, in his native place. In 1810 he was deacon of St. Agnes, in 1815 director of all the schools, and in 1822 member of consistory. He died Feb. 5, 1827, leaving, Uebersetzung der Propheten Nahum, Habakuk, Zephania und Obadja (Leipzig, 1791); Commentatio in Epistolam Judæ (Köthen, 1793); De Studio Religionis Christianæ in Scholis Rite Instituendo (ibid. 1797-98); —Geschichte der evangelisch-lutherischen St. Agneskirche in Cöthen (1799); —Die biblische Geschichte mit praktischen Anmerkungen (1802, 2 parts). Hartmann, Julius, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born June 1, 1806. He served as deacon at different places in Württemberg, and was called in 1851 to Tuttlingen. In 1877 he was made doctor of theology, and died Dec. 9, 1879, leaving, Geschichte der Reformation in Württemberg (1835); —Das Leben Jesu nach den Evangelien (1837-39, 2 vols.); —Johann Brenz (1840, 2 vols.); —Aelteste Katechetische der evangelischen Kirche (1841); —Eberhard Schnepf der Reformator (1870). He was also one of the editors of Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der luth. Kirche, for which he wrote the life of Brenz (vol. vi of the collection, Elberfeld, 1862), and contributed to Piper's Evangelische Kalender and Herzog's Real-Encyclop. (B. P.)

Hartwell, Jesse (1), a Baptist minister, was born at Charlemont, Mass., in March, 1781. He was converted at the age of sixteen, and ordained at Sandisfield, Jan. 9, 1800. A large part of his life was spent in missionary work, under appointment from the Massachusetts Missionary Society. His tours extended beyond New England to the Black River country, N. Y., and into different sections of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Canada. He first went to Ohio in 1815, and is believed to have baptized by immersion the first convert in the Western Reserve. He died at Perry, O., Nov. 21, 1860. See Watchman and Reflector, Dec. 20, 1860. (J. C. S.)

Hartwell, Jesse (2), D.D., an eminent Baptist minister, was born at New Marlborough, Mass., in 1794. He graduated with high rank from Brown University in 1819; for two years thereafter was principal of the University Grammar-school in Providence, pursuing at the same time his theological studies. He was ordained at Providence in 1821, and in 1823 went to South Carolina, and became an instructor in the Furman Theological Seminary, supplying vacant pulpits as opportunity presented. Subsequently he was settled as a clergyman in Alabama, and was an instructor in theology in what is known as Howard College, in that state. For several years he resided in Arkansas, where, as a preacher and teacher, he did good service. He became, in 1855, president of what was known as the Mt. Lebanon University, in Louisiana, and died there, Sept. 16, 1865. (J. C. S.)

Hartzheim, Caspar, a German theologian, was born at Cologne in 1678. He belonged to a distinguished family, entered the Jesuit order at Treves in 1698, and taught rhetoric, philosophy, and theology successively at Treves, Paderborn, Cologne, and other places. He died about 1760, leaving, Costumæ Novæ Legis Presbyterium, etc. (Cologne, 1717); —Pietas in Salvatorem Mundi, etc. (Mayence, 1728); —Explicatio Fabularum et Superstitionum, etc. (Cologne, 1734); —Vita Nicolai de Cusa (Treves, 1780); —Solilegium Solandis Animabus Defunctorum (Cologne, 1785; in German, 1748). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hartzheim, Joseph, a German historian, was born at Cologne in 1694. At the age of seventeen he joined the Jesuits, was for some time professor of Oriental languages at Milan, afterwards professor of phi-loophy and theology at Cologne, and died May 17, 1763, leaving, De Initio Metropoleos Ecclesiastica Colonia (Cologne, 1781, 1782):—Bibliotheca Coloniensis, etc. (ibid. 1747):—Catalogue Coloniensis (ibid. 1752):—De Elendis Collectionum Conciliorum Germaniae (ibid. 1758):—Concilia Germaniae (1759–63, 5 vols.). Harvey, Sir George, a Scottish painter, was born at St. Ninians, near Stirling, in February, 1806. He was educated in art in the Trustees' Academy at Edinburgh, and in 1826 became an associate of the Scottish Academy; in 1829 was elected a fellow, and in 1864 became its president. He received the honor of knighthood in 1867, and died at Edinburgh, Jan. 22, 1876. His best pictures are those depicting historical episodes in religious history from a puritan or evangelical standpoint, such as Covenanters Preaching; Covenanters' Communion; John Bunyan and his Blind Daughter; Sabbath Evening; The Quitting of the Manse. He was also equally successful in subjects not directly religious. See Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.

Harvey, Joseph, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Connecticut. While pastor of the Church at Goshen, in that state, he became deeply interested in the conversion of the Sandwich Islanders, and through his influence the first two missionaries to those islands, Messrs. Bingham and Thurston, were selected and ordained at Goshen, Sept. 28, 1819. Dr. Harvey died at Harvey, Mich., Feb. 4, 1873. See Presbyterian, March 1, 1873. (W. P. S.)

Hase, Christian Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, who died at Brandenburg in 1766, is the author of, De Messia in Jobo (Halle, 1759):—De Stylo Amos Propheeta et Ejus Vita (1751):—*Versuch eines Lehrgebäudes der hebr. Haswell, James M., D.D., a Baptist missionary, was born at Bennington, Vt., Feb. 4, 1810. He graduated from the Hamilton Theological Seminary in 1835, and soon after was appointed missionary to Burmah, where he arrived in February, 1836. He was in the employ of the American Baptist Missionary Union for more than forty years, during which time he visited the United States, first in 1849, remaining a little more than three years, and again in 1867, making a stay of about nine months. His first work was among the Peguans, or, as they are now called, the Talaings, into whose language he translated the New Test., and issued from the press quite a number of tracts. He afterwards learned the Burmese language, and was for a long time recognised as a missionary among that people. He died Sept. 13, 1876. See Amer. Bapt. Magazine, lvii, 180. (J. C. S.)

Hatch, Frederick W., D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was ordained deacon in 1810, and presbyter in 1813, and had charge, successively, of the parishes in Edenton, N. C., and Frederick, Md., after which he removed to Virginia as rector of Fredericksville parish from 1820 to 1830. While there, Thomas Jefferson was his friend and parishioner. In 1832-1836 he officiated in Christ Church, Washington, D. C., and was chaplain to the United States Senate. In the latter year he removed to Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; in 1843 to Wisconsin, taking charge of the parishes in Southport and Racine. In 1850 he went to St. Louis, Mo., in temporary charge of Christ and St. George's churches; thence travelled to California in June, 1856, laboring as a missionary in Marysville and other places. He died in Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 14, 1860, aged seventy-one years. Dr. Hatch was a fine linguist, and an indefatigable worker. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1860, p. 180.

Hatè, in Norse mythology, was the son of the giant Gyge and the brother of Skoll; both are frightful wolves, and persecute the moon and the sun. At Ragnarok these monsters will succeed in devouring the heavenly lights. He probably emblemizes the eclipse.

Hatfield, Edwin Francis, D.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born at Elizabethtown, N. J., Jan. 9, 1807. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1829, spent two years at Andover Theological Seminary, was ordained pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church at St. Louis in 1832, in 1835 accepted a call from the Seventh Presbyterian Church, New York city, and remained its pastor for twenty-one years, enjoying a continuous season of revival, and receiving to its membership one thousand five hundred and fifty-six persons. A colony from this church, in 1856, organized a new church in the upper part of the city, and Dr. Hatfield became its pastor. He remained at this post until his health failed, and resigned in 1863. When he recovered his health he was appointed financial agent of the Union Theological Seminary, and afterwards acted as secretary of the Home Missionary Society. He died at Summit, N. J., Sept. 22, 1883. From 1846 he was stated clerk of the General Assembly, an office for which he was peculiarly fitted by his methodical habits and extensive acquaintance with the history of the Church. He was elected in 1883 moderator of the General Assembly, and performed the duties of that office with great ability. He prepared the year-book of the New York Observer during the time of its publication. Among his published works are, Universalism as it is (1841);—Memoir of Elihu W. Baldwin (1843);—St. Helena and the Cape of Good Hope (1852);—The History of Elizabeth, N. J. (1868);—The Church Hymn-book, with Tunes (1872);—The Chapel Hymn-book (1878). He spent much time and labor in preparing for publication the Minutes of the General Assembly. See N. Y. Observer, Sept. 27, 1883. (W. P. S.)

Hatfield, Thomas, an English prelate, was prebendary of Lincoln (1342) and York (1348), and was promoted to the see of Durham in 1345. He died near London, May 8, 1381. He was the principal benefactor, if not the founder, of the friary at Northallerton, in Yorkshire, for Carmelites, or White Friars. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Haur, in Norse mythology, was one of the dwarfs created out of earth.

Hausen, CHRISTIAN AUGUST, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Sangerhausen, in Thuringia, Aug. 6, 1663. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1690 deacon, in 1692 preacher at Dresden, and died Sept. 20, 1733. He is best known by his continuation of Bebel's Memorabilia Historiæ Ecclesiæ Recentioris, etc. (Dresden, 1781). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 379; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Häusle, JOHANN MICHAEL, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, who died at Vienna, Jan. 16, 1867, court-chaplain and professor emeritus, is known as one of the editors of Wiener Zeitschrift für die gesammte katholische Theologie. The history of the Vienna University he wrote for the Freiburger Kirchen-Lexikon. Besides, he published, Der katholische Charakter der wiener Universität (1864):—Darf die wiener Hochschule paritätisch werden? (1865). (B. P.)

Hausmeister, JACOB AUGUST, a Protestant minister of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage, at Stuttgart, Oct. 6, 1806. At the age of nineteen he joined the Christian Church at Esslingen. Shortly afterwards he entered the Basle Missionary Institute, where he remained for about six years. In 1831 the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews called him as one of its missionaries. Before he left for London, he was ordained by dean Herwig, who had also received him into the Church. In 1832 he went to Strasburg as missionary, and died April 17, 1860. He published, Merkwürdige Lebens- und Bekehrungsgeschichten (Basle, 1835):—Leben und Wirken des Pastors Bürling (1852):—Der Unterricht und die Pflege jüdischer Proselyten (Heidelberg, 1852):—Die Judenmission, an essay read before the Evangelical Alliance held at Paris (Basle, 1856):—Die evangelische Mission unter Israel (1861). Haussa Version of the SCRIPTURES. Haussa is one of the most widely-extended languages of western Africa, and forms very much the medium of communication over extensive districts on both sides the rivers Niger and Chadda. The gospel according to Matthew was translated into this language prior to the year 1841, by the Rev. C. F. Schön, of the Church Missionary Society. This translation was carefully revised by the help of two natives of the Haussa country, and was printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1856. Since then the following parts were put into circulation by the same society: Genesis, Exodus, gospel of John, and the Acts. See The Bible of Every Land, p. 412. For the study of the language, see Baikie, Observations on the Haussa and Fulsulda Languages (Lond. 1861); J. F. Schön, Grammar of the Haussa Language (ibid. 1862). (B. P.)

Hautecourt, JEAN PHILIPON DE, a Reformed theologian of Douai, was born Sept. 5, 1646. He studied at Saumur, was preacher there in 1671, professor of theology in 1677, but left France in 1685 on account of religious persecutions and went to Holland. He settled at Amsterdam in 1686, was professor of theology there, and died Oct. 30, 1715. He wrote, De Mysterio Pietatis:—De Symbolo Apostolico:—De Peccato in Spiritum Sanctum:—De Primo Oraculo, Gen. iii, 15:—De Lege et Evangelio ad Joh. i, 27:—Ad Historiam Dæmoniæ a Christo Sanatæ, Marc. i, 20. Hautpoul, PAUL LOUIS JOSEPH, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Salette (Languedoc), Aug. 2, 1764. He entered into holy orders while quite young, became a priest before the time of the Revolution, and was forced to seek shelter in foreign countries. He at first emigrated to Switzerland, and afterwards to Coblenz in 1792. The family Kosen Kaski engaged him for the education of their heir, upon which abbé Hautpoul directed all his attention. He returned to France in 1818, and became almoner to the duchess of Angoulême, and after that bishop of Cahors in 1828. Being weakened by age and infirmities, he had to resign in 1842, and retired to his family at Toulouse. He died in December, 1849. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hävecker, JOHANN HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1640. He studied at Helmstadt and Wittenberg, was in 1665 rector, in 1681 deacon, in 1693 pastor, and died in 1722, leaving, De Victu et Amictu Johannis Baptistæ (Wittenberg, 1663):—De Mundi Ortu et Interitu (1664):—Morgen- und Abend-Seufzer (1669). He also continued and edited some works of his father-in-law, Scriber (q. v.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Havemann, MICHAEL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 29, 1597. He was preacher and professor at Stade, and died Jan. 12, 1672, leaving, Hodosophia Evangelica contra Papalium Ignem Futurum:—Christianismi Luminaria Magna:—Gamologia sive Tractatus de Jure Connubiorum:—Theognosia sive Theologia Antiquissima Mosaica, Prophetica, Apostolica et Rabbinica:—De Christianorum in Christo Perfectione et cum Christo Unione (transl. into German by Spener). See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Haven, ERASTUS OTIS, D.D., LL.D., a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born in Boston, Mass., Nov. 1, 1820, being a descendant of Richard Haven, of Puritan stock, who emigrated from the west of England, and settled in the town of Lynn, Massachusetts Bay Colony, about the year 1640. He graduated from the Wesleyan University in 1842, immediately took charge of a private academy in Sudbury, and thence went to Amenia Seminary, filling first the position of teacher of natural science, and afterwards becoming principal of the institution. In 1848 he entered upon the work of the ministry in the New York Conference, and occupied the following positions: Twenty-fourth Street (now Thirtieth Street) Church, New York city, 1848 and 1849; Red Hook Mission, N. Y., 1850 and 1851; Mulberry Street (now St. Paul's) Church, New York city, 1852. In 1853 he was elected professor of Latin in the University of Michigan, and the next year was made professor of English language, literature, and history. In 1856 he was elected editor of Zion's Herald, Boston, and filled the position with eminent acceptability for seven years. In 1862 and the year following he was a member of the Senate of the State of Massachusetts; from 1858 to 1863 of the state board of education, and of the board of overseers of Harvard University. In the latter year he was elected president of the University of Michigan, filling that position till 1869, when he accepted the office of president of the North-western University. Here he remained till the General Conference of 1872 elected him corresponding secretary of the Education Society. In 1874 he was called to the chancellorship of the new university at Syracuse. In 1880 he was made a bishop, and was engaged in the duties of that office at the time of his death, which occurred at Salem, Oregon, Aug. 2, 1881. Although a fine preacher and a graceful speaker, he attained chief prominence among the Methodists of America for his sound scholarship and his steadfast interest in the cause of education. His principal published works are, The Young Man Advised (1855):—The Pillars of Truth (1866):—and a Rhetoric (1869). He contributed largely to the periodicals of the Church, and, as editor of one of the Church papers, took no small part in the discussion of many important denominational questions.

Haven, Gilbert, a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, cousin of the foregoing, was born at Malden, Mass., Sept. 19, 1821. His father, Gilbert Haven, Esq., was one of the pioneer Methodists of that place. After receiving a good common-school education he engaged in business, and early manifested such capacity as to have the most flattering offers of business connections; but feeling an ardent desire for a higher education, refused them all, prepared for college at Wesleyan University, Wilbraham, where he was converted in 1839, and in 1846 graduated at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn. He was immediately employed as teacher of ancient languages at Amenia Seminary, Dutchess County, N. Y., and in 1848 was elected principal of the institution. In 1851 he joined the New England Conference, wherein he served two years each at Northampton, Wilbraham, Westfield, Roxbury, and Cambridge. At the opening of the rebellion Mr. Haven was commissioned as chaplain of the Eighth Regiment of Massachusetts volunteers, served his time out (three months), then spent a year in extensive travel in Europe and Palestine, and as a result wrote and published his book on Great Britain and Western Europe, entitled The Pilgrim's Wallet. On his return he resumed the active ministry, and was stationed at North Russell Street, Boston, where, through his advice and influence, Grace Church was purchased. From 1867 to 1871 he was editor of Zion's Herald, in 1868 and 1872 was a delegate to the General Conference, and by the latter was elected to the bishopric, May 24, 1872. In this office he devoted himself earnestly to its arduous labors, and was ever conspicuous in the benevolent enterprises of the Church. He visited Mexico in 1873, and Africa in 1876 and 1877. His death at the home of his nativity, Jan. 8, 1880, was remarkably triumphant. Bishop Haven had a very extensive knowledge of books and men, a retentive and ready memory, a wonderful conversational ability, and great popularity among his personal acquaintances. He was noted for his ardent interest in reformatory enterprises, his radical opposition to slavery, and his advocacy of political and social equality. His boldly enunciated views on these subjects gave him great reputation almost wherever the English language is spoken. He was equally conspicuous for his faithful advocacy of the central doctrines of evangelical religion. He was a careful, successful pastor; a preacher of great simplicity, fluency, and power; and a vigorous and facile writer. His other publications are, Occasional Sermons:—Life of Father Taylor, the Sailors' Preacher:—Our Next-door Neighbor; or, A Winter in Mexico. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, i, 92; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.; Daniels, Memorials (Boston, 1880).

Haven, Joseph, D.D., LL.D., a Congregational minister, was born at North Dennis, Mass., Jan. 4, 1816. He graduated from Amherst College in 1838, spent one year in the Union Theological Seminary, and graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1839. He was ordained Nov. 6 of the same year pastor of the Ashland Congregational Church, Unionville, where he remained seven years, next was pastor of the Brookline Church four years, and was then appointed professor of moral and intellectual philosophy in Amherst College. After occupying this post for eight years he was called to a professorship in the Chicago Theological Seminary, which post he occupied until his death, May 28, 1874. He is the author of a work entitled Mental Philosophy, including the Intellect, Sensibilities, and the Will (Boston, 1858, 12mo). (W. P. S.)

Haven, Samuel, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Framingham, Mass., Aug. 4, 1727 (O. S.). After graduating in 1749 from Harvard College, he was instructed in theology by Rev. Ebenezer Parkman. He was ordained, May 6, 1752, pastor of the First Church in Portsmouth, where he ministered until his death, March 8, 1806. Possessing unusual powers of oratory, he attained an extensive popularity. Although poor himself, he ministered to the destitute with a profuse liberality, especially during the Revolutionary struggle. As a means of usefulness he studied medicine, and practised gratuitously among the poor. After 1799 he only preached occasionally, and the last year and a half he was incapable of performing the duties of his office. On account of his unusual pulpit talents, his friends likened him to Whitefield. His printed sermons are numerous. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 495.

Haven, Thomas, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Wrentham, Mass., in 1748. He graduated at Harvard College in 1765, was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church in Reading, Nov. 7, 1770, and died May 7, 1782. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 133.

Haverkamp, SIGBERT, a Dutch scholar, was born in 1683. He was first preacher in a small village, but was called to Leyden as professor of history and Greek, and died April 25, 1742. He published, S. Fl. Tertuliani Apologeticus, etc. (Leyden, 1718):—Josephi Opera Omnia, etc. (Amsterdam, 1726, 2 vols. fol.):—Abudacni Historia Jacobitarum c. Annotatt. Jo. Nicolai (Leyden, 1740). Havestadt, BERNHARD, a German missionary, was born at Cologne in 1715. He entered the society of the Jesuits, and devoted himself to preaching. In 1746 he was attached to the missions of Chili. He started from Hortsmar, in Westphalia, sailed from Antwerp to Lisbon, and arrived two months afterwards at Rio Janeiro, thence crossed the pampas and Andes to Chili, and reached Santiago, the capital of Chili, after a wearisome and dangerous journey of fifty-five days. He spent five years at Concepcion, thoroughly exploring the country. Having a very good knowledge of the Chilidugu dialect, he was enabled to make some few converts among the Indians. On the abolition of the Jesuit order in the Spanish states, Havestadt was arrested, June 29, 1768, and conducted to Lima, whence, by way of Panama, he returned to Europe. He died at Münster after 1778, where his Observations appeared (1751-77). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hawaiian Version of the SCRIPTURES. The Hawaiian is a dialect of the Polynesian language, spoken in the Sandwich Islands. When missionaries landed on the island of Hawaii, in 1820, they found a rude, illiterate people, whose language had never been reduced to writing. It was theirs to catch the fleeting sounds and give them permanent form on the printed page, and so energetically did they pursue their work, that before two years had elapsed they had begun printing in Hawaiian. To express the proper sounds of the language five vowels and seven consonants sufficed, but nine additional consonants were employed to give expression to the foreign and Bible names with which the Hawaiians would need to become acquainted. In 1826 the gospel of Matthew was prepared for press, and in 1828 a small edition of the four gospels was printed at Rochester, N. Y., at the expense of the American Board and the American Bible Society. The entire New Test. was published at Honolulu in 1832, and a second revised edition of ten thousand copies appeared in 1837. Portions of the Old Test. were also put to press from time to time, and the complete Hawaiian Bible appeared in 1839, only nineteen years after the arrival of the pioneer missionaries. Six years later it was estimated by Rev. Hiram Bingham, one of the translators, that twenty thousand Bibles and thirty thousand New Tests. had been issued, besides many thousand detached portions, and that the American Bible Society had contributed $42,420 towards this result. A bilingual Hawaiian and English New Test. was also prepared in 1867 by the American Bible Society, and of this more than ten thousand copies have been issued. See Bible of Every Land, p. 375. For linguistic helps, comp. Hawkins, EDWARD, D.D., an Anglican divine, was born in Somersetshire, England, in 1789. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, London, and graduated with high honors from St. John's College, Oxford, in 1811. He became a fellow of Oriel, took orders in the Church, and filled several posts in the University of Oxford with distinguished ability. In 1828 he was appointed provost of Oriel College, to which office a canonry in Rochester Cathedral and the rectory of Purreleigh are annexed. He came in contact with that Catholic movement of which Oriel College is the recognised centre, and its fellows, John Henry Newman and Edward Bouvine Pusey, the leaders. He was opposed to the tractarian or "Puseyite" propaganda. His own position on theological questions was in the ranks of the liberal or "Broad" Church. Dr. Hawkins was Bampton lecturer in 1840. He edited Milton's Poetical Works, with Notes, published a volume of Discourses on the Historical Scriptures of the Old Testament, and was from 1847 to 1861 Ireland professor of exegesis in the university. He died at Oxford, Nov. 20, 1882. (W. P. S.)

Hawthorne, JAMES, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Slabtown, Burlington Co., N. J., April 1, 1808, and in early life removed to Kentucky. He studied with Rev. A. A. Shannon, of Shelbyville; graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1828; was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Feb. 6 of that year; and Nov. 21, 1829, was ordained over the churches of Lawrenceburg and Upper Benson, in Franklin County, Ky., where he remained till April 4, 1838, after which he preached for various churches as a supply for three years. He was installed pastor of Plum Creek and Cane Run churches in Shelby County, Dec. 29, 1836; dismissed April 23, 1841, after which he supplied the Lawrenceburg Church about five years; next served the Church at Princeton for one year as a stated supply, and April 9, 1848, was installed as pastor there. For nearly thirty years he performed the duties of this pastorate with great earnestness and faithfulness. He was a man of spotless integrity, of a lovable disposition, cultivated in mind, Christlike in spirit. His long rides over rough roads in inclement seasons, while supplying weak congregations, had injured his health and laid the foundation for weakness in his later years. He died June 28, 1877. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 15. (W. P. S.)

Hawtreys, EDWARD CRAVEN, D.D., an English divine, was born at Burnham, Bucks, May 7, 1789. He was educated at Eton, admitted as a scholar of King's College, Cambridge, in 1807, and three years later became a fellow of that college. In 1814 he was made assistant master of Eton College, in 1834 was appointed head master, and in 1853 was elected provost, which office he filled till his death, Jan. 27, 1862. Dr. Hawtreys, as a member of the Roxburgh Club, was well known in literary circles, and his intimate acquaintance with books enabled him to collect a library of great value. He was an accomplished scholar in the French, German, and Italian languages. His Il Trifoglio contains translations of poems, with a few original pieces in Greek, Italian, and German; the versions are from French and English into Greek—from Latin, English, and German into Italian—and from English into German, all executed with surprising accuracy. His administration at Eton gave evidence of superior wisdom and judgment, vastly advancing the college in classical pre-eminence. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1862, p. 683.

Hay, George, D.D., a Scotch Roman Catholic prelate, was born of Episcopal parents, in Edinburgh, Aug. 24, 1729. He was destined for the medical profession, but in the midst of his studies he was summoned to join the Highland army as surgeon, in 1745. After prince Charles's defeat, he was kept three months in Edinburgh Castle, and then detained prisoner a year in London. By the act of indemnity he was set free. He was received into the Roman Catholic Church, Dec. 21, 1745, by father John Seton, S. J., of Garleton, who was on a mission to Edinburgh. On Sept. 10, 1754, he entered the Scotch College at Rome, where he completed his ecclesiastical studies and was ordained a priest. He returned to Scotland in 1759, and was sent into Banffshire, where he labored for eight years. In 1769 he was made coadjutor to bishop Grant, vicar-apostolic of Scotland. In 1771 he appeared as an author, and began that series of doctrinal, moral, and devotional works which is still popular. In 1798 he received a second coadjutor in bishop Cameron, to replace bishop Geddes, deceased. A few years afterwards, feeling his end approach, he retired to the Seminary of Aquhorties, and devoted his remaining days to devotion. He died Oct. 15, 1811. See (N. Y.) Cath. Annual, 1880, p. 75.

Hay, Philip Courtlandt, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newark, N. J., July 25, 1793. He was educated at Princeton and Nassau colleges; was licensed by the New Jersey Presbytery, at Paterson, in 1820, and became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Mendham. Subsequently he was called to the Second Presbyterian Church of Newark, where he labored faithfully for twelve years. He died Dec. 27, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 185.

Hay, William, D.D., a Scotch prelate, was born Feb. 17, 1647, and was educated at Aberdeen. He received holy orders from bishop Scongal, and was first settled as minister at Kilconquhar, in Fife; from here he was removed to Perth, and afterwards consecrated bishop of Moray in 1688. He died at Castlehill, near Inverness, March 17, 1707. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 155.

Haycroft, NATHANIEL, D.D., a distinguished English Baptist minister, was born near Exeter, Feb. 14, 1821. He pursued his studies at Stepney College, at Edinburgh, and Glasgow; was settled first at Saffron, then at Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, where he remained eighteen years, during which time he attained to eminent distinction among the ministers of his denomination in England. Resigning his pastorate in Bristol, he accepted a call to Leicester, and died Feb. 16, 1873. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1874, p. 274.

Haye, JEAN DE LA, a French Franciscan, was born at Paris, March 20, 1593. He was professor of philosophy and theology, court-preacher to queen Anne of Austria, and died Oct. 15, 1661. He edited the Biblia Magna (Paris, 1643, 5 vols.):—Biblia Maxima (1660, 19 vols.):—wrote Comment. in Genesim (8 vols. fol.):—Apparatus Evangelicus:—Comment. in Apocalypsin. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 186; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hayer, JEAN NICOLAS HUBERT, a French theologian, was born at Sarrelonia, June 15, 1706. He taught theology and philosophy among the Recolets, and showed himself one of the strongest defenders of the Church in his time. He died at Paris, July 16, 1780, leaving, La Spiritualité et l'Immortalité de l'Âme (Paris, 1758):—Le Règle de la Foi Venée (ibid. 1761):—L'Apostolicité du Ministère de l'Eglise Romaine (ibid. 1765):—Traité de l'Existence de Dieu (ibid. 1774):—La Charlatanerie des Incrédules (1780). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Haymann, Christoph (1), a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 15, 1677, at Reichenbach, Saxony. He studied at Leipsic, and died in 1731. His ascetical writings are enumerated in Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Hayman, Christoph (2), a son of the above, was born Aug. 15, 1709. He died at Meissen in 1783, doctor and professor of theology, and superintendent, leaving, Comm. de κληρω (1746):—Versuch einer biblischen Theologie in Tabellen (eod.):—Litteræ Encyclicæ in 1 Epist. ad Timoth. (1753). See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Haymo of FEVERSHAM, an ecclesiastic of the 13th century, was born at Feversham, Kent, studied at the University of Paris, where Leland says he was "inter Aristotelicos Aristotelissimus;" became a Franciscan, served at the Church of St. Denis, and on his return to England was made provincial of his order. His eminence in counsel led to his call to Rome, where he was chosen general of the Franciscans. Pius entitles him "speculum honestatis," yet Bale makes him an inquisitor and persecutor in Greece. At the command of pope Alexander IV he corrected and emended the Roman breviary. He died at Anagni, Italy, where the pope in person came to visit him, in 1260. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 150.

Haymo of HYTHE, an English prelate, was born at Hythe, Kent, and made bishop of Rochester in the twelfth year of Edward II's reign, to whom he was confessor. In his native town he founded a hospital, and enlarged the episcopal palace. In his old age he resigned his bishopric, lived on his own estate, and died about 1355. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 185.

Haynes, J. A., D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in King and Queen County, Va., Dec. 13, 1822. He graduated from Columbian University, Washington, D. C., in 1843, was principal of Brington Academy for a year, and then entered upon a course of medical study, receiving his degree from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1846. Relinquishing his practice, he entered the Christian ministry, being licensed in 1853, and ordained in 1857. For a time he labored under the auspices of the State Mission Board, and then accepted an appointment as principal of the Clarke Female Seminary, at Berryville, Va. Subsequently he was pastor of two or three churches in Virginia, a part of the time being engaged in teaching. He died in January, 1880. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Haynes, Samuel, D.D., an English clergyman, was educated at King's College, Cambridge, and was tutor to the earl of Salisbury, with whom he travelled, and who in 1737 presented him to the rectory of Hatfield, in Hertfordshire. In May, 1747, he was presented to the rectory of Clothall. He died June 9, 1752. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. p. 270; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hayter, THOMAS, an English prelate, became bishop of Norwich in 1749, bishop of London in 1761, and died Jan. 9, 1762. He published Occasional Sermons (1732-59). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Hazar-gaddah. Tristram (Bible Places, p. 20) coincides in the location "at Jurrah or el-Ghurra, a group of ruins on a high marl peak with steep sides, very near el-Milh, on the road to Beersheba," and so Lieut. Conder (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1875, p. 25). But more recently the latter suggests (Tent Work, ii, 337) Judeideh, the position of which he does not indicate.

Hazar-shual. The location of this place at Suweh is acquiesced in by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 20), Lieut. Conder (Quar. Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund," Jan. 1875, p. 21), but not by the latter finally (Tent Work, ii, 837), nor by Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.), who with less probability locates Jeshua (Neh. xi, 26) there. It is laid down on the Ordnance Map as Khurbet Saweh, four and a half miles north-west of Tell-Milh, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (iii, 409) as "a prominent hill-top, crowned with ruins, consisting of foundations and heaps of stones. The hill is surrounded by a wall built of large blocks of flint conglomerate. Other ruins of a similar kind exist in the valley beneath."

Hasolius, ERNEST L., D.D., a Lutheran professor, was born at Neusalz, province of Silesia, Prussia, Sept. 6, 1777. He was educated at his native place, Kleinwelke, and Barby, studying theology at Neisky in a Moravian institution, and was licensed to preach by the authorities of that Church. In 1800 he was appointed teacher of the classics in the Moravian Seminary at Nazareth, Pa., where he remained eight years, having during that period been appointed head teacher and professor of theology in the theological department. Joining the Lutheran Church, he taught, in 1809, a private classical school, and then became pastor of the united congregations of New Germantown, German Valley, and Spruce Run; also conducting a classical school at New Germantown. In 1815 the Hartwick Seminary went into operation, and he was appointed professor of Christian theology and principal of the classical department. For fifteen years he served this institution, acting also as pastor of the village church. In 1830 he became professor of Oriental and Biblical literature and German language in the Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, but resigned in 1833 to take charge of the Theological Seminary of the synod of South Carolina, holding that position from Jan. 1, 1834, until his death, Feb. 20, 1853. Among his published writings are, Life of Luther;—Life of Stilling;—Augsburg Confession, with Annotations;—Materials for Catechization on Passages of Scripture;—History of the Lutheran Church in America. For some time he was editor of the Evangelical Magazine, published at Gettysburg. He was a most accurate classical scholar, and a very successful teacher. See Pennsylvania College Book, 1882, p. 157.

Hazor. Of the places thus simply designated, the latest authorities make the following identifications:

1. HAZOR OF NAPHTALI (Josh. xi, 1, 10, 11, 13; xii, 19; xix, 36; Judg. iv, 2, 17; 1 Sam. xii, 9; 1 Kings ix, 15; 2 Kings xv, 29) is identified by Grove (in Smith's Atlas) with Tell Huraweh, south-east of Kedesh, and by Trelawney Saunders (Map of the O. T.) with Khurbet Harrah (evidently the same locality), which is set down on the Ordnance Map one and three quarter miles north-west of Lake Huleh, and described in the accompanying Memoirs (i, 237) as "an important ruin on a hill-top. There are considerable remains of walls of good-sized masonry and foundations, with caves, and two rock-cut tombs, with loculi. A few stones are moulded, probably door-posts or architraves. There are a number of cisterns. The principal remains are on the top and the eastern slope of the hill. A zigzag pathway formerly led down to the great spring of 'Ain el-Mellâhah." This is the location proposed by Wilson and advocated by Guérin. Lieut. Conder, on the other hand, suggests (Tent Work, ii, 387) Hadireh, which occurs in a Jebel and Merj of that name, one and a half miles west of el-Khureibeh (Robinson's site for Hazor), lying two and a half miles south of Kedesh, and three and a half west of Lake Huleh.

Grove and Conder, however, both seem to distinguish two Hazors in the above passages, and they locate the second at Hazzur, a rock-cut tomb in Khurbet Hazireh (ten miles west of Kedesh), where are "foundations of walls, built with large, well-dressed stones, a few small columns and broken pieces mixed up with the ruins; eight rock-cut cisterns, one rock-cut birkeh [pool], and two rock-cut tombs" (Memoirs, i, 239; comp. p. 228). They seem, moreover, to identify this with EN-HAZOR

(q. v.), although there is no spring there now, as there is at 'Ain el-Khureibeh, where Saunders locates the latter. This last geographer places Edrei at Hazireh, but it should rather be identified with Khureibeh, and Hazzûr and Hazireh will thus be left to represent a single Hazor, as the names respectively indicate. EN-HAZOR may then be appropriately assigned separately to Khurbet Hazzûr, half a mile north-west of a hill of the same name, and consisting of "heaps of stones and cisterns" (Memoirs, i, 396), laid down five miles north-west of Yâkûk, with several springs in the vicinity ('Ain el-Tahit, one and a half miles west, sufficiently copious to supply three mills; and 'Ain el-Mansûrah and 'Ain el-Diâh, one mile south). But the specific name, 'Ain Hazzûr, does not occur on the Ordnance Map, although several travellers speak of it here, and Tristram even says (Bible Places, p. 278) "This is the only Ain-Hazzûr."

2. HAZOR OF BENJAMIN AFTER THE CAPTIVITY (Neh. xi, 38) is identified by Grove with Yasûr, near Ashdod, which is out of the region indicated. It has usually been made the same with BAAL-HAZOR (q. v.), which Conder and Saunders reasonably locate at Tell Asûr, four and a half miles north-east of Beitin (Bethel), "a sacred place among the peasantry, though no Mukâm exists. There is a group of fine oaks on the hill-top, sacred, apparently, to a certain Sheik Hadherah (the proper Arabic form of Hazor). The Rijâl el-Asâwir, or 'Men of 'Asur,' said to be companions of the Prophet, are also invoked by the Moslems. This appears to be a probable survival of the ancient cultus of Baal on this lofty summit. Here Guérin found ancient cisterns cut in the rock, and vaulted houses still standing. In the middle of the plateau was a wely, dedicated to sheik Hassan, on the site of an old church, now destroyed, of which some ruins remain, especially four fragments of columns lying on great slabs which were once the pavement of the church; besides these a capital, on which was formerly sculptured a cross of square form" (Memoirs, ii, 371).

Lieut. Conder, however, suggests a separate location from this for the Hazor of the post-exilic history at Hazzûr (Tent Work, ii, 119), one mile east of Neby Samwil; a ruined site (Memoirs, iii, 43), four miles north-west of Jerusalem, with tombs, cisterns, and spring ('Ain Malahah) adjoining.

3. HAZOR OF JUDAH (Josh. xv, 28) is combined by Saunders with the name following (contrary to the Heb. text, which has ¹ disconnection between) into the compound Hazor-Ithnan, and located at en-Hora, which he lays down a short distance south-east of Beersheba.

Hazor-Hadattah (Josh. xv, 26) is identified by Tristram (Bible Places, p. 18) with "the ruins called Hadadûh, a watch-tower on the edge of a bluff on the high ground at the head of the Zuweirah valley, south-west of the Dead Sea." This point is beyond the bounds of the Ordnance Map, but is situated in the same direction as the el-Hudeirah, with which we have identified the place, and where Saunders locates an imaginary Hazor-Kinah (adopting the suggestion of Tristram, Bible Places, p. 16) and also Jagur (q. v.). See JUDAH.

Hea. One of the most important of all the Assyrian gods, as he combines in his numerous titles the attributes of several classic deities. His Accadian name was En-ki, or the "Lord of the World" (earth), and his Assyrian name read phonetically Ea or Hea. He unites in his offices the attributes of Pluto (Hades), of Poseidon (Neptune), and of Hermes (Wisdom). Hea, as the representative of the Greek Poseidon, was "Lord of the Abyss," sar abzu, and was spoken of as Hea "who dwells in the great deep." In a list of his titles he is called "Lord of the Madudu or Sailors," and it was Hea who taught Hasis Arda how to build the ark or ship (elapu) in which he sailed over the flood. In this character of the god of water and ocean he was associated with a female deity, Bahu, the "Void," who may be identified with the boku of Genesis i, 2. Hea held dominion over a large number of spirits who dwelt in the abzu, or the deep. In the character of the Greek Pluto, or lord of Hades, Hea himself seldom figured, but his consort, Nin-ki-gal, the "Lady of the Great Land," appears very frequently. Hea, as lord of Hades, had the name of Nin-a-zu, and his wife was called Nin-ki-gal. But it was in the character of the god of wisdom, the "god who knows all things," that Hea figured most prominently, Nin-ni-mi-ki, "Lord of Wisdom," or, as the Accadian expressed it, the "Lord of the Bright Eye." It was Hea alone who could deliver man from the various spells and curses with which the complicated system of Chaldean magic beset him. He also delivered Ishtar from the power of Nin-ki-gal, in the legend of her descent into Hades. Hea had for his female consort, in his character of "Lord of Wisdom," the goddess Dav-kin, the female deification of the earth, who was probably only another form of Nin-ki-gal, and resembles the classic Persephone or Proserpine; though perhaps Nin-ki-gal and Dav-kin may be better identified with Persephone and Ceres (Demeter), the "Mother and Daughter" of the Greeks.

Heacock, GROSVENOR WILLIAMS, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1822. He graduated from Western Reserve College in 1840, and from the Auburn Theological Seminary in 1843; was ordained pastor of the Lafayette Street Presbyterian Church in his native city, Oct. 20, 1845, and retained that position until his death, May 6, 1877. He was greatly esteemed and beloved. See Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 264.

Headstone, a monument placed at the head of a grave, as a memorial of the departed. Anciently, the cross in some form or other was invariably used, either simply, with floriated ends, within a circle, or in some other obvious form. During the 15th century the cruciform shape was displaced by other forms less Christian, neither artistic nor ornamental.

Healing. Touching, i.e. stroking the patient's face with both hands, to remove the scrofula, significantly called the king's evil, was practiced by the kings of France as early as Clovis or Philip I, kings of Hungary, and English sovereigns, from Edward the Confessor to queen Anne, who touched Dr. Johnson. Bradwardine says that crowds resorted to the kings of England, France, and Germany. Solemn prayer and the sign of the cross, first laid aside by James I, were used. Henry II and Edward I practiced the touch. The ceremonial took place on a progress, on Good Friday, monthly, quarterly, or at Michaelmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, and in 1683 from All-Saints' till a week before Christmas, and from Christmas till March 1. The first form of service was drawn up in the reign of Henry VII. The gospel (Mark xvi, 14) was read while the king laid on his hands, and during another (John i, 1), at the words "the light," an angel, noble, or medal with St. Michael stamped on it was attached by a white ribbon round the neck of the patient, who had to produce a certificate of his malady, signed by the parish priest and churchwardens, and was examined by the king's surgeon-in-waiting. The faculty of healing was popularly attributed also to the ninth son of a ninth son, or the seventh son of the seventh son.

Healing-box, used for holding the chrism in extreme unction.

Healing-coin, a piece of money anciently given by kings to those persons who were "touched" for the cure of the king's evil. The coin was pierced and worn round the neck with a string or ribbon.

Healing-oil, the sacred unction, made of oil of olives and balm, for use in the sacrament of extreme unction.

Healing-pyz, the box containing the sacred oil for anointing the sick. See PYX.

Hearing THE WORD OF GOD is an ordinance of divine appointment (Rom. x, 17; Prov. viii, 4, 5; Mark iv, 24). Public reading of the Scriptures was a part of synagogue worship (Acts xiii, 15; xv, 21), and was the practice of the Christians in primitive times. Under the former dispensation there was a public hearing of the law at stated seasons (Deut. xxxi, 10, 18; Neh. viii, 2, 3). It seems, therefore, that it is a duty incumbent on us to hear, and, if sensible of our ignorance, we shall also consider it our privilege. (1) As to the manner of hearing, it should be constantly (Prov. viii, 34; James i, 24, 25); attentively (Luke xxi, 48; Acts x, 33; Luke iv, 20, 22); with reverence (Psa. lxxxix, 7); with faith (Heb. iv, 2); with an endeavor to retain what we hear (Heb. ii, 1; Psa. cxix, 11); with an humble, docile disposition (Luke x, 42); with prayer (Luke xviii). (2) The advantages of hearing are information (2 Tim. iii, 16); conviction (1 Cor. xiv, 24, 25; Acts ii); conversion (Psa. xi, 7; Acts iv, 4); confirmation (Acts xiv, 22; xvi, 5); consolation (Phil. i, 25; Isa. xl, 1, 2; xxxv, 3, 4). See PREACHING.

Heart-burial. The heart was often buried apart from the body in the place it loved well in life, as Devorgilla founded Sweet Heart Abbey in memory of the heart-burial of her husband. Richard I's heart was buried at Rouen. Robert Bruce desired his heart to be taken to the Holy Land in lieu of his pilgrimage, and lord James Douglas carried it round his neck in a silver case, hung by a silken cord. He threw it forward in advance of his men at the great battle of Salano, and covered it with his body.

Heath, NICHOLAS, an English prelate, was born in London, and educated at Christ College, Cambridge. He became successively archdeacon of Stafford, bishop of Rochester (1540), of Worcester (1554), archbishop of York (1555), and chancellor of England under the reign of Mary. He was deprived of his offices because he refused to take the oath of supremacy under Elizabeth, and died at Cobham in 1560. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Hebdomadarii, a name anciently applied to monks from their weekly service.

Hebdomas Magna (the great week), an appellation given anciently to the week before Easter, which was observed with great solemnity. The use of this term is thus accounted for by Chrysostom: "It was called the great week, not because it consisted of longer days or more in number than other weeks, but because at this time great things were wrought for us by our Lord. For in this week the ancient tyranny of the devil was dissolved, death was extinct, the strong man was bound, his goods were spoiled, sin was abolished, the curse was destroyed, paradise was opened, heaven became accessible, men and angels were joined together, the middle wall of partition was broken down, the barriers were taken out of the way, the God of peace made peace between things in heaven and things on earth." See Chrysostom, Hom. in Psal. cxlv. sive de Hebdomade Mugna; Bingham, Antiq. bk. xxi, chap. i, sec. 24.

Hebdōmē (ἑβδομή, the seventh day of the month), a festival observed by the ancient Greeks in honor of Apollo, on the seventh day of every month, because one of them was the birthday of that god. The chief place of these observances was Athens. Hymns were sung to Apollo, and the people walked in procession, carrying sprigs of laurel in their hands.

Hebē, in Greek mythology, was the daughter of Jupiter and Juno, the goddess of youth and loveliness.

She is often confounded with Hygea or the goddess of health, but the latter may be recognised by her long, modest dress; Hebe, on the contrary, appears with a light apron, and half naked. Not seldom the eagle of Jupiter is found at her side. She was married to Hercules, and bore him two sons, Alexiares and Anicetus. Although she was a daughter of the supreme deities, she appears in a subordinate relation for, she not only serves all gods at the table, but harnessed the horses of Juno, when the latter advanced with Minerva against the Trojans.

Hebenstreit, Johann Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 27, 1686. He studied at Leipsic, and commenced his academical career there in 1715. In 1781 he was professor of Hebrew, in 1732 doctor of divinity, in 1740 professor of theology, and died Dec. 6, 1756, leaving, *De Βάρις ad Illustr. Hebrew Language. The central position which this "sacred tongue" occupies in Biblical literature justifies us in supplementing the article in vol. iv by a somewhat detailed exposition of some of its leading lexical and grammatical peculiarities, and in doing so we take the occasion to call attention to some features and linguistic principles not usually apprehended. These illustrate the natural simplicity no less than the profound philosophy of the language.

1. Root Meanings.—1. It has generally been assumed that verbs are the only primitives in Hebrew, and hence the lexicons have constantly referred all words to some verbal root. But it seems more reasonable to analogy and more consonant with fact to admit a few primitive nouns, such as אב, father; אח, brother; מים, water, etc. Accordingly we find יד scarcely used, except in Hiph. as a denominative from יד, hand, in the sense of stretching out the hand, e. g. in prayer or praise.

2. A more important fact, admitted by most lexicographers, and denied of late by only a few scholars,* is that all the roots primarily seem to designate some physical act or condition, appreciable by the senses. This may be true of other languages, in the primitive forms, but it is eminently characteristic of the Hebrew. Not only were the people who used it a constitutionally poetic race, affected by and reflecting every shadow of the imagination, but their originally nomadic habits made them keenly sensitive to every accident and influence of Bedawin life. They had specific terms for pitching and striking their tents (נָחַן and נָסַח, respectively), for turning out of the road to stop at a house (נָחַן), and lodging over night (לָחַן), etc. They were on the constant lookout for an enemy (צָוָה), and they had a term for one of a hostile tribe (אֶבְרָה as opposed to שָׁלֵם), in distinction from personal enmity (שָׂנֵא) or individual opposition (צָוָה). The nice shades of climatic signification, which are very imperfectly developed even in the best Hebrew lexicons, are shown with graphic clearness in terms for anger: אָנַח, to breathe hard with the first excitement; הָרַח, to glow with the rising passion; הָרַח, the flush of the hot blood; הָרַח, to froth with intense fury, etc. Attention to the ostensible sign of a root will enable us to note the steps of transition from a primitive to a derivative signification: e. g. הָרַח, to mutter to one's self in a brown study; hence to murmur in grudge, or meditate with pleasure. The constant usage of terms in a figurative sense, with an eye to their literal import, makes every word and phrase a picture, and renders even the prosiest utterances highly poetical.

* We look with some distrust upon the fashion, prevalent in certain quarters, of seeking Hebrew etymons in the radicals found among the cuneiform disclosures. The dialects of the Assyrian, "Accadian," and early Babylonian are yet in too crude a state of classification and investigation to bear out much reliance upon them for such purposes, and it is doubtful if they ever will be largely available for trustworthy comparison, except in a very general manner, and for obscure roots.

3. Hebrew synonyms, as thus appears, have received less attention than they deserve. The lexicographers, especially Gesenius, have occasionally traced distinctions in the use of words, and have freely compared many cognate roots, resolving most of them to certain supposed essential ideas, but this last has helped very little towards a practical discrimination of their real meaning and prevalent application, and no general system of comparing verbs closely resembling each other has been instituted. Yet it is certain that in Hebrew, as in all other primitive languages, real synonyms are very rare, and in no other tongue, perhaps, are terms more distinctively employed, especially in the physical relations of life, however vaguely they may often have to be construed in their figurative and metaphysical applications. For example, the words relating to the senses are nicely correlated to each other, and finely shaded off in comparative strength. Thus שָׁמַע is to hear simply, the sound entering one's ears whether he will or not. But שָׁמַע is to pay attention to what is heard, as by look or gesture; hence to answer, as expected of one giving heed to another; and finally to speak, i. e. in reply to words or thoughts merely implied. Still advancing, שָׁמַע, a denominative from שָׁמַע, the ear (probably a primitive, for the root שָׁמַע does not occur), is to give ear, i. e. turn the ear in the direction of the sound, or listen, but not very intently. Finally, שָׁמַע is to prick up the ears, i. e. use the hand for increasing the volume of sound, or hearken earnestly. So likewise שָׁמַע is to see simply, without any special effort, שָׁמַע; but שָׁמַע is to behold, or gaze intently at some striking object, as in a vision, שָׁמַע or שָׁמַע; and שָׁמַע is to look at closely, for the purpose of scrutiny or discovery, שָׁמַע; while other terms are of special and narrow import, as שָׁמַע, to view, i. e. bring into the field of vision; שָׁמַע, to peep, as from a lurking-place; שָׁמַע, to watch, as an enemy. In addressing, שָׁמַע is simply to call out the name of a person spoken to or of; while שָׁמַע is to say something, the words being added; and שָׁמַע is to speak, the language not being given; but שָׁמַע is to hullo, or cry out for help; שָׁמַע (less strongly, שָׁמַע) to shriek from distress or danger; שָׁמַע to groan in pain or sorrow; and שָׁמַע merely to talk loud, out of folly or (Piel) in praise. Among pleasant emotions שָׁמַע is to be glad simply, as evinced by a quiet and satisfied demeanor; but שָׁמַע or שָׁמַע is to exult with demonstrative expressions; and שָׁמַע to triumph with shouts of joy. Among unpleasant emotions שָׁמַע is to fear, simply in a general sense; but שָׁמַע is to palliate with sudden alarm (Niph. to be panic-stricken); שָׁמַע is to be frightened by some object of terror; שָׁמַע is to dread an impending cause of anxiety; שָׁמַע to shudder on the surface; שָׁמַע to quake in the interior; while שָׁמַע and שָׁמַע are merely to spin round under the influence of any violent feeling, whether cringing through fear, writhing in pain, or jumping for joy (especially the former word). שָׁמַע is to be weak in the ankles, hence, to totter, stumble, etc.; but שָׁמַע is to bend the knees, hence, to bow or fall; while שָׁמַע is to crouch on the haunches, like an animal in repose. For terms denoting forever, there is שָׁמַע, the vanishing point, whether forward or backward; hence time out of mind, everlastingly; שָׁמַע, the terminus, a fixed point beyond which one cannot pass; and שָׁמַע, the goal or shining mark set up as far ahead as one can well see; while שָׁמַע simply denotes continuity. Of negatives there is שָׁמַע, not, the direct denial, שָׁמַע; שָׁמַע, far from it, the softer or deprecatory disclaimer, שָׁמַע; שָׁמַע, by no means, the peremptory exclusive; and שָׁמַע, not at all, the absolute contradiction, שָׁמַע, omnino. So in meteorology, שָׁמַע is a misty scud-cloud, so called from obscuring the landscape; שָׁמַע is a black thunder-cloud, so called from veiling the heavens; and שָׁמַע is a light fleece-cloud, so called from its resemblance to dust diffused in the sky. In brigandage שָׁמַע is an ambush for a surprise; while שָׁמַע is a covert for security; שָׁמַע is a hiding-place for secrecy; and שָׁמַע or שָׁמַע merely a lair of wild beast, as screened by interlaced twigs. In orography and geography generally, Hebrew words are used with great precision. See TOPOGRAPHICAL TERMS.

II. Vocalization.—Syllabification is very simple in Hebrew, as the letters (all regarded as consonants) are the basis of articulation, and each (with the frequent exception of the quiescents) has its own vowel (expressed or implied) following. The pronunciation, indeed, is not certain, as Hebrew ceased to be a living tongue after the Babylonian exile; but the sounds of the letters probably survive in the cognate Oriental languages, especially the Arabic, and the vowels supplied by the Masoretes doubtless represent those traditionally handed down to their own times. The latter form an ingenious and apparently complicated but really simple and natural series, of which the written signs are sufficiently distinct and philosophical.

The intricate chain of vowel-changes arising in declension is remarkable for its strict conformity to the laws of the vocal organs, and euphony is its fundamental principle. The tone usually rests on the final syllable, as being in general the most significant of grammatical relations, and hence an increment, as carrying the accent, has a constant tendency to shorten the preceding part of the word. The oblique forms of nouns and verbs, including the suffixed pronouns, are thus literally constructed, and the balance is preserved by abbreviating the beginning. In this system two features are of prime and universal influence, namely, the semi-vocal character of the gutturals (inducing a series of peculiarities in their pointing), and the necessity of the tone for either a long closed or a short open syllable. By observing the effect of these principles and a few conventional form-signs, the grammar is wonderfully simplified and clarified.

III. Doctrine of the so-called "Tenses."—1. The "Præter" and the "Future." These are now well understood not to denote primarily time, but some other less palpable relation. The absence of a present tense is, we may remark in passing, really logical, for the present moment is but the dividing line between the past and the future, and shifts its position every instant. Ewald suggested the names "Perfect" and "Imperfect" in lieu of Præter and Future, maintaining that the former denotes a completed act, and the latter an inchoate; and some later grammarians, including Driver, in his ingenious monograph on the subject, have hastily adopted this nomenclature. But besides the inexactness of these terms in themselves, and the liability of confounding such a use with that of the corresponding tenses in English, and still more in Greek and Latin, they will be found to be essentially erroneous. As a matter of fact, in most cases, these two verb-forms indisputably designate the two relations of time, anterior and posterior; and the consummation or incipency of the act or state is comparatively rare as an important shade of the thought. In very many, indeed, a majority of cases, such a rendering would be absurd. For example, that remarkable and pregnant announcement by Jehovah of his divine self-existence, אֲנִי הָאֵל אֲנִי הָאֵל אֲנִי הָאֵל, אֲנִי, I will be what I will be (A. V. "I am that I am," Exod. iii. 14), becomes the flattest nonsense if translated "I begin to be what I begin to be." Surely this cannot be the essential conception of the tense-form in question. The true distinction is rather that the Præter marks an act or state as a matter of fact, or something intended to be stated as such, while the Future denotes a conception, or something meant to be so stated. They are respectively the objective and the subjective points of view, the actual and the imaginary, the absolute and the conditional, the indicative and the subjunctive, the independent and the relative. Out of this fundamental distinction grow all the subordinate ones, especially the past, as representing the only real facts, and the future, as being yet but a fancy. A completed act or state, as an fait accompli, of course thus comes in naturally under the Præter, and an inchoate one, as yet conceptual in part, falls appropriately under the Future. The use of either as "a customary Present" is but a device of grammarians in order to bring them into accord with the vague signification of that tense in other languages, especially the English. Continued or permanent action or condition is expressed in Hebrew by the participle, which is in itself always timeless. When a prophet expresses his vaticinations in the Præter (as notably in Isa. liii.), his conceptions become to him realities, and he states the future as if it were already a fact. When, on the other hand, a historian uses the Future for his narrations (which less frequently occurs), he means thereby to mark the events as viewed in a subordinate relation either to his own mind (optative) or to some other events (subjunctive). The term תְּחִלָּה, therefore, in the above passage, indicates God's revealed attributes and character as a theme of human apprehension, while תְּחִלָּה signifies his simple self-existence. The repetition "I conceive myself to be what I conceive myself to be," or "I am conceived to be what I am conceived to be," would then, like Pilate's phrase, "What I have written I have written," express the permanence and truthfulness of that conception. God's absolute essence is objectively incommunicable.

It would be easy to exemplify the distinction of the independent and the qualified, as represented by the two so-called "tenses" respectively. Thus, to take the first instances in Genesis: וַיְהִי (i, 2) is not the mere copula, but emphasizes the fact of a change having taken place in the earth; whereas וַיֵּצֵא (ii, 5), express the idea that no growth had yet been visible or observed; and וַיִּהְיֶה (ii, 6) denote the appearance of a mist, which answered these purposes. So we may render וַיִּפְרָד (ii, 10), "was divided as it were, so as to form;" וַיִּחַשְׁשׁוּ (ii, 25), "felt no shame of themselves mutually." Very often in poetry the same thought is expressed in the successive hemistichs in these two forms successively, for the sake of variety; first objectively or absolutely, and then subjectively or relatively; or vice versa. The convenient subterfuge of employing the present tense in English to render these obliterates the nice shade of meaning conveyed by the original, and largely destroys its beauty and effect. A slight paraphrase is needed to bring out the delicate turn of thought. Generally some form of the Subjunctive or Potential will suffice to reproduce the graphic power of the Future. But in many (if not most) cases a real difference is intended. Thus וַיִּקְרָא (Psa. i, 2) denotes an interior characteristic of the saint, whereas the preceding Præters refer to his outward deportment. So even in Psa. ii, 1, 2, וַיִּקְרָא and וַיִּשְׁמַע state the violence of the wicked as an act, and the parallel Futures as of purpose.

2. "Paragodic" and "Apocopate" Forms. — The most important of the additions included under the former of these terms is the ו, appended to verbs

(sometimes likewise to nouns) for the purpose of prolonging their sound, and thus naturally increasing their emphasis. With the Præter this is chiefly limited to the third person, as this alone is truly objective. With the Future, on the contrary, it is more appropriate in the first and second persons, giving the former an earnest or thorough significance, and softening the latter into a beseeching tone, an effect likewise produced when used with the Imperative.

Apocopation consists in throwing off in the Future and Imperative the loosely cemented ו final of verbs, and in dropping out the ו characteristic of Hiphil. It imparts a curt or peremptory stress to the shortened form, and thus serves to distinguish the jussive from the predictive use of the third person Future. The tendency to apocopation with "vav conversive" in the Future arises from its bringing the tone forward, in consequence of the close connection with the preceding context, and especially, it would seem, on account of the particle, which (as we shall see presently) that form appears to have originally included.

3. "Vav Conversive." — This peculiarity, which the Hebrew alone of all the Semitic tongues exhibits, has been a sore puzzle to linguists, and only in recent times has received an intelligible explanation. It will serve as a crucial test of the foregoing theory of the tense-meanings. Its most usual and decided form, namely, with the Future, demands our first attention. The fact that in this case the vav is pointed with Patach and the Dagesh shows the assimilation of some older consonant; in fact, there seems to have been originally some particle like an adverb more closely pointing the sequence than the simple "vav conjunctive" would have done, very much like the puerile phrase of simple story-tellers, who string each incident to the preceding by "and then." The Hebrew historian sets out with a genuine Præter (either expressed or implied), to indicate that he is stating matters of fact, but he continues his narrative with "vav conversive" and a Future to denote a consecutive series, the latter members of which he conceives and represents as depending upon the others. It is this dependent and conceptual relation that requires a Future. The incidents are all facts (as the particle implied in the pointing intimates), but not isolated or independent facts. They may or they may not be logically or causally connected, but they are viewed by the writer as historically following each other, and he designedly overlooks anything between them. After completing such a series, more or less extended, the writer begins a fresh series with another Præter, and continues it for awhile with "vav conversive" again. The whole history is thus divided off in a kind of paragraph style, and the close continuity of the subordinate statements is maintained in each paragraph. If he had used Præters with or without "vav connective" throughout, the incidents would have been merely the disiecta membra of history, without any positive bond of unity. The style would have been, as we say, comparatively incoherent.

The explanation of "vav conversive" with the Præter is more difficult. From the absence of any special pointing, and the less frequency of its use, we are entitled to infer its comparative unimportance. In fact, it seems to be a kind of imitation, by way of converse, of the "vav conversive" of the Future. A writer sets out with a Future (in form or effect), and continues the conceptual series by the Præter to indicate that he has now mentally transported himself into the region of fancy, and is describing things from that vivid impression. It thus resembles the "historic present" of many languages, in which a narrator views the scenes recounted as if actually taking place under his eye.

It can now be readily seen, in the light of the above explanation of these two "tenses," how in poetical passages (and all Hebrew is more or less poetical), the Præter and the Future (either simple or transformed by vav) may often be beautifully interchanged, according as the writer, for variety's sake, wishes to represent the same scene in adjoining hemistichs as either actual or conceptual; and this closer or more loose method of consecution, by means of simple vav or vav conversive, gives him a wider and nicer play of conception and expression. These are among the delicate shades of meaning which it is almost impossible to transfer to a version. For example, David says (Psa. iii, 6), "To Jehovah should I call (אֶקְרָא) [as I often have done], then he has heard me (וַיִּשְׁמַע);" i. e. in plain prose, Whenever I call he hears me, but in poetic fervor, When I think of myself as calling, I immediately know myself as heard.

IV. Agglutinative Modes of Declension and Construction.—1. By Prefixes.—Of these ב, ה, ו, ז, and ל are strictly inseparable, but like ו and ז, they probably represent original particles, as the Arabic article el- (which assimilates, as by a Dagesh, with the "solar letters") indicates. Whether the characteristic ו of Niphal, and the ה of its infinitive as well as of Hiphil, Hophal, etc., had a similar origin is difficult to decide. The preformatives of the Future may be more readily traced to the full forms of the personal pronouns.

2. By Suffixatives and Affixes.—The personal endings of the tenses, as well as the suffixes, are clearly fragments, somewhat modified, of the pronouns which they represent. The ו directive is probably an enclitic fragment of the article as a demonstrative. The feminine ending ו was a softened form, like ו paragogic. The old constructive termination of masculine nouns was for both numbers, and the dual and plural absolute were intensive additions, like the decimal increase of the cardinal numbers. The frequent interchange of gender in the plural (notably in וְשָׁמַיִם, וְאֲרָצִים, etc.) proves that this was a later or comparatively unimportant variation. The feminine, as the weaker, takes the place of the neuter in Greek and Latin to express the abstract.

3. By Juxtaposition.—Here we may enumerate three classes of amalgamation: (a) compounds, which are rare in Hebrew, except in proper names, and in cases of union by Makkeph (corresponding to our hyphen only in removing the principal tone); (b) ellipsis, by which connecting particles are dropped as unnecessary, especially in the terse style of poetry; and (c) interchange of the various parts of speech, which, as in English, allows nouns, particles, etc., to be freely used as adjectives, adverbs, etc., and conversely.

V. Emphatic Position of Words.—Here the natural order, in contradistinction from the artificial arrangement of the Latin, and the purely grammatical of the English, prevails. As with foreigners and children speaking a new language, the most important words come first (of course, after connectives, negatives, interrogatives, etc., which qualify the whole clause). Hence the predicate, as being of greater extension, precedes, and the subject or the adjective, which are but an accident of the verb or the noun, follows; except when special emphasis requires a different position, or when poetry in the parallel hemistichs calls for a pleasing variety. In this respect the Hebrew more closely resembles the Greek, which often resorts to the same expedient of emphasizing by a position near the head of the clause, like our "nominative independent." These nice shades of emphasis are difficult to render smoothly and adequately, but it might be done far more accurately than in our Authorized Version, which is habitually negligent in this respect. For the prosodiac arrangement, see POETRY, HEBREW.

Hebrew Version of the New Testament. If we may believe tradition, translations of parts of the New Test. already existed at a very early period. But as there is no certain information concerning such a version into the language of the Old-Test. Scriptures, the history of this work can only be traced back to the year 1537, when the gospel of Matthew was published in Hebrew by Sebastian Münster (q. v.). Great attention was excited by this book at the time of its appearance, on account of an ancient tradition which prevailed in the Church, that Matthew originally wrote his gospel in Hebrew. It was very evident, however, that Münster's publication, תורת משה, had no pretension to be regarded as the text of the sacred original, nor even as an ancient version, for the language in which it was written was not the Syro-Chaldaic, current in Palestine at the time of our Lord, but the rabbinical Hebrew in use among the Jews of the 12th century. It was, moreover, full of solecisms and barbarisms, and bore indubitable marks of having been translated either directly from the Vulgate, or from an Italian version thereof. In an apology for this work, dedicated to Henry VIII of England, Münster states that the MS. from which he printed was defective in several passages, and that he was compelled to supply the omissions as best he could from his own resources. It passed through several editions, and a Hebrew version of the epistle to the Hebrews was appended to it. Another edition of the same translation of Matthew, but printed from a more complete and correct MS. (Recess Judaeorum Penetrabilibus Erutum), brought for the purpose from Italy, was published by Tillet, bishop of St. Brioux, at Paris, in 1555, with a Latin version by Mercer (Ad Vulgatam quoad Fieri Potuit Accomodata). The latter was published again by Dr. Herbst, under the title, Des Schemlob ben-Schaphrut hebr. Uebersetzung des Evang. Matthari nach den Drucken des S. Münster und J. du Tillet-Mercier (Göttingen, 1879). In this edition the editor proves that the author of this version was none else than Shem-Tob Isaac ben-Schaphrut (q. v.), who translated this gospel for polemical purposes. Passing over the other translations of parts of the gospels, we mention the version of the four gospels into Biblical Hebrew, made by Giovanni Batista Giona (q. v.), a converted Jew, and professor of Hebrew at Rome. He dedicated it to pope Clement IX, and it was published at Rome in 1668, at the expense of the Congregation de Propaganda Fide. But this translation, as professor Delitzsch remarks, fulfilled less than might be expected from a man born at Safet, in Upper Galilee, who, besides, was a Jewish scholar. The first translation of the entire New Test. into Hebrew was made by Elias Hutter (q. v.), and published at Nuremberg in 1600 in his Polyglot Test. According to the judgment of professor Delitzsch, it is of great value, and is still worth consulting, because in many places it is very correct. A revised edition was published in London in 1661, under the superintendence of W. Robertson; but the greater part of this edition was consumed in the fire of London in 1666. A Corrected New Testament in Hebrew was published at London in 1798 by the Rev. R. Caddock, but it proved not to be acceptable to the Jews, for whose benefit it was published, and a new translation became a desideratum. In the meantime Dr. Buchanan brought from India a translation of the New Test., executed in Travancore, among the Jews of that country, the translator being a learned Jew. The MS. was written in the small rabbinical or Jerusalem character; the style was elegant and flowing, and tolerably faithful to the text. Dr. Buchanan deposited the MS. in the university library at Cambridge, after it had been transcribed by Mr. Yeates, of Cambridge, into the square Hebrew character. A copy was presented to the London Society for the Conversion of the Jews, and it was at one time thought that it would greatly promote the object of the society to print and circulate the production of a Jew, evidently master of his own ancient language. After much deliberation, however, a more strictly literal translation was still deemed desirable, and accordingly, in 1816, Mr. Frey and other learned Hebraists executed, under the patronage of the Jews' Society, a new edition of the New Test. In 1818 this new edition left the society's press, and was speedily followed by another issue. The British and Foreign Bible Society assisted materially in this work by purchasing at various times to a large amount. After this version had been in circulation for some time, complaints from Hebrew readers in various parts of the world were laid before the Jews' Society Committee, concerning the rendering of certain passages. To insure minute accuracy, the committee determined on a thorough revision. They consulted some of the most eminent men in Europe, and professor Gesenius was recommended to them as the first Hebrew scholar of the age. To him, therefore, the version was confided, with a request of a critique upon it, and suggestions as to alterations. Gesenius went carefully through the work as far as the Acts, and likewise through the book of Revelation. Numerous other engagements, however, compelled him to resign the task. The work, together with Gesenius's notes, was then transferred by the Jews' Committee to Dr. Joachim Neumann (q. v.), a converted Hebrew, lecturer on Hebrew at the University of Breslau. Dr. Neumann commenced the work anew, and his revision, when completed, was acknowledged to bear the stamp of diligence, accuracy, zeal, and profound scholarship. The limited funds of the society, however, prevented the publication of this valuable revision, and thus it remained for some time in MS. At this very period, the publisher of the Polyglot Bible (Mr. Bagster), requiring a Hebrew version of the New Test. for the Polyglot, applied to the Jews' Society for the critical emendations they had been amassing: the important notes of Gesenius and Neumann were in consequence handed to Mr. Bagster, and were incorporated in the new version executed for the Polyglot by Mr. Greenfield, and published in 1831. In comparing this edition of Greenfield with the second of the Jews' Society, published in 1821, the student will easily perceive that there has not been made a very great progress in the work of translation, and that neither could stand the test of criticism. The Jews' Society resolved, therefore, on a revision of the edition of 1821. A committee, consisting of Dr. M'Caul, the Rev. M. S. Alexander (afterwards bishop of Jerusalem), the Rev. J. C. Reichardt, and Mr. S. Hoga (the well-known translator of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress into Hebrew), was intrusted with the revision, which was commenced Nov. 14, 1836, and finished Feb. 8, 1838. The printing was commenced in December, 1837, and was finished in September, 1838. Duly considering and appreciating the labors of their predecessors, they endeavored to conform the Hebrew text as closely as possible to the Greek, following in most dubious cases the reading of the authorized English version; and were much pleased to find that, in very many cases, even the collocation of the Greek words furnished the best and most elegant collocation of the Hebrew. They diligently consulted the Syriac, Vulgate, German, Dutch, and French versions, but in difficulties were generally guided by the Syriac. Their desire was, as far as possible, to furnish a literal translation, remembering that it was the word of the living God which they wished to communicate. They arrived at purity of style, but always preferred perspicuity to elegance. When the revision was finished, the MS. was read through by each person privately, and then by all together, confronting it again with the Greek text. Some alterations were then suggested, and even in the reading of the proof-sheets various little amendments were made. This new edition of 1838, although a great improvement upon the former, proved by no means to be the ultimatum. In the year 1856 a new revision of the work was decided upon, and to the Rev. C. Reichardt (q. v.), together with Dr. R. Biesen-thal, the task of revision was given. The edition of 1838 was carefully examined, and April 12, 1865, the work was completed. In 1866 the new edition, with vowels and accents, was published, which redounds to the honor of both revisers and the society. But this edition, in spite of the great amount of labor bestowed and the money spent upon it, proved itself not to be the complete desideratum, especially in view of the criticism concerning the text as well as the accents, which professor Delitzsch published in his Hebrew edition of St. Paul's epistle to the Romans. Considerations like these, especially the desire of realizing a hope cherished for about forty years, induced professor Delitzsch to undertake a new version of the New Test., on the basis of the Codes

Sinaiticus. This edition was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1877. In 1878 professor Delitzsch published a second edition of his translation, taking for his basis the Textus Receptus of the Elzevir edition of 1624, respecting the exigencies of textual criticism in all the more important cases by bracketed readings. Thus a single parenthesis, (), indicated a passage with weak support, although from an early date; the same with a star, (*), indicated an important varying reading; a double parenthesis, (()), indicated a late addition to the text; and brackets, [], indicated words well supported by ancient testimony, but lacking in the received text. This edition also sold rapidly, and the third edition, again revised, appeared in 1880, with a slightly larger page and type. A fourth edition was published in 1881, and so also a fifth in 1883. It should be observed that during all this time the translator had the constant help of many learned friends, especially of Dr. J. H. R. Biesenthal, who had traversed the same ground himself, and of the author of the work on Hebrew tenses, Rev. S. R. Driver of Oxford. Hebron. A brief but excellent description of this venerable place is given in the Memoirs accompanying the Ordnance Survey (iii, 305 sq.), and the latest and most complete account of the Haram enclosure there may be found in the same work (p. 333 sq.). We give some interesting particulars from Lieut. Conder's Tent Work in Palestine, ii, 79:

"Hebron is a long stone town on the western slope of a bare, terraced hill; it extends along the valley, and the main part reaches about seven hundred yards north and south, including the Mosque Quarter, and the Quarter of the Gate of the Corner. On the north is a separate suburb, named from the mosque of 'Aly Bukka, who died in 670 A. H.; on the south also, and west of the road, is another small suburb. The Haram stands above the middle of the main quarter. The Sultan's Pool, a large, well-built reservoir, occupies part of the valley. West of the city is an open green below the Quarantine, surrounded by hills which are covered with olives.

"The contrast between Hebron and Bethlehem is readily noticed: the town has a dead-alive appearance, and the sullen looks of the Moslem fanatics contrast with the officious eagerness of the Bethlehem Christians. There are some seventeen thousand Moslems in Hebron, according to the governor's account; and about six hundred Jews are tolerated in the Quarter of the Corner Gate. The town is the centre of commerce for the southern Arabs, who bring their wool and camel's-hair to its market. It has also a sort of trade in glass ornaments and in leather water-buckets, but the bustle and stir of Bethlehem are not found in its streets; the inhabitants seem wrapped in contemplation of the tombs of their forefathers, and boast that no pagan Frank has yet desecrated the holy shrines with his presence, or built his house in the town." (See Plan on p. 536.)

Hecatæa, apparitions which appeared during the performance of certain ceremonies in honor of the goddess Hecate (q. v.). An image of the goddess was formed of incense of Arabia, myrrh, styrax, and certain animals called ascalabotæ. These were all ground to powder, made into a paste, and moulded into an image of Hecate. Then, in the presence of this image, at midnight, under a lotus-tree, the ceremonies are duly performed, when the Hecatæa appear and assume various shapes.

Hecâtê, in Greek mythology, is a mystical figure, wrapped in deep darkness, as described by Hesiod. She is called the daughter of the Titan Perseus by Asteria, but the accounts vary, sometimes Jupiter, at others Tartarus, being mentioned as her father, and Juno, Ceres, Phœbe, etc., as her mother. She was the only one among the Titans who assisted Jupiter in the war with the giants; therefore she was not hurled into Tartarus, as were the others, but was endowed with great power in heaven, on earth, as well as in the infernal regions. She is usually represented triformate, from which circumstance she has the surname Tricephalus or Triceps, the three-headed. She possessed the keys to three roads, leading respectively to Hades, to heaven, and to a happy life on earth. Her work was usually at night, and therefore she has been confounded with the goddess of the moon, Selene.

Hecatomb (ἱκατόμβη, from ἱκατόν, one hundred, and βούς, an ox), a sacrifice offered by the ancient Greeks only on extraordinary occasions, consisting of one hundred oxen. The word is sometimes applied to an offering of other animals than oxen; and it is used occasionally to denote any large sacrifice, a definite number being used for an indefinite.
